

53D CONGRESS, } HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. { MIS. DOC. 208,
2d Session. } Part I.

THE
WAR OF THE REBELLION:
A COMPILATION OF THE
OFFICIAL RECORDS
OF THE
UNION AND CONFEDERATE ARMIES.

PUBLISHED UNDER THE DIRECTION OF
The Hon. DANIEL S. LAMONT, Secretary of War,

BY

MAJ. GEORGE B. DAVIS, U. S. A.,
MR. LESLIE J. PERRY,
MR. JOSEPH W. KIRKLEY,
Board of Publication.

SERIES I—VOLUME XLVI—IN THREE PARTS.
PART I—REPORTS.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.
1894.

UNRECORDED
SERIALIZED
INDEXED

137
Q253

V. 46

Q253
V. 46

THE
MISCELLANEOUS DOCUMENTS

OF THE
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FOR THE
SECOND SESSION OF THE FIFTY-THIRD CONGRESS.

1893-'94.

IN FORTY VOLUMES.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.
1895.

2000

2000

INDEX TO MISCELLANEOUS DOCUMENTS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Fifty-third Congress, Second Session.

CONTENTS OF THE VOLUMES.

- Vol. 1.—Nos. 1 to 297, inclusive, except Nos. 29, 38, 47, 54, 55, 81, 82, 93, *96, 97, 107, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 130, 173, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 184, 200, and 205.
- Vol. 2.—No. 29, pt. 1: Official Register of the United States, vol. 1.
- Vol. 3.—No. 29, pt. 2: “ “ “ “ “ vol. 2.
- Vol. 4.—No. 38: Mineral Resources of the United States, 1892.
- Vol. 5.—No. 47: Monographs of the United States Geological Survey, vol. 22.
- Vol. 6.—No. 54: Consular Reports, vol. 43.
- Vol. 7.—No. 55, pt. 1: Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, vol. 43, pt. 1.
- Vol. 8.—No. 55, pt. 2: “ “ “ “ “ “ vol. 43, pt. 2.
- Vol. 9.—No. 81: Eleventh Annual Report of the Bureau of Ethnology.
- Vol. 10.—No. 82: Twelfth “ “ “ “ “ “
- Vol. 11.—Nos. 93, 214, 215, and 216.
- Vol. 12.—No. 97: Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, vol. 44.
- Vol. 13.—No. 107: Fifth International Geological Congress.
- Vol. 14.—No. 119: Monographs of the United States Geological Survey, vol. 23.
- Vol. 15.—No. 120: “ “ “ “ “ “ vol. 24.
- Vol. 16.—No. 121, pt. 1: Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, vol. 45, pt. 1.
- Vol. 17.—No. 121, pt. 2: “ “ “ “ “ “ vol. 45, pt. 2.
- Vol. 18.—No. 122: Bulletin of the United States Fish Commission, 1892.
- Vol. 19.—No. 123: Consular Reports, vol. 44.
- Vol. 20.—No. 130: Bulletin of the United States Fish Commission, 1893.
- Vol. 21.—No. 173: Contributions to North American Ethnology, vol. 9.
- Vol. 22.—No. 175: Special Consular Reports, vol. 10.
- Vol. 23.—No. 176: Bulletins of the United States Geological Survey, Nos. 87 to 89.
- Vol. 24.—No. 177: “ “ “ “ “ “ Nos. 90 to 97.
- Vol. 25.—No. 178: “ “ “ “ “ “ Nos. 98 to 101.
- Vol. 26.—No. 179: “ “ “ “ “ “ Nos. 102 to 106.
- Vol. 27.—No. 180: “ “ “ “ “ “ Nos. 107 to 117.
- Vol. 28.—No. 181: Mineral Resources of the United States, 1893.
- Vol. 29.—No. 184, pt. 1: Report of the Smithsonian Institution, 1893, part 1.
- Vol. 30.—No. 184, pt. 2: “ “ “ “ “ “ part 2.
- Vol. 31.—No. 200: Report of the Weather Bureau, 1893.
- Vol. 32.—No. 205: Consular Reports, vol. 45.
- Vol. 33.—No. 208, pt. 1: Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, vol. 46, pt. 1.
- Vol. 34.—No. 208, pt. 2: “ “ “ “ “ “ vol. 46, pt. 2.
- Vol. 35.—No. 208, pt. 3: “ “ “ “ “ “ vol. 46, pt. 3.
- Vol. 36.—No. 209: Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, 1892.
- Vol. 37.—No. 210: Compilation of Messages of the Presidents of the United States.
- Vol. 38.—No. 211: Celebration of the laying of the Corner Stone of the Capitol.
- Vol. 39.—No. 212: History and Digest of International Arbitrations.
- Vol. 40.—No. 213: List of Private Claims, Forty-seventh to Fifty-first Congress.

*NOTE.—Mis. Doc. No. 96 bound in volume 25, House Ex. Documents.

INDEX TO HOUSE MISCELLANEOUS DOCUMENTS.

| Subject. | No. | Vol. |
|---|-----|------|
| A. | | |
| Adams, O. F. | 146 | 1 |
| Allen, Andrew | 10 | 1 |
| Anderson, John | 125 | 1 |
| Apache Reservation, relative to leases of certain lands in | 87 | 1 |
| Appropriation, relative to repeal of certain permanent specific and indefinite | 86 | 1 |
| Arbitrations, history and digest of international | | 89 |
| Arnold, J. | 102 | 1 |
| Atlanta (Ga.) St. Philip's Church | 208 | 1 |
| Austin, Simcon, resolution to refer to Court of Claims | 141 | 1 |
| Austin, C. | 66 | 1 |
| B. | | |
| Bailey, Benj. P. | 37 | 1 |
| Bailey, Wiley | 50 | 1 |
| Baker, C. C. | 11 | 1 |
| Barker, T. G. | 164 | 1 |
| Barnes, John | 94 | 1 |
| Barnes, M. H. | 186 | 1 |
| Barnum, Omer | 120 | 1 |
| Beck, Joshua | 208 | 1 |
| Bell, Clara (steamer) | 144 | 1 |
| Bell, Josiah L. | 146 | 1 |
| Benham, Rear-Admiral | 90 | 1 |
| Bishop, W. J. | 27 | 1 |
| Black, George | 27 | 1 |
| Blackman, Alfred | 172 | 1 |
| Blick, A. T. | 62 | 1 |
| Bonds of United States, relative to authority for issue and sale of | 33 | 1 |
| Books, pamphlets, etc., list of, in folding room | 73 | 1 |
| Brayboy, Tenor | 20 | 1 |
| Bray, John | 27 | 1 |
| Broadfoot, C. W. | 128 | 1 |
| Brooke, J. C. | 9 | 1 |
| Brooks, O. C. | 41 | 1 |
| Brown, Septimus | 150 | 1 |
| Burgwyn, J. A. | 192 | 1 |
| Bureau of Ethnology. (See Ethnology.) | 84 | 1 |
| Bureau of Statistics, report on imported merchandise | 96 | (*) |
| Butler, H. A. | 172 | 1 |
| C. | | |
| Caldwell, Robert | 157 | 1 |
| California, resolution relative to examination of certain river and harbor improvements on coast of | 207 | 1 |
| Campbell, John | 132 | 1 |
| Campbell, Thomas W. | 25 | 1 |
| Canada, for information relative to amount of merchandise in bond transported through | 92 | 1 |
| Capitol, celebration of laying corner stone of | | 88 |
| Carb, David and Barbette | 120 | 1 |

* Bound with vol. 25, House Executive Documents.

| Subject. | No. | Vol. |
|--|-----|------|
| Carpenter, S. L. | 186 | 1 |
| Carter, George W. | 39 | 1 |
| Case, George. | 114 | 1 |
| Causey, J. W. | 74 | 1 |
| Census, abstract of population of Eleventh. | 185 | 1 |
| Champion, Margaret. | 190 | 1 |
| Chasteen, William. | 59 | 1 |
| Chipman, J. Logan, eulogies on. | 214 | 11 |
| Claims, index to private, from Forty-seventh to Fifty-first Congress. | | 40 |
| Clara Bell (steamer). | 144 | 1 |
| Clark, Stephen D. | 187 | 1 |
| Clerk of House of Representatives. (See House of Representatives.) | | |
| Codny, sr., Samuel. | 57 | 1 |
| Coffman, Samuel. | 127 | 1 |
| Columbia Suburban Railroad Company. | 65 | 1 |
| Comer, A. F. | 9 | 1 |
| Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, report of, for 1892. | | 26 |
| Commissioner of Labor, report of, on expenditures in Department of Labor. | 22 | 1 |
| Consular Reports: | | |
| Volume 43. | | 6 |
| Volume 44. | | 19 |
| Volume 45. | | 22 |
| Special volume 10. | | 22 |
| Corinth (Miss.) Baptist and Cumberland Presbyterian churches. | 203 | 1 |
| Copeland, J. D. | 156 | 1 |
| Court of Claims, judgments rendered by: | | |
| Allen, Andrew. | 10 | 1 |
| Anderson, John. | 125 | 1 |
| Arnold, J. | 102 | 1 |
| Austin, C. | 66 | 1 |
| Austin, Simeon. | 141 | 1 |
| Bailey, Benj. P. | 37 | 1 |
| Bailey, Wiley. | 56 | 1 |
| Baker, C. C. | 11 | 1 |
| Barker, T. G. | 164 | 1 |
| Bateman, John. | 94 | 1 |
| Beck, Joshua. | 204 | 1 |
| Bishop, W. J. | 27 | 1 |
| Black, George. | 172 | 1 |
| Blackman, Alfred. | 62 | 1 |
| Blick, H. T. | 33 | 1 |
| Braboy, Tenor. | 27 | 1 |
| Bray, John. | 128 | 1 |
| Broadfoot, C. W. | 9 | 1 |
| Brooke, J. C. | 41 | 1 |
| Brooks, O. C. | 159 | 1 |
| Burguyn, J. A. | 84 | 1 |
| Butler, H. A. | 172 | 1 |
| Caldwell, Robert. | 157 | 1 |
| Campbell, John. | 132 | 1 |
| Campbell, Thomas W. | 25 | 1 |
| Carter, George W. | 39 | 1 |
| Case, George. | 114 | 1 |
| Cases dismissed for want of proof of loyalty. | 24 | 1 |
| Causey, J. W. | 74 | 1 |
| Chasteen, William. | 59 | 1 |
| Coday, sr., Samuel. | 57 | 1 |
| Coffman, Samuel. | 127 | 1 |
| Comer, A. F. | 9 | 1 |
| Copeland, J. D. | 156 | 1 |
| Coxen, Morgan. | 18 | 1 |

| Subject. | No. | Vol. |
|---|-----|------|
| Court of Claims, judgments rendered by: | | |
| Creser, Jacob | 149 | 1 |
| Crowell, Charles | 99 | 1 |
| Davis, Phil | 81 | 1 |
| Davis, T. O. | 27 | 1 |
| Davis, T. W. | 36 | 1 |
| Dellinger, William | 136 | 1 |
| Drumwright, A. J. | 168 | 1 |
| Dunn, Mary J. | 158 | 1 |
| Dwyer, P. | 9 | 1 |
| Eason, S. S. | 62 | 1 |
| Ebbs, William | 91 | 1 |
| Engle, B. C. | 136 | 1 |
| Engle, J. M. | 134 | 1 |
| Evans, James E. | 95 | 1 |
| Ferguson, Jno. | 27 | 1 |
| Ferrell, J. E. | 84 | 1 |
| Fitzhugh, Henry | 63 | 1 |
| Gaddy, F. M. and H. A. | 115 | 1 |
| Garrison, Margaret | 50 | 1 |
| Gebelhouse, Philip | 88 | 1 |
| Gilbert, E. S. | 10 | 1 |
| Golden, S. M. | 32 | 1 |
| Graham, A. | 115 | 1 |
| Green, Eliza | 49 | 1 |
| Griffith, G. W. | 199 | 1 |
| Grim, Jacob | 128 | 1 |
| Grisson, W. C. | 31 | 1 |
| Grovo, E. S. | 15 | 1 |
| Haltz, Robert | 101 | 1 |
| Halo, E. M. | 154 | 1 |
| Harper, G. C. | 110 | 1 |
| Hartman, John | 74 | 1 |
| Haughton, Jeffroy | 163 | 1 |
| Hays, J. N. | 13 | 1 |
| Hays, J. S. | 61 | 1 |
| Henderson, Wm. | 10 | 1 |
| Hensell, M. E. | 150 | 1 |
| Hord, Samuel | 161 | 1 |
| Hicks, John T. | 166 | 1 |
| Higgins, John | 61 | 1 |
| Hill, James W. | 48 | 1 |
| Holmes, C. | 102 | 1 |
| Hoodenpyle, Robert | 74 | 1 |
| Hough, Austin | 110 | 1 |
| James, J. K. | 115 | 1 |
| James, William M. | 64 | 1 |
| Johnson, Hiram | 88 | 1 |
| Johnston, A. P. | 166 | 1 |
| Jones, Lucy A. M. | 171 | 1 |
| Kennedy, A. H. | 12 | 1 |
| Killham, S. | 136 | 1 |
| Kimman, Riley | 163 | 1 |
| Kioby, R. L. | 40 | 1 |
| Knight, Michael | 35 | 1 |
| Knight, N. H. | 173 | 1 |
| Kotz, Francis | 17 | 1 |
| Leo, M. M. | 12 | 1 |
| Lemon, W. M. | 150 | 1 |
| Luttrell, Green | 138 | 1 |
| McAdams, William | 174 | 1 |
| McCracken, John | 70 | 1 |
| McErr, Andrew | 124 | 1 |
| Murray, J. H. | 9 | 1 |

VIII INDEX TO HOUSE MISCELLANEOUS DOCUMENTS.

| Subject. | No. | Vol. |
|---|-----|------|
| Court of Claims, judgments rendered by: | | |
| Merritt, J..... | 111 | 1 |
| Menillon, Alphonse..... | 131 | 1 |
| Miller, John..... | 10 | 1 |
| Murphy, J. S..... | 0 | 1 |
| Neeley, W. W..... | 45 | 1 |
| Norris, B. T..... | 104 | 1 |
| Orme, Walter..... | 104 | 1 |
| Palmer, E. A..... | 27 | 1 |
| Patrick, J. M..... | 53 | 1 |
| Patton, Henry..... | 71 | 1 |
| Perkins, R. S..... | 58 | 1 |
| Phelan, J. G..... | 52 | 1 |
| Pierce, J. F..... | 128 | 1 |
| Piggott, Jesse..... | 147 | 1 |
| Powell, Mary..... | 153 | 1 |
| Powell, W. M..... | 118 | 1 |
| Rawlins, N..... | 0 | 1 |
| Reid, William..... | 148 | 1 |
| Rowlett, John W..... | 183 | 1 |
| Russell, Thomas W..... | 50 | 1 |
| Ryan, Thomas..... | 67 | 1 |
| Saxson, W. G..... | 61 | 1 |
| Show, George..... | 134 | 1 |
| Shumate, A. B. and William..... | 155 | 1 |
| Shumate, James H..... | 108 | 1 |
| Smith, John..... | 151 | 1 |
| Sneuffer, A. T..... | 98 | 1 |
| Speed, M. E..... | 60 | 1 |
| Stafford, John..... | 61 | 1 |
| Stewart, F. B..... | 100 | 1 |
| Stone, Malinda..... | 51 | 1 |
| Stonebaker, G. E..... | 147 | 1 |
| Talbott, R..... | 102 | 1 |
| Terry, T. O..... | 155 | 1 |
| Thompson, P. H..... | 27 | 1 |
| Tipton, M..... | 0 | 1 |
| Ubele, Christian..... | 83 | 1 |
| Vinton, M. C..... | 112 | 1 |
| Wallace, William..... | 11 | 1 |
| Waters, Robert..... | 85 | 1 |
| Williams, M. R..... | 124 | 1 |
| Womack, J. M..... | 14 | 1 |
| Wood, A. M..... | 165 | 1 |
| Woodard, W. H..... | 30 | 1 |
| Wood, D. T..... | 182 | 1 |
| Woods, B. A..... | 131 | 1 |
| Woods, S. P..... | 115 | 1 |
| Woolsey, Wm..... | 185 | 1 |
| Coxen, Morgan..... | 18 | 1 |
| Criser, Jacob..... | 140 | 1 |
| Crow, William..... | 142 | 1 |
| Crowell, Charles..... | 99 | 1 |
| Currier, E. L..... | 21 | 1 |
| D. | | |
| Davis, Phil..... | 81 | 1 |
| Davis, T. O..... | 27 | 1 |
| Davis, T. W..... | 30 | 1 |
| Delap, Nelson, and others..... | 193 | 1 |
| Dellinger, W..... | 186 | 1 |
| Department of Labor, report on expenditures of..... | 22 | 1 |
| Disloyalty, cases dismissed by Court of Claims for..... | 24 | 1 |
| | 167 | 1 |

INDEX TO HOUSE MISCELLANEOUS DOCUMENTS.

IX

| Subject. | No. | Vol. |
|--|-----|------|
| District of Columbia: | | |
| Columbia Suburban Railroad Company | 65 | 1 |
| Excise board, report of | 117 | 1 |
| Gas, investigation of | 109 | 1 |
| Metropolitan Railroad Company | 68 | 1 |
| Streets and avenues, relative to repairs of certain | 137 | 1 |
| Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company | 73 | 1 |
| Doorkeeper. (See House of Representatives.) | | |
| Drumwright, A. J. | 168 | 1 |
| Dunn, Mary J. | 158 | 1 |
| Dwyer, P. | 9 | 1 |
| E. | | |
| Eason, S. S. | 63 | 1 |
| Elbbs, William | 61 | 1 |
| Eleventh Census, abstract relating to population | 185 | 1 |
| Elliott, John R. | 129 | 1 |
| Employees in Treasury Department from South Carolina | 69 | 1 |
| Engle, E. C. | 196 | 1 |
| Engle, J. M. | 134 | 1 |
| Enochs, William H., eulogies of | 215 | 11 |
| Ethnology, eleventh annual report of Bureau of | | 9 |
| twelfth annual report of Bureau of | | 10 |
| Contributions to North American (vol. 9) | | 21 |
| Eulogies: | | |
| Chipman | 214 | 11 |
| Enochs | 215 | 11 |
| Lilly | 216 | 11 |
| Mutchler | 93 | 11 |
| Evans, James E. | 95 | 1 |
| F. | | |
| Ferguson, John | 27 | 1 |
| Ferrell, J. R. | 34 | 1 |
| Filhol, Hypolite, et al | 77 | 1 |
| Fish and Fisheries, report of Commissioner of, 1892 | | 36 |
| letter of Commissioner relative to establishing hatchery at Philadelphia | 198 | 1 |
| report of Commissioner on damage to, in Wabash River | 196 | 1 |
| Fish Commission, bulletin of, for 1892 | | 18 |
| bulletin of, for 1893 | | 20 |
| Fitzhugh, Henry | 63 | 1 |
| Folding room. (See House of Representatives.) | | |
| Foster, John | 140 | 1 |
| Fowle, James L. | 146 | 1 |
| Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, annual report of commissioner | 26 | 1 |
| G. | | |
| Gaddy, F. M. and H. A. | 115 | 1 |
| Garrison, Margaret | 59 | 1 |
| Garrot, Pierre | 129 | 1 |
| Gas investigation in District of Columbia | 109 | 1 |
| Geological Congress, report of the Fifth International | | 13 |
| Geological Survey: | | |
| Monographs of (vol. 23) | | 5 |
| (vol. 23) | | 14 |
| (vol. 24) | | 15 |
| Bulletins 87 to 89 | | 23 |
| 90 to 97 | | 24 |
| 98 to 101 | | 25 |
| 102 to 106 | | 26 |
| 107 to 117 | | 27 |

| Subject. | No. | Vol. |
|---|-----|------|
| Geological Survey: | | |
| Report on mineral resources of United States for 1892 | | 4 |
| 1893 | | 28 |
| Gibson, William F. | 80 | 1 |
| Giebelhouse, Philip | 83 | 1 |
| Gilbert, E. S. | 10 | 1 |
| Gilfoil, Patrick | 100 | 1 |
| Golden, S. M. | 32 | 1 |
| Graham, A. | 115 | 1 |
| Grand Junction (Tenn.) Baptist Church | 203 | 1 |
| Griffith, G. W., report of Court of Claims on | 199 | 1 |
| Green, Eliza | 49 | 1 |
| Grim, Jacob | 128 | 1 |
| Gussin, W. C. | 31 | 1 |
| Grove, E. S. | 15 | 1 |
| H. | | |
| Haitz, Robert | 101 | 1 |
| Hale, E. M. | 154 | 1 |
| Harper, G. C. | 110 | 1 |
| Hartman, John | 74 | 1 |
| Hawaii: | | |
| Sense of House relative to | 75 | 1 |
| Relative to use of U. S. naval force at | 60 | 1 |
| Relative to intervention by U. S. Government in affairs of (friendly government): | | |
| "Hitt" | 42 | 1 |
| "Boutelle" | 43 | 1 |
| "McCreary" | 44 | 1 |
| Hays, J. N. | 13 | 1 |
| Hays, J. S. | 61 | 1 |
| Helena (Ark.) First Baptist Church | 201 | 1 |
| Henderson, William | 10 | 1 |
| Hensell, M. E. | 150 | 1 |
| Herd, Samuel | 101 | 1 |
| Hicks, John T. | 100 | 1 |
| Higgins, John | 61 | 1 |
| Hill, James W. | 48 | 1 |
| Holmes, C. | 102 | 1 |
| Hoodenpyle, Robert | 71 | 1 |
| Hough, Austin, report of Court of Claims | 110 | 1 |
| Houghton, Jeffrey | 103 | 1 |
| House of Representatives: | | |
| List of members and their place of residence | 1 | 1 |
| Standing committees of | 2 | 1 |
| Alphabetical list of Members and Delegates and the standing committees on which they serve | 3 | 1 |
| Books, pamphlets, etc., in folding room of | 20 | 1 |
| Members' pay, to enforce deductions for absence | 120 | 1 |
| Messengers for the minority | 21 | 1 |
| Property in charge of Doorkeeper | 19 | 1 |
| Clerk | 6 | 1 |
| Sergeant-at-Arms | 4 | 1 |
| Receipts and disbursements of Sergeant-at-Arms of | 5 | 1 |
| Report of waste-paper sales by Doorkeeper of | 23 | 1 |
| Ventilation of, to promote by employing night force | 102 | 1 |
| Hubbard, Mary Jane | 183 | 1 |
| Huntsville (Ala.) Primitive Baptist Church | 203 | 1 |
| I. | | |
| Indian reservations, relative to renewal of leases on certain, in Okla- homa Territory | 87 | 1 |
| Imported merchandise, report on, for 1890-1893 | 96 | (*) |

* Bound in vol. 25, House Executive Documents.

| Subject. | No. | Vol. |
|---|-----|------|
| International arbitrations, history and digest of..... | | 30 |
| International Geological Congress, report of proceedings of..... | 107 | 13 |
| J. | | |
| James, J. K..... | 115 | 1 |
| James, William M..... | 64 | 1 |
| Jenison, George..... | 21 | 1 |
| Johnson, Hiram..... | 88 | 1 |
| Johnston, J. P..... | 166 | 1 |
| Jones, Isaac..... | 186 | 1 |
| Jones, Lucy A. M..... | 171 | 1 |
| K. | | |
| Kennedy, A. H..... | 12 | 1 |
| Kilham, S..... | 136 | 1 |
| Kimman, Riley..... | 163 | 1 |
| Kiowa Reservation, relative to certain leases of lands in..... | 87 | 1 |
| Kirby, R. L..... | 40 | 1 |
| Knight, Joseph..... | 129 | 1 |
| Knight, Michael..... | 85 | 1 |
| Knight, N. H..... | 172 | 1 |
| Kotz, Francis..... | 17 | 1 |
| L. | | |
| Labor troubles, to investigate (Pullman)..... | 189 | 1 |
| Lee, M. M..... | 12 | 1 |
| Lemon, W. M..... | 150 | 1 |
| Lewis, Almer D..... | 103 | 1 |
| Library of Congress, report on construction of building for..... | 7 | 1 |
| Lilly, William, eulogies of..... | 216 | 11 |
| Lobdel, Charles S..... | 191 | 1 |
| Lovelace, Emma C..... | 187 | 1 |
| Luttrell, Green..... | 138 | 1 |
| M. | | |
| McAdams, William..... | 174 | 1 |
| McCracken, John..... | 70 | 1 |
| McEver, Andrew..... | 124 | 1 |
| Maguire bills, hearings relative to..... | 206 | 1 |
| Maury, J. H..... | 9 | 1 |
| Meadors, Zaddock..... | 146 | 1 |
| Meeha, Catherine Barry..... | 143 | 1 |
| Members' pay, to enforce deductions for absence..... | 120 | 1 |
| Merchandise, report on imported, 1890-1893..... | 90 | (*) |
| in bond transported through Canada, for information..... | 92 | 1 |
| Merchant marine, hearing on Maguire bills relating to..... | 200 | 1 |
| Merritt, J..... | 134 | 1 |
| Messages of Presidents of United States, compilation of..... | | 37 |
| Metropolitan Railroad Company..... | 68 | 1 |
| Meuillon, Alphonse..... | 111 | 1 |
| Mexico, relative to correspondence with, on question of Zona Libre..... | 152 | 1 |
| Miller, John..... | 16 | 1 |
| Mineral Resources of United States (1893)..... | | 4 |
| (1898)..... | | 28 |
| Mint, relative to site for, at Philadelphia..... | 100 | 1 |
| Monograph of Geological Survey. (See Geological Survey.)..... | | |
| Moore, Stephen..... | 70 | 1 |
| Murphy, J. S..... | 9 | 1 |
| Mutchler, William, eulogies on..... | 93 | 11 |
| N. | | |
| Naval vessels, relative to speed premiums paid on..... | 80 | 1 |
| Neeley, W. W..... | 45 | 1 |

* Bound in vol. 25, House Executive Documents.

| Subject. | No. | Vol. |
|--|-----|------|
| Neville, B. B | 186 | 1 |
| Newport, N. C., Primitive Baptist Church of | 146 | 1 |
| New York City, inquiry relative to condition, etc., of public build- ings and grounds | 46 | 1 |
| Nixon, H. C | 146 | 1 |
| Norris, B. T., report of Court of Claims | 194 | 1 |
| North American Ethnology. (See Ethnology.) | | |
| O. | | |
| Official Records of War of Rebellion (vol. 43, part 1) | | 7 |
| (vol. 43, part 2) | | 8 |
| (vol. 44) | | 12 |
| (vol. 45, part 1) | | 16 |
| (vol. 45, part 2) | | 17 |
| (vol. 46, part 1) | | 33 |
| (vol. 46, part 2) | | 34 |
| (vol. 46, part 3) | | 35 |
| Official Register (legislative, judicial, and executive), part 1 | | 2 |
| (postal service), part 2 | | 3 |
| Oglesby, L. T | 146 | 1 |
| Oklahoma, relative to certain leases of Indian lands in | 87 | 1 |
| Orme, Walter | 104 | 1 |
| P. | | |
| Pacific Coast, resolution relative to certain river and harbor im- provements on | 207 | 1 |
| Pulmer, E. A | 37 | 1 |
| Patrick, J. M | 53 | 1 |
| Patton, Henry | 71 | 1 |
| Pelliter, E. W | 146 | 1 |
| Perkins, R. S | 58 | 1 |
| Permanent specific and indefinite appropriations | 86 | 1 |
| Perry, O. H | 105 | 1 |
| Phelan, J. G | 52 | 1 |
| Photzing, Cornelius | 195 | 1 |
| Philadelphia, Pa., relative to site for new mint building at | 160 | 1 |
| letter of Commissioner relative to establishing hatchery at | 198 | 1 |
| Pierce, J. F | 128 | 1 |
| Piggott, Jesse | 147 | 1 |
| Porche, Louis V | 129 | 1 |
| Powell, Mary | 153 | 1 |
| Powell, W. M | 118 | 1 |
| Premiums, relative to, paid on naval vessels for speed | 80 | 1 |
| Presidents of United States, compilation of messages of | | 37 |
| Priddy, John D | 146 | 1 |
| Primitive Baptist Church of Newport, N. C | 146 | 1 |
| Private claims, index of, from Forty-seventh to Fifty-first Congress | | 40 |
| R. | | |
| Raiford, Robert | 190 | 1 |
| Raither, James | 193 | 1 |
| Rowlins, M | 9 | 1 |
| Reid, William | 148 | 1 |
| Rowlett, John W | 183 | 1 |
| Russell, Thomas W | 50 | 1 |
| Ryan, Thomas | 67 | 1 |
| S. | | |
| St. Charles College, St. Charles, St. Charles County, Mo | 145 | 1 |
| Sanford, Sylvanus | 130 | 1 |
| Saxson, W. G | 61 | 1 |
| Seamen, hearings relative to Maguire bills relating to | 206 | 1 |

| Subject. | No. | Vol. |
|---|-----|------|
| Sells, Hohnes | 120 | 1 |
| Sergeant-at-Arms. (See House of Representatives.) | | |
| Show, George | 134 | 1 |
| Shumate, A. B. and William | 155 | 1 |
| Shumate, James H. | 108 | 1 |
| Simmons, H. S. | 100 | 1 |
| Smith, John | 151 | 1 |
| Smithsonian Institution, report of 1893, part 1 | | 20 |
| part 2 | | 30 |
| Sneuffer, A. T. | 98 | 1 |
| South Carolina, employes in Treasury Department from | 69 | 1 |
| Speed, M. E. | 66 | 1 |
| Stafford, John | 61 | 1 |
| Stewart, F. B. | 100 | 1 |
| Stone, Malinda | 51 | 1 |
| Stonebaker, G. E. | 147 | 1 |
| T. | | |
| Talbott, R. | 102 | 1 |
| Terry, T. O. | 155 | 1 |
| Thompson, P. H. | 27 | 1 |
| Tipton, M. | 9 | 1 |
| Tolson, John J. | 140 | 1 |
| Treasury notes, resolution of inquiry relative to issuance of certain | 113 | 1 |
| U. | | |
| Ubelo, Christian | 83 | 1 |
| United States Fish Commission. (See Fish Commission.) | | |
| United States Geological Survey. (See Geological Survey.) | | |
| Utah, laws passed by legislature of | 169 | 1 |
| Utz, Alice | 170 | 1 |
| V. | | |
| Ventilation, to promote, of House of Representatives by employment of night force | 102 | 1 |
| Vinton, M. C. | 112 | 1 |
| W. | | |
| Wabash River, report of commission on damage to food fish in. | 106 | 1 |
| Wallace, William | 11 | 1 |
| War of Rebellion, official records of (vol. 43, part 1) | | 7 |
| (vol. 43, part 2) | | 8 |
| (vol. 44) | | 12 |
| (vol. 45, part 1) | | 16 |
| (vol. 45, part 2) | | 17 |
| (vol. 46, part 1) | | 33 |
| (vol. 46, part 2) | | 34 |
| (vol. 46, part 3) | | 35 |
| Washington. (See District of Columbia.) | | 1 |
| Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company | 72 | 1 |
| Wasson, J. R. | 107 | 1 |
| Wasson, Richard F. | 78 | 1 |
| Waste paper, account of sale of, by Doorkeeper | 23 | 1 |
| Waters, Robert | 85 | 1 |
| Weather Bureau, report of, 1893 | | 31 |
| Wichita Reservation, relative to certain lease of lands in | 87 | 1 |
| White, H. | 70 | 1 |
| Williams, M. R. | 124 | 1 |
| Wolfson, Jacob A. | 202 | |
| Womack, J. M. | 14 | |
| Wood, A. M. | 165 | |
| Wood, D. T. | 182 | |

| Subject. | No. | Vol. |
|---|-----|------|
| Woodard, W. H | 80 | 1 |
| Woods, B. R. | 131 | 1 |
| Woods, S. P. | 115 | 1 |
| Woolsey, Wm | 135 | 1 |
| World's Columbian Exposition, report of auditor to Board of Directors | 103 | 1 |
| Z. | | |
| Zona libre, relative to correspondence with Mexico on subject of | 152 | 1 |

53D CONGRESS, } HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. { MIS. DOC. 208,
2d Session. } Part I.

THE
WAR OF THE REBELLION:
A COMPILATION OF THE
OFFICIAL RECORDS
OF THE
UNION AND CONFEDERATE ARMIES.

PUBLISHED UNDER THE DIRECTION OF
The Hon. DANIEL S. LAMONT, Secretary of War,

BY
MAJ. GEORGE B. DAVIS, U. S. A.,
MR. LESLIE J. PERRY,
MR. JOSEPH W. KIRKLEY,
Board of Publication.

SERIES I—VOLUME XLVI—IN THREE PARTS.
PART I—REPORTS.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.
1894.

P R E F A C E .

The work of preparing the records of the war for public use was begun under the resolution of Congress of May 19, 1864, by Adj. Gen. E. D. Townsend, U. S. Army, who caused copies to be made of reports of battles on file in his office and steps to be taken to collect missing records.

Under the provisions of joint resolution No. 91, of 1866, Hon. Peter H. Watson was appointed to supervise the preparation and formulate a plan for the publication of the records, but he did no work and drew no pay under this appointment, which expired July 27, 1868, by limitation of the resolution. This resolution also repealed the former one and work ceased.

The first decisive step taken in this work was the act of June 23, 1874, providing the necessary means "to enable the Secretary of War to begin the publication of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, both of the Union and Confederate Armies," and directing him "to have copied for the Public Printer all reports, letters, telegrams, and general orders, not heretofore copied or printed, and properly arranged in chronological order." Appropriations have been made from time to time for continuing such preparation. Under this act the preliminary work was resumed by General Townsend, who first outlined the plan on which the records are printed, though it appears that originally he contemplated publishing to the world only the more important military reports.

Subsequently, under meager appropriations, it was prosecuted in a somewhat desultory manner by various subordinates of the War Department until December 14, 1877, when the Secretary of War, perceiving that the undertaking needed the undivided attention of a single head, detailed Lieut. Col. Robert N. Scott, U. S. Army, to take charge of the bureau and devote himself exclusively to the work.

The act of June 23, 1874, greatly enlarged upon the first crude scheme of publication. On this more comprehensive basis it was determined that the volumes should include not only the battle reports, but also "all official documents that can be obtained by the compiler, and that appear to be of any historical value." Colonel Scott system-atized the work and the plan and presented the records in the following order of arrangement, which has been adhered to by his successors:

The first series will embrace the formal reports, both Union and Confederate, of the first seizures of United States property in the Southern States, and of all military operations in the field, with the correspondence, orders, and returns relating specially thereto, and, as proposed, is to be accompanied by an Atlas.

In this series the reports will be arranged according to the campaigns and several theaters of operations (in the chronological order of the events), and the Union reports of any event will, as a rule, be immediately followed by the Confederate accounts. The correspondence, etc., not embraced in the "reports" proper will follow (first Union and next Confederate) in chronological order.

The second series will contain the correspondence, orders, reports, and returns, Union and Confederate, relating to prisoners of war, and (so far as the military authorities were concerned) to State or political prisoners.

The third series will contain the correspondence, orders, reports, and returns of the Union authorities (embracing their correspondence with the Confederate officials) not relating specially to the subjects of the first and second series. It will set forth the annual and special reports of the Secretary of War, of the General-in-Chief, and of the chiefs of the several staff corps and departments; the calls for troops, and the correspondence between the National and the several State authorities.

The fourth series will exhibit the correspondence, orders, reports, and returns of the Confederate authorities, similar to that indicated for the Union officials, as of the third series, but excluding the correspondence between the Union and Confederate authorities given in that series.

The first volume of the records was issued in the early fall of 1880. The act approved June 16, 1880, provided "for the printing and binding, under direction of the Secretary of War, of 10,000 copies of a compilation of the Official Records (Union and Confederate) of the War of the Rebellion, so far as the same may be ready for publication, during the fiscal year;" and that "of said number 7,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Executive Departments." Under this act Colonel Scott proceeded to publish the first five volumes of the records.*

*All subsequent volumes have been distributed under the act approved August 7, 1882, which provides that:

"The volumes of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion shall be distributed as follows: One thousand copies to the Executive Departments, as now provided by law. One thousand copies for distribution by the Secretary of War among officers of the army and contributors to the work. Eight thousand three hundred copies shall be sent by the Secretary of War to such libraries, organizations, and individuals as may be designated by the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of the Forty-seventh Congress. Each Senator shall designate not exceeding twenty-six, and each Representative and Delegate not exceeding twenty-one, of such addresses, and the volumes shall be sent thereto from time to time as they are published, until the publication is completed. Senators, Representatives, and Delegates shall inform the Secretary of War in each case how many volumes of those heretofore published they have forwarded to such addresses. The remaining copies of the eleven thousand to be published, and all sets that may not be ordered to be distributed as provided herein, shall be sold by the Secretary of War for cost of publication with ten per cent. added thereto, and the proceeds of such sale shall be

Col. Robert N. Scott died March 5, 1887, before the completion of the work, which, during a ten years' service, he had come to love so dearly. At his death some twenty-six books only had been issued, but he had compiled a large amount of matter for forthcoming volumes; consequently his name as compiler was retained in all the books up to and including Vol. XXXVI, although his successors had added largely to his compilations from new material found after his demise.

The Secretary of War, May 7, 1887, assigned Lieut. Col. H. M. Lazelle, U. S. Army, to duty as the successor of Colonel Scott. He had continued in charge about two years, when, in the act approved March 2, 1889, it was provided—

That hereafter the preparation and publication of said records shall be conducted, under the Secretary of War, by a board of three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Army, and two civilian experts, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, the compensation of said civilian experts to be fixed by the Secretary of War.

The Secretary of War appointed Maj. George B. Davis, judge-advocate, U. S. Army, as the military member, and Leslie J. Perry, of Kansas, and Joseph W. Kirkley, of Maryland, as the civilian expert members of said board. The board assumed direction of the publication at the commencement of the fiscal year 1889, its first work beginning with Serial No. 36 of Vol. XXIV.

Each volume includes a copious and accurate index, and for the further convenience of investigators there will be, in addition, a general index to the entire set when complete in a volume by itself.

Nothing is printed in these volumes except duly authenticated contemporaneous records of the war. The scope of the board's work is to decide upon and arrange the matter to be published; to correct and verify the orthography of the papers used, and occasionally to add a foot-note of explanation.

GEO. B. DAVIS, Major and J. A., U. S. A.,
LESLIE J. PERRY, Civilian Expert,
JOSEPH W. KIRKLEY, Civilian Expert,
Board of Publication.

Approved:

REDFIELD PROCTOR,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., August 1, 1891.

covered into the Treasury. If two or more sets of said volumes are ordered to the same address, the Secretary of War shall inform the Senators, Representatives, or Delegates who have designated the same, who thereupon may designate other libraries, organizations, or individuals. The Secretary of War shall report to the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress what volumes of the series heretofore published have not been furnished to such libraries, organizations, and individuals. He shall also inform distributees at whose instance the volumes are sent."

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER LVIII.

| | Page. |
|---|--------|
| Operations in Northern and Southeastern Virginia, North Carolina (January 1-31), West Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. January 1-June 30, 1865 | 1-1326 |

CONTENTS OF PRECEDING VOLUMES.

VOLUME I.

| CHAPTER I. | Page. | CHAPTER V. | Page. |
|--|---------|---|---------|
| Operations in Charleston Harbor, South Carolina. December 20, 1860-April 14, 1861..... | 1-317 | The secession of North Carolina. January 9-May 20, 1861..... | 474-488 |
| CHAPTER II. | | CHAPTER VI. | |
| The secession of Georgia. January 3-26, 1861..... | 318-325 | The secession of Louisiana. January 10-February 19, 1861..... | 480-501 |
| CHAPTER III. | | CHAPTER VII. | |
| The secession of Alabama and Mississippi. January 4-20, 1861..... | 320-330 | Operations in Texas and New Mexico. February 1-June 11, 1861..... | 502-630 |
| CHAPTER IV. | | CHAPTER VIII. | |
| Operations in Florida. January 6-August 31, 1861..... | 331-473 | Operations in Arkansas, the Indian Territory, and Missouri. February 7-May 9, 1861..... | 637-691 |

VOLUME II.

| CHAPTER IX. | Page. |
|--|--------|
| Operations in Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and West Virginia. April 16-July 31, 1861. | 1-1612 |

VOLUME III.

| CHAPTER X. | Page. |
|---|-------|
| Operations in Missouri, Arkansas, Kansas, and Indian Territory. May 10-November 10, 1861. | 1-740 |

VOLUME IV.

| CHAPTER XI. | Page. | CHAPTER XIII. | Page. |
|---|---------|---|---------|
| Operations in Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona. June 11, 1861-February 1, 1862. | 1-174 | Operations in North Carolina and South-eastern Virginia. August 1, 1861-January 11, 1862..... | 500-721 |
| CHAPTER XII. | | | |
| Operations in Kentucky and Tennessee. July 1-November 10, 1861..... | 175-505 | | |

VOLUME V.

| CHAPTER XIV. | Page. |
|--|--------|
| Operations in Maryland, Northern Virginia, and West Virginia. August 1, 1861-March 17, 1862. | 1-1106 |

VOLUME VI.

| CHAPTER XV. | Page. | CHAPTER XVI. | Page. |
|---|-------|--|---------|
| Operations on the coasts of South Carolina, Georgia, and Middle and East Florida. August 21, 1861-April 11, 1862. | 1-435 | Operations in West Florida, Southern Alabama, Southern Mississippi, and Louisiana. September 1, 1861-May 12, 1862. | 480-894 |

VOLUME VII.

| CHAPTER XVII. | Page. |
|--|-------|
| Operations in Kentucky, Tennessee, North Alabama, and Southwest Virginia. November 10, 1861-March 4, 1862..... | 1-940 |

CONTENTS OF PRECEDING VOLUMES.

VOLUME VIII.

| CHAPTER XVIII. | | Page. |
|---|--|-------|
| Operations in Missouri, Arkansas, Kansas, and Indian Territory. Nov. 10, 1861-April 10, 1862. | | 1-834 |

VOLUME IX.

| CHAPTER XIX. | Page. | CHAPTER XXI. | Page. |
|---|--------|--|---------|
| Operations in Southeastern Virginia. January 11-March 17, 1862..... | 1-71 | Operations in Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona. February 1-September 20, 1862..... | 481-736 |
| CHAPTER XX. | | | |
| Operations in North Carolina. January 11-August 20, 1862..... | 72-180 | | |

VOLUME X—IN TWO PARTS.

CHAPTER XXII.

Operations in Kentucky, Tennessee, North Mississippi, North Alabama, and Southwest Virginia. March 4-June 10, 1862.

| | Page. |
|--|-------|
| Part I —Reports..... | 1-927 |
| Part II —Correspondence, etc..... | 1-942 |

VOLUME XI—IN THREE PARTS.

CHAPTER XXIII.

The Peninsular Campaign, Virginia. March 17-September 2, 1862.

| | Page. |
|---|--------|
| Part I —Reports, March 17-June 21..... | 1-1077 |
| Part II —Reports, June 25-September 2..... | 1-994 |
| Part III —Correspondence, etc..... | 1-991 |

VOLUME XII—IN THREE PARTS.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Operations in Northern Virginia, West Virginia, and Maryland. March 17-September 2, 1862.

| | Page. |
|---|-------|
| Part I —Reports, March 17-June 25..... | 1-818 |
| Part II —Reports, June 28-September 2..... | 1-820 |
| Part III —Correspondence, etc..... | 1-900 |

VOLUME XIII.

CHAPTER XXV.

| | Page. |
|--|-------|
| Operations in Missouri, Arkansas, Kansas, the Indian Territory, and the Department of the Northwest. April 10-November 20, 1862..... | 1-681 |

VOLUME XIV.

CHAPTER XXVI.

| | Page. |
|---|--------|
| Operations on the coasts of South Carolina, Georgia, and Middle and East Florida. April 12, 1862-June 11, 1863..... | 1-1025 |

VOLUME XV.

CHAPTER XXVII.

| | Page. |
|---|--------|
| Operations in West Florida, Southern Alabama, Southern Mississippi (embracing all operations against Vicksburg, May 18-July 27, 1862), and Louisiana, May 12, 1862-May 14, 1863; and operations in Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona. September 20, 1862-May 14, 1863..... | 1-1195 |

CONTENTS OF PRECEDING VOLUMES.

XI

VOLUME XVI—IN TWO PARTS.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Operations in Kentucky, Middle and East Tennessee, North Alabama, and Southwest Virginia. June 10-October 31, 1862.

| | |
|--|--------|
| | Page. |
| Part I —Reports..... | 1-1168 |
| Part II —Correspondence, etc..... | 1-1017 |

VOLUME XVII—IN TWO PARTS.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Operations in West Tennessee and Northern Mississippi. June 10, 1862-January 20, 1863.

| | |
|--|-------|
| | Page. |
| Part I —Reports..... | 1-807 |
| Part II —Correspondence, etc..... | 1-916 |

VOLUME XVIII.

CHAPTER XXX.

Operations in North Carolina and Southeastern Virginia. August 20, 1862-June 3, 1863.....

Page.
1-1104

VOLUME XIX—IN TWO PARTS.

CHAPTER XXXI.

Operations in Northern Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. September 3-November 14, 1862.

| | |
|---|--------|
| | Page. |
| Part I —Reports, September 3-20..... | 1-1108 |
| Part II —Reports, September 20-November 14; Correspondence, etc., September 3-November 14..... | 1-730 |

VOLUME XX—IN TWO PARTS.

CHAPTER XXXII.

Operations in Kentucky, Middle and East Tennessee, North Alabama, and Southwest Virginia. November 1, 1862-January 20, 1863.

| | |
|--|-------|
| | Page. |
| Part I —Reports..... | 1-907 |
| Part II —Correspondence, etc..... | 1-616 |

VOLUME XXI.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Operations in Northern Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. November 15, 1862-January 25, 1863.....

Page.
1-1162

VOLUME XXII—IN TWO PARTS.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Operations in Missouri, Arkansas, Kansas, the Indian Territory, and the Department of the Northwest. November 20, 1862-December 31, 1863.

| | |
|--|--------|
| | Page. |
| Part I —Reports..... | 1-620 |
| Part II —Correspondence, etc..... | 1-1163 |

CONTENTS OF PRECEDING VOLUMES.

VOLUME XXIII—IN TWO PARTS.

CHAPTER XXXV.

Operations in Kentucky, Middle and East Tennessee, North Alabama, and Southwest
January 21–August 10, 1863.

Part I—Reports

Part II—Correspondence, etc.

VOLUME XXIV—IN THREE PARTS.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

Operations in Mississippi and West Tennessee, including those in Arkansas and Louisiana with the Siege of Vicksburg. January 20–August 10, 1863.

Part I—Reports, January 20–May 15, including the "General Reports" for whole
January 20–August 10.

Part II—Reports, May 16–August 10.

Part III—Correspondence, etc.

VOLUME XXV—IN TWO PARTS.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Operations in Northern Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. Jan-1863.

Part I—Reports

Part II—Correspondence, etc.

VOLUME XXVI—IN TWO PARTS.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Operations in West Florida, Southern Alabama, Southern Mississippi, Louisiana, and Mexico. May 14–December 31, 1863.

Part I—Reports, Union Correspondence, etc.

Part II—Confederate Correspondence, etc.

VOLUME XXVII—IN THREE PARTS.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

Operations in North Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and the East. June 8–August 3, 1863.

Part I—Reports

Part II—Reports

Part III—Correspondence, etc.

VOLUME XXVIII—IN TWO PARTS.

CHAPTER XL.

Operations on the coasts of South Carolina and Georgia, and in Middle and East Florida
December 31, 1863.

Part I—Reports

Part II—Correspondence, etc.

VOLUME XXIX—IN TWO PARTS.

CHAPTER XLI.

Operations in North Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania.
December 31, 1863.

Part I—Reports

Part II—Correspondence, etc.

CONTENTS OF PRECEDING VOLUMES.

XIII

VOLUME XXX—IN FOUR PARTS.

CHAPTER XIII.

Operations in Kentucky, Southwest Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi, North Alabama, and North Georgia. August 11-October 10, 1863.

| | Page. |
|--|--------|
| Part I —Reports..... | 1-1071 |
| Part II —Reports..... | 1-821 |
| Part III —Union Correspondence, etc..... | 1-1017 |
| Part IV —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-768 |

VOLUME XXXI—IN THREE PARTS.

CHAPTER XLIII.

Operations in Kentucky, Southwest Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi, North Alabama, and North Georgia. October 20-December 31, 1863.

| | Page. |
|---|-------|
| Part I —Reports and Union Correspondence..... | 1-852 |
| Part II —Reports..... | 1-782 |
| Part III —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-893 |

VOLUME XXXII—IN THREE PARTS.

CHAPTER XLIV.

Operations in Kentucky, Southwest Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, and North Georgia. January 1-April 30, 1864.

| | Page. |
|---|-------|
| Part I —Reports..... | 1-703 |
| Part II —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-833 |
| Part III —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-870 |

VOLUME XXXIII.

CHAPTER XLV.

Operations in North Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. January 1-April 30, 1864.

| | Page. |
|-------|--------|
| | 1-1335 |

VOLUME XXXIV—IN FOUR PARTS.

CHAPTER XLVI.

Operations in Louisiana and the Trans-Mississippi States and Territories. January 1-June 30, 1864.

| | Page. |
|---|--------|
| Part I —Reports..... | 1-1058 |
| Part II —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-1107 |
| Part III —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-835 |
| Part IV —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-701 |

VOLUME XXXV—IN TWO PARTS.

CHAPTER XLVII.

Operations in South Carolina and Florida, and on the Georgia Coast. January 1-November 13, 1864.

| | Page. |
|--|-------|
| Part I —Reports, Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-646 |
| Part II —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-650 |

XIV

CONTENTS OF PRECEDING VOLUMES.

VOLUME XXXVI—IN THREE PARTS.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

Operations in Southeastern Virginia and North Carolina. May 1-June 12, 1861.

| | |
|---|-----------------|
| Part I —Reports..... | Page, 1-1191 |
| Part II —Reports, Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-1927 |
| Part III —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-903 |

VOLUME XXXVII—IN TWO PARTS.

CHAPTER XLIX.

Operations in Northern Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. May 1-August 3, 1861.

| | |
|--|----------------|
| Part I —Reports, Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | Page, 1-770 |
| Part II —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-906 |

VOLUME XXXVIII—IN FIVE PARTS.

CHAPTER I.

The Atlanta, Ga., Campaign. May 1-September 8, 1861.

| | |
|--|----------------|
| Part I —Reports..... | Page, 1-936 |
| Part II —Reports..... | 1-930 |
| Part III —Reports..... | 1-1008 |
| Part IV —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-807 |
| Part V —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-1031 |

VOLUME XXXIX—IN THREE PARTS.

CHAPTER II.

Operations in Kentucky, Southwest Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, and North Georgia (the Atlanta Campaign excepted). May 1-November 13, 1861.

| | |
|---|----------------|
| Part I —Reports..... | Page, 1-908 |
| Part II —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-889 |
| Part III —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-918 |

VOLUME XL—IN THREE PARTS.

CHAPTER III.

Operations in Southeastern Virginia and North Carolina. June 13-July 31, 1861.

| | |
|---|----------------|
| Part I —Reports..... | Page, 1-823 |
| Part II —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-717 |
| Part III —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-823 |

VOLUME XLI—IN FOUR PARTS.

CHAPTER LIII.

Operations in Louisiana and the Trans-Mississippi States and Territories. July 1-December 31, 1861.

| | |
|---|-----------------|
| Part I —Reports..... | Page, 1-1006 |
| Part II —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-1000 |
| Part III —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-1015 |
| Part IV —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc..... | 1-1147 |

CONTENTS OF PRECEDING VOLUMES.

XV

VOLUME XLII—IN THREE PARTS.

CHAPTER LIV.

Operations in Southeastern Virginia and North Carolina. August 1–December 31, 1864.

| | |
|---|--------|
| | Page. |
| Part I —Reports | 1-1020 |
| Part II —Union and Confederate Correspondence | 1-1311 |
| Part III —Union and Confederate Correspondence | 1-1370 |

VOLUME XLIII—IN TWO PARTS.

CHAPTER LV.

Operations in Northern Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. August 4–December 31, 1864.

| | |
|---|--------|
| | Page. |
| Part I —Reports, Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc. | 1-1032 |
| Part II —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc. | 1-951 |

VOLUME XLIV.

CHAPTER LVI.

Operations in South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida. November 14–December 31, 1864.....

Page.
1-1013

VOLUME XLV.

CHAPTER LVII.

Operations in Kentucky, Southwest Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, and North Georgia.
November 14, 1864–January 23, 1865.

| | |
|---|--------|
| | Page. |
| Part I —Reports, Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc. | 1-1202 |
| Part II —Union and Confederate Correspondence, etc. | 1-806 |

1865.

| | Sunday. | Monday. | Tuesday. | Wednesday. | Thursday. | Friday. | Saturday. | | Sunday. | Monday. | Tuesday. | Wednesday. | Thursday. | Friday. | Saturday. |
|----------|---------|---------|----------|------------|-----------|---------|-----------|----------|---------|---------|----------|------------|-----------|---------|-----------|
| Jan.... | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | July.... | | | | | | | 1 |
| | 8 | 9 | 10 | 11 | 12 | 13 | 14 | | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 |
| | 15 | 16 | 17 | 18 | 19 | 20 | 21 | | 9 | 10 | 11 | 12 | 13 | 14 | 15 |
| | 22 | 23 | 24 | 25 | 26 | 27 | 28 | | 16 | 17 | 18 | 19 | 20 | 21 | 22 |
| | 29 | 30 | 31 | | | | | | 23 | 24 | 25 | 26 | 27 | 28 | 29 |
| Feb.... | | | | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | Aug.... | 30 | 31 | | | | | |
| | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | 10 | 11 | | | | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 |
| | 12 | 13 | 14 | 15 | 16 | 17 | 18 | | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | 10 | 11 | 12 |
| | 19 | 20 | 21 | 22 | 23 | 24 | 25 | | 13 | 14 | 15 | 16 | 17 | 18 | 19 |
| | 26 | 27 | 28 | | | | | | 20 | 21 | 22 | 23 | 24 | 25 | 26 |
| Mar.... | | | | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | Sept.... | 27 | 28 | 29 | 30 | 31 | | |
| | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | 10 | 11 | | | | | | | 1 | 2 |
| | 12 | 13 | 14 | 15 | 16 | 17 | 18 | | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 |
| | 19 | 20 | 21 | 22 | 23 | 24 | 25 | | 10 | 11 | 12 | 13 | 14 | 15 | 16 |
| | 26 | 27 | 28 | 29 | 30 | 31 | | | 17 | 18 | 19 | 20 | 21 | 22 | 23 |
| Apr.... | | | | | | | 1 | Oct.... | 24 | 25 | 26 | 27 | 28 | 29 | 30 |
| | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 |
| | 9 | 10 | 11 | 12 | 13 | 14 | 15 | | 8 | 9 | 10 | 11 | 12 | 13 | 14 |
| | 16 | 17 | 18 | 19 | 20 | 21 | 22 | | 15 | 16 | 17 | 18 | 19 | 20 | 21 |
| | 23 | 24 | 25 | 26 | 27 | 28 | 29 | | 22 | 23 | 24 | 25 | 26 | 27 | 28 |
| | 30 | | | | | | | | 29 | 30 | 31 | | | | |
| May.... | | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | Nov.... | | | | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 |
| | 7 | 8 | 9 | 10 | 11 | 12 | 13 | | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | 10 | 11 |
| | 14 | 15 | 16 | 17 | 18 | 19 | 20 | | 12 | 13 | 14 | 15 | 16 | 17 | 18 |
| | 21 | 22 | 23 | 24 | 25 | 26 | 27 | | 19 | 20 | 21 | 22 | 23 | 24 | 25 |
| | 28 | 29 | 30 | 31 | | | | | 26 | 27 | 28 | 29 | 30 | | |
| June.... | | | | | 1 | 2 | 3 | Dec.... | | | | | | 1 | 2 |
| | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | 10 | | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 |
| | 11 | 12 | 13 | 14 | 15 | 16 | 17 | | 10 | 11 | 12 | 13 | 14 | 15 | 16 |
| | 18 | 19 | 20 | 21 | 22 | 23 | 24 | | 17 | 18 | 19 | 20 | 21 | 22 | 23 |
| | 25 | 26 | 27 | 28 | 29 | 30 | | | 24 | 25 | 26 | 27 | 28 | 29 | 30 |
| | | | | | | | | | 31 | | | | | | |

CHAPTER LVIII.

OPERATIONS IN NORTHERN AND SOUTHEASTERN
VIRGINIA, NORTH CAROLINA (JANUARY 1 TO 31),
WEST VIRGINIA, MARYLAND, AND PENNSYLVANIA.

January 1-June 30, 1865.

PART I.

SUMMARY OF THE PRINCIPAL EVENTS.*

- Jan. 1-Apr. 3, 1865.—The Richmond (Virginia) Campaign.
2, 1865.—Scout from Benvard's Mills to South Quay, Va.
3-17, 1865.—Expedition to and capture of Fort Fisher, N. C., and its dependencies.
7, 1865.—The Second Division, Nineteenth Army Corps, leaves the Shenandoah Valley, Va., en route to Savannah, Ga.
11, 1865.—Capture of U. S. Forces at Beverly, W. Va.
11-15, 1865.—Scout from New Creek through Greenland Gap to Franklin, W. Va.
12, 1865.—The State of North Carolina merged into the Department of the South.
16, 1865.—The State of North Carolina designated as the District of North Carolina in the Department of the South.
18, 1865.—Affair near Lovettsville, Va.
19, 1865.—Reconnaissance to Myrtle Sound and skirmish at Half-Moon Battery, N. C.
31, 1865.—The Department of North Carolina constituted, to consist of the State of North Carolina, and Maj. Gen. John M. Schofield, U. S. Army, assigned to its command.
- Feb. 1, 1865.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. William W. Morris, U. S. Army, in temporary command of the Middle Department.
3, 1865.—Affair near Harper's Ferry, W. Va.
4-6, 1865.—Expedition from Winchester, Va., to Moorefield, W. Va.
5, 1865.—Skirmish at Charlestown, W. Va.
6-7, 1865.—Scout from Fairfax Court-House to Brontsville, Va.
9, 1865.—General Robert E. Lee, C. S. Army, assumes command of the Confederate Armies.
11, 1865.—Affair at Williamsburg, Va.
11-15, 1865.—Expedition from Bermuda Hundred to Fearnsville and Smithfield, Va.
13-17, 1865.—Expedition from Camp Russell (near Winchester) to Edenburg and Little Fort Valley, Va., and skirmishes.
15-16, 1865.—Scout from Fairfax Court-House to Aldie and Middleburg, Va.

* Of some of the minor conflicts noted in this Summary no circumstantial reports are on file.

- Feb. 18-19, 1865.—Expedition from Camp Averell (near Winchester) into Loudoun County, Va., and skirmish (19th) at Ashby's Gap.
Scout in Prince William County, Va.
- 21, 1865.—Raid on Cumberland, Md.
- 23-24, 1865.—Expedition from Yorktown to West Point, Va.
- 26, 1865.—Maj. Gen. Winfield S. Hancock, U. S. Army, assigned to the command of the Department of West Virginia, and temporarily of all the troops of the Middle Military Division not under the immediate command of Major-General Sheridan.
- 27-Mar. 28, 1865.—Expedition from Winchester to the front of Petersburg, Va.
- 27-Apr. 23, 1865.—Operations in the Shenandoah Valley.
- Mar. 3-8, 1865.—Operations about Warrenton, Bealeton Station, Sulphur Springs, Salem, and Centerville, Va.
- 5-8, 1865.—Expedition from Fort Monroe to Fredericksburg, Va.
- 7, 1865.—Skirmish near Flint Hill, Va.
- 10-11, 1865.—Expedition from Suffolk, Va., to Murfree's Depot, N. C., with skirmish (10th) at South Quay, Va.
- 11-13, 1865.—Expedition from Fort Monroe into Westmoreland County, Va., with skirmish (12th) near Warsaw, Va.
- 12, 1865.—Skirmish near Peach Grove, Va.
- 12-14, 1865.—Scout in Loudoun County, Va.
- 14-16, 1865.—Scout from Philippi to Carrick's Ford, W. Va.
- 14-17, 1865.—Scout from New Creek to Moorefield, W. Va.
- 18, 1865.—Skirmish near Dranesville, Va.
- 22, 1865.—Skirmish near Patterson's Creek Station, W. Va.
- 28-April 11, 1865.—Expedition from Deep Bottom, Va., to near Weldon, N. C., with skirmishes.
- 29-April 9, 1865.—The Appomattox (Virginia) Campaign.
- Apr. 3, 1865.—President Abraham Lincoln visits Petersburg, Va.
- 4, 1865.—Capture of the steamer Harriet De Ford, near Fair Haven, Chesapeake Bay, Md.
- President Abraham Lincoln visits Richmond, Va.
- 8-10, 1865.—Scout from Vienna into Loudoun County, Va.
- Scout from Fairfax Court-House into Loudoun County, Va.
- 10, 1865.—Skirmishes near Burke's Station and at Arundel's Farm, Va.
- 14, 1865.—President Abraham Lincoln murderously assaulted by J. Wilkes Booth at Ford's Theater, Washington, D. C.
- 15, 1865.—Death of President Abraham Lincoln from injuries received at the hands of J. Wilkes Booth.
- 15-23, 1865.—Scout through the counties of Randolph and Pocahontas, W. Va., and of Bath and Highland, Va.
- 19, 1865.—Maj. Gen. Lewis Wallace, U. S. Army, resumes command of the Middle Department.
- The Military Division of the James organized, to consist of the Department of Virginia and such parts of North Carolina not occupied by the command of General Sherman, and including the Army of the Potomac, and Maj. Gen. Henry W. Halleck, U. S. Army, assigned to the command of the division.
- 22, 1865.—Maj. Gen. Henry W. Halleck, U. S. Army, assumes command of the Military Division of the James.
- 23-29, 1865.—Expedition from Burkeville and Petersburg to Danville and South Boston, Va.
- 26, 1865.—Capture of J. Wilkes Booth and David E. Herold, at Garrett's Farm, near Port Royal, Va.

- Apr. 26-May 5, 1865.—Operations in the Shenandoah Valley, Va.
 May 6-14, 1865.—Expedition from Richmond to Staunton and Charlottesville, Va.
 23, 1865.—The Army of the Potomac reviewed in the city of Washington, D. C.
 June 1-13, 1865.—Expedition through Pocahontas and Pendleton Counties, W. Va., and Highland County, Va.
 4, 1865.—The Sixth Army Corps reviewed in the city of Washington, D. C.
 27, 1865.—Maj. Gen. George G. Meade assigned to the command of the Military Division of the Atlantic; Maj. Gen. Joseph Hooker, to the Department of the East; Maj. Gen. Winfield S. Hancock, to the Middle Department; Maj. Gen. Christopher C. Augur, to the Department of Washington; and Maj. Gen. Alfred H. Terry, to the Department of Virginia.
 30, 1865.—Maj. Gen. Henry W. Halleck, U. S. Army, relinquishes command of the Military Division of the James.

JANUARY 1-APRIL 3, 1865.—The Richmond (Virginia) Campaign.*

SUMMARY OF THE PRINCIPAL EVENTS.

- Jan. 2, 1865.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Samuel W. Crawford, U. S. Army, in temporary command of the Fifth Army Corps.
 Brig. Gen. Charles Devens, U. S. Army, in temporary command of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps.
 8, 1865.—Maj. Gen. Edward O. C. Ord, U. S. Army, assumes command of the Department of Virginia and North Carolina and Army of the James, vice Maj. Gen. Benjamin F. Butler, relieved.
 9, 1865.—Skirmish near Disputanta Station.
 11, 1865.—Maj. Gen. George G. Meade, U. S. Army, resumes command of the Army of the Potomac.
 12, 1865.—Maj. Gen. John G. Parke, U. S. Army, resumes command of the Ninth Army Corps.
 15, 1865.—Maj. Gen. John Gibbon, U. S. Army, assumes command of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps.
 17, 1865.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. George W. Getty, U. S. Army, in temporary command of the Sixth Army Corps.
 23-24, 1865.—Action at Fort Brady, James River.
 24, 1865.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Orlando B. Willcox, U. S. Army, in temporary command of the Ninth Army Corps.
 25, 1865.—Skirmish near Powhatan.
 27, 1865.—Maj. Gen. Gouverneur K. Warren, U. S. Army, resumes command of the Fifth Army Corps.
 30, 1865.—Scout to Long Bridge and Bottom's Bridge.
 Feb. 2, 1865.—Maj. Gen. John G. Parke, U. S. Army, resumes command of the Ninth Army Corps.
 5-7, 1865.—Battle of Hatcher's Run (otherwise known as Dabney's Mill, Armstrong's Mill, Rowanty Creek, and Vaughan Road).
 6, 1865.—Maj. Gen. Edward O. C. Ord, U. S. Army, assigned to the command of the Department of Virginia.
 14, 1865.—Maj. Gen. Horatio G. Wright, U. S. Army, resumes command of the Sixth Army Corps.

* Continued from Vols. XL and XLII, and, in addition to the separate events here enumerated, embracing the siege of Petersburg and Richmond.

- Mar. 25, 1865.—Assault on Fort Stedman.
 Action at the Watkins House.
 Action at Fort Fisher.
- 29, 1865.—Engagement at Lewis' Farm, near Gravelly Run.*
 Skirmish at the junction of the Quaker and Boylton Roads.*
 Skirmish on the Vaughan Road, near Hatcher's Run.*
- 30, 1865.—Skirmishes on the line of Hatcher's Run and Gravelly Run.*
 Skirmish near Five Forks.*
- 31, 1865.—Engagement at the White Oak Road, or White Oak Ridge.*
 Action at Hatcher's Run, or Boylton Road.*
 Action at Crow's House.*
 Engagement at Dinwiddie Court-House.*
- Apr. 1, 1865.—Battle of Five Forks.*
 Skirmish at the White Oak Road.*
- 2, 1865.—Engagement at Sutherland's Station, South Side Railroad.*
 Assault upon and capture of fortified lines in front of Petersburg.*
 Skirmish at Gravelly Ford, on Hatcher's Run.*
 Action at Scott's Cross-Roads.*
- 3, 1865.—Occupation of Richmond and Petersburg by the Union forces.*

REPORTS, ETC.

- No. 1.—Lieut. Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, U. S. Army, commanding Armies of the United States, including operations March, 1864-May, 1865.
- No. 2.—Abstract from tri-monthly returns, showing the "present for duty equipped," or effective strength of the armies operating against Richmond, under Lieut. Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, for January 31, February 28, March 20, March 31, and April 10, 1865.
- No. 3.—Return of casualties in the Union Forces at Hatcher's Run (otherwise known as Dabney's Mill, Armstrong's Mill, Rowanty Creek, and Vaughan Road) and Fort Stedman.
- No. 4.—Itineraries of the Army of the Potomac, Sheridan's Cavalry Command, and the Army of the James.
- No. 5.—Maj. Gen. George G. Meade, U. S. Army, commanding Army of the Potomac, of operations February 5-7 and March 25.
- No. 6.—Bvt. Col. James C. Duane, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, of operations January 14-February 25.
- No. 7.—Bvt. Lieut. Col. Nathaniel Michler, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, of operations March 11-18.
- No. 8.—Maj. Frank W. Hess, Third Pennsylvania Cavalry, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 9.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Henry L. Abbot, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Siege Train, of operations January 1-March 31.
- No. 10.—Maj. George Ager, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, of operations March 25.
- No. 11.—Capt. Henry H. Pierce, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Fort Brady, of operations January 23-25.
- No. 12.—Capt. William C. Faxon, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Fort Emery, of operations March 25.
- No. 13.—Lieut. Henry A. Pratt, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Batteries Parsons and Wilcox, of operations January 23-24.

* Reports of events subsequent to March 28 are included in the Appomattox Campaign, for which see p. 557.

!See also report of Surg. Thomas A. McParlin, p. 607; of Asst. Surg. Elias J. Marsh, p. 618; and of Asst. Surg. Charles Smart, p. 602.

- 4.—Lieut. Frank D. Bangs, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Battery No. 5, of operations March 25.
- 5.—Lieut. Henry D. Patterson, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Fort Morton, of operations March 25.
- 6.—Lieut. Ebenezer P. Mason, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Battery Sawyer, of operations January 23-24.
- 7.—Lieut. John O'Brien, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Battery No. 4, of operations March 25.
- 8.—Lieut. Robert Lewis, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Company L, of operations March 25.
- 9.—Lieut. Azro Drown, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Battery No. 9, of operations March 25.
- 10.—Lieut. William H. H. Bingham, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, of operations March 25.
- 11.—Lieut. James H. Casey, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, of operations March 25.
- 12.—Lieut. Charles N. Silliman, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Battery Spoilford, of operations January 24.
- 13.—Lieut. George Booth, Ninth Battery Massachusetts Light Artillery, of operations March 25.
- 14.—Capt. Joseph W. B. Wright, Fourteenth Battery Massachusetts Light Artillery, of operations March 25.
- 15.—Bvt. Maj. Christian Woerner, Third Battery New Jersey Light Artillery, of operations March 25.
- 16.—Capt. Samuel A. McCollan, Battery G, First New York Light Artillery, of operations March 25.
- 17.—Lieut. Thomas C. Rice, Battery B, First Pennsylvania Light Artillery, of operations March 25.
- 18.—Lieut. Valentino H. Stone, Batteries C and I, Fifth U. S. Artillery, of operations March 25.
- 19.—Maj. Gen. Andrew A. Humphreys, U. S. Army, commanding Second Army Corps, of operations February 5-11.
- 20.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, U. S. Army, commanding First Division, of operations February 5-7 and March 25.
- 1.—Col. George W. Scott, Sixty-first New York Infantry, commanding First Brigade, of operations March 25.
- 2.—Capt. Patrick H. Bird, Twenty-eighth Massachusetts Infantry, Second Brigade, of operations March 25.
- 3.—Capt. William H. Terwilliger, Sixty-third New York Infantry, of operations March 25.
- 4.—Lieut. Col. James J. Smith, Sixty-ninth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.
- 5.—Capt. John Smith, Eighty-eighth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.
- 6.—Col. George von Schaack, Seventh New York Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations February 5-7.
- 7.—Col. Augustus Funk, Thirty-ninth New York Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations March 25.
- 8.—Maj. Jacob Schen, Seventh New York Infantry, of operations March 25.
- 9.—Maj. John McE. Hyde, Thirty-ninth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.
- 0.—Lieut. Col. Henry M. Karples, Fifty-second New York Infantry, of operations March 25.
- 1.—Lieut. Col. Lewis W. Husk, One hundred and eleventh New York Infantry, of operations March 25.

- No. 42.—Capt. I. Hart Wilder, One hundred and twenty-sixth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 43.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. John Ramsey, Eighth New Jersey Infantry, commanding Fourth Brigade, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 44.—Lieut. Col. William Glenn, Sixty-fourth New York Infantry, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 45.—Col. William M. Mintzer, Fifty-third Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 46.—Lieut. Col. George C. Anderson, Fifty-third Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 47.—Col. St. Clair A. Mulholland, One hundred and sixteenth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 48.—Capt. James H. Hamlin, One hundred and forty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 49.—Capt. Alfred A. Rhinehart, One hundred and forty-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 50.—Maj. Seward F. Gould, Fourth New York Heavy Artillery, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 51.—Brig. Gen. Thomas A. Smyth, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division, of operations February 5-11.
- No. 52.—Brig. Gen. William Hays, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division, of operations March 25.
- No. 53.—Col. William A. Olmsted, Fifty-ninth New York Infantry, commanding First Brigade, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 54.—Lieut. Col. Joseph W. Spaulding, Nineteenth Maine Infantry, of operations February 5-11.
- No. 55.—Lieut. Col. Edmund Rice, Nineteenth Massachusetts Infantry, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 56.—Lieut. Col. Arthur R. Curtis, Twentieth Massachusetts Infantry, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 57.—Lieut. Col. George W. La Point, Seventh Michigan Infantry, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 58.—Capt. Frank Houston, First Minnesota Infantry, of operations February 5-11.
- No. 59.—Lieut. Col. James A. Jewell, Fifty-ninth New York Infantry, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 60.—Capt. Charles H. Dygert, One hundred and fifty-second New York Infantry, of operations February 5-11.
- No. 61.—Col. John H. Stover, One hundred and eighty-fourth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-11.
- No. 62.—Lieut. Col. Clement E. Warner, Thirty-sixth Wisconsin Infantry, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 63.—Col. Mathew Murphy, One hundred and eighty-second New York Infantry (Sixty-ninth National Guard Artillery), commanding Second Brigade, of operations February 5.
- No. 64.—Col. James P. McIvor, One hundred and seventieth New York Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 65.—Lieut. Col. Francis E. Pierce, One hundred and eighth New York Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 66.—Lieut. Col. Samuel A. Moore, Fourteenth Connecticut Infantry, of operations February 5-11.
- No. 67.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Gershom Mott, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 68.—Brig. Gen. Regis de Trobriand, U. S. Army, commanding First Brigade, of operations February 5-9.

- No. 69.—Capt. John W. Shafer, Twentieth Indiana Infantry, of operations March 25.
No. 70.—Col. Russell B. Shepherd, First Maine Heavy Artillery, of operations March 25.
No. 71.—Lieut. Col. Madison M. Cannon, Fortieth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.
No. 72.—Capt. James McKenna, Seventy-third New York Infantry, of operations March 25.
No. 73.—Lieut. Col. Nathan H. Vincent, Eighty-sixth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.
No. 74.—Lieut. Col. Charles H. Weygant, One hundred and twenty-fourth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.
No. 75.—Capt. Frederick W. Lewis, Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.
No. 76.—Capt. John B. Fite, One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.
No. 77.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. George W. West, Seventeenth Maine Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations February 5-7.
No. 78.—Brig. Gen. Byron R. Pierce, U. S. Army, commanding Second Brigade, of operations March 25.
No. 79.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Robert McAllister, Eleventh New Jersey Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations February 5-6 and March 25.
No. 80.—Capt. James F. Mansfield, Eleventh Massachusetts Infantry, of operations February 5-7.
No. 81.—Lieut. Col. Charles C. Rivers, Eleventh Massachusetts Infantry, of operations March 25.
No. 82.—Col. Francis Price, Seventh New Jersey Infantry, of operations February 5-7 and March 25.
No. 83.—Maj. Henry Hartford, Eighth New Jersey Infantry, of operations February 5-7 and March 25-26.
No. 84.—Lieut. Col. John Schoonover, Eleventh New Jersey Infantry, of operations February 5.
No. 85.—Capt. Charles F. Gage, Eleventh New Jersey Infantry, of operations March 25.
No. 86.—Lieut. Col. Abram L. Lockwood, One hundred and twentieth New York Infantry, of operations February 5-7.
No. 87.—Maj. Walter F. Scott, One hundred and twentieth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.
No. 88.—Bvt. Lieut. Col. John G. Hazard, First Rhode Island Light Artillery, commanding Artillery Brigade, of operations February 5-7 and March 25.
No. 89.—Bvt. Capt. John W. Roder, Battery K, Fourth U. S. Artillery, of operations February 5-11.
No. 90.—Lieut. Edward S. Smith, Fifteenth Battery New York Light Artillery, commanding section Battery K, Fourth U. S. Artillery, of operations February 6-11.
No. 91.—Maj. Gen. Gouverneur K. Warren, U. S. Army, commanding Fifth Army Corps, of operations February 5-7.
No. 92.—Surg. T. Rush Spencer, U. S. Army, Medical Director, of operations February 5-April 30.
No. 93.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Horatio G. Sickel, One hundred and ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding First Brigade, First Division, of operations February 5-7.
No. 94.—Brig. Gen. Joshua L. Chamberlain, U. S. Army, commanding First Brigade, of operations March 25.
No. 95.—Col. Allen L. Burr, One hundred and eighty-ninth New York Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations February 5-7.
No. 96.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Edgar M. Gregory, Ninety-first Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations March 25.

- No. 97.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Alfred L. Pearson, One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 98.—Capt. George R. Abbott, First Battalion Maine Sharpshooters, of operations March 25.
- No. 99.—Lieut. Col. Walter G. Morrill, Twentieth Maine Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 100.—Lieut. Col. James A. Cunningham, Thirty-second Massachusetts Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 101.—Maj. William O. Colt, Eighty-third Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Sixteenth Michigan Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 102.—Lieut. Col. Chauncey P. Rogers, Eighty-third Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 103.—Lieut. Col. Eli G. Sellers, Ninety-first Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 104.—Bvt. Lieut. Col. Henry O'Neill, One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-7 and March 25.
- No. 105.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Romeyn B. Ayres, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 106.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Frederick Winthrop, Fifth New York Veteran Infantry, commanding First Brigade, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 107.—Col. Richard N. Bowerman, Fourth Maryland Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 108.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. James Gwyn, One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 109.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Henry A. Morrow, Twenty-fourth Michigan Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, Third Division, of operations February 5-6.
- No. 110.—Col. Thomas F. McCoy, One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations February 6-9.
- No. 111.—Capt. Aaron Bright, jr., Eighty-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-10.
- No. 112.—Col. Thomas F. McCoy, One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-6.
- No. 113.—Maj. Henry J. Sheaffer, One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 6-9.
- No. 114.—Lieut. Col. Horatio N. Warren, One hundred and forty-second Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-10.
- No. 115.—Bvt. Lieut. Col. Robert H. Fitzhugh, First New York Light Artillery, commanding Artillery Brigade, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 116.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Frank Wheaton, U. S. Army, commanding First Division, Sixth Army Corps, of operations February 5-8.
- No. 117.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Joseph E. Hamblin, Sixty-fifth New York Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations March 25.
- No. 118.—Col. Oliver Edwards, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations March 25.
- No. 119.—Col. James M. Warner, First Vermont Heavy Artillery, commanding First Brigade, Second Division, of operations March 25.
- No. 120.—Lieut. Col. John G. Parr, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 121.—Lieut. Col. Amasa S. Tracy, Second Vermont Infantry, Second Brigade, of operations March 25.
- No. 122.—Lieut. Col. Horace W. Floyd, Third Vermont Infantry, commanding Third and Fourth Vermont Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 123.—Lieut. Col. Ronald A. Kennedy, Fifth Vermont Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 124.—Lieut. Col. Sumner H. Lincoln, Sixth Vermont Infantry, of operations March 25.

- No. 125.—Lieut. Col. Charles Hunsdon, First Vermont Heavy Artillery, of operations March 25.
- No. 126.—Lieut. Col. George B. Damon, Tenth Vermont Infantry, First Brigade, Third Division, of operations March 25.
- No. 127.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. Warren Keifer, One hundred and tenth Ohio Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations March 25.
- No. 128.—Lieut. Col. Joseph C. Hill, Sixth Maryland Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 129.—Lieut. Col. James W. Snyder, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery, of operations March 25.
- No. 130.—Bvt. Col. Otho H. Binkley, One hundred and tenth Ohio Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 131.—Lieut. Col. Charles M. Cornyn, One hundred and twenty-second Ohio Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 132.—Lieut. Col. Thomas W. McKinnie, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 133.—Maj. William G. Williams, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Infantry, commanding Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 134.—Maj. Gen. John G. Parke, U. S. Army, commanding Ninth Army Corps, of operations February 5-7 and March 25.
- No. 135.—Asst. Surg. Samuel Adams, U. S. Army, Medical Inspector, of operations March 1-31.
- No. 136.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Orlando B. Willcox, U. S. Army, commanding First Division, of operations March 25.
- No. 137.—Bvt. Col. Ralph Ely, Eighth Michigan Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations March 25.
- No. 138.—Capt. Ira L. Evans, First Michigan Sharpshooters, of operations March 25.
- No. 139.—Capt. John C. Boughton, Second Michigan Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 140.—Capt. Albert A. Day, Twentieth Michigan Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 141.—Lieut. Col. Adolph Becker, Forty-sixth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 142.—Lieut. Col. Martin P. Avery, Sixtieth Ohio Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 143.—Maj. Samuel K. Schwenk, Fiftieth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 144.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Napoleon B. McLaughlen, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations March 25.
- No. 145.—Bvt. Col. Gilbert P. Robinson, Third Maryland Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations March 25.
- No. 146.—Capt. Joseph F. Carter, Third Maryland Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 147.—Capt. John F. Burch, Third Maryland Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 148.—Capt. John M. Deane, Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 149.—Lieut. Col. Julius M. Tucker, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 150.—Maj. Ezra P. Gould, Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 151.—Maj. George M. Randall, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, of operations March 25.
- No. 152.—Maj. Norman J. Maxwell, One hundredth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 153.—Maj. Thomas Mathews, Seventeenth Michigan Infantry (Engineers), of operations March 25.
- No. 154.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. John F. Hartranft, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division, of operations February 5-10 and March 25.

- No. 155.—Col. Charles W. Diven, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding First Brigade, of operations March 25.
- No. 156.—Lieut. Col. William H. H. McCall, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 157.—Lieut. Col. Mish T. Hointzelman, Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 158.—Lieut. Col. George W. Frederick, Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.
- No. 159.—Col. Joseph A. Mathews, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations March 25.
- No. 160.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. John C. Tidball, Fourth New York Heavy Artillery, commanding Artillery Brigade, of operations March 25.
- No. 161.—Maj. Theodore Miller, First Pennsylvania Light Artillery, Inspector of Artillery, of operations March 25.
- No. 162.—Capt. Adelbert B. Twitchell, Seventh Battery Maine Light Artillery, of operations March 25.
- No. 163.—Capt. Edward J. Jones, Eleventh Battery Massachusetts Light Artillery, of operations March 25.
- No. 164.—Capt. Edward W. Rogers, Nineteenth Battery New York Light Artillery, of operations March 25.
- No. 165.—Capt. John B. Eaton, Twenty-seventh Battery New York Light Artillery, of operations March 25.
- No. 166.—Bvt. Maj. Jacob Roemer, Thirty-fourth Battery New York Light Artillery, of operations March 25.
- No. 167.—Capt. John R. Cooper, Eighth New York Heavy Artillery, commanding Battery No. 15, of operations March 25.
- No. 168.—Capt. Samuel H. Rhoads, Battery D, Pennsylvania Light Artillery, of operations March 25.
- No. 169.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. Irvin Gregg, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, commanding Second Cavalry Division, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 170.—Col. Michael Kerwin, Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 171.—Col. Samuel B. M. Young, Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 172.—Lieut. Col. William A. Corrie, Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 173.—Lieut. Col. John K. Robison, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 174.—Col. Oliver B. Knowles, Twenty-first Pennsylvania Cavalry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations February 5-7.
- No. 175.—Col. Andrew W. Evans, First Maryland Cavalry, commanding Third Brigade, Cavalry Division, Army of the James, of operations January 31.
- No. 176.—Bvt. Maj. Peter S. Michie, U. S. Army, Chief Engineer, Department of Virginia, of operations February 4-March 18.
- No. 177.—Lieut. William R. King, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, Acting Chief Engineer, of operations January 1-31.
- No. 178.—Medals of Honor awarded for distinguished services under Resolution of Congress, No. 43, approved July 12, 1862, and section 6 of Act of Congress approved March 3, 1863.
- No. 179.—General Robert E. Lee, U. S. Army, commanding Army of Northern Virginia, of operations February 5-8 and March 25.
- No. 180.—Abstract from returns of the Army of Northern Virginia.
- No. 181.—Maj. Gen. John B. Gordon, U. S. Army, commanding Second Army Corps, of operations February 6 and March 25.
- No. 182.—Col. William R. Peck, Louisiana Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

No. 1.

Report of Lieut. Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, U. S. Army, commanding Armies of the United States, including operations March, 1864-May, 1865.

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., July 22, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the armies of the United States from the date of my appointment to command the same:

From an early period in the rebellion I had been impressed with the idea that active and continuous operations of all the troops that could be brought into the field, regardless of season and weather, were necessary to a speedy termination of the war. The resources of the enemy and his numerical strength were far inferior to ours, but as an offset to this we had a vast territory, with a population hostile to the Government, to garrison, and long lines of river and railroad communications to protect, to enable us to supply the operating armies.

The armies in the East and West acted independently and without concert, like a balky team, no two ever pulling together, enabling the enemy to use to great advantage his interior lines of communication for transporting troops from east to west, re-enforcing the army most vigorously pressed, and to furlough large numbers, during seasons of inactivity on our part, to go to their homes and do the work of producing for the support of their armies. It was a question whether our numerical strength and resources were not more than balanced by these disadvantages and the enemy's superior position.

From the first I was firm in the conviction that no peace could be had that would be stable and conducive to the happiness of the people, both North and South, until the military power of the rebellion was entirely broken. I therefore determined, first, to use the greatest number of troops practicable against the armed force of the enemy, preventing him from using the same force at different seasons against first one and then another of our armies, and the possibility of repose for refitting and producing necessary supplies for carrying on resistance; second, to hammer continuously against the armed force of the enemy and his resources until, by mere attrition, if in no other way, there should be nothing left to him but an equal submission with the loyal section of our common country to the constitution and laws of the land. These views have been kept constantly in mind, and orders given and campaigns made to carry them out. Whether they might have been better in conception and execution is for the people, who mourn the loss of friends fallen, and who have to pay the pecuniary cost, to say. All I can say is, that what I have done has been done conscientiously, to the best of my ability, and in what I conceived to be for the best interests of the whole country.

At the date when this report begins the situation of the contending forces was about as follows: The Mississippi River was strongly garrisoned by Federal troops from Saint Louis, Mo., to its mouth. The line of the Arkansas was also held, thus giving us armed possession of all west of the Mississippi, north of that stream. A few points in Southern Louisiana, not remote from the river, were held by us, together with a small garrison at and near the mouth of the Rio Grande. All the balance of the vast territory of Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas was in the almost undisputed possession of the enemy, with an army of probably not less than 80,000 effective men that could have been brought into the field had there been sufficient opposition to have brought them out. The let-alone policy had demoralized this force, so that probably but little more than one-half of it was ever present in garrison at any one time. But the one-half, or 40,000 men, with the bands of guerrillas scattered through Missouri, Arkansas, and along the Mississippi River, and the disloyal character of much of the population, compelled the use of a large number of troops to keep navigation open on the river and to protect the loyal people to the west of it. To the east of the Mississippi we held substantially with the line of the Tennessee and Holston Rivers, running eastward to include nearly all of the State of Tennessee. South of Chattanooga a small foothold had been obtained in Georgia, sufficient to protect East Tennessee from incursions from the enemy's force at Dalton, Ga. West Virginia was substantially within our lines. Virginia, with the exception of the northern border, the Potomac River, a small area about the mouth of James River covered by the troops at Norfolk and Fort Monroe, and the territory covered by the Army of the Potomac lying along the Rapidan, was in the possession of the enemy. Along the sea-coast footholds had been obtained at Plymouth, Washington, and New Berne, in North Carolina; Beaufort, Folly and Morris Islands, Hilton Head, Fort Pulaski, and Port Royal, in South Carolina; Fernandina and Saint Augustine, in Florida. Key West and Pensacola were also in our possession, while all the important ports were blockaded by the Navy. The accompanying map, a copy of which was sent to General Sherman and other commanders in March, 1864, shows by red lines the territory occupied by us at the beginning of the rebellion and at the opening of the campaign of 1864, while those in blue are the lines which it was proposed to occupy.*

Behind the Union lines there were many bands of guerrillas and a large population disloyal to the Government, making it necessary to guard every foot of road or river used in supplying our armies. In

* The map referred to is Colton's New Guide Map of the United States and Canada, edition of 1863, and is marked in pencil as follows:

First. Red line along the Potomac, from its mouth to Williamsport; thence along Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to Oakland; thence, via Elizabethtown, to Ceredo, Versailles, and Brandenburg, and along the Ohio River to Cairo; thence up the Mississippi to vicinity of Saint Louis, up the Missouri to the Kansas line, and thence in southwesterly direction into Indian Territory.

Second. Red line along the Rappahannock, from its mouth to Rappahannock Station; thence, via Madison Court-House and Manassas Gap, to Winchester; thence southwest to the headwaters of the Guyandotte, and along the Cumberland Mountains to vicinity of the Tennessee line; thence south to the Smoky Mountains; thence through Tunnel Hill, Guntersville, and Corinth, to Oxford, Miss., and thence along the railroad to Lake Pontchartrain and along the Gulf shore to Pascagoula.

Third. Red line from Vermillion Bay to Bayou Bartholomew, in Drew County, Ark., and thence northwesterly into Indian Territory.

Fourth. Red line about Pensacola and along Santa Rosa Island.

Fifth. Red line about Jacksonville and Fernandina, Fla.

Sixth. Red line along the coast from Savannah to Charleston.

Seventh. Red line from Federal Point, along the coast, to New River Inlet, N. C.; thence, via Pollocksville, Washington, Plymouth, and Suffolk, to Saluda, Va., and thence, via Gloucester Court-House, to the Chesapeake Bay.

Eighth. Blue line from Saluda, Va., via Richmond and the James River, to Lynchburg; thence, via Liberty, to the Blue Ridge, and along there and the Smoky Mountains to connect with red line No. 2.

Ninth. Blue line from New Berne to Raleigh, N. C.

Tenth. Blue line from Tunnel Hill to Atlanta, Ga.

Eleventh. Blue line from Atlanta, via Milledgeville, to Savannah.

Twelfth. Blue line from Atlanta, via Montgomery and Selma, to Mobile.

Thirteenth. Blue line from Sabine Pass to Shreveport, La., and thence northwesterly into the Indian Territory.

the South a reign of military despotism prevailed, which made every man and boy capable of bearing arms a soldier, and those who could not bear arms in the field acted as provosts for collecting deserters and returning them. This enabled the enemy to bring almost his entire strength into the field.

The enemy had concentrated the bulk of his forces east of the Mississippi into two armies, commanded by Generals R. E. Lee and J. E. Johnston, his ablest and best generals. The army commanded by Lee occupied the south bank of the Rapidan, extending from Mine Run westward, strongly intrenched, covering and defending Richmond, the rebel capital, against the Army of the Potomac. The army under Johnston occupied a strongly intrenched position at Dalton, Ga., covering and defending Atlanta, Ga., a place of great importance as a railroad center, against the armies under Maj. Gen. W. T. Sherman. In addition to these armies, he had a large cavalry force under Forrest in North-east Mississippi; a considerable force of all arms in the Shenandoah Valley and in the western part of Virginia and extreme eastern part of Tennessee, and also confronting our sea-coast garrisons and holding blockaded ports where we had no foothold upon land. These two armies, and the cities covered and defended by them, were the main objective points of the campaign.

Maj. Gen. W. T. Sherman, who was appointed to the command of the Military Division of the Mississippi, embracing all the armies and territory east of the Mississippi River to the Alleghanies, and the Department of Arkansas, west of the Mississippi, had the immediate command of the armies operating against Johnston.

Maj. Gen. George G. Meade had the immediate command of the Army of the Potomac, from where I exercised general supervision of the movements of all our armies.

General Sherman was instructed* to move against Johnston's army, to break it up, and to go into the interior of the enemy's country as far as he could, inflicting all the damage he could upon their war resources; if the enemy in his front showed signs of joining Lee, to follow him up to the full extent of his ability, while I would prevent the concentration of Lee upon him if it was in the power of the Army of the Potomac to do so. More specific written instructions were not given, for the reason that I had talked over with him the plans of the campaign, and was satisfied that he understood them and would execute them to the fullest extent possible.

Maj. Gen. N. P. Banks, then on an expedition up Red River against Shreveport, La. (which had been organized previous to my appointment to command), was notified by me on the 15th of March of the importance it was that Shreveport should be taken at the earliest possible day, and that if he found that the taking of it would occupy from ten to fifteen days' more time than General Sherman had given his troops to be absent from their command, he would send them back at the time specified by General Sherman, even if it led to the abandonment of the main object of the Red River expedition, for this force was necessary to movements east of the Mississippi; that should his expedition prove successful, he would hold Shreveport and the Red River with such force as he might deem necessary, and return the balance of his troops to the neighborhood of New Orleans, commencing no move for the further acquisition of territory unless it was to make that then held by him more easily held; that it might be a part of the spring campaign to move against Mobile; that it certainly would be if troops enough could be obtained to make it without embarrassing other movements; that New Orleans would be the point of departure for such an expedition; also, that I had directed General Steele to make a real move from Arkansas, as suggested by him (General Banks), instead of a demonstration, as Steele thought advisable.

*See Vol. XXXII, Part III, p. 245.

On the 31st of March, in addition to the foregoing notification and directions, he was instructed as follows:

Maj. Gen. N. P. BANKS:

First. If successful in your expedition against Shreveport, that you turn over the defense of the Red River to General Steele and the navy.

Second. That you abandon Texas entirely, with the exception of your hold upon the Rio Grande. This can be held with 4,000 men, if they will turn their attention immediately to fortifying their positions. At least one-half of the force required for this service might be taken from the colored troops.

Third. By properly fortifying on the Mississippi River, the force to guard it from Port Hudson to New Orleans can be reduced to 10,000 men, if not to a less number. Six thousand more would then hold all the rest of the territory necessary to hold until active operations can again be resumed west of the river. According to your last returns, this would give you a force of over 30,000 effective men with which to move against Mobile. To this I expect to add 5,000 men from Missouri. If, however, you think the force heretofore stated too small to hold the territory regarded as necessary to hold possession of, I would say concentrate at least 25,000 men of your present command for operations against Mobile. With these, and such additions as I can give you from elsewhere, lose no time in making a demonstration, to be followed by an attack upon Mobile. Two or more iron-clads will be ordered to report to Admiral Farragut. This gives him a strong naval fleet with which to co-operate. You can make your own arrangements with the admiral for his co-operation, and select your own line of approach. My own idea of the matter is that Pascagoula should be your base; but, from your long service in the Gulf Department, you will know best about the matter. It is intended that your movements shall be co-operative with movements elsewhere, and you cannot now start too soon. All I would now add is that you commence the concentration of your forces at once. Preserve a profound secrecy of what you intend doing, and start at the earliest possible moment.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

Major-General Meade was instructed* that Lee's army would be his objective point; that wherever Lee went he would go also. For his movement two plans presented themselves: One to cross the Rapidan below Lee, moving by his right flank; the other above, moving by his left. Each presented advantages over the other with corresponding objections. By crossing above, Lee would be cut off from all chance of ignoring Richmond or going north on a raid. But if we took this route, all we did would have to be done while the rations we started with held out; besides, it separated us from Butler, so that he could not be directed how to co-operate. If we took the other route, Brandy Station could be used as a base of supplies until another was secured on the York or James Rivers. Of these, however, it was decided to take the lower route.

The following letter of instruction was addressed to Maj. Gen. B. F. Butler:

Maj. Gen. B. F. BUTLER:

FORT MONROE, VA., April 2, 1864.

GENERAL: In the spring campaign, which it is desirable shall commence at as early a day as practicable, it is proposed to have co-operative action of all the armies in the field, as far as this object can be accomplished.

It will not be possible to unite our armies into two or three large ones to act as so many units, owing to the absolute necessity of holding on to the territory already taken from the enemy. But, generally speaking, concentration can be practically affected by armies moving to the interior of the enemy's country from the territory they have to guard. By such movements they interpose themselves between the enemy and the country to be guarded, thereby reducing the number necessary to guard important points, or at least occupy the attention of a part of the enemy's force, if no greater object is gained. Lee's army and Richmond being the greater objects toward which our attention must be directed in the next campaign, it is desirable to unite all the force we can against them. The necessity of covering Washington with the Army of the Potomac, and of covering your department with your army, makes it impossible to unite these forces at the beginning of any move. I propose, therefore, what comes nearest this of anything that seems practical: The Army of the Potomac will act from its present base, Lee's army being the objective point. You will collect all the forces from your command that can be spared from garrison duty—I should say not less than 20,000 effective men—to operate on the south side of James River, Richmond being your objective point. To the force you already have will be added about 10,000 men from South Carolina, under Major-General Gillmore, who will command them in person. Maj. Gen. W. F. Smith is ordered to report to you, to command the troops sent into the field from your own department. General Gillmore will be ordered to report to you at Fortress Monroe, with all the troops on transports, by the 18th instant, or as soon thereafter as practicable. Should you not receive notice by that time to move, you will make such disposition of them and your other forces as you may deem best calculated to deceive the enemy as to the real move to be made.

*See Vol. XXXIII, p. 827.

When you are notified to move, take City Point with as much force as possible. Fortify, or rather intrench, at once, and concentrate all your troops for the field there as rapidly as you can. From City Point directions cannot be given at this time for your further movements.

The fact that has already been stated—that is, that Richmond is to be your objective point, and that there is to be co-operation between your force and the Army of the Potomac—must be your guide. This indicates the necessity of your holding close to the south bank of the James River as you advance. Then, should the enemy be forced into his intrenchments in Richmond, the Army of the Potomac would follow, and by means of transports the two armies would become a unit.

All the minor details of your advance are left entirely to your direction. If, however, you think it practicable to use your cavalry south of you, so as to cut the railroad about Hicksford about the time of the general advance, it would be of immense advantage.

You will please forward for my information, at the earliest practicable day, all orders, details, and instructions you may give for the execution of this order.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

On the 16th these instructions were substantially reiterated.* On the 19th [18th†], in order to secure full co-operation between his army and that of General Meade, he was informed that I expected him to move from Fort Monroe the same day that General Meade moved from Culpeper. The exact time I was to telegraph him as soon as it was fixed, and that it would not be earlier than the 27th of April; that it was my intention to fight Lee between Culpeper and Richmond if he would stand; should he, however, fall back into Richmond, I would follow up and make a junction with his (General Butler's) army on the James River; that, could I be certain he would be able to invest Richmond on the south side, so as to have his left resting on the James above the city, I would form the junction there; that circumstances might make this course advisable anyhow; that he should use every exertion to secure footing as far up the south side of the river as he could, and as soon as possible after the receipt of orders to move; that if he could not carry the city, he should at least detain as large a force there as possible. In co-operation with the main movements against Lee and Johnston I was desirous of using all other troops necessarily kept in departments remote from the fields of immediate operations, and also those kept in the background for the protection of our extended lines between the loyal States and the armies operating against them.

* See Vol. XXXIII, p. 885.

† See Vol. XXXIII, p. 904.

A very considerable force, under command of Major-General Sigel, was so held for the protection of West Virginia and the frontiers of Maryland and Pennsylvania. While these troops could not be withdrawn to distant fields without exposing the North to invasion by comparatively small bodies of the enemy, they could act directly to their front and give better protection than if lying idle in garrison. By such movement they would either compel the enemy to detach largely for the protection of his supplies and lines of communication or he would lose them.

General Sigel was therefore directed to organize all his available force into two expeditions, to move from Beverly and Charleston, under command of Generals Ord and Crook, against the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad. Subsequently, General Ord having been relieved at his own request, General Sigel was instructed, at his own suggestion, to give up the expedition by Beverly and to form two columns—one under General Crook, on the Kanawha, numbering about 10,000 men, and one on the Shenandoah, numbering about 7,000 men. The one on the Shenandoah to assemble between Cumberland and the Shenandoah, and the infantry and artillery advanced to Cedar Creek, with such cavalry as could be made available at the moment, to threaten the enemy in the Shenandoah Valley, and advance as far as possible; while General Crook would take possession of Lewisburg with part of his force and move down the Tennessee railroad, doing as much damage as he could, destroying the New River bridge and the salt-works at Saltville, Va.*

Owing to the weather and bad condition of the roads operations were delayed until the 1st of May, when, everything being in readiness and the roads favorable, orders were given for a general movement of all the armies not later than the 4th of May. My first object being to break the military power of the rebellion and capture the enemy's important strongholds, made me desirous that General Butler should succeed in his movement against Richmond, as that would tend more than anything else, unless it were the capture of Lee's army, to accomplish this desired result in the East. If he failed, it was my determination, by hard fighting, either to compel Lee to retreat or to so cripple him that he could not detach a large force to go north and still retain enough for the defense of Richmond. It was well understood by both Generals Butler and Meade before starting on the campaign that it was my intention to put both their armies south of the James River in case of failure to destroy Lee without it.

Before giving General Butler his instructions I visited him at Fort Monroe, and in conversation pointed out the apparent importance of getting possession of Petersburg and destroying railroad communication as far south as possible. Believing, however, in the practicability of capturing Richmond, unless it was re-enforced, I made that the objective point of his operations. As the Army of the Potomac was to move simultaneously with him, Lee could not detach from his army with safety, and the enemy did not have troops elsewhere to bring to the defense of the city in time to meet a rapid movement from the north of James River.

I may here state that, commanding all the armies as I did, I tried, as far as possible, to leave General Meade in independent command of the Army of the Potomac. My instructions for that army were all through him, and were general in their nature, leaving all the details and the execution to him. The campaigns that followed proved him to be the right man in the right place. His commanding always in the presence of an officer superior to him in rank has drawn from him much of that public attention that his zeal and ability entitle him to, and which he would otherwise have received.

* See Vol. XXXIII, pp. 874, 901, and 911.

The movement of the Army of the Potomac commenced early on the morning of the 4th of May, under the immediate direction and orders of Major-General Meade, pursuant to instructions. Before night the whole army was across the Rapidan (the Fifth and Sixth Corps crossing at Germanna Ford, and the Second Corps at United States [Ely's] Ford, the cavalry, under Major-General Sheridan, moving in advance), with the greater part of its trains, numbering about 4,000 wagons, meeting with but slight opposition. The average distance traveled by the troops that day was about twelve miles. This I regarded as a great success, and it removed from my mind the most serious apprehensions I had entertained, that of crossing the river in the face of an active, large, well-appointed, and ably commanded army, and how so large a train was to be carried through a hostile country and protected. Early on the 5th the advance corps (the Fifth, Maj. Gen. G. K. Warren commanding) met and engaged the enemy outside his intrenchments near Mine Run. The battle raged furiously all day, the whole army being brought into the fight as fast as the corps could be got upon the field, which, considering the density of the forest and narrowness of the roads, was done with commendable promptness.

General Burnside, with the Ninth Corps, was, at the time the Army of the Potomac moved, left with the bulk of his corps at the crossing of the Rappahannock River and Alexandria railroad, holding the road back to Bull Run, with instructions not to move until he received notice that a crossing of the Rapidan was secured, but to move promptly as soon as such notice was received. This crossing he was apprised of on the afternoon of the 4th. By 6 o'clock of the morning of the 6th he was leading his corps into action near the Wilderness Tavern, some of his troops having marched a distance of over thirty miles, crossing both the Rappahannock and Rapidan Rivers. Considering that a large proportion (probably two-thirds) of his command was composed of new troops, unaccustomed to marches and carrying the accouterments of a soldier, this was a remarkable march.

The battle of the Wilderness was renewed by us at 5 o'clock on the morning of the 6th, and continued with unabated fury until darkness set in, each army holding substantially the same position that they had on the evening of the 5th. After dark the enemy made a feeble attempt to turn our right flank, capturing several hundred prisoners and creating considerable confusion. But the promptness of General Sedgwick, who was personally present and commanded that part of our line, soon reformed it and restored order. On the morning of the 7th reconnaissances showed that the enemy had fallen behind his intrenched lines, with pickets to the front, covering a part of the battle-field. From this it was evident to my mind that the two days' fighting had satisfied him of his inability to further maintain the contest in the open field, notwithstanding his advantage of position, and that he would await an attack behind his works. I therefore determined to push on and put my whole force between him and Richmond, and orders were at once issued for a movement by his right flank. On the night of the 7th the march was commenced toward Spotylvania Court-House, the Fifth Corps moving on the most direct road. But the enemy having become apprised of our movement, and having the shorter line, was enabled to reach there first. On the 8th General Warren met a force of the enemy which had been sent out to oppose and delay his advance, to gain time to fortify the line taken up at Spotsylvania. This force was steadily driven back on the main force, within the recently constructed works, after considerable fighting, resulting in severe loss to both sides. On the morning of the 9th General Sheridan started on a raid against the enemy's lines of communication with Richmond. The 9th, 10th, and 11th were spent in maneuvering and fighting, without decisive results. Among the killed on the 9th was that able and distinguished soldier, Maj. Gen. John Sedgwick, commanding the Sixth Army Corps. Maj. Gen. H. G. Wright succeeded him in command. Early on the morning of the 12th a general attack was made on the enemy in position. The Second Corps, Major-General Hancock commanding, carried a salient of his line, capturing most of Johnson's division, of Ewell's corps, and twenty pieces of artillery. But the resistance was so obstinate that the advantage gained did not prove decisive. The 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, and 18th were consumed in maneuvering and awaiting the arrival of re-enforcements from Washington. Deeming it impracticable to make any further attack upon the enemy at Spotsylvania Court-House, orders were issued on the 18th with a view to a movement to the North Anna, to commence at 12 o'clock on the night of the 19th. Late in the afternoon of the 19th Ewell's corps came out of its works on our extreme right flank, but the attack was promptly repulsed with heavy loss. This delayed the movement to the North Anna until the night of the 21st, when it was commenced. But the enemy, again having the shorter line and being in possession of the main roads, was enabled to reach the North Anna in advance of us, and took position behind it. The Fifth Corps reached the North Anna on the afternoon of the 23d, closely followed by the Sixth Corps. The Second and Ninth Corps got up about the same time, the Second holding the railroad bridge and the Ninth lying between that and Jericho Ford. General Warren effected a crossing the same afternoon, and got a position without much opposition. Soon after getting into position he was violently attacked, but repulsed the enemy with great slaughter. On the 25th General Sheridan rejoined the Army of the Potomac from the raid on which he started from Spotsylvania, having destroyed the depots at Beaver Dam and Ashland Stations, four trains of cars, large supplies of rations, and many miles of railroad track; recaptured about 400 of our men on their way to Richmond as prisoners of war; met and defeated the enemy's cavalry at Yellow Tavern; carried the first line of works around Richmond, but finding the second line too strong to be carried by assault, recrossed to the north bank of the Chickahominy at Meadow Bridge, under heavy fire, and moved by a detour to Haxall's Landing, on the James River, where he communicated with General Butler. This raid had the effect of drawing off the whole of the enemy's cavalry force, making it comparatively easy to guard our trains.

General Butler moved his main force up the James River, in pursuance of instructions, on the 4th of May, General Gillmore having joined him with the Tenth Corps. At the same time he sent a force of 1,800 cavalry, by way of West Point, to form a junction with him wherever he might get a foothold, and a force of 3,000 cavalry, under General Kautz, from Suffolk, to operate against the roads south of Petersburg and Richmond. On the 5th he occupied, without opposition, both City Point and Bermuda Hundred, his movement being a complete surprise. On the 6th he was in position with his main army and commenced intrenching. On the 7th he made a reconnaissance against the Petersburg and Richmond Railroad, destroying a portion of it after some fighting. On the 9th he telegraphed as follows:

HEADQUARTERS,
Near Bermuda Landing, May 9, 1864.

Hon. E. M. STANTON,
Secretary of War :

Our operations may be summed up in a few words. With 1,700 cavalry we have advanced up the Peninsula, forced the Chickahominy, and have safely brought them to our present position. These were colored cavalry, and are now holding our advance pickets toward Richmond. General Kautz, with 3,000 cavalry from Suffolk, on the same day with our movement up James River, forced the Blackwater, burned the railroad bridge at Stony Creek, below Petersburg, cutting in two Beauregard's force at that point. We have landed here, intrenched ourselves, destroyed many miles of railroad, and got a position which, with proper supplies, we can hold out against the whole of Lee's army. I have ordered up the supplies. Beauregard with a large portion of his force was left south by the cutting of the railroads by Kautz. That portion which reached Petersburg under Hill I have whipped to-day, killing and wounding many and taking many prisoners, after a severe and well-contested fight. General Grant will not be troubled with any further re-enforcements to Lee from Beauregard's force.

BENJ. F. BUTLER,
Major-General.

On the evening of the 13th and morning of the 14th he carried a portion of the enemy's first line of defenses at Drewry's Bluff, or Fort Darling, with small loss. The time thus consumed from the 6th lost to us the benefit of the surprise and capture of Richmond and Petersburg, enabling, as it did, Beauregard to collect his loose forces in North and South Carolina, and bring them to the defense of those places. On the 16th the enemy attacked General Butler in his position in front of Drewry's Bluff. He was forced back, or drew back, into his intrenchments between the forks of the James and Appomattox Rivers, the enemy intrenching strongly in his front, thus covering his railroads, the city, and all that was valuable to him. His army, therefore, though in a position of great security, was as completely shut off from further operations directly against Richmond as if it had been in a bottle strongly corked. It required but a comparatively small force of the enemy to hold it there. On the 12th General Kautz with his cavalry was started on a raid against the Danville railroad, which he struck at Coalfield, Powhatan, and Chula Stations, destroying them, the railroad track, two freight trains, and one locomotive, together with large quantities of commissary and other stores; thence crossing to the South Side road, struck it at Wilson's, Wellsville, and Blacks and Whites Stations, destroying the road and station-houses; thence he proceeded to City Point, which he reached on the 18th. On the 19th of April, and prior to the movement of General Butler, the enemy, with a land force under General Hoke and an iron-clad ram, attacked Plymouth, N. C., commanded by General H. W. Wessells, and our gun-boats there, and after severe fighting the place was carried by assault, and the entire garrison and armament captured. The gun-boat Southfield was sunk and the Miami disabled.*

The army sent to operate against Richmond having hermetically sealed itself up at Bermuda Hundred, the enemy was enabled to bring the most, if not all, the re-enforcements brought from the south by Beauregard against the Army of the Potomac. In addition to this re-enforcement, a very considerable one, probably not less than 15,000 men, was obtained by calling in the scattered troops under Breckinridge from the western part of Virginia. The position at Bermuda Hundred was as easy to defend as it was difficult to operate from against the enemy. I determined, therefore, to bring from it all available forces, leaving enough only to secure what had been gained, and accordingly, on the 22d, I directed that they be sent forward, under command of Maj. Gen. W. F. Smith, to join the Army of the Potomac. On the 24th of May the Ninth Army Corps, commanded by Maj. Gen. A. B. Burnside, was assigned to the Army of the Potomac, and from this time forward constituted a portion of Major-General Meade's command.

* See Vol. XXXIII, p. 278.

Finding the enemy's position on the North Anna stronger than either of his previous ones, I withdrew on the night of the 26th to the north bank of the North Anna, and moved via Hanover town to turn the enemy's position by his right. Generals Forbert and Merritt's divisions of cavalry, under Sheridan, and the Sixth Corps led the advance; crossed the Pamunkey River at Hanover town after considerable fighting, and on the 28th the two divisions of cavalry had a severe but successful engagement with the enemy at Haw's Shop. On the 29th and 30th we advanced, with heavy skirmishing, to the Hanover Court-House and Cold Harbor road, and developed the enemy's position north of the Chickahominy. Late on the evening of the last day the enemy came out and attacked our left, but was repulsed with very considerable loss. An attack was immediately ordered by General Meade along his whole line, which resulted in driving the enemy from a part of his intrenched skirmish line. On the 31st General Wilson's division of cavalry destroyed the railroad bridges over the South Anna River, after defeating the enemy's cavalry. General Sheridan, on the same day, reached Cold Harbor, and held it until relieved by the Sixth Corps and General Smith's command, which had just arrived, via White House, from General Butler's army.

On the 1st day of June an attack was made at 5 p. m. by the Sixth Corps and the troops under General Smith, the other corps being held in readiness to advance on the receipt of orders. This resulted in our carrying and holding the enemy's first line of works in front of the right of the Sixth Corps and in front of General Smith. During the attack the enemy made repeated assaults on each of the corps not engaged in the main attack, but were repulsed with heavy loss in every instance. That night he made several assaults to regain what he had lost in the day, but failed. The 2d was spent in getting troops into position for an attack on the 3d. On the 3d of June we again assaulted the enemy's works in the hope of driving him from his position. In this attempt our loss was heavy, while that of the enemy, I have reason to believe, was comparatively light. It was the only general attack made from the Rapidan to the James which did not inflict upon the enemy losses to compensate for our own losses. I would not be understood as saying that all previous attacks resulted in victories to our arms, or accomplished as much as I had hoped from them, but they inflicted upon the enemy severe losses, which tended in the end to the complete overthrow of the rebellion.

From the proximity of the enemy to his defenses around Richmond it was impossible by any flank movement to interpose between him and the city. I was still in a condition to either move by his left flank and invest Richmond from the north side, or continue my move by his right flank to the south side of the James. While the former might have been better as a covering for Washington yet a full survey of all the ground satisfied me that it would be impracticable to hold a line north and east of Richmond that would protect the Fredericksburg railroad—a long, vulnerable line which would exhaust much of our strength to guard, and that would have to be protected to supply the army, and would leave open to the enemy all his lines of communication on the south side of the James. My idea, from the start, had been to beat Lee's army north of Richmond if possible; then, after destroying his lines of communication north of the James River, to transfer the army to the south side and besiege Lee in Richmond or follow him south if he should retreat. After the battle of the Wilderness it was evident that the enemy deemed it of the first importance to run no risks with the army he then had. He acted purely on the defensive behind breast-works, or feebly on the offensive immediately in front of them, and where, in case of repulse, he could easily retire behind them. Without a greater sacrifice of life than I was willing to make, all could not be accomplished that I had designed north of Richmond. I therefore determined to continue to hold substantially the ground we then occupied, taking advantage of any favorable circumstances that might present themselves, until the cavalry could be sent to Charlottesville and Gordonsville to effectually break up the railroad connection between Richmond and the Shenandoah Valley and Lynchburg, and when the cavalry got well off to move the army to the south side of the James River, by the enemy's right flank, where I felt I could cut off all his sources of supply except by the canal.

On the 7th two divisions of cavalry, under General Sheridan, got off on the expedition against the Virginia Central Railroad, with instructions to Hunter, whom I hoped he would meet near Charlottesville, to join his forces to Sheridan's, and after the work laid out for them was thoroughly done to join the Army of the Potomac by the route laid down in Sheridan's instructions. On the 10th [9th] of June General Butler sent a force of infantry under General Gillmore, and of cavalry under General Kautz, to capture Petersburg if possible, and destroy the railroad and common bridges across the Appomattox. The cavalry carried the works on the south side and penetrated well in toward the town, but were forced to retire. General Gillmore, finding the works which he approached very strong, and deeming an assault impracticable, returned to Bermuda Hundred without attempting one. Attaching great importance to the possession of Petersburg, I sent back to Bermuda Hundred and City Point General Smith's command by water, via the White House, to reach there in advance of the Army of the Potomac. This was for the express purpose of securing Petersburg before the enemy, becoming aware of our intention, could re-enforce the place. The movement from Cold Harbor commenced after dark on the evening of the 12th; one division of cavalry, under General Wilson, and the Fifth Corps crossed the Chickahominy at Long Bridge, and moved out to White Oak Swamp, to cover the crossings of the other corps. The advance corps reached James River, at Wilcox's Landing and Charles City Court-House, on the night of the 13th.

During three long years the Armies of the Potomac and Northern Virginia had been confronting each other. In that time they had fought more desperate battles than it probably ever before fell to the lot of two armies to fight, without materially changing the vantage ground of either. The Southern press and people, with more shrewdness than was displayed in the North, finding that they had failed to capture Washington and march on to New York, as they had boasted they would do, assumed that they only defended their capital and Southern territory. Hence, Antietam, Gettysburg, and all other battles which have been fought were by them set down as failures on our part and successes for them. Their army believed this. It produced a morale which could only be overcome by desperate and continuous hard fighting. The battles of the Wilderness, Spotsylvania, North Anna, and Cold Harbor, so bloody and terrible as they were on our side, were even more so to the enemy, and so crippled him as to make him wary even when taking the offensive. His losses in men were probably not so great as owing to the fact that we were, save in the Wilderness, almost constantly on the attacking party, and when he did attack it was in the open field. The details of these battles, which for endurance and heroism on the part of the soldiery have rarely been surpassed, are given in the report of Major-General Meade, and the subordinate reports accompanying it.* During the campaign of forty-three days, from the James River, the army had to be supplied from an ever-shifting base of wagons, over narrow roads, through a densely wooded country, and with a lack of wharves at each new base from which to conveniently dispatch the vessels. Too much credit cannot, therefore, be awarded to the quartermaster and commissary departments for the zeal and efficiency displayed by them. Under the general supervision of the chief quartermaster, Brig. Gen. R. Ingalls, the trains were made to occupy the most available roads between the army and our water base, and the greatest difficulty was experienced in protecting them.

The movement in the Kanawha and Shenandoah Valleys, under General Sigel, commenced on the 1st of May. General Crook, who had the immediate command of the Kanawha expedition, divided his army into two columns, giving one, composed of cavalry, to General Averell. They crossed the mountains by separate routes. Averell struck the Tennessee and Virginia Railroad, near Wytheville, on the 10th, and proceeding to New River and Christiansburg, destroyed the road, and several important bridges and depots, including New River bridge, forming a junction with Crook at Union on the 15th. General Sigel moved up the Shenandoah Valley, met the enemy at New Market on the 15th, and after a severe engagement was defeated with heavy loss, and retired behind Cedar Creek. Not regarding the operations of General Sigel as satisfactory, I asked his removal from command, and Major-General Hunter was appointed to supersede him. His instructions were embraced in the following dispatches to Maj. Gen. H. W. Halleck, Chief of Staff of the Army:

NEAR SPOTSYLVANIA COURT-HOUSE, VA., May 17, 1862.
Maj. Gen. H. W. HALLECK:

* * * * *

The enemy are evidently relying for supplies greatly on such as are brought down the branch road running through Staunton. On the whole, therefore, I think it would be better for General Hunter to move in that direction; reach Staunton and Gordonsville or Charlottesville, if he does not meet too much opposition. If he could not buy a force equal to his own, he will be doing good service.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

JERICHO FORD, VA., May 17, 1862.

Maj. Gen. H. W. HALLECK:

If Hunter can possibly get to Charlottesville and Lynchburg, he should be living on the country. The railroads and canal should be destroyed beyond possibility of repairs for weeks. Completing this he could find his way back to his original base, or from about Gordonsville join this army.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

* See Vol. XXXVI, Part I.

General Hunter immediately took up the offensive, and moving up the Shenandoah Valley, met the enemy on the 5th of June at Piedmont, and after a battle of ten hours routed and defeated him, capturing on the field of battle 1,500 men, 3 pieces of artillery, and 300 stand of small-arms. On the 8th of the same month he formed a junction with Crook and Averell at Staunton, from which place he moved direct on Lynchburg, via Lexington, which place he reached and invested on the 16th day of June. Up to this time he was very successful, and but for the difficulty of taking with him sufficient ordnance stores over so long a march through a hostile country, he would no doubt have captured that (to the enemy) important point. The destruction of the enemy's supplies and manufactories was very great. To meet this movement under General Hunter, General Lee sent a force, perhaps equal to a corps, a part of which reached Lynchburg a short time before Hunter. After some skirmishing on the 17th and 18th, General Hunter, owing to a want of ammunition to give battle, retired from before the place. Unfortunately, this want of ammunition left him no choice of route for his return but by way of Kanawha. This lost to us the use of his troops for several weeks from the defense of the North. Had General Hunter moved by way of Charlottesville, instead of Lexington, as his instructions contemplated, he would have been in a position to have covered the Shenandoah Valley against the enemy, should the force he met have seemed to endanger it. If it did not, he would have been within easy distance of the James River Canal, on the main line of communication between Lynchburg and the force sent for its defense. I have never taken exception to the operations of General Hunter, and I am not now disposed to find fault with him, for I have no doubt he acted within what he conceived to be the spirit of his instructions and the interests of the service. The promptitude of his movements and his gallantry should entitle him to the commendation of his country.*

To return to the Army of the Potomac: The Second Corps commenced crossing the James River on the morning of the 14th by ferry-boats at Wilcox's Landing. The laying of the pontoon bridge was completed about midnight of the 14th, and the crossing of the balance of the army was rapidly pushed forward by both bridge and ferry. After the crossing had commenced I proceeded by a steamer to Bermuda Hundred to give the necessary orders for the immediate capture of Petersburg. The instructions to General Butler were verbal, and were for him to send General Smith immediately, that night, with all the troops he could give him without sacrificing the position he then held. I told him that I would return at once to the Army of the Potomac, hasten its crossing, and throw it forward to Petersburg by divisions as rapidly as it could be done; that we could re-enforce our armies more rapidly there than the enemy could bring troops against us. General Smith got off as directed, and confronted the enemy's pickets near Petersburg before daylight next morning, but, for some reason that I have never been able to satisfactorily understand, did not get ready to assault his main lines until near sundown. Then, with a part of his command only, he made the assault, and carried the lines northeast of Petersburg from the Appomattox River, for a distance of over two miles and a half, capturing fifteen pieces of artillery and 300 prisoners. This was about 7 p. m. Between the line thus captured and Petersburg there were no other works, and there was no evidence that the enemy had re-enforced Petersburg with a single brigade from any source. The night was clear, the moon shining brightly, and favorable to further operations. General Hancock, with two divisions of the Second Corps, reached General Smith just after dark, and offered the service of these troops as he (Smith) might wish, waiving rank to the named commander, who he naturally supposed knew best the position of affairs and what to do with the troops. But instead of taking these troops and pushing at once into Petersburg, he requested General Hancock to relieve a part of his line in the captured works, which was done before midnight. By the time I arrived the next morning the enemy was in force. An attack was ordered to be made at 6 o'clock that evening by the troops under Smith and the Second and Ninth Corps. It required until that time for the Ninth Corps to get up and into position. The attack was made as ordered, and the fighting continued with but little intermission until 6 o'clock the next morning, and resulted in our carrying the advance and some of the main works of the enemy to the right (our left) of those previously captured by General Smith, several pieces of artillery, and over 400 prisoners. The Fifth Corps having got up, the attacks were renewed and persisted in with great vigor on the 17th and 18th, but only resulted in forcing the enemy to an interior line, from which he could not be dislodged. The advantages in position gained by us were very great. The army then proceeded to envelop Petersburg toward the South Side Railroad, as far as possible, without attacking fortifications. On the 16th the enemy, to re-enforce Petersburg, withdrew from a part of his intrenchment in front of Bermuda Hundred, expecting, no doubt, to get troops from north of the James to take the place of those withdrawn before we could discover it. General Butler, taking advantage of this, at once moved a force on the railroad between Petersburg and Richmond. As soon as I was apprised of the advantage thus gained, to retain it I ordered two divisions of the Sixth Corps, General Wright commanding, that were embarking at Wilcox's Landing, under orders for City Point, to report to General Butler, at Bermuda Hundred, of which General Butler was notified, and the importance of holding a position in advance of his present line urged upon him.

* For subordinate reports of Sigel's and Hunter's operations, see Vol XXXVII, Part I.

About 2 o'clock in the afternoon General Butler was forced back to the line the enemy had withdrawn from in the morning. General Wright, with his two divisions, joined General Butler on the forenoon of the 17th, the latter still holding with a strong picket-line the enemy's works. But instead of putting these divisions into the enemy's works to hold them, he permitted them to halt and rest some distance in the rear of his own line. Between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon the enemy attacked and drove in his pickets and reoccupied his old line. On the night of the 20th and morning of the 21st a lodgment was effected by General Butler, with one brigade of infantry, on the north bank of the James, at Deep Bottom, and connected by pontoon bridge with Bermuda Hundred.

On the 19th General Sheridan, on his return from his expedition against the Virginia Central Railroad, arrived at the White House just as the enemy's cavalry was about to attack it, and compelled it to retire. The result of this expedition was that General Sheridan met the enemy's cavalry near Trevilian Station on the morning of the 11th of June, whom he attacked and, after an obstinate contest, drove from the field in complete rout. He left his dead and nearly all his wounded in our hands, and about 400 prisoners and several hundred horses. On the 12th he destroyed the railroad from Trevilian Station to Louisa.

Court-House. This occupied until 3 p. m., when he advanced in the direction of Gordonsville. He found the enemy re-enforced by infantry, behind well-constructed rifle-pits, about five miles from the latter place, and too strong to successfully assault. On the extreme right, however, his reserve brigade carried the enemy's works twice, and was twice driven therefrom by infantry. Night closed the contest. Not having sufficient ammunition to continue the engagement, and his animals being without forage (the country furnishing but inferior grazing), and hearing nothing from General Hunter, he withdrew his command to the north side of the North Anna, and commenced his return march, reaching White House at the time before stated. After breaking up the depot at that place he moved to the James River, which he reached safely after heavy fighting. He commenced crossing on the 25th, near Fort Powhatan, without further molestation, and rejoined the Army of the Potomac.

On the 22d General Wilson, with his own division of cavalry, of the Army of the Potomac, and General Kautz's division of cavalry, of the Army of the James, moved against the enemy's railroads south of Richmond. Striking the Weldon railroad at Reams' Station, destroying the depot and several miles of the road, and the South Side road about fifteen miles from Petersburg, to near Nottoway Station, where he met and defeated a force of the enemy's cavalry, he reached Burkeville Station on the afternoon of the 23d, and from there destroyed the Danville railroad to Roanoke bridge, a distance of twenty-five miles, where he found the enemy in force, and in a position from which he could not dislodge him. He then commenced his return march, and on the 28th met the enemy's cavalry in force at the Weldon railroad crossing of Stony Creek, where he had a severe but not decisive engagement. Thence he made a detour from his left, with a view of reaching Reams' Station, supposing it to be in our possession. At this place he was met by the enemy's cavalry, supported by infantry, and forced to retire, with a loss of his artillery and trains. In this last encounter General Kautz, with a part of his command, became separated and made his way into our lines. General Wilson, with the remainder of his force, succeeded in crossing the Nottoway River, and coming in safely on our left and rear. The damage to the enemy in this expedition more than compensated for the losses we sustained. It severed all connection by railroad with Richmond for several weeks.

With a view of cutting the enemy's railroad from near Richmond to the Anna Rivers, and making him wary of the situation of his army in the Shenandoah, and, in the event of failure in this, to take advantage of his necessary withdrawal of troops from Petersburg to explode a mine that had been prepared, in front of the Ninth Corps and assault the enemy's lines at that place, on the night of the 26th of July the Second Corps and two divisions of the Cavalry Corps and Kautz's cavalry were crossed to the north bank of the James River and joined the force General Butler had there. On the 27th the enemy was driven from his intrenched position, with the loss of four pieces of artillery. On the 28th our lines were extended from Deep Bottom to New Market road, but in getting this position were attacked by the enemy in heavy force. The fighting lasted for several hours, resulting in considerable loss to both sides. The first object of this move having failed, by reason of the very large force thrown there by the enemy, I determined to take advantage of the diversion made, by assaulting Petersburg before he could get his force back there. One division of the Second Corps was withdrawn on the night of the 28th, and moved during the night to the rear of the Eighteenth Corps, to relieve that corps in the line, that it might be foot-loose in the assault to be made. The other two divisions of the Second Corps and Sheridan's cavalry were crossed over on the night of the 29th, and moved in front of Petersburg. On the morning of the 30th, between 4 and 5 o'clock, the mine was sprung, blowing up a battery and most of a regiment, and the advance of the assaulting column, formed of the Ninth Corps, immediately took possession of the crater made by the explosion, and the line for some distance to the right and left of it, and a detached line in front of it, but for some cause failed to advance promptly to the ridge beyond. Had they done this, I have every reason to believe that Petersburg would have fallen. Other troops were immediately pushed forward, but the time consumed in getting them up enabled the enemy to rally from his surprise (which had been complete) and get forces to this point for its defense. The captured line thus held being untenable and of no advantage to us, the troops were withdrawn, but not without heavy loss. Thus terminated in disaster what promised to be the most successful assault of the campaign.*

Immediately upon the enemy ascertaining that General Hunter was retreating from Lynchburg by way of the Kanawha River, thus laying the Shenandoah Valley open for raids into Maryland and Pennsylvania, he returned northward, and moved down that valley. As soon as this movement of the enemy was ascertained, General Hunter, who had reached the Kanawha River, was directed to move his troops without delay, by river and railroad, to Harper's Ferry; but owing to the difficulty of navigation, by reason of low water and breaks in the railroad, great delay was experienced in getting there. It became necessary, therefore, to find other troops to check this movement of the enemy. For this purpose the Sixth Corps was taken from the armies operating against Richmond, to which was added the Nineteenth Corps, then, fortunately, beginning to arrive in Hampton Roads from the Gulf Department, under orders issued immediately after the ascertainment of the result of the Red River expedition.

The garrisons of Baltimore and Washington were at this time made up of heavy artillery regiments, 100-day's men, and detachments from the Invalid Corps. One division, under command of General Ricketts, of the Sixth Corps, was sent to Baltimore, and the remaining two divisions of the Sixth Corps, under General Wright, were subsequently sent to Washington. On the 3d of July the enemy approached Martinsburg; General Sigel, who was in command of our forces there, retreated across the Potomac at Shepherdstown, and General Weber, commanding at Harper's Ferry, crossed the river and occupied Maryland Heights. On the 6th the enemy occupied Hagerstown, moving a strong column toward Frederick City. General Wallace, with Ricketts' division and his own command, the latter mostly new and undisciplined troops, pushed out from Baltimore with great promptness and met the enemy in force on the Monocacy, near the crossing of the railroad bridge. His force was not sufficient to insure success, but he fought the enemy nevertheless, and although it resulted in a defeat to our arms, yet it detained the enemy and thereby served to enable General Wright to reach Washington with two divisions of the Sixth Corps, and the advance of the Nineteenth Corps before him. From Monocacy the enemy moved on Washington, his cavalry advance reaching Rockville on the evening of the 10th. On the 12th a reconnaissance was thrown out in front of Fort Stevens, to ascertain the enemy's position and force. A severe skirmish ensued, in which we lost about 280 in killed and wounded. The enemy's loss was probably greater. He commenced retreating during the night. Learning the exact condition of affairs at Washington, I requested by telegraph, at 11.45 p. m. on the 12th, the assignment of Maj. Gen. H. G. Wright to the command of all the troops that could be made available to operate in the field against the enemy, and directed that he should get outside of the trenches with all the force he could, and push Early to the last moment. General Wright commenced the pursuit on the 13th. On the 18th the enemy was overtaken at Snicker's Ferry, on the Shenandoah, when a sharp skirmish occurred; and on the 20th General Averell encountered and defeated a portion of the rebel army at Winchester, capturing four pieces of artillery and several hundred prisoners. Learning that Early was retreating south toward Lynchburg or Richmond, I directed that the Sixth and Nineteenth Corps be got back to the armies operating against Richmond, so that they might be used in a movement against Lee before the return of the troops sent by him into the Valley, and that Hunter should remain in the Shenandoah Valley, keeping between any force of the enemy and Washington, acting on the defensive as much as possible. I felt that if the enemy had any notion of returning the fact would be developed before the Sixth and Nineteenth Corps could leave Washington. Subsequently the Nineteenth Corps was excepted from the order to return to the James.

* For subordinate reports of operations against Petersburg and Richmond from June 13 to July 31, 1864, see Vol. XL, Part I.

About the 25th it became evident that the enemy was again advancing upon Maryland and Pennsylvania, and the Sixth Corps, then at Washington, was ordered back to the vicinity of Harper's Ferry. The rebel force moved down the Valley, and sent a raiding party into Pennsylvania, which, on the 30th, burned Chambersburg and then retreated, pursued by our cavalry, toward Cumberland. They were met and defeated by General Kelley, and with diminished numbers escaped into the mountains of West Virginia. From the time of the first raid the telegraph wires were frequently down between Washington and City Point, making it necessary to transmit messages a part of the way by boat. It took from twenty-four to thirty-six hours to get dispatches through and return answers back, so that often orders would be given, and then information would be received showing a different state of facts from those on which they were based, causing a confusion and apparent contradiction of orders that must have considerably embarrassed those who had to execute them, and rendered operations against the enemy less effective than they otherwise would have been. To remedy this evil, it was evident to my mind that some person should have the supreme command of all the forces in the Departments of West Virginia, Washington, Susquehanna, and the Middle Department, and I so recommended.

On the 2d of August I ordered General Sheridan to report in person to Major-General Halleck, Chief of Staff, at Washington, with a view to his assignment to the command of all the forces against Early. At this time the enemy was concentrated in the neighborhood of Winchester, while our forces, under General Hunter, were concentrated on the Monocacy, at the crossing of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, leaving open to the enemy Western Maryland and Southern Pennsylvania. From where I was, I hesitated to give positive orders for the movement of our forces at Monocacy, lest by so doing I should expose Washington.* Therefore, on the 4th, I left City Point to visit Hunter's command, and determine for myself what was best to be done. On arrival there, and after consultation with General Hunter, I issued to him the following instructions:

Maj. Gen. D. HUNTER:

MONOCACY BRIDGE, MD., August 5, 1864—8 p. m.

GENERAL: Concentrate all your available force without delay in the vicinity of Harper's Ferry, leaving only such railroad guards and garrisons for public property as may be necessary. Use, in this concentration, the railroad, if by so doing time can be saved. From Harper's Ferry, if it is found that the enemy has moved north of the Potomac in large force, push north, following him and attacking him wherever found; follow him if driven south of the Potomac as long as it is safe to do so. If it is ascertained that the enemy has but a small force north of the Potomac, then push south with the main force, detaching, under a competent commander, a sufficient force to look after the raiders, and drive them to their homes. In detaching such a force, the brigade of cavalry now en route from Washington, via Rockville, may be taken into account.

There are now on the way to join you three other brigades of the best of cavalry, numbering at least 5,000 men and horses. These will be instructed, in the absence of further orders, to join you by the south side of the Potomac. One brigade will probably start to-morrow. In pushing up the Shenandoah Valley, where it is expected you will have to go first or last, it is desirable that nothing should be left to invite the enemy to return. Take all provisions, forage, and stock wanted for the use of your command; such as cannot be consumed, destroy. It is not desirable that the buildings should be destroyed; they should rather be protected; but the people should be informed that so long as an army can subsist among them recurrences of these raids must be expected, and we are determined to stop them at all hazards. Bear in mind the object is to drive the enemy south, and to do this you want to keep him always in sight. Be guided in your course by the course he takes. Make your own arrangements for supplies of all kinds, giving regular vouchers for such as will be taken from loyal citizens in the country through which you march.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

The troops were immediately put in motion, and the advance reached Inlittown that night.

General Hunter having, in our conversation, expressed a willingness to be relieved from command, I telegraphed to have General Sheridan, then at Washington, sent to Harper's Ferry by the morning train, with orders to take general command of all the troops in the field, and to call on General Hunter, at Monocacy, who would turn over to him my letter of instructions. I remained at Monocacy until General Sheridan arrived, on the morning of the 6th, and after a conference with him in relation to military affairs in that vicinity, I returned to City Point by way of Washington. On the 7th of August the Middle Department and the Departments of West Virginia, Washington, and Susquehanna were constituted into the "Middle Military Division," and Major-General Sheridan was assigned to temporary command of the same. Two divisions of cavalry, commanded by Generals Torbert and Wilson, were sent to Sheridan from the Army of the Potomac. The first reached him at Harper's Ferry about the 11th of August. His operations during the month of August and the fore part of September were both of an offensive and defensive character, resulting in many severe skirmishes, principally by the cavalry, in which we were generally successful, but no general engagement took place. The two armies lay in such a position—the enemy on the west bank of Opequon Creek, covering Winchester, and our forces in front of Berryville—that either could bring on a battle at any time. Defeat to us would lay open to the enemy the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania for long distances before another army could be interposed to check him. Under these circumstances I hesitated about allowing the initiative to be taken. Finally, the use of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, which were both obstructed by the enemy, became so indispensably necessary to us, and the importance of relieving Pennsylvania and Maryland from continuously threatened invasion so great, that I determined the risk should be taken. But fearing to telegraph the order for an attack without knowing more than I did of General Sheridan's feeling as to what would be the probable result, I left City Point on the 15th of September to visit him at his headquarters, to decide, after conference with him, what should be done. I met him at Charlestown, and he pointed out so distinctly how each army lay, what he could do the moment he was authorized, and expressed such confidence of success that I saw there were but two words of instruction necessary—Go in! For the convenience of forage the teams for supplying the army were kept at Harper's Ferry. I asked him if he could get out his teams and supplies in time to make an attack on the ensuing Tuesday morning. His reply was that he could before daylight on Monday. He was off promptly to time, and I may here add that the result was such that I have never since deemed it necessary to visit General Sheridan before giving him orders. Early on the morning of the 19th General Sheridan attacked General Early at the crossing on the Opequon Creek, and after a most sanguinary and bloody battle, lasting until 5 o'clock in the evening, defeated him, with heavy loss, carrying his entire position from Opequon Creek to Winchester, capturing several thousand prisoners and five pieces of artillery. The enemy rallied and made a stand in a strong position at Fisher's Hill, where he was attacked and again defeated with heavy loss on the 20th [22d]. Sheridan pursued him with great energy through Harrisonburg, Staunton, and the gaps of the Blue Ridge. After stripping the upper Valley of most of the supplies and provisions for the rebel army, he returned to Strasburg and took position on the north side of Cedar Creek.

* For subordinate reports of operations in the Shenandoah Valley and Maryland up to August 3, 1864, see Vol. XXXVII, Part I.

Having received considerable re-enforcements, General Early again returned to the Valley, and on the 9th of October his cavalry encountered ours near Strasburg, where the rebels were defeated, with the loss of eleven pieces of artillery and 350 prisoners. On the night of the 18th the enemy crossed the mountains which separate the branches of the Shenandoah, forded the North Fork, and early on the morning of the 19th, under cover of the darkness and the fog, surprised and turned our left flank, capturing the batteries which enfiladed our whole line. Our troops fell back with heavy loss and in much confusion, but were finally rallied between Middletown and Newtown. At this juncture General Sheridan, who was at Winchester when the battle commenced, arrived on the field, arranged his lines just in time to repulse a heavy attack of the enemy, and immediately assuming the offensive, he attacked in turn with great vigor. The enemy was defeated with great slaughter and the loss of most of his artillery and trains and the trophies he had captured in the morning. The wreck of his army escaped during the night and fled in the direction of Staunton and Lynchburg. Pursuit was made to Mount Jackson. Thus ended this the enemy's last attempt to invade the North via the Shenandoah Valley. I was now enabled to return the Sixth Corps to the Army of the Potomac, and send one division from Sheridan's army to the Army of the James, and another to Savannah, Ga., to hold Sherman's new acquisitions on the sea-coast, and thus enable him to move without detaching from his force for that purpose.*

Reports from various sources led me to believe that the enemy had detached three divisions from Petersburg to re-enforce Early in the Shenandoah Valley. I therefore sent the Second Corps and Gregg's division of cavalry, of the Army of the Potomac, and a force of General Butler's army, on the night of the 13th of August, to threaten Richmond from the north side of the James, to prevent him from sending troops away, and, if possible, to draw back those sent. In this move we captured six pieces of artillery and several hundred prisoners, detained troops that were under marching orders, and ascertained that but one division (Kershaw's) of the three reputed detached had gone. The enemy having withdrawn heavily from Petersburg to resist this movement, the Fifth Corps, General Warren commanding, was moved out on the 18th and took possession of the Weldon railroad. During the day he had considerable fighting. To regain possession of the road the enemy made repeated and desperate assaults, but was each time repulsed with great loss. On the night of the 20th the troops on the north side of the James were withdrawn, and Hancock and Gregg returned to the front of Petersburg. On the 25th the Second Corps and Gregg's division of cavalry, while at Reams' Station destroying the railroad, were attacked, and after desperate fighting a part of our line gave way and five pieces of artillery fell into the hands of the enemy. By the 12th of September a branch railroad was completed from the City Point and Petersburg Railroad to the Weldon railroad, enabling us to supply without difficulty, in all weather, the army in front of Petersburg. The extension of our lines across the Weldon railroad compelled the enemy to so extend his that it seemed he could have but few troops north of the James for the defense of Richmond. On the night of the 28th the Tenth Corps, Major-General Birney, and the Eighteenth Corps, Major-General Ord commanding, of General Butler's army, were crossed to the north side of the James, and advanced on the morning of the 29th, carrying the very strong fortifications and intrenchments below Chaffin's Farm, known as Fort Harrison, capturing fifteen pieces of artillery and the New Market road and intrenchments. This success was followed up by a gallant assault upon Fort Gilmer, immediately in front of the Chaffin's Farm fortifications, in which we were repulsed with heavy loss. Kautz's cavalry was pushed forward on the road to the right of this, supported by infantry, and reached the enemy's inner line, but was unable to get farther. The position captured from the enemy was so threatening to Richmond that I determined to hold it. The enemy made several desperate attempts to dislodge us, all of which were unsuccessful, and for which he paid dearly. On the morning of the 30th General Meade sent out a reconnaissance, with a view to attacking the enemy's line if it was found sufficiently weakened by withdrawal of troops to the north side. In this reconnaissance we captured and held the enemy's works near Poplar Spring Church. In the afternoon troops moving to get to the left of the point gained were attacked by the enemy in heavy force and compelled to fall back until supported by the forces holding the captured works. Our cavalry, under Gregg, was also attacked, but repulsed the enemy with great loss. On the 7th of October the enemy attacked Kautz's cavalry north of the James and drove it back, with heavy loss in killed, wounded, and prisoners, and the loss of all the artillery—eight or nine pieces. This he followed up by an attack on our intrenched infantry line, but was repulsed with severe slaughter. On the 13th a reconnaissance was sent out by General Butler, with a view to drive the enemy from some new works he was constructing, which resulted in very heavy loss to us.

* For subordinate reports of operations in the Shenandoah Valley from August 4 to December 31, 1864, see Vol. XLIII, Part 1.

On the 27th the Army of the Potomac, leaving only sufficient men to hold its fortified line, moved by the enemy's right flank. The Second Corps, followed by two divisions of the Fifth Corps, with the cavalry in advance and covering our left flank, forced a passage of Hatcher's Run, and moved up the south side of it toward the South Side Railroad, until the Second Corps and part of the cavalry reached the Boydton plank road where it crosses Hatcher's Run. At this point we were six miles distant from the South Side Railroad, which I had hoped by this movement to reach and hold. But finding that we had not reached the end of the enemy's fortifications, and no place presenting itself for a successful assault by which he might be doubled up and shortened, I determined to withdraw to within our fortified lines. Orders were given accordingly. Immediately upon receiving a report that General Warren had connected with General Hancock I returned to my headquarters. Soon after I left the enemy moved out across Hatcher's Run, in the gap between Generals Hancock and Warren, which was not closed as reported, and made a desperate attack on General Hancock's right and rear. General Hancock immediately faced his corps to meet it, and after a bloody combat drove the enemy within his works, and withdrew that night to his old position. In support of this movement General Butler made a demonstration on the north side of the James, and attacked the enemy on the Williamsburg road and also on the York River Railroad. In the former he was unsuccessful; in the latter he succeeded in carrying a work which was afterward abandoned, and his forces withdrawn to their former position.

From this time forward the operations in front of Petersburg and Richmond, until the spring campaign of 1865, were confined to the defense and extension of our lines and to offensive movements for crippling the enemy's lines of communication and to prevent his detaching any considerable force to send south.* By the 7th of February our lines were extended to Hatcher's Run, and the Weldon railroad had been destroyed to Hicksford.

General Sherman moved from Chattanooga on the 6th of May, with the Armies of the Cumberland, Tennessee, and Ohio, commanded, respectively, by Generals Thomas, McPherson, and Schofield, upon Johnston's army at Dalton; but finding the enemy's positions at Buzzard Roost, covering Dalton, too strong to be assaulted, General McPherson was sent through Snake [Creek] Gap to turn it, while Generals Thomas and Schofield threatened it in front and on the north. This movement was successful. Johnston, finding his retreat likely to be cut off, fell back to his fortified position at Resaca, where he was attacked on the afternoon of May 15. A heavy battle ensued. During the night the enemy retreated south. Late on the 17th his rear guard was overtaken near Adairsville, and heavy skirmishing followed. The next morning, however, he had again disappeared. He was vigorously pursued and was overtaken at Cassville on the 19th, but, during the ensuing night, retreated across the Etowah. While these operations were going on, General Jefferson C. Davis' division, of Thomas' army, was sent to Rome, capturing it with its forts and artillery and its valuable mills and foundries. General Sherman having given his army a few days' rest at this point, again put it in motion on the 23d for Dallas, with a view of turning the difficult pass at Allatoona. On the afternoon of the 25th the advance, under General Hooker, had a severe battle with the enemy, driving him back to New Hope Church, near Dallas. Several sharp encounters occurred at this point. The most important was on the 28th, when the enemy assaulted General McPherson at Dallas, but received a terrible and bloody repulse.

* For subordinate reports of operations against Petersburg and Richmond from August 1 to December 31, 1864, see Vol. XLII, Part I.

On the 4th of June Johnston abandoned his intrenched position at New Hope Church and retreated to the strong positions of Kenesaw, Pine, and Lost Mountains. He was forced to yield the two last-named places and concentrate his army on Kenesaw, where, on the 27th, Generals Thomas and McPherson made a determined but unsuccessful assault. On the night of the 2d of July Sherman commenced moving his army by the right flank, and on the morning of the 3d found that the enemy, in consequence of this movement, had abandoned Kenesaw and retreated across the Chattahoochee.

General Sherman remained on the Chattahoochee to give his men rest and get up stores until the 17th of July, when he resumed his operations, crossed the Chattahoochee, destroyed a large portion of the railroad to Augusta, and drove the enemy back to Atlanta. At this place General Hood succeeded General Johnston in command of the rebel army, and, assuming the offensive-defensive policy, made several severe attacks upon Sherman in the vicinity of Atlanta, the most desperate and determined of which was on the 22d of July. About 1 p. m. of this day the brave, accomplished, and noble-hearted McPherson was killed. General Logan succeeded him, and commanded the Army of the Tennessee through this desperate battle, and until he was superseded by Major-General Howard, on the 26th, with the same success and ability that had characterized him in the command of a corps or division. In all these attacks the enemy was repulsed with great loss. Finding it impossible to entirely invest the place, General Sherman, after securing his line of communications across the Chattahoochee, moved his main force round by the enemy's left flank upon the Montgomery and Macon roads, to draw the enemy from his fortifications. In this he succeeded, and, after defeating the enemy near Rough and Ready, Jonesborough, and Lovejoy's, forcing him to retreat to the south, on the 2d of September occupied Atlanta, the objective point of his campaign. About the time of this move the rebel cavalry, under Wheeler, attempted to cut his communications in the rear, but was repulsed at Dalton and driven into East Tennessee, whence it proceeded west to McMinnville, Murfreesborough, and Franklin, and was finally driven south of the Tennessee. The damage done by this raid was repaired in a few days. During the partial investment of Atlanta, General Rousseau joined General Sherman with a force of cavalry from Decatur, having made a successful raid upon the Atlanta and Montgomery Railroad and its branches near Opelika. Cavalry raids were also made by Generals McCook, Garrard, and Stoneman to cut the remaining railroad communication with Atlanta. The first two were successful; the latter disastrous.

General Sherman's movement from Chattanooga to Atlanta was prompt, skillful, and brilliant. The history of his flank movements and battles during that memorable campaign will ever be read with an interest unsurpassed by anything in history. His own report, and those of his subordinate commanders accompanying it, give the details of that most successful campaign.* He was dependent for the supply of his armies upon a single-track railroad from Nashville to the point where he was operating. This passed the entire distance through a hostile country, and every foot of it had to be protected by troops. The cavalry force of the enemy under Forrest, in Northern Mississippi, was evidently waiting for Sherman to advance far enough into the mountains of Georgia to make a retreat disastrous, to get upon this line and destroy it beyond the possibility of further use. To guard against this danger Sherman left what he supposed to be a sufficient force to operate against Forrest in West Tennessee. He directed General Washburn, who commanded there, to send Brig. Gen. S. D. Sturgis, in command of this force, to attack him. On the morning of the 10th of June General Sturgis met the enemy near Guntown, Miss., was badly beaten, and driven back in utter rout and confusion to Memphis, a distance of about 100 miles, hotly pursued by the enemy. By this, however, the enemy was defeated in his designs upon Sherman's line of communications. The persistency with which he followed up this success exhausted him, and made a season for rest and repairs necessary. In the meantime Maj. Gen. A. J. Smith, with the troops of the Army of the Tennessee that had been sent by General Sherman to General Banks, arrived at Memphis on their return from Red River, where they had done most excellent service. He was directed by General Sherman to immediately take the offensive against Forrest. This he did with the promptness and effect which has characterized his whole military career. On the 14th of July he met the enemy at Tupelo, Miss., and whipped him badly. The fighting continued through three days. Our loss was small compared with that of the enemy. Having accomplished the object of his expedition, General Smith returned to Memphis.† During the months of March and April this same force under Forrest annoyed us considerably. On the 24th of March it captured Union City, Ky., and its garrison, and on the 24th [25th] attacked Paducah, commanded by Col. S. G. Hicks, Fortieth Illinois Volunteers. Colonel Hicks, having but a small force, withdrew to the forts near the river, from where he repulsed the enemy and drove him from the place. On the 13th of April part of this force, under the rebel General Buford, summoned the garrison of Columbus, Ky., to surrender, but received for reply from Colonel Lawrence, Thirty-fourth New Jersey Volunteers, that, being placed there by his Government with adequate force to hold his post and repel all enemies from it, surrender was out of the question. On the morning of the same day‡ Forrest attacked Fort Pillow, Tenn., garrisoned by a detachment of Tennessee cavalry and the First Regiment Alabama Colored Troops, commanded by Major Booth. The garrison fought bravely until about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when the enemy carried the works by assault, and, after our men throw down their arms, proceeded to an inhuman and merciless massacre of the garrison. On the 14th General Buford, having failed at Columbus, appeared before Paducah, but was again driven off.§

* For subordinate reports of the Atlanta campaign, see Vol. XXXVIII, Parts I, II, and III.

† For subordinate reports of Sturgis' and A. J. Smith's expeditions, see Vol. XXXIX, Part I, pp. 85 and 260.

‡ A mistake. Forrest attacked Fort Pillow on April 12.

§ For subordinate reports of Forrest's expedition into West Tennessee and Kentucky, see Vol. XXXII, Part I, p. 501.

Guerrillas and raiders, seemingly emboldened by Forrest's operations, were also very active in Kentucky. The most noted of these was Morgan. With a force of from 2,000 to 3,000 cavalry he entered the State through Pound Gap in the latter part of May. On the 11th of June he attacked and captured Cynthiana, with its entire garrison. On the 12th he was overtaken by General Burbridge and completely routed, with heavy loss, and was finally driven out of the State. This notorious guerrilla was afterward surprised and killed near Greeneville, Tenn., and his command captured and dispersed by General Gillem.*

In the absence of official reports of the commencement of the Red River expedition, except so far as relates to the movements of the troops sent by General Sherman under A. J. Smith, I am unable to give the date of its starting. The troops under General Smith, comprising two divisions of the Sixteenth and a detachment of the Seventeenth Army Corps, left Vicksburg on the 10th of March and reached the designated point on Red River one day earlier than that appointed by General Banks. The rebel forces at Fort De Russy, thinking to defeat him, left the fort on the 14th to give him battle in the open field; but, while occupying the enemy with skirmishing and demonstrations, Smith pushed forward to Fort De Russy, which had been left with a weak garrison, and captured it, with its garrison, about 350 men, eleven pieces of artillery, and many small-arms. Our loss was but slight. On the 15th he pushed forward to Alexandria, which place he reached on the 18th. On the 21st he had an engagement with the enemy at Henderson's Hill, in which he defeated him, capturing 210 prisoners and four pieces of artillery. On the 28th he again attacked and defeated the enemy, under the rebel General Taylor, at Cane River.^f By the 26th General Banks had assembled his whole army at Alexandria and pushed forward to Grand Ecore. On the morning of April 6 he moved from Grand Ecore. On the afternoon of the 7th his advance engaged the enemy near Pleasant Hill and drove him from the field. On the same afternoon the enemy made a stand eight miles beyond Pleasant Hill, but was again compelled to retreat. On the 8th, at Sabine Cross-Roads and Peach Hill, the enemy attacked and defeated his advance, capturing nineteen pieces of artillery and an immense amount of transportation and stores. During the night General Banks fell back to Pleasant Hill, where another battle was fought on the 9th, and the enemy repulsed with great loss. During the night General Banks continued his retrograde movement to Grand Ecore, and thence to Alexandria, which he reached on the 27th of April. Here a serious difficulty arose in getting Admiral Porter's fleet, which accompanied the expedition, over the rapids, the water having fallen so much since they passed up as to prevent their return. At the suggestion of Colonel (now Brigadier-General) Bailey, and under his superintendence, wing-dams were constructed, by which the channel was contracted so that the fleet passed down the rapids in safety.

The army evacuated Alexandria on the 14th of May, after considerable skirmishing with the enemy's advance, and reached Morganza and Point Coupée near the end of the month. The disastrous termination of this expedition, and the lateness of the season, rendered impracticable the carrying out of my plans of a movement in force sufficient to insure the capture of Mobile.

* For subordinate reports of operations in Kentucky and East Tennessee, see Vol. XXXIX.

^f A mistake. A. J. Smith's command reached Gottle Landing March 28.

On the 23d of March Major-General Steele left Little Rock with the Seventh Army Corps to co-operate with General Banks' expedition on Red River, and reached Arkadelphia on the 28th. On the 16th of April, after driving the enemy before him, he was joined near Elkin's Ferry, in Ouachita County, by General Thayer, who had marched from Fort Smith. After several severe skirmishes, in which the enemy was defeated, General Steele reached Camden, which he occupied about the middle of April. On learning the defeat and consequent retreat of General Banks on Red River and the loss of one of his own trains at Mark's Mills, in Dallas County, General Steele determined to fall back to the Arkansas River. He left Camden on the 26th of April and reached Little Rock on the 2d of May. On the 30th of April the enemy attacked him while crossing Saline River at Jenkins' Ferry, but was repulsed with considerable loss. Our loss was about 600 in killed, wounded, and prisoners. Major-General Canby, who had been assigned to the command of the Military Division of West Mississippi, was therefore directed to send the Nineteenth Army Corps to join the armies operating against Richmond, and to limit the remainder of his command to such operations as might be necessary to hold the positions and lines of communications he then occupied. Before starting General A. J. Smith's troops back to Sherman, General Canby sent a part of it to disperse a force of the enemy that was collecting near the Mississippi River. General Smith met and defeated this force near Lake Chicot on the 5th of June. Our loss was about 40 killed and 70 wounded. In the latter part of July General Canby sent Maj. Gen. Gordon Granger, with such forces as he could collect, to co-operate with Admiral Farragut against the defenses of Mobile Bay. On the 8th of August Fort Gaines surrendered to the combined naval and land forces. Fort Powell was blown up and abandoned. On the 9th Fort Morgan was invested, and after a severe bombardment surrendered on the 23d. The total captures amounted to 1,464 prisoners and 104 pieces of artillery.*

About the last of August, it being reported that the rebel General Price, with a force of about 10,000 men, had reached Jacksonport, on his way to invade Missouri, General A. J. Smith's command, then en route from Memphis to join Sherman, was ordered to Missouri. A cavalry force was also, at the same time, sent from Memphis, under command of Colonel Winslow. This made General Rosecrans' forces superior to those of Price, and no doubt was entertained he would be able to check Price and drive him back, while the forces under General Steele, in Arkansas, would cut off his retreat. On the 26th day of September Price attacked Pilot Knob and forced the garrison to retreat, and thence moved north to the Missouri River, and continued up that river toward Kansas. General Curtis, commanding Department of Kansas, immediately collected such forces as he could to repel his invasion of Kansas, while General Rosecrans' cavalry was operating in his rear. The enemy was brought to battle on the Big Blue and defeated, with the loss of nearly all his artillery and trains and a large number of prisoners. He made a precipitate retreat to Northern Arkansas. The impunity with which Price was enabled to roam over the State of Missouri for a long time, and the incalculable mischief done by him, shows to how little purpose a superior force may be used. There is no reason why General Rosecrans should not have concentrated his forces and beaten and driven Price before the latter reached Pilot Knob.†

* For subordinate reports of operations against Mobile, see Vol. XXXIX, Part I, p. 402.

† For subordinate reports of operations in Missouri, see Vol. XLJ, Part I.

September 20 the enemy's cavalry under Forrest crossed the Tennessee near Waterloo, Ala., and on the 23d attacked the garrison at Athens, consisting of 600 men, which capitulated on the 24th. After the surrender two regiments of re-enforcements arrived, and on the 25th, after a severe fight, were compelled to surrender. Forrest destroyed the railroad westward, captured the garrison at Sulphur Branch, and skirmished with the garrison at Pulaski on the 27th, and on the 28th day cut the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad near Tullahoma, Tenn. Decherd. On the morning of the 30th one column of Forrest's command, under Buford, appeared before Huntsville, and summoned the surrender of the garrison. Receiving an answer in the negative, he remained in the vicinity of the place until next morning, when he again summoned its surrender, and received the same reply as on the day before. He withdrew in the direction of Athens, which place had been regarrisoned, and attacked it on the afternoon of the 1st of October, but without success. On the morning of the 2d he renewed his attack, but was handsomely repulsed. Another column, under Forrest, appeared before Columbia on the morning of the 1st, but did not make an attack. On the morning of the 3d he moved toward Mount Pleasant. While these operations were going on every exertion was made by General Thomas to destroy the forces under Forrest before he could reach the Tennessee, but was unable to prevent his escape to Corinth, Miss.

In September an expedition under General Burbridge was sent to destroy the salt-works at Saltville, Va. He met the enemy on the 21st of October, about three miles and a half from Saltville, and drove him into his strongly-intrenched position around the salt-works, from which he was unable to dislodge him. During the night he withdrew his command and returned to Kentucky.*

General Sherman, immediately after the fall of Atlanta, put his armies in camp in and about the place, and made all preparations for refitting and supplying them for future service. The great length of road from Atlanta to the Cumberland River, however, which had to be guarded, allowed the troops but little rest.

During this time Jeff. Davis made a speech in Macon, Ga., which was reported in the papers of the South, and soon became known to the whole country, disclosing the plans of the enemy, thus enabling General Sherman to fully meet them. He exhibited the weakness of supposing that an army that had been beaten and fearfully decimated had a vain attempt at the defensive could successfully undertake the offensive against the army that had so often defeated it. In execution of this plan, Hood, with his army, was soon reported to the southwest of Atlanta. Moving far to Sherman's right, he succeeded in reaching the railroad about Big Shanty, and moved north on it.

General Sherman, leaving a force to hold Atlanta, with the remainder of his army fell upon him and drove him to Gadsden, Ala. From the constant annoyance he would have with the roads to his rear, and we attempted to hold Atlanta, General Sherman proposed the abandonment and destruction of that place, with all the railroads leading to it, and telegraphed me as follows:

CENTREVILLE, GA., October 20, 1864—General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT:

Dispatch about Wilson just received. Hood is now crossing Coosa River, twelve miles below Rome, bound west. If he passes over the Mobile and Ohio road, I will not better execute the plan of my letter sent by Colonel Porter, and leave General Thomas, with the troops now in Tennessee, to defend the State? He will have an ample force when the re-enforcements ordered reach Nashville.

* For subordinate reports of operations in Alabama and Tennessee, see Vol. XXXIA, Part I.

W. T. SHERMAN,
Major-General.

For a full understanding of the plan referred to in this dispatch, I quote from the letter sent by Colonel Porter:

I will therefore give my opinion that your army and Canby's should be re-enforced to the maximum; that, after you get Wilmington, you strike for Savannah and the river; that Canby be instructed to hold the Mississippi River, and send a force to get Columbus, Ga., either by the way of the Alabama or Apalachicola, and that I keep Hood employed and put my army in final order for a march on Augusta, Columbia, and Charleston, to be ready as soon as Wilmington is sealed as to commerce and the city of Savannah is in our possession.

This was in reply to a letter of mine of date September 12, in answer to a dispatch of his containing substantially the same proposition, and in which I informed him of a proposed movement against Wilmington, and of the situation in Virginia, &c.

CITY POINT, VA., October 11, 1864—11 a. m.

Maj. Gen. W. T. SHERMAN:

Your dispatch of October 10 received. Does it not look as if Hood was going to attempt the invasion of Middle Tennessee, using the Mobile and Ohio and Memphis and Charleston roads to supply his base on the Tennessee River, about Florence or Decatur? If he does this, he ought to be met and prevented from getting north of the Tennessee River. If you were to cut loose, I do not believe you would meet Hood's army, but would be bushwhacked by all the old men, little boys, and such railroad guards as are still left at home. Hood would probably strike for Nashville, thinking that by going north he could inflict greater damage upon us than we could upon the rebels by going south. If there is any way of getting at Hood's army, I would prefer that; but I must trust to your own judgment. I find I shall not be able to send a force from here to act with you on Savannah. Your movements, therefore, will be independent of mine, at least until the fall of Richmond takes place. I am afraid Thomas, with such lines of road as he has to protect, could not prevent Hood from going north. With Wilson turned loose with all your cavalry, you will find the rebels put much more on the defensive than heretofore.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

KINGSTON, GA., October 11, 1864—11 a. m.

Lieutenant-General GRANT:

Hood moved his army from Palmetto Station across by Dallas and Cedartown, and is now on the Coosa River, south of Rome. He threw one corps on my road at Aeworth, and I was forced to follow. I hold Atlanta with the Twentieth Corps, and have strong detachments along my line. This reduces my active force to a comparatively small army. We cannot remain here on the defensive. With the 25,000 men, and the bold cavalry he has, he can constantly break my roads. I would infinitely prefer to make a wreck of the road and of the country from Chattanooga to Atlanta, including the latter city, send back all my wounded and worthless, and, with my effective army, move through Georgia, smashing things to the sea. Hood may turn into Tennessee and Kentucky, but I believe he will be forced to follow me. Instead of my being on the defensive, I would be on the offensive; instead of guessing at what he means to do, he would have to guess at my plans. The difference in war is full 25 per cent. I can make Savannah, Charleston, or the mouth of the Chattahoochee. Answer quick, as I know we will not have the telegraph long.

W. T. SHERMAN,
Major-General.

CITY POINT, VA., October 11, 1864—11.30 p. m.

Maj. Gen. W. T. SHERMAN:

Your dispatch of to-day received. If you are satisfied the trip to the sea-coast can be made, holding the line of the Tennessee River firmly, you may make it, destroying all the railroad south of Dalton or Chattanooga, as you think best.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

It was the original design to hold Atlanta, and by getting there to the coast, with a garrison left on the southern railroads leading east and west through Georgia, to effectually sever the East from the West; in other words, cut the would-be Confederacy in two again, as it had been cut once by our gaining possession of the Mississippi River. General Sherman's plan virtually effected this object. General Sherman commenced at once his preparations for his proposed movement, kept his army in position in the mean time to watch Hood. Being satisfied that Hood had moved westward from Gadsden across the Mountain, General Sherman sent the Fourth Corps, Major-General Slocum commanding, and the Twenty-third Corps, Major-General Sedgwick commanding, back to Chattanooga to report to Major-General Thomas at Nashville, whom he had placed in command of all the troops of his military division save the four army corps and cavalry division he designed to move with through Georgia. With the troops thus left at his disposal, there was little doubt that General Thomas would hold the line in the Tennessee, or in the event Hood should force it, would be able to concentrate and beat him in battle. It was therefore readily consented to that Sherman should start for the sea-coast. Having concentrated his troops at Atlanta by the 14th of November, he commenced his march threatening both Augusta and Macon. His coming-out point could not be definitely fixed. Having to gather his subsistence as he marched through the country, it was not impossible that a force inferior to his own might compel him to head for such point as he could reach, instead of such as he might prefer. The blindness of the enemy, however, in ignoring his movement, and sending Hood's army, the only considerable force he had west of Richmond and east of the Mississippi River, northward on an offensive campaign, left the whole country open to Sherman's route to his own choice. How that campaign was conducted, how little opposition was met with, the condition of the country through which the armies passed, the capture of Fort McAllister, on the Savannah River, and the occupation of Savannah on the 21st of December, are all clearly set forth in General Sherman's admirable report.*

Soon after General Sherman commenced his march from Atlanta, two expeditions, one from Baton Rouge, La., and one from Vicksburg, Miss., were started by General Canby to cut the enemy's line of communication with Mobile and detain troops in that field. General Foster, commanding Department of the South, also sent an expedition, via Broad River, to destroy the railroad between Charleston and Savannah. The expedition from Vicksburg, under command of Brig. Gen. E. D. Osband (colonel Third U. S. Colored Cavalry), captured, on the 27th of November, and destroyed the Mississippi Central Railroad bridge and trestle-work over Big Black River, near Canton, thirty miles of the road, and two locomotives, besides large amounts of stores. The expedition from Baton Rouge was without favorable results. The expedition from the Department of the South, under the immediate command of Brig. Gen. John P. Hatch, consisting of about 5,000 men of all arms, including a brigade from the Navy, proceeded up Broad River and embarked at Boyd's Neck on the 29th of November, from where it moved to strike the railroad at Grahamville. At Honey Hill, about three miles from Grahamville, the enemy was found and attacked in a strongly fortified position, which resulted, after seven fighting, in our repulse, with a loss of 746 in killed, wounded, and missing. During the night General Hatch withdrew. On the 6th of

*For subordinate reports of the Savannah campaign, see Vol. XLIV.

December General Foster obtained a position covering the Charleston and Savannah Railroad, between the Coosawhatchie and Tulifinny Rivers.

Hood, instead of following Sherman, continued his move northward, which seemed to me to be leading to his certain doom. At all events, had I had the power to command both armies, I should not have changed the orders under which he seemed to be acting. On the 26th of October the advance of Hood's army attacked the garrison at Decatur, Ala., but failing to carry the place, withdrew toward Courtland, and succeeded, in the face of our cavalry, in effecting a lodgment on the north side of the Tennessee River, near Florence. On the 28th Forrest reached the Tennessee, at Fort Heiman, and captured a gun-boat and three transports. On the 2d of November he planted batteries above and below Johnsonville, on the opposite side of the river, isolating three gun-boats and eight transports. On the 4th the enemy opened his batteries upon the place, and was replied to from the gun-boats and the garrison. The gun-boats becoming disabled were set on fire, as also were the transports, to prevent their falling into the hands of the enemy. About $1,500,000 worth of stores and property on the levee and in store-houses was consumed by fire. On the 5th the enemy disappeared and crossed to the north side of the Tennessee River, above Johnsonville, moving toward Clifton, and subsequently joined Hood. On the night of the 5th General Schofield, with the advance of the Twenty-third Corps, reached Johnsonville, but finding the enemy gone, was ordered to Pulaski, and put in command of all the troops there, with instructions to watch the movements of Hood and retard his advance, but not to risk a general engagement until the arrival of General A. J. Smith's command from Missouri, and until General Wilson could get his cavalry remounted.

On the 19th General Hood continued his advance. General Thomas, retarding him as much as possible, fell back toward Nashville for the purpose of concentrating his command and gaining time for the arrival of re-enforcements. The enemy coming up with our main force, commanded by General Schofield, at Franklin, on the 30th, assaulted our works repeatedly during the afternoon until late at night, but were in every instance repulsed. His loss in this battle was 1,750 killed, 702 prisoners, and 3,800 wounded. Among his losses were 6 general officers killed, 6 wounded, and 1 captured. Our entire loss was 2,300. This was the first serious opposition the enemy met with, and I am satisfied was the fatal blow to all his expectations. During the night General Schofield fell back toward Nashville. This left the field to the enemy—not lost by battle, but voluntarily abandoned—so that General Thomas' whole force might be brought together. The enemy followed up and commenced the establishment of his line in front of Nashville on the 2d of December. As soon as it was ascertained that Hood was crossing the Tennessee River, and that Price was going out of Missouri, General Rosecrans was ordered to send to General Thomas the troops of General A. J. Smith's command and such other troops as he could spare. The advance of this re-enforcement reached Nashville on the 30th of November. On the morning of the 15th of December General Thomas attacked Hood in position, and, in a battle lasting two days, defeated and drove him from the field in the utmost confusion, leaving in our hands most of his artillery and many thousand prisoners, including four general officers.

Before the battle of Nashville I grew very impatient over, as it appeared to me, the unnecessary delay. This impatience was increased upon learning that the enemy had sent a force of cavalry across the Cumberland into Kentucky. I feared Hood would cross his whole and give us great trouble there. After urging upon General Th the necessity of immediately assuming the offensive, I started we superintend matters there in person. Reaching Washington O received General Thomas' dispatch announcing his attack upon enemy, and the result as far as the battle had progressed. I delighted. All fears and apprehensions were dispelled. I am no satisfied but that General Thomas, immediately upon the appear of Hood before Nashville, and before he had time to fortify, sh have moved out with his whole force and given him battle, instead waiting to remount his cavalry, which delayed him until the inclem of the weather made it impracticable to attack earlier than he. But his final defeat of Hood was so complete that it will be accepted as a vindication of that distinguished officer's judgment.

After Hood's defeat at Nashville he retreated, closely pursued cavalry and infantry, to the Tennessee River, being forced to abandon many pieces of artillery and most of his transportation. On the 1 of December our advance forces ascertained that he had made his escape to the south side of the river. About this time, the weather having set in heavily in Tennessee and North Alabama, making difficult to move army transportation and artillery, General Thomas stopped the pursuit by his main force at the Tennessee River with a small force of cavalry, under Col. W. J. Palmer. Fifteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, continued to follow Hood for some distance, capturing considerable transportation and the enemy's pontoon bridge. The details of these operations will be found clearly set forth in General Thomas' report.*

A cavalry expedition, under Brevet Major-General Grierson, started from Memphis on the 21st of December. On the 25th he surprised and captured Forrest's dismounted camp at Verona, Miss., on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, destroyed the railroad, sixteen cars loaded with wagons and pontoons for Hood's army, 4,000 new English carbons and large amounts of public stores. On the morning of the 28th he attacked and captured a force of the enemy at Egypt, and destroyed a train of fourteen cars; thence, turning to the southwest, he struck the Mississippi Central Railroad at Winona, destroyed the factories and large amounts of stores at Bankston, and the machine-shops and public property at Grenada, arriving at Vicksburg January 5. During these operations in Middle Tennessee, the enemy, with a force under General Breckinridge, entered East Tennessee. On the 13th of November he attacked General Gillem near Morristown, capturing his artillery and several hundred prisoners. Gillem, with what was left of his command, retreated to Knoxville. Following up his success, Breckinridge moved to near Knoxville, but withdrew on the 18th, following General Ammen. Under the directions of General Thomas, General Stoneman concentrated the commands of Generals Burbridge, Gillem near Bean's Station, to operate against Breckinridge and destroy or drive him into Virginia, destroy the salt-works at Saltville and the railroad into Virginia as far as he could go without endangering his command. On the 12th of December he commenced his movement capturing and dispersing the enemy's forces wherever he met them. On the 16th he struck the enemy under Vaughn at Marion, completely routing and pursuing him to Wytheville, capturing all his artillery trains, and 198 prisoners, and destroyed Wytheville, with its stores and supplies, and the extensive lead-works near there. Returning to Ma-

* For subordinate reports of the Nashville campaign, see Vol. XLV, Part he met a force under Breckinridge, consisting, among other troops, of the garrison of Saltville that had started in pursuit. He at once made arrangements to attack it the next morning, but morning found Breckinridge gone. He then moved directly to Saltville, and destroyed the extensive salt-works at that place, a large amount of stores, and captured eight pieces of artillery. Having thus successfully executed his instructions, he returned General Burbridge to Lexington and General Gillem to Knoxville.*

Wilmington, N. C., was the most important sea-coast port left to the enemy through which to get supplies from abroad and send cotton and other products out by blockade-runners, besides being a place of great strategic value. The navy had been making strenuous exertions to seal the harbor of Wilmington, but with only partial effect. The nature of the outlet of Cape Fear River was such that it required watching for so great a distance that, without possession of the land north of New Inlet or Fort Fisher, it was impossible for the navy to entirely close the harbor against the entrance of blockade-runners. To secure the possession of this land required the co-operation of a land force, which I agreed to furnish. Immediately commenced the assemblage in Hampton Roads, under Admiral D. D. Porter, of the most formidable armada ever collected for concentration upon one given point. This necessarily attracted the attention of the enemy, as well as that of the loyal North, and through the imprudence of the public press, and very likely of officers of both branches of service, the exact object of the expedition became a subject of common discussion in the newspapers both North and South. The enemy, thus warned, prepared to meet it. This caused a postponement of the expedition until the latter part of November, when, being again called upon by Hon. G. V. Fox, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, I agreed to furnish the men required at once, and went myself, in company with Major-General Butler, to Hampton Roads, where we had a conference with Admiral Porter as to the force required and the time of starting. A force of 6,500 men was regarded as sufficient. The time of starting was not definitely arranged, but it was thought all would be ready by the 6th of December, if not before. Learning on the 30th of November that Bragg had gone to Georgia, taking with him most of the forces about Wilmington, I deemed it of the utmost importance that the expedition should reach its destination before the return of Bragg, and directed General Butler to make all arrangements for the departure of Major-General Weitzel, who had been designated to command the land forces, so that the navy might not be detained one moment.

On the 6th of December the following instructions were given:

CITY POINT, VA., December 6, 1864.

Maj. Gen. B. F. BUTLER:

GENERAL: The first object of the expedition under General Weitzel is to close to the enemy the port of Wilmington. If successful in this, the second will be to capture Wilmington itself. There are reasonable grounds to hope for success if advantage can be taken of the absence of the greater part of the enemy's forces now looking after Sherman in Georgia. The directions you have given for the numbers and equipment of the expedition are all right, except in the unimportant matter of where they embark and the amount of intrenching tools to be taken. The object of the expedition will be gained by effecting a landing on the mainland between Cape Fear River and the Atlantic, north of the north entrance to the river. Should such landing be effected while the enemy still holds Fort Fisher and the batteries guarding the entrance to the river, then the troops should intrench themselves, and, by co-operating with the navy, effect the reduction and capture of those places. These in our hands, the navy could enter the harbor, and the port of Wilmington would be sealed. Should Fort Fisher and the point of land on which it is built fall into the hands of our troops immediately on landing, then it will be worth the attempt to capture Wilmington by a forced march and surprise. If time is consumed in gaining the first object of the expedition, the second will become a matter of after consideration.

* For subordinate reports of operations in East Tennessee and Southwest Virginia, see Vol. XLV, Part I.

The details for execution are intrusted to you and the officer immediately in command of the troops.

Should the troops under General Weitzel fail to effect a landing at or near Fort Fisher, they will be returned to the armies operating against Richmond without delay.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

General Butler commanding the army from which the troops were taken for this enterprise, and the territory within which they were to operate, military courtesy required that all orders and instructions should go through him. They were so sent; but General Weitzel has since officially informed me that he never received the foregoing instructions, nor was he aware of their existence until he read General Butler's published official report of the Fort Fisher failure, with my indorsement and papers accompanying it. I had no idea of General Butler's accompanying the expedition until the evening before it got off from Bermuda Hundred, and then did not dream but that General Weitzel had received all the instructions and would be in command. I rather formed the idea that General Butler was actuated by a desire to witness the effect of the explosion of the powder-boat. The expedition was detained several days at Hampton Roads awaiting the loading of the powder-boat. The importance of getting the Wilmington expedition off without any delay, with or without the powder-boat, had been urged upon General Butler, and he advised to so notify Admiral Porter. The expedition finally got off on the 13th of December, and arrived at the place of rendezvous (off New Inlet, near Fort Fisher) on the evening of the 15th. Admiral Porter arrived on the evening of the 18th, having put in at Beaufort to get ammunition for the monitors. The sea becoming rough, making it difficult to land troops, and the supply of water and coal being about exhausted, the transport fleet put back to Beaufort to replenish; this, with the state of the weather, delayed the return to the place of rendezvous until the 24th. The powder-boat was exploded on the morning of the 24th before the return of General Butler from Beaufort, but it would seem from the notice taken of it in the Southern newspapers that the enemy were never enlightened as to the object of the explosion until they were informed by the Northern press.

On the 25th a landing was effected without opposition, and a reconnaissance, under Brevet Brigadier-General Curtis, pushed up toward the fort. But before receiving a full report of the result of this reconnaissance, General Butler, in direct violation of the instructions given, ordered the re-embarkation of the troops and the return of the expedition. The re-embarkation was accomplished by the morning of the 27th. On the return of the expedition, officers and men—among them Bvt. Maj. Gen. (then brevet brigadier-general) N. M. Curtis, First Lieut. G. W. Ross, ——— Regiment Vermont Volunteers [One hundred and seventeenth New York], First Lieut. William H. Walling, and Second Lieut. George Simpson, One hundred and forty-second New York Volunteers—voluntarily reported to me that when recalled they were nearly into the fort, and, in their opinion, it could have been taken without much loss.*

* For subordinate reports of Butler's expedition, see Vol. XLII, Part I.

Soon after the return of the expedition, I received a dispatch from the Secretary of the Navy and a letter from Admiral Porter, informing me that the fleet was still off Fort Fisher, and expressing the conviction that, under a proper leader, the place could be taken. The natural supposition with me was that, when the troops abandoned the expedition, the navy would do so also. Finding it had not, however, I answered on the 30th of December, advising Admiral Porter to hold on, and that I would send a force and make another attempt to take the place. This time I selected Bvt. Maj. Gen. (now major-general) A. H. Terry to command the expedition. The troops composing it consisted of the same that composed the former, with the addition of a small brigade, numbering about 1,500, and a small siege train. The latter it was never found necessary to land. I communicated direct to the commander of the expedition the following instructions:

CITY POINT, VA., January 3, 1865.

BVT. MAJ. GEN. A. H. TERRY:

GENERAL: The expedition intrusted to your command has been fitted out to renew the attempt to capture Fort Fisher, N. C., and Wilmington ultimately, if the fort falls. You will then proceed, with as little delay as possible, to the naval fleet lying off Cape Fear River, and report the arrival of yourself and command to Admiral D. D. Porter, commanding North Atlantic Blockading Squadron.

It is exceedingly desirable that the most complete understanding should exist between yourself and the naval commander. I suggest, therefore, that you consult with Admiral Porter freely, and get from him the part to be performed by each branch of the public service, so that there may be unity of action. It would be well to have the whole programme laid down in writing. I have served with Admiral Porter, and know that you can rely on his judgment and his nerve to undertake what he proposes. I would, therefore, defer to him as much as is consistent with your own responsibilities. The first object to be attained is to get a firm position on the spit of land on which Fort Fisher is built, from which you can operate against that fort. You want to look to the practicability of receiving your supplies, and to defending yourself against superior forces sent against you by any of the avenues left open to the enemy. If such a position can be obtained, the siege of Fort Fisher will not be abandoned until its reduction is accomplished or another plan of campaign is ordered from these headquarters.

My own views are that, if you effect a landing, the navy ought to run a portion of their fleet into Cape Fear River, while the balance of it operates on the outside. Land forces cannot invest Fort Fisher, or cut it off from supplies or re-enforcements, while the river is in possession of the enemy.

A siege train will be loaded on vessels and sent to Fort Monroe, in readiness to be sent to you if required. All other supplies can be drawn from Beaufort as you need them. Keep the fleet of vessels with you until your position is assured. When you find they can be spared, order them back, or such of them as you can spare, to Fort Monroe, to report for orders. In case of failure to effect a landing, bring your command back to Beaufort, and report to these headquarters for further instructions. You will not debark at Beaufort until so directed.

General Sheridan has been ordered to send a division of troops to Baltimore and place them on sea-going vessels. These troops will be brought to Fort Monroe and kept there on the vessels until you are heard from. Should you require them, they will be sent you.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

Lieut. Col. C. B. Comstock, aide-de-camp (now brevet brigadier-general), who accompanied the former expedition, was assigned in orders as chief engineer to this. It will be seen that these instructions did not differ materially from those given for the first expedition, and that in neither instance was there an order to assault Fort Fisher. This was a matter left entirely to the discretion of the commanding officer. The expedition sailed from Fort Monroe on the morning of the 6th, arriving on the rendezvous, off Beaufort, on the 8th, where, owing to the difficulties of the weather, it lay until the morning of the 12th, when it got under way and reached its destination that evening. Under cover of the fleet, the disembarkation of the troops commenced on the morning of the 13th, and by 3 p. m. was completed without loss. On the 14th a reconnaissance was pushed to within 500 yards of Fort Fisher, and a small advance work taken possession of and turned into a defensive line against any attempt that might be made from the fort. This reconnaissance disclosed the fact that the front of the work had been seriously injured by the navy fire. In the afternoon of the 15th the fort was assaulted, and, after most desperate fighting, was captured, with its entire garrison and armament. Thus was secured, by the combined efforts of the navy and army, one of the most important successes of the war. Our loss was, killed, 110; wounded, 536. On the 16th and 17th the enemy abandoned and blew up Fort Caswell and the works on Smith's Island, which were immediately occupied by us. This gave us entire control of the mouth of the Cape Fear River.*

At my request, Maj. Gen. B. F. Butler was relieved, and Maj. Gen. E. O. C. Ord assigned to the command of the Department of Virginia and North Carolina.

The defense of the line of the Tennessee no longer requiring the force which had beaten and nearly destroyed the only army threatening it, I determined to find other fields of operation for General Thomas' surplus troops—fields from which they would co-operate with other movements. General Thomas was therefore directed to collect all troops not essential to hold his communications at Eastport, in readiness for orders. On the 7th of January General Thomas was directed, if he was assured of the departure of Hood south from Corinth, to send General Schofield with his corps East with as little delay as possible. This direction was promptly complied with, and the advance of the corps reached Washington on the 23d of the same month, whence it was sent to Fort Fisher and New Berne. On the 26th he was directed to send General A. J. Smith's command and a division of cavalry to report to General Canby. By the 7th of February the whole force was en route for its destination.

The State of North Carolina was constituted into a military department, and General Schofield assigned to command, and placed under the orders of Major-General Sherman. The following instructions were given him:

CITY POINT, VA., January 31, 1865.

Maj. Gen. J. M. SCHOFIELD:

GENERAL: * * * Your movements are intended as co-operative with Sherman's through the States of South and North Carolina. The first point to be attained is to secure Wilmington. Goldsborough will then be your objective point, moving either from Wilmington or New Berne, or both, as you deem best. Should you not be able to reach Goldsborough, you will advance on the line or lines of railway connecting that place with the sea-coast, as near to it as you can, building the road behind you. The enterprise under you has two objects: the first is, to give General Sherman material aid, if needed, in his march north; the second, to open a base of supplies for him on his line of march. As soon, therefore, as you can determine which of the two points, Wilmington or New Berne, you can best use for throwing supplies from to the interior, you will commence the accumulation of twenty days' rations and forage for 60,000 men and 20,000 animals. You will get of these as many as you can house and protect to such point in the interior as you may be able to occupy. I believe General Palmer has received some instructions direct from General Sherman on the subject of securing supplies for his army. You can learn what steps he has taken, and be governed in your requisitions accordingly. A supply of ordnance stores will also be necessary.

* For subordinate reports of Terry's expedition, see p. 393.

Make all requisitions upon the chiefs of their respective departments in the field with me at City Point. Communicate with me by every opportunity, and, should you deem it necessary at any time, send a special boat to Fort Monroe, from which point you can communicate by telegraph.

The supplies referred to in these instructions are exclusive of those required for your own command.

The movements of the enemy may justify or even make it your imperative duty to cut loose from your base and strike for the interior to aid Sherman. In such case you will act on your own judgment, without waiting for instructions. You will report, however, what you purpose doing. The details for carrying out these instructions are necessarily left to you. I would urge, however, if I did not know that you are already fully alive to the importance of it, prompt action. Sherman may be looked for in the neighborhood of Goldsborough any time from the 22d to the 28th of February; this limits your time very materially.

If rolling-stock is not secured in the capture of Wilmington, it can be supplied from Washington. A large force of railroad men have already been sent to Beaufort, and other mechanics will go to Fort Fisher in a day or two. On this point I have informed you by telegraph.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

Previous to giving these instructions I had visited Fort Fisher, accompanied by General Schofield, for the purpose of seeing for myself the condition of things, and personally conferring with General Terry and Admiral Porter as to what was best to be done.

Anticipating the arrival of General Sherman at Savannah—his army entirely foot-loose, Hood being then before Nashville, Tenn., the Southern railroads destroyed, so that it would take several months to re-establish a through line from west to east, and regarding the capture of Lee's army as the most important operation toward closing the rebellion—I sent orders to General Sherman, on the 6th of December, that after establishing a base on the sea-coast, with necessary garrison, to include all his artillery and cavalry, to come by water to City Point with the balance of his command.* On the 18th of December, having received information of the defeat and utter rout of Hood's army by General Thomas, and that, owing to the great difficulty of procuring ocean transportation, it would take over two months to transport Sherman's army, and doubting whether he might not contribute as much toward the desired result by operating from where he was, I wrote to him to that effect and asked him for his views as to what would be best to do.* A few days after this I received a communication from General Sherman, of date 16th December,* acknowledging the receipt of my order of the 6th, and informing me of his preparations to carry it into effect as soon as he could get transportation; also, that he had expected, upon reducing Savannah, instantly to march to Columbia, S. C., thence to Raleigh, and thence to report to me; but that this would consume about six weeks' time after the fall of Savannah, whereas by sea he could probably reach me by the middle of January. The confidence he manifested in this letter of being able to march up and join me pleased me, and without waiting for a reply to my letter of the 18th I directed him, on the 28th [27th*] of December, to make preparations to start, as he proposed without delay to break up the railroads in North and South Carolina and join the armies operating against Richmond as soon as he could.

On the 21st of January I informed General Sherman that I had ordered the Twenty-third Corps, Major-General Schofield commanding, East; that it numbered about 21,000 men; that we had at Fort Fisher about 8,000 men, at New Berne about 4,000; that if Wilmington was captured, General Schofield would go there; if not, he would march to New Berne; that, in either event, all the surplus force at that place would move to the interior toward Goldsborough, in co-operation with his movement; that from either point railroad communication would be run out; and that all these troops would be subject to his orders and came into communication with them. In obedience to his instructions, General Schofield proceeded to reduce Wilmington, N. C., in co-operation with the navy under Admiral Porter, moving his forces on both sides of the Cape Fear River. Fort Anderson, the enemy's main defense on the west bank of the river, was occupied on the morning of the 19th, the enemy having evacuated it after our appearance. On the 20th and 21st, our troops entered Wilmington. On the morning of the 22d, the enemy having retreated toward Goldsborough during the night. Preparations were at once made for movement on Goldsborough in two columns—one from Wilmington and the other from New Berne—and to repair the railroad between them from each place, as well as to supply General Sherman's army on the Cape Fear River, toward Fayetteville, if it became necessary. The column from New Berne was attacked on the 8th of March at Wise's Ford, and driven back with the loss of several hundred prisoners. On the 10th the enemy renewed his attack upon our intrenched position, but was repulsed with severe loss, and fell back during the night. On the 11th the Neuse River was crossed and Kinston occupied, and on the 12th Goldsborough was entered. The column from Wilmington crossed Cox's Bridge, on the Neuse River, ten miles above Goldsborough, on the 22d.

* See Vol. XLIV, pp. 636, 740, 726, and 820, respectively.

By the 1st of February General Sherman's whole army was in motion from Savannah. He captured Columbia, S. C., on the 17th, then moved on Goldsborough, N. C., via Fayetteville, reaching the latter place on the 12th of March, opening up communication with General Schofield by way of Cape Fear River. On the 15th he resumed his march on Goldsborough. He met a force of the enemy at Averettsborough, and after a severe fight defeated and compelled it to retreat. The loss in the engagement was about 600; the enemy's loss was much greater. On the 18th [19th] the combined forces of the enemy, under Johnston, attacked his advance at Bentonville, capturing three regiments and driving it back upon the main body. General Slocum, who was in the advance, ascertaining that the whole of Johnston's army was at the front, arranged his troops on the defensive, intrenched himself, and awaited re-enforcements, which were pushed forward. On the night of the 21st the enemy retreated to Smithfield, leaving his dead and wounded in our hands. From there Sherman continued to Goldsborough, which place had been occupied by General Schofield on the 22d, crossing the Neuse River ten miles above there, at Cox's Bridge, where General Terry had got possession and thrown a pontoon bridge on the 22d, thus forming a junction with the columns from New Berne and Wilmington. Among the important fruits of this campaign was the fall of Charleston, S. C. It was evacuated by the enemy on the night of the 17th of February, and occupied by our forces on the 18th.*

On the morning of the 31st of January General Thomas was directed to send a cavalry expedition, under General Stoneman, from East Tennessee, to penetrate South Carolina well down toward Columbia, to destroy the railroads and military resources of the country, and return, if he was able, to East Tennessee, by way of Salisbury, N. C., rejoining our prisoners there, if possible. Of the feasibility of this latter, however, General Stoneman was to judge. Sherman's movements, I had no doubt, would attract the attention of all the force the enemy could collect and facilitate the execution of this. General Stoneman was so late in making his start on this expedition, and Sherman having passed out of the State of South Carolina, on the 27th of February I directed General Thomas to change his course, and ordered him to repeat his raid of last fall, destroying the railroad toward Lynchburg as far as he could. This would keep him between our garrisons in East Tennessee and the enemy. I regarded it not impossible that in the event of the enemy being driven from Richmond, he might fall back to Lynchburg and attempt a raid north through East Tennessee. On the 14th of February the following communication was sent to General Thomas:

* For subordinate reports of the campaign of the Carolinas, see Vol. XI, VII, Part I.

CITY POINT, VA., February 14, 1865.

Maj. Gen. G. H. THOMAS:

General Canby is preparing a movement from Mobile Bay against Mobile and the interior of Alabama. His force will consist of about 20,000 men, besides A. J. Smith's command. The cavalry you have sent to Canby will be debarked at Vicksburg. It, with the available cavalry already in that section, will move from there eastward in co-operation. Hood's army has been terribly reduced by the severe punishment you gave it in Tennessee, by desertion consequent upon their defeat, and now by the withdrawal of many of them to oppose Sherman. (I take it a large portion of the infantry has been so withdrawn. It is so asserted in the Richmond papers, and a member of the rebel Congress said a few days since in a speech that one-half of it had been brought to South Carolina to oppose Sherman.) This being true, or even if it is not true, Canby's movement will attract all the attention of the enemy, and leave the advance from your stand-point easy. I think it advisable, therefore, that you prepare as much of a cavalry force as you can spare, and hold it in readiness to go south. The object would be three-fold: First, to attract as much of the enemy's force as possible to insure success to Canby; second, to destroy the enemy's lines of communication and military resources; third, to destroy or capture their forces brought into the field. Tuscaloosa and Selma would probably be the points to direct the expedition against. This, however, would not be so important as the mere fact of penetrating deep into Alabama. Discretion should be left to the officer commanding the expedition to go where, according to the information he may receive, he will best secure the objects named above.

Now that your force has been so much depleted, I do not know what number of men you can put into the field. If not more than 5,000 men, however, all cavalry, I think it will be sufficient. It is not desirable that you should start this expedition until the one leaving Vicksburg has been three or four days out, or even a week. I do not know when it will start, but will inform you by telegraph as soon as I learn. If you should hear through other sources before hearing from me, you can act on the information received.

To insure success, your cavalry should go with as little wagon train as possible, relying upon the country for supplies. I would also reduce the number of guns to a battery, or the number of batteries, and put the extra teams to the guns taken. No guns or caissons should be taken with less than eight horses.

Please inform me by telegraph, on receipt of this, what force you think you will be able to send under these directions.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

On the 15th he was directed to start the expedition as soon after the 20th as he could get it off. I deemed it of the utmost importance, before a general movement of the armies operating against Richmond, that all communication with the city north of James River should be cut off. The enemy having withdrawn the bulk of his force from the Shenandoah Valley and sent it south, or replaced troops sent from Richmond, and desiring to re-enforce Sherman, if practicable, whose cavalry was greatly inferior in numbers to that of the enemy, I determined to make a move from the Shenandoah, which, if successful, would accomplish the first, at least, and possibly the latter of these objects. I therefore telegraphed General Sheridan as follows:

CITY POINT, VA., February 20, 1865—1 p. m.

Maj. Gen. P. H. SHERIDAN:

GENERAL: As soon as it is possible to travel I think you will have no difficulty about reaching Lynchburg with a cavalry force alone. From there you could destroy the railroad and canal in every direction, so as to be of no further use to the rebellion. Sufficient cavalry should be left behind to look after Mosby's gang. From Lynchburg, if information you might get there would justify it, you could strike south, heading the streams in Virginia to the westward of Danville, and push on and join General Sherman. This additional raid—with one now about starting from East Tennessee under Stoneman, numbering 4,000 or 5,000 cavalry; one from Vicksburg, numbering 7,000 or 8,000 cavalry; one from Eastport, Miss., 10,000 cavalry; Canby from Mobile Bay, with about 38,000 mixed troops—these three latter pushing for Tuscaloosa, Selma, and Montgomery; and Sherman with a large army eating out the vitals of South Carolina—is all that will be wanted to leave nothing for the rebellion to stand upon. I would advise you to overcome great obstacles to accomplish this. Charleston was evacuated on Tuesday last.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

On the 25th I received a dispatch from General Sheridan, inquiring where Sherman was aiming for, and if I could give him definite information as to the points he might be expected to move on this side of Charlotte, N. C. In answer the following telegram was sent him:

CITY POINT, VA., February 25, 1865.

Maj. Gen. P. H. SHERIDAN:

GENERAL: Sherman's movements will depend on the amount of opposition he meets with from the enemy. If strongly opposed, he may possibly have to fall back to Georgetown, S. C., and fit out for a new start. I think, however, all danger for the necessity of going to that point has passed. I believe he has passed Charlotte. He may take Fayetteville on his way to Goldsborough. If you reach Lynchburg, you will have to be guided in your after movements by the information you obtain. Before you could possibly reach Sherman, I think you would find him moving from Goldsborough toward Raleigh, or engaging the enemy strongly posted at one or the other of these places, with railroad communications opened from his army to Wilmington or New Berne.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

General Sheridan moved from Winchester on the 27th of February with two divisions of cavalry numbering about 5,000 each. On the 1st of March he secured the bridge, which the enemy attempted to destroy, across the Middle Fork of the Shenandoah, at Mount Crawford, and entered Staunton on the 2d, the enemy having retreated on Waynesborough. Thence he pushed on to Waynesborough, where he found the enemy in force in an intrenched position, under General Early. Without stopping to make a reconnaissance, an immediate attack was made, the position was carried, and 1,600 prisoners, 11 pieces of artillery, with horses and caissons complete, 200 wagons and teams loaded with subsistence, and 17 battle-flags were captured. The prisoners, under an escort of 1,500 men, were sent back to Winchester. Thence he marched on Charlottesville, destroying effectually the railroad and bridges as he went, which place he reached on the 3d. Here he remained two days, destroying the railroad toward Richmond and Lynchburg, including the large iron bridges over the North and South Forks of the Rivanna River, and awaiting the arrival of his trains. This necessary delay caused him to abandon the idea of capturing Lynchburg. On the morning of the 6th, dividing his force into two columns, he sent one to Scottsville, whence it marched up the James River Canal to New Market, destroying every lock, and in many places the bank of the canal. From here a force was pushed out from this column to Duguidsville, to obtain possession of the bridge across the James River at that place, but failed. The enemy burned it on our approach. The enemy also burned the bridge across the river at Hardwicksville. The other column moved down the railroad toward Lynchburg, destroying it as far as Amherst Court-House, sixteen miles from Lynchburg; thence across the country, uniting with the column at New Market. The river being very high, his pontoons would not reach across it; and the enemy having destroyed the bridges by which he had hoped to cross the river and get on the South Side Railroad about Farmville, and destroy it to Appomattox Court-House, the only thing left for him was to return to Winchester or strike a base at the White House. Fortunately, he chose the latter. From New Market he took up his line of march, following the canal toward Richmond, destroying every lock upon it and cutting the banks wherever practicable, to a point eight miles east of Goochland, concentrating the whole force at Columbia on the 10th. Here he rested one day, and sent through by scouts information of his whereabouts and purposes, and a request for supplies to meet him at White House, which reached me on the night of the 12th. An infantry force was immediately sent to get possession of White House, and supplies were forwarded. Moving from Columbia in a direction to threaten Richmond, to near Ashland Station, he crossed the Annas, and after having destroyed all the bridges and many miles of the railroad, proceeded down the north bank of the Pamunkey to White House, which place he reached on the 19th.*

Previous to this the following communication was sent to General Thomas:

CITY POINT, VA., March 7, 1865—9.30 a. m.

Maj. Gen. G. H. THOMAS:

GENERAL: I think it will be advisable now for you to repair the railroad in East Tennessee, and throw a good force up to Bull's Gap and fortify there. Supplies at Knoxville could always be got forward as required. With Bull's Gap fortified, you can occupy as outposts about all of East Tennessee, and be prepared, if it should be required of you in the spring, to make a campaign toward Lynchburg or into North Carolina. I do not think Stoneman should break the road until he gets into Virginia, unless it should be to cut off rolling-stock that may be caught west of that.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

Thus it will be seen that in March, 1865, General Canby was moving an adequate force against Mobile and the army defending it under General Dick Taylor; Thomas was pushing out two large and well-appointed cavalry expeditions—one from Middle Tennessee, under Brevet Major-General Wilson, against the enemy's vital points in Alabama; the other from East Tennessee, under Major-General Stoneman, toward Lynchburg—and assembling the remainder of his available forces preparatory to offensive operations from East Tennessee; General Sheridan's cavalry was at White House; the Armies of the Potomac and James were confronting the enemy under Lee in his defenses of Richmond and Petersburg; General Sherman with his armies, re-enforced by that of General Schofield, was at Goldsborough;

* For subordinate reports of Sheridan's expedition, see p. 474.

General Pope was making preparations for a spring campaign against the enemy under Kirby Smith and Price, west of the Mississippi; and General Hancock was concentrating a force in the vicinity of Winchester, Va., to guard against invasion or to operate offensively, as might prove necessary. After the long march by General Sheridan's cavalry, over winter roads, it was necessary to rest and refit at White House. At this time the greatest source of uneasiness to me was the fear that the enemy would leave his strong lines about Petersburg and Richmond for the purpose of uniting with Johnston, before he was driven from them by battle or I was prepared to make an effectual pursuit. On the 24th of March General Sheridan moved from White House, crossed the James River at Jones' Landing, and formed a junction with the Army of the Potomac in front of Petersburg on the 27th. During this move General Ord sent forces to cover the crossings of the Chickahominy. On the 24th of March the following instructions for a general movement of the armies operating against Richmond were issued:

CITY POINT, VA., March 24, 1865.

Major-Generals MEADE, ORD, and SHERIDAN:

GENERAL: On the 20th instant the armies operating against Richmond will be moved by our left, for the double purpose of turning the enemy out of his present position around Petersburg and to insure the success of the cavalry under General Sheridan, which will start at the same time, in its efforts to reach and destroy the South Side and Danville railroads. Two corps of the Army of the Potomac will be moved at first in two columns, taking the two roads crossing Hatcher's Run nearest where the present line held by us strikes that stream, both moving toward Dinwiddie Court-House.

The cavalry under General Sheridan, joined by the division now under General Davies, will move at the same time by the Weldon road and the Jerusalem plank road, turning west from the latter before crossing the Nottoway, and west with the whole column before reaching Stony Creek. General Sheridan will then move independently, under other instructions which will be given him. All dismounted cavalry belonging to the Army of the Potomac, and the dismounted cavalry from the Middle Military Division not required for guarding property belonging to their arm of service, will report to Brigadier-General Benham, to be added to the defenses of City Point. Major-General Parke will be left in command of all the army left for holding the lines about Petersburg and City Point, subject, of course, to orders from the commander of the Army of the Potomac. The Ninth Army Corps will be left intact to hold the present line of works so long as the whole line now occupied by us is held. If, however, the troops to the left of the Ninth Corps are withdrawn, then the left of the corps may be thrown back so as to occupy the position held by the army prior to the capture of the Weldon road. All troops to the left of the Ninth Corps will be held in readiness to move at the shortest notice by such route as may be designated when the order is given.

General Ord will detach three divisions, two white and one colored, or so much of them as he can, and hold his present lines and march for the present left of the Army of the Potomac. In the absence of further orders, or until further orders are given, the white divisions will follow the left column of the Army of the Potomac, and the colored division the right column. During the movement Major-General Weitzel will be left in command of all the forces remaining behind from the Army of the James.

The movement of troops from the Army of the James will commence on the night of the 27th instant. General Ord will leave behind the minimum number of cavalry necessary for picket duty, in the absence of the main army. A cavalry expedition from General Ord's command will also be started from Suffolk, to leave there on Saturday, the 1st of April, under Colonel Sumner, for the purpose of cutting the railroad about Hicksford. This, if accomplished, will have to be a surprise, and therefore from 300 to 500 men will be sufficient. They should, however, be supported by all the infantry that can be spared from Norfolk and Portsmouth, as far out as to where the cavalry crosses the Blackwater. The crossing should probably be at Union. Should Colonel Sumner succeed in reaching the Weldon road he will be instructed to do all the damage possible to the triangle of roads between Hicksford, Weldon, and Gaston. The railroad bridge at Weldon being fitted up for the passage of carriages, it might be practicable to destroy any accumulation of supplies the enemy may have collected south of the Roanoke. All the troops will move with four days' rations in haversacks and eight days' in wagons. To avoid as much hauling as possible, and to give the Army of the James the same number of days' supply with the Army of the Potomac, General Ord will direct his commissary and quartermaster to have sufficient supplies delivered at the terminus of the road to fill up in passing. Sixty rounds of ammunition per man will be taken in wagons, and as much grain as the transportation on hand will carry, after taking the specified amount of other supplies. The densely wooded country in which the army has to operate making the use of much artillery impracticable, the amount taken with the army will be reduced to six or eight guns to each division, at the option of the army commanders.

All necessary preparations for carrying these directions into operation may be commenced at once. The reserves of the Ninth Corps should be massed as much as possible. While I would not now order an unconditional attack on the enemy's line by them, they should be ready, and should make the attack if the enemy weaken his line in their front, without waiting for orders. In case they carry the line, then the whole of the Ninth Corps could follow up, so as to join or co-operate with the balance of the army. To prepare for this the Ninth Corps will have rations issued to them, same as the balance of the army. General Weitzel will keep vigilant watch upon his front, and if found at all practicable to break through at any point, he will do so. A success north of the James should be followed up with great promptness. An attack will not be feasible unless it is found that the enemy has detached largely. In that case it may be regarded as evident that the enemy are relying upon their local reserves, principally, for the defense of Richmond. Preparations may be made for abandoning all the line north of the James, except inclosed works—only to be abandoned, however, after a break is made in the lines of the enemy.

By these instructions a large part of the armies operating against Richmond is left behind. The enemy, knowing this, may, as an only chance, strip their lines to the merest skeleton, in the hope of advantage not being taken of it, while they hurl everything against the moving column, and return. It cannot be impressed too strongly upon commanders of troops left in the trenches not to allow this to occur without taking advantage of it. The very fact of the enemy coming out to attack, if he does so, might be regarded as almost conclusive evidence of such a weakening of his lines. I would have it particularly enjoined upon corps commanders that, in case of an attack from the enemy, those not attacked are not to wait for orders from the commanding officer of the army to which they belong, but that they will move promptly, and notify the commander of their action. I would also enjoin the same action on the part of division commanders when other parts of their corps are engaged. In like manner, I would urge the importance of following up a repulse of the enemy.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

Early on the morning of the 25th the enemy assaulted our lines in front of the Ninth Corps (which held from the Appomattox River toward our left) and carried Fort Stedman and a part of the line to the right and left of it, established themselves, and turned the guns of the fort against us; but our troops on either flank held their ground until the reserves were brought up, when the enemy was driven back, with a heavy loss in killed and wounded and 1,900 prisoners. Our loss was 68 killed, 337 wounded, and 506 missing. General Meade at once ordered the other corps to advance and feel the enemy in their respective fronts. Pushing forward they captured and held the enemy's strongly intrenched picket-line in front of the Second and Sixth Corps and 834 prisoners. The enemy made desperate attempts to retake this line, but without success. Our loss in front of these was 52 killed, 864 wounded, and 207 missing. The enemy's loss in killed and wounded was far greater.

General Sherman having got his troops all quietly in camp about Goldsborough, and his preparations for furnishing supplies to them perfected, visited me at City Point on the 27th of March and stated that he would be ready to move, as he had previously written me, by the 10th of April, fully equipped and rationed for twenty days, if it should become necessary to bring his command to bear against Lee's army, in co-operation with our forces in front of Richmond and Petersburg. General Sherman proposed in this movement to threaten Richmond and then, by turning suddenly to the right, reach the Roanoke at Farmington or thereabouts, whence he could move on to the Richmond and Danville Railroad, striking it in the vicinity of Burkeville, or join the armies operating against Richmond, as might be deemed best. This plan he was directed to carry into execution, if he received no further directions in the meantime. I explained to him the movement I had ordered to commence on the 29th of March; that if it should not prove as entirely successful as I hoped I would cut the cavalry loose to destroy the Danville and South Side railroads, and thus deprive the enemy of further supplies, and also prevent the rapid concentration of Lee's and Johnston's armies.

I had spent days of anxiety lest each morning should bring the report that the enemy had retreated the night before. I was finally convinced that Sherman's crossing the Roanoke would be the signal for Lee to leave. With Johnston and him combined, a long, tedious, and expensive campaign, consuming most of the summer, might become necessary. By moving out I would put the army in better condition for pursuit, and would at least, by the destruction of the Danville road, retard the concentration of the two armies of Lee and Johnston and cause the enemy to abandon much material that he might otherwise save. I therefore determined not to delay the movement ordered. On the night of the 27th Major-General Ord, with two divisions of the Twenty-fourth Corps, Major-General Gibbon commanding, and one division of the Twenty-fifth Corps, Brigadier-General Birney commanding, and Mackenzie's cavalry, took up his line of march, in pursuance of the foregoing instructions, and reached the position assigned him near Hatcher's Run on the morning of the 29th. On the 28th the following instructions were given to General Sheridan:

CITY POINT, VA., March 28, 1865.

Maj. Gen. P. H. SHERIDAN:

GENERAL: The Fifth Army Corps will move by the Vaughan road at 3 a. m. to-morrow morning. The Second moves at about 9 a. m., having but about three miles to march to reach the point designated for it to take on the right of the Fifth Corps, after the latter reaching Dinwiddie Court-House. Move your cavalry at as early an hour as you can, and without being confined to any particular road or roads. You may go out by the nearest roads in the rear of the Fifth Corps, pass by its left and passing near to or through Dinwiddie, reach the right and rear of the enemy as soon as you can. It is not the intention to attack the enemy in his intrenched position, but to force him out if possible. Should he come out and attack us, or get himself where he can be attacked, move in with your entire force in your own way, and with the full reliance that the army will engage or follow, as circumstances will dictate. I shall be on the field and will probably be able to communicate with you. Should I not do so, and you find that the enemy keeps within his main intrenched line, you may cut loose and push for the Danville road. If you find it practicable, I would like you to cross the South Side road between Petersburg and Burkeville, and destroy it to some extent. I would not advise much detention, however, until you reach the Danville road, which I would like you to strike as near to the Appomattox as possible. Make your destruction on that road as complete as possible. You can then pass on to the South Side road, west of Burkeville, and destroy that in like manner.

After having accomplished the destruction of the two railroads, which are now the only avenues of supply to Lee's army, you may return to this army, selecting your road further south, or you may go on into North Carolina and join General Sherman. Should you select the latter course, get the information to me as early as possible, so that I may send orders to meet you at Goldsborough.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

On the morning of the 29th the movement commenced. At night the cavalry was at Dinwiddie Court-House and the left of our infantry line extended to the Quaker road, near its intersection with the Boydton plank road. The position of the troops, from left to right, was as follows: Sheridan, Warren, Humphreys, Ord, Wright, Parke. Everything looked favorable to the defeat of the enemy and the capture of Petersburg and Richmond, if the proper effort was made. I therefore addressed the following communication to General Sheridan, having previously informed him verbally not to cut loose for the raid contemplated in his orders until he received notice from me to do so:

GRAVELLY CREEK, March 29, 1865.

MAJ. GEN. P. H. SHERIDAN:

GENERAL: Our line is now unbroken from the Appomattox to Dinwiddie. We are all ready, however, to give up all from the Jerusalem plank road to Hatcher's Run, whenever the forces can be used advantageously. After getting into line south of Hatcher's we pushed forward to find the enemy's position. General Griffin was attacked near where the Quaker road intersects the Boydton road, but repulsed it easily, capturing about 100 men. Humphreys reached Dabney's Mills and was pushing on when last heard from. I now feel like ending the matter, if it is possible to do so, before going back. I do not want you, therefore, to cut loose and go after the enemy's roads at present. In the morning push around the enemy, if you can, and get on to his right rear. The movements of the enemy's cavalry may, of course, modify your action. We will act all together as one army here until it is seen what can be done with the enemy. The signal officer at Cobb's Hill reported, at 11.30 a. m., that a cavalry column had passed that point from Richmond toward Petersburg, taking forty minutes to pass.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

From the night of the 29th to the morning of the 31st the rain fell in such torrents as to make it impossible to move a wheeled vehicle, except as corduroy roads were laid in front of them. During the 30th Sheridan advanced from Dinwiddie Court-House toward Five Forks, where he found the enemy in force. General Warren advanced and extended his line across the Boydton plank road to near the White Oak road, with a view of getting across the latter; but finding the enemy strong in his front and extending beyond his left, was directed to hold on where he was and fortify. General Humphreys drove the enemy from his front into his main line on the Hatcher, near Burgess' Mills. Generals Ord, Wright, and Parke made examinations in their fronts to determine the feasibility of an assault on the enemy's lines. The two latter reported favorably. The enemy confronting us, as he did, at every point from Richmond to our extreme left, I conceived his lines must be weakly held, and could be penetrated if my estimate of his forces was correct. I determined, therefore, to extend our line no farther, but to re-enforce General Sheridan with a corps of infantry, and thus enable him to cut loose and turn the enemy's right flank, and with the other corps assault the enemy's lines. The result of the offensive effort of the enemy the week before, when he assaulted Fort Steadman, particularly favored this. The enemy's intrenched picket-line captured by us at that time threw the lines occupied by the belligerents so close together at some points that it was but a moment's run from one to the other. Preparations were at once made to relieve General Humphreys' corps to report to General Sheridan, but the condition of the roads prevented immediate movement. On the morning of the 31st General Warren reported favorably to getting possession of the White Oak road, and was directed to do so. To accomplish this, he moved with one division, instead of his whole corps, which was attacked by the enemy in superior force and driven back on the Second Division before it had time to form, and it, in turn, forced back upon the Third Division, when the enemy was checked. A division of the Second Corps was immediately sent to his support, the enemy driven back with heavy loss, and possession of the White Oak road gained. Sheridan advanced, and with a portion of his cavalry got possession of the Five Forks, but the enemy, after the affair with the Fifth Corps, re-enforced the rebel cavalry defending that point with infantry, and forced him back toward Dinwiddie Court-House. Here General Sheridan displayed great generalship. Instead of retreating with his whole command on the main army, to tell the story of superior forces encountered, he deployed his cavalry on foot, leaving only mounted men enough to take charge of the horses. This compelled the enemy to deploy over a vast extent of wooded and broken country, and made his progress slow. At this juncture he dispatched to me what had taken place, and that he was dropping back slowly on Dinwiddie Court-House. General Mackenzie's cavalry and one division of the Fifth Corps were immediately ordered to his assistance. Soon after, receiving a report from General Meade that Humphreys could hold our position on the Boydton road, and that the other two divisions of the Fifth Corps could go to Sheridan, they were so ordered at once. Thus the operations of the day necessitated the sending of Warren, because of his accessibility, instead of Humphreys, as was intended, and precipitated intended movements.

On the morning of the 1st of April General Sheridan, re-enforced by General Warren, drove the enemy back on Five Forks, where, late in the evening, he assaulted and carried his strongly fortified position, capturing all his artillery and between 5,000 and 6,000 prisoners. About the close of this battle Bvt. Maj. Gen. Charles Griffin relieved Major-General Warren in command of the Fifth Corps. The report of this reached me after night-fall. Some apprehensions filled my mind lest the enemy might desert his lines during the night, and by falling upon General Sheridan before assistance could reach him, drive him from his position and open the way for retreat. To guard against this, General Miles' division of Humphreys' corps was sent to re-enforce him, and a bombardment was commenced and kept up until 4 o'clock in the morning (April 2), when an assault was ordered on the enemy's lines. General Wright penetrated the lines with his whole corps, sweeping everything before him and to his left toward Hatcher's Run, capturing many guns and several thousand prisoners. He was closely followed by two divisions of General Ord's command, until he met the other division of General Ord's that had succeeded in forcing the enemy's lines near Hatcher's Run. Generals Wright and Ord immediately swung to the right, and closed all of the enemy on that side of them in Petersburg, while General Humphreys pushed forward with two divisions and joined General Wright on the left. General Parke succeeded in carrying the enemy's main line, capturing guns and prisoners, but was unable to carry his inner line. General Sheridan, being advised of the condition of affairs, returned General Miles to his proper command. On reaching the enemy's lines immediately surrounding Petersburg, a portion of General Gibbon's corps, by a most gallant charge, captured two strong inclosed works, the most salient and commanding south of Petersburg, thus materially shortening the line of investment necessary for taking in the city. The enemy south of Hatcher's Run retreated westward to Sutherland's Station, where they were overtaken by Miles' division. A severe engagement ensued and lasted until both his right and left flanks were threatened by the approach of General Sheridan, who was moving from Ford's Station toward Petersburg, and a division sent by General Meade from the front of Petersburg, when he broke in the utmost confusion, leaving in our hands his guns and many prisoners. This force retreated by the main road along the Appomattox River. During the night of the 2d the enemy evacuated Petersburg and Richmond, and retreated toward Danville. On the morning of the 3d pursuit was commenced. General Sheridan pushed for the Danville road, keeping near the Appomattox, followed by General Meade with the Second and Sixth Corps, while General Ord moved for Burkeville along the South Side road; the Ninth Corps stretched along that road behind him. On the 4th General Sheridan struck the Danville road near Jetersville, where he learned that Lee was at Amelia Court-House. He immediately intrenched himself and awaited the arrival of General Meade, who reached there the next day. General Ord reached Burkeville on the evening of the 5th. On the morning of the 5th I addressed Major-General Sherman the following communication:

WILSON'S STATION, April 5, 1865.

MAJ. GEN. W. T. SHERMAN:

GENERAL: All indications now are that Lee will attempt to reach Danville with the remnant of his force. Sheridan, who was up with him last night, reports all that is left, horse, foot, and dragoons, at 20,000, much demoralized. We hope to reduce this number one-half. I shall push on to Burkeville, and if a stand is made at Danville, will in a very few days go there. If you can possibly do so, push on from where you are, and let us see if we cannot finish the job with Lee's and Johnston's armies. Whether it will be better for you to strike for Greensborough or nearer to Danville, you will be better able to judge when you receive this. Rebel armies now are the only strategic points to strike at.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

On the morning of the 6th it was found that General Lee was moving west of Jetersville toward Danville. General Sheridan moved with his cavalry (the Fifth Corps having been returned to General Meade on his reaching Jetersville) to strike his flank, followed by the Sixth Corps, while the Second and Fifth Corps pressed hard after, forcing him to abandon several hundred wagons and several pieces of artillery. General Ord advanced from Burkeville toward Farmville, sending two regiments of infantry and a squadron of cavalry, under Bvt. Brig. Gen. Theodore Read, to reach and destroy the bridges. This advance met the head of Lee's column near Farmville, which it heroically attacked and detained until General Read was killed and his small force overpowered. This caused a delay in the enemy's movements, and enabled General Ord to get well up with the remainder of his force, on meeting which the enemy immediately intrenched himself. In the afternoon General Sheridan struck the enemy south of Sailor's Creek, captured 16 pieces of artillery and about 400 wagons, and detained him until the Sixth Corps got up, when a general attack of infantry and cavalry was made, which resulted in the capture of 6,000 or 7,000 prisoners, among whom were many general officers. The movements of the Second Corps and General Ord's command contributed greatly to the day's success. On the morning of the 7th the pursuit was renewed.

the cavalry, except one division, and the Fifth Corps moving by Prince Edward Court-House, the Sixth Corps, General Ord's command, and one division of cavalry, on Farmville, and the Second Corps by the High Bridge road. It was soon found that the enemy had crossed to the north side of the Appomattox; but so close was the pursuit that the Second Corps got possession of the common bridge at High Bridge before the enemy could destroy it, and immediately crossed over. The Sixth Corps and a division of cavalry crossed at Farmville to its support.

Feeling now that General Lee's chance of escape was utterly hopeless, I addressed him the following communication from Farmville:

APRIL 7, 1865.

General R. E. LEE:

GENERAL: The result of the last week must convince you of the hopelessness of further resistance on the part of the Army of Northern Virginia in this struggle. I feel that it is so, and regard it as my duty to shift from myself the responsibility of any further effusion of blood, by asking of you the surrender of that portion of the C. S. Army known as the Army of Northern Virginia.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

Early on the morning of the 8th, before leaving, I received at Farmville the following:

APRIL 7, 1865.

Lieut. Gen. U. S. GRANT:

GENERAL: I have received your note of this date. Though not entertaining the opinion you express on the hopelessness of further resistance on the part of the Army of Northern Virginia, I reciprocate your desire to avoid useless effusion of blood, and therefore, before considering your proposition, ask the terms you will offer on condition of its surrender.

R. E. LEE,
General.

To this I immediately replied:

APRIL 8, 1865.

General R. E. LEE:

GENERAL: Your note of last evening, in reply to mine of same date, asking the condition on which I will accept the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, is just received. In reply I would say that, peace being my great desire, there is but one condition I would insist upon, namely, that the men and officers surrendered shall be disqualified for taking up arms again against the Government of the United States until properly exchanged. I will meet you, or will designate officers to meet any officers you may name for the same purpose, at any point agreeable to you, for the purpose of arranging definitely the terms upon which the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia will be received.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

Early on the morning of the 8th the pursuit was resumed. General Meade followed north of the Appomattox, and General Sheridan, with all the cavalry, pushed straight for Appomattox Station, followed by General Ord's command and the Fifth Corps. During the day General Meade's advance had considerable fighting with the enemy's rear guard, but was unable to bring on a general engagement. Late in the evening General Sheridan struck the railroad at Appomattox Station, drove the enemy from there, and captured twenty-five pieces of artillery, a hospital train, and four trains of cars loaded with supplies for Lee's army. During this day I accompanied General Meade's column, and about midnight received the following communication from General Lee:

APRIL 8, 1865.

Lieut. Gen. U. S. GRANT:

GENERAL: I received at a late hour your note of to-day. In mine of yesterday I did not intend to propose the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, but to ask the terms of your proposition. To be frank, I do not think the emergency has arisen to call for the surrender of this army, but as the restoration of peace should be the sole object of all, I desired to know whether your proposals would lead to that end. I cannot, therefore, meet you with a view to surrender the Army of Northern Virginia, but as far as your proposal may affect the C. S. forces under my command, and tend to the restoration of peace, I should be pleased to meet you at 10 a. m., to-morrow, on the old stage road to Richmond, between the picket-lines of the two armies.

R. E. LEE,
General.

Early on the morning of the 9th I returned him an answer as follows, and immediately started to join the column south of the Appomattox:

APRIL 9, 1865.

General R. E. LEE:

GENERAL: Your note of yesterday is received. I have no authority to treat on the subject of peace; the meeting proposed for 10 a. m. to-day could lead to no good. I will state, however, general, that I am equally anxious for peace with yourself, and the whole North entertains the same feeling. The terms upon which peace can be had are well understood. By the South laying down their arms they will hasten that most desirable event, save thousands of human lives, and hundreds of millions of property not yet destroyed. Seriously hoping that all our difficulties may be settled without the loss of another life, I subscribe myself, &c.,

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

On the morning of the 9th General Ord's command and the Fifth Corps reached Appomattox Station just as the enemy was making a desperate effort to break through our cavalry. The infantry was at once thrown in. Soon after a white flag was received, requesting a suspension of hostilities pending negotiations for a surrender. Before reaching General Sheridan's headquarters I received the following from General Lee:

APRIL 9, 1865.

Lieut. Gen. U. S. GRANT:

GENERAL: I received your note of this morning on the picket-line, whither I had come to meet you and ascertain definitely what terms were embraced in your proposal of yesterday with reference to the surrender of this army. I now ask an interview in accordance with the offer contained in your letter of yesterday for that purpose.

R. E. LEE,
General.

The interview was held at Appomattox Court-House, the result of which is set forth in the following correspondence:

APPOMATTOX COURT-HOUSE, VA., April 9, 1865.

General R. E. LEE:

GENERAL: In accordance with the substance of my letter to you of the 8th instant, I propose to receive the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia on the following terms, to wit: Rolls of all the officers and men to be made in duplicate, one copy to be given to an officer to be designated by me, the other to be retained by such officer or officers as you may designate. The officers to give their individual paroles not to take up arms against the Government of the United States until properly exchanged; and each company or regimental commander sign a like parole for the men of their commands. The arms, artillery, and public property to be parked and stacked, and turned over to the officers appointed by me to receive them. This will not embrace the side-arms of the officers, nor their private horses or baggage. This done, each officer and man will be allowed to return to his home, not to be disturbed by U. S. authority so long as they observe their paroles and the laws in force where they may reside.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA,
April 9, 1865.

Lieut. Genl. U. S. GRANT:

GENERAL: I have received your letter of this date containing the terms of surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia as proposed by you. As they are substantially the same as those expressed in your letter of the 8th instant, they are accepted. I will proceed to designate the proper officers to carry the stipulations into effect.

R. E. LEE,
General.

The command of Major-General Gibbon, the Fifth Army Corps, under Griffin, and Mackenzie's cavalry were designated to remain at Appomattox Court-House until the paroling of the surrendered army was completed, and to take charge of the public property. The remainder of the army immediately returned to the vicinity of Burkeville. General Lee's great influence throughout the whole South caused his example to be followed, and to-day the result is that the armies lately under his leadership are at their homes, desiring peace and quiet, and their arms are in the hands of our ordnance officers.*

On the receipt of my letter of the 5th, General Sherman moved directly against Joe Johnston, who retreated rapidly on and through Raleigh, which place General Sherman occupied on the morning of the 13th. The day preceding news of the surrender of General Lee reached him at Smithfield. On the 14th a correspondence was opened between General Sherman and General Johnston, which resulted on the 18th in an agreement for a suspension of hostilities and a memorandum or basis for peace, subject to the approval of the President. This agreement was disapproved by the President on the 21st, which disapproval, together with your instructions, was communicated to General Sherman by me in person, on the morning of the 24th, at Raleigh, N. C., in obedience to your orders. Notice was at once given by him to General Johnston for the termination of the truce that had been entered into. On the 25th another meeting between them was agreed upon, to take place on the 26th, which terminated in the surrender and disbandment of Johnston's army upon substantially the same terms as were given to General Lee.†

The expedition under General Stoneman from East Tennessee got off on the 20th of March, moving by way of Boone, N. C., and struck the railroad at Wytheville, Chambersburg, and Big Lick. The force striking it at Big Lick pushed on to within a few miles of Lynchburg, destroying the important bridges, while with the main force he effectually destroyed it between New River and Big Lick, and then turned for Greensborough, on the North Carolina railroad, struck that road, and destroyed the bridges between Danville and Greensborough and between Greensborough and the Yadkin, together with the depots of supplies along it, and captured 400 prisoners. At Salisbury he attacked and defeated a force of the enemy under General Gardner, capturing 14 pieces of artillery and 1,364 prisoners, and destroyed large amounts of army stores. At this place he destroyed fifteen miles of railroad and the bridges toward Charlotte. Thence he moved to Slatersville.*

*For subordinate reports of the final operations against Lee's army, see p. 557.

†For subordinate reports of the final operations against Johnston's army, see Vol. XLVII, Part I.

General Canby, who had been directed in January to make preparations for a movement from Mobile Bay against Mobile and the interior of Alabama, commenced his movement on the 20th of March. The Sixteenth Corps, Maj. Gen. A. J. Smith commanding, moved from Fort Gaines by water to Fish River; the Thirteenth Corps, under Maj. Gen. Gordon Granger, moved from Fort Morgan and joined the Sixteenth Corps on Fish River, both moving thence on Spanish Fort and investing it on the 27th; while Major-General Steele's command moved from Pensacola, cut the railroad leading from Tensas to Montgomery, effected a junction with them, and partially invested Fort Blakely. After a severe bombardment of Spanish Fort, a part of its line was carried on the 8th of April. During the night the enemy evacuated the fort. Fort Blakely was carried by assault on the 9th, and many prisoners captured; our loss was considerable. These successes practically opened to us the Alabama River, and enabled us to approach Mobile from the north. On the night of the 11th the city was evacuated, and was taken possession of by our forces on the morning of the 12th.*

The expedition under command of Brevet Major-General Wilson, consisting of 12,500 mounted men, was delayed by rains until March 22, when it moved from Chickasaw, Ala. On the 1st of April General Wilson encountered the enemy in force under Forrest, near Ebenezer Church, drove him in confusion, captured 300 prisoners and 3 guns, and destroyed the Central bridge over the Cahaba River. On the 2d he attacked and captured the fortified city of Selma, defended by Forrest with 7,000 men and thirty-two guns, destroyed the arsenal, armory, naval foundry, machine-shops, vast quantities of stores, and captured 3,000 prisoners. On the 4th he captured and destroyed Tuscaloosa. On the 10th he crossed the Alabama River, and after sending information of his operations to General Canby, marched on Montgomery, which place he occupied on the 14th, the enemy having abandoned it. At this place many stores and five steam-boats fell into our hands. Thence a force marched direct on Columbus, and another on West Point, both of which places were assaulted and captured on the 16th. At the former place we got 1,500 prisoners and 52 field guns, destroyed 2 gun-boats, the navy-yard, foundries, arsenal, many factories, and much other public property. At the latter place we got 300 prisoners, 4 guns, and destroyed 19 locomotives and 300 cars. On the 20th he took possession of Macon, Ga., with 60 field guns, 1,200 militia, and 5 generals, surrendered by General Howell Cobb. General Wilson, hearing that Jeff. Davis was trying to make his escape, sent forces in pursuit, and succeeded in capturing him on the morning of May 11. On the 4th day of May General Dick Taylor surrendered to General Canby all the remaining rebel forces east of the Mississippi.† A force sufficient to insure an easy triumph over the enemy under Kirby Smith, west of the Mississippi, was immediately put in motion for Texas, and Major-General Sheridan designated for its immediate command; but on the 26th day of May, and before they reached their destination, General Kirby Smith surrendered his entire command to Major-General Canby. This surrender did not take place, however, until after the capture of the rebel President and Vice-President, and the bad faith was exhibited of first disbanding most of his army and permitting an indiscriminate plunder of public property.

* For subordinate reports of Stoneman's expedition and Canby's operations against Mobile, see Vol. XLIX.

† For subordinate reports of Wilson's expedition, see Vol. XLIX.

Owing to the report that many of those lately in arms against the Government had taken refuge upon the soil of Mexico, carrying with them arms rightfully belonging to the United States, which had been surrendered to us by agreement (among them some of the leaders who had surrendered in person), and the disturbed condition of affairs on the Rio Grande, the orders for troops to proceed to Texas were not changed.

There have been severe combats, raids, expeditions, and movements to defeat the designs and purposes of the enemy, most of them reflecting great credit on our arms, and which contributed greatly to our final triumphs, that I have not mentioned. Many of these will be found clearly set forth in the reports herewith submitted; some in the telegrams and brief dispatches announcing them; and others, I regret to say, have not as yet been officially reported. For information touching our Indian difficulties, I would respectfully refer to the reports of the commanders of departments in which they have occurred.

It has been my fortune to see the armies of both the West and the East fight battles, and from what I have seen I know there is no difference in their fighting qualities. All that it was possible for men to do in battle they have done. The Western armies commenced their battles in the Mississippi Valley, and received the final surrender of the remnant of the principal army opposed to them in North Carolina. The armies of the East commenced their battles on the river from which the Army of the Potomac derived its name, and received the final surrender of their old antagonist at Appomattox Court-House, Va. The splendid achievements of each have nationalized our victories, removed all sectional jealousies (of which we have unfortunately experienced too much), and the cause of erimination and reerimination that might have followed had either section failed in its duty. All have a proud record, and all sections can well congratulate themselves and each other for having done their full share in restoring the supremacy of law over every foot of territory belonging to the United States. Let them hope for perpetual peace and harmony with that enemy whose manhood, however mistaken the cause, drew forth such herculean deeds of valor.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT,

Lieutenant-General.

Hon. E. M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

No. 2.

Abstract from tri-monthly returns, showing the "present for duty equipped," or effective strength of the armies operating against Richmond, under Lieut. Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, for January 31, February 28, March 20, March 21, and April 10, 1865.

JANUARY 31.

| Command. | Infantry. | | Cavalry. | | Artillery. | | Total. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|--------|-----------|--------|------------|--------|-----------|---------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| ARMY OF THE POTOMAC. | | | | | | | | | |
| Provost Guard (Patrick) | 54 | 1,211 | 13 | 624 | | 1,453 | 67 | 3,288 | 3,355 |
| Battalion U. S. Engineers (Harwood) | | | | | 5 | 180 | 5 | 180 | 191 |
| Independent Company Oneida Cavalry (Batchelder) | | | 2 | 39 | | | 2 | 39 | 41 |
| Artillery (Hunt) | | | | | 33 | 1,005 | 33 | 1,005 | 1,038 |
| Second Army Corps (Humphreys) | 940 | 17,502 | | | 35 | 1,712 | 984 | 19,304 | 20,288 |
| Fifth Army Corps (Warren) | 656 | 14,075 | | | 26 | 1,375 | 682 | 16,350 | 17,032 |
| Sixth Army Corps (Getty) | 525 | 13,929 | | | 20 | 1,123 | 551 | 15,052 | 15,603 |
| Ninth Army Corps (Wheeler) | 620 | 14,901 | | | 19 | 768 | 639 | 15,720 | 16,368 |
| Second Cavalry Division (Gregg) | | | 227 | 6,079 | 5 | 186 | 232 | 6,265 | 6,497 |
| Total | 2,804 | 62,068 | 242 | 6,742 | 140 | 7,808 | 3,195 | 77,218 | 80,413 |
| ARMY OF THE JAMES. | | | | | | | | | |
| 4th Massachusetts Cavalry (Rand) | | | 10 | 118 | | | 10 | 118 | 128 |
| Cavalry Division (Kautz) | | | 110 | 2,030 | 4 | 143 | 114 | 3,473 | 3,187 |
| Twenty-fourth Army Corps (Gibson) | 582 | 15,945 | 5 | 121 | 38 | 1,798 | 625 | 17,864 | 18,489 |
| Twenty-fifth Army Corps (Weitzel) | 400 | 11,857 | 20 | 622 | 34 | 926 | 454 | 13,405 | 13,859 |
| Defenses of Bermuda Hundred (Farrar) | 117 | 3,450 | | | | | 117 | 3,450 | 3,573 |
| Separate Brigade (Carr) | 51 | 1,334 | | | 2 | 135 | 53 | 1,469 | 1,522 |
| Total | 1,150 | 32,592 | 145 | 3,701 | 78 | 3,002 | 1,373 | 30,385 | 30,758 |
| Grand aggregate | 3,954 | 94,660 | 387 | 10,443 | 227 | 10,810 | 4,568 | 117,603 | 121,171 |

FEBRUARY 28.

| | | | | | | | | | |
|---|-------|--------|-------|-------|-------|-------|-------|---------|---------|
| ARMY OF THE POTOMAC. | | | | | | | | | |
| Provost Guard (Patrick) | 71 | 1,836 | 17 | 625 | | | 88 | 2,401 | 2,549 |
| Independent Company Oneida Cavalry (Batchelder) | | | 1 | 33 | | | 1 | 33 | 44 |
| Artillery (Hunt) | | | | | 31 | 1,010 | 31 | 1,010 | 1,041 |
| Second Army Corps (Humphreys) | 870 | 17,346 | | | 36 | 1,716 | 1,012 | 19,065 | 20,077 |
| Fifth Army Corps (Warren) | 577 | 12,917 | | | 32 | 1,391 | 600 | 14,308 | 14,917 |
| Sixth Army Corps (Wright) | 663 | 15,368 | | | 38 | 1,993 | 701 | 17,271 | 17,973 |
| Ninth Army Corps (Potter) | 653 | 10,185 | | | 21 | 782 | 674 | 10,967 | 11,641 |
| Second Cavalry Division (Davies) | | | 212 | 6,018 | 4 | 218 | 216 | 6,236 | 6,452 |
| Total | 2,940 | 63,655 | 290 | 6,670 | 162 | 7,920 | 2,332 | 77,351 | 80,083 |
| ARMY OF THE JAMES. | | | | | | | | | |
| 4th Massachusetts Cavalry (Washburn) | | | 11 | 110 | | | 11 | 110 | 130 |
| Cavalry Division (Kautz) | | | 110 | 2,848 | 4 | 145 | 114 | 2,993 | 3,107 |
| Twenty-fourth Army Corps (Gibson) | 662 | 13,844 | | | 30 | 1,492 | 692 | 15,240 | 15,938 |
| Twenty-fifth Army Corps (Weitzel) | 400 | 11,800 | | | 21 | 782 | 421 | 12,612 | 13,063 |
| Defenses of Bermuda Hundred (Graham) | 121 | 3,599 | | | | | 121 | 3,599 | 3,720 |
| Separate Brigade (Carr) | 50 | 1,326 | | | 2 | 133 | 52 | 1,459 | 1,511 |
| Total | 1,233 | 30,420 | 121 | 2,967 | 57 | 2,462 | 1,411 | 30,058 | 31,400 |
| Grand aggregate | 4,173 | 94,284 | 351 | 9,637 | 219 | 9,482 | 4,743 | 117,409 | 121,483 |

Abstract from tri-monthly returns, &c.—Continued.

MARCH 20.

| Command. | Infantry. | | Cavalry. | | Artillery. | | Total. | |
|--|-----------|---------|-----------|-------|------------|--------|-----------|---------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. |
| ARMY OF THE POTOMAC. | | | | | | | | |
| Provost Guard (Maey)..... | 15 | 503 | 14 | 508 | | | 29 | 1,011 |
| Post of City Point (Collis)..... | 81 | 1,965 | 10 | 237 | | | 91 | 2,200 |
| Independent Company Oneida Cavalry (Batchelder)..... | | | 2 | 32 | | | 2 | 32 |
| Artillery (Hunt)..... | | | | | 32 | 1,184 | 32 | 1,184 |
| Second Army Corps (Humphreys)..... | 970 | 18,188 | | | 37 | 1,689 | 1,007 | 19,877 |
| Fifth Army Corps (Warren)..... | 634 | 15,350 | | | 30 | 1,418 | 664 | 16,768 |
| Sixth Army Corps (Wright)..... | 695 | 16,197 | | | 27 | 1,639 | 722 | 17,836 |
| Ninth Army Corps (Parke)..... | 695 | 16,450 | | | 21 | 781 | 716 | 17,231 |
| Second Cavalry Division (Davies)..... | | | 242 | 5,402 | 5 | 240 | 247 | 5,642 |
| Total..... | 3,090 | 68,071 | 268 | 6,237 | 152 | 6,351 | 3,510 | 80,659 |
| ARMY OF THE JAMES. | | | | | | | | |
| Headquarters guard..... | 4 | 180 | | | | | 4 | 180 |
| 4th Massachusetts Cavalry (Washburn)..... | | | 13 | 100 | | | 13 | 100 |
| Cavalry Division (Knautz)..... | | | 95 | 2,555 | 4 | 148 | 99 | 2,703 |
| Twenty-fourth Army Corps (Gibson)..... | 535 | 13,073 | 4 | 124 | 40 | 1,781 | 579 | 14,978 |
| Twenty-fifth Army Corps (Weltzel)..... | 442 | 12,941 | 4 | 56 | 38 | 1,103 | 484 | 14,100 |
| Defenses of Bermuda Hundred (Hartsuff)..... | 131 | 3,651 | | | 25 | 900 | 156 | 4,551 |
| Separate Brigade (Carr)..... | 50 | 1,555 | 7 | 220 | 7 | 394 | 74 | 2,169 |
| Total..... | 1,168 | 31,400 | 123 | 3,115 | 120 | 4,338 | 1,411 | 38,653 |
| Grand aggregate..... | 4,258 | 100,071 | 391 | 9,352 | 272 | 10,689 | 4,650 | 122,312 |

MARCH 31.

| | | | | | | | | |
|--|-------|--------|-----|-------|-----|-------|-------|---------|
| ARMY OF THE POTOMAC. | | | | | | | | |
| Provost Guard (Maey)..... | 21 | 982 | 15 | 580 | | | 36 | 1,562 |
| Post of City Point (Collis)..... | 88 | 1,855 | 10 | 237 | | | 98 | 2,092 |
| Independent Company Oneida Cavalry (Batchelder)..... | | | 2 | 16 | | | 2 | 16 |
| Artillery (Hunt)..... | | | | | 35 | 1,127 | 35 | 1,127 |
| Second Army Corps (Humphreys)..... | 960 | 18,507 | | | 33 | 1,607 | 993 | 20,114 |
| Fifth Army Corps (Warren)..... | 622 | 15,341 | | | 25 | 1,075 | 647 | 16,416 |
| Sixth Army Corps (Wright)..... | 705 | 16,576 | | | 33 | 1,070 | 738 | 17,646 |
| Ninth Army Corps (Parke)..... | 679 | 16,677 | | | 21 | 776 | 700 | 17,453 |
| Total..... | 3,085 | 69,038 | 27 | 639 | 147 | 5,715 | 3,259 | 75,412 |
| ARMY OF THE JAMES. | | | | | | | | |
| Headquarters guard..... | 2 | 100 | | | | | 2 | 100 |
| 4th Massachusetts Cavalry (Washburn)..... | | | 13 | 202 | | | 13 | 202 |
| 1st New York Mounted Rifles (Summer)..... | | | 24 | 442 | | | 24 | 442 |
| Cavalry Division (Mackenzie)..... | | | 70 | 2,190 | 4 | 148 | 74 | 2,338 |
| Twenty-fourth Army Corps (Gibson)..... | 545 | 13,673 | 4 | 124 | 46 | 1,781 | 595 | 15,578 |
| Twenty-fifth Army Corps (Weltzel)..... | 272 | 7,828 | 6 | 48 | 20 | 900 | 307 | 8,876 |
| Defenses of Bermuda Hundred (Hartsuff)..... | 140 | 3,085 | | | 3 | 134 | 152 | 3,219 |
| Separate Brigade (Carr)..... | 55 | 1,575 | 8 | 217 | 5 | 263 | 68 | 2,055 |
| Total..... | 1,023 | 26,801 | 125 | 3,109 | 87 | 3,280 | 1,235 | 33,195 |
| Grand aggregate..... | 4,108 | 96,700 | 152 | 4,638 | 234 | 9,004 | 4,494 | 108,607 |

Abstract from tri-monthly returns, &c.—Continued.

APRIL, 10.

| Command. | Infantry. | | Cavalry. | | Artillery. | | Total. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|--------|-----------|-------|------------|--------|-----------|---------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| ARMY OF THE POTOMAC. | | | | | | | | | |
| Post of City Point (Collis) | 18 | 1,870 | 15 | 320 | | | 33 | 2,190 | 2,229 |
| Independent Company Oneida Cavalry (Batchelder) | | | 12 | 20 | | | 12 | 20 | 28 |
| Artillery (Hunt) | | | | | 56 | 2,164 | 56 | 2,164 | 2,220 |
| Second Army Corps (Humphreys) | 976 | 16,452 | | | 19 | 804 | 995 | 17,256 | 18,351 |
| Fifth Army Corps (Griffin) | 604 | 13,004 | | | 24 | 1,066 | 628 | 14,060 | 14,789 |
| Sixth Army Corps (Wright) | 647 | 15,328 | | | 27 | 732 | 674 | 16,060 | 16,734 |
| Ninth Army Corps (Parke) | 684 | 15,118 | | 1 | 24 | 812 | 708 | 15,931 | 16,639 |
| Total | 2,920 | 61,808 | 17 | 347 | 150 | 5,678 | 3,090 | 67,893 | 70,989 |
| ARMY OF THE JAMES. | | | | | | | | | |
| Headquarters guard | 2 | 100 | | | | | 2 | 100 | 102 |
| 4th Massachusetts Cavalry (Washburn) | | | 13 | 202 | | | 13 | 202 | 275 |
| 1st New York Mounted Rifles (Sumner) | | | 24 | 442 | | | 24 | 442 | 460 |
| Cavalry Division (Mackenzie) | | | 70 | 2,100 | 4 | 148 | 74 | 2,248 | 2,328 |
| Twenty-fourth Army Corps (Gibbon) | 515 | 13,073 | 4 | 124 | 40 | 1,784 | 559 | 15,581 | 16,176 |
| Twenty-fifth Army Corps (Weitzel) | 229 | 6,528 | | | 30 | 828 | 259 | 7,456 | 7,715 |
| U. S. Forces, Petersburg (Hurlbut) | 166 | 4,078 | 34 | 800 | 34 | 1,281 | 234 | 7,059 | 7,293 |
| Separate Brigade (Carr) | 68 | 1,805 | 8 | 200 | 7 | 274 | 73 | 2,070 | 2,152 |
| Total | 1,000 | 26,884 | 153 | 3,934 | 121 | 4,415 | 1,274 | 35,233 | 36,507 |
| Grand aggregate | 3,920 | 88,752 | 170 | 4,281 | 271 | 10,093 | 4,370 | 103,126 | 107,406 |

No. 3.

Return of casualties in the Union forces at Hatcher's Run (otherwise known as Dabney's Mill, Armstrong's Mill, Rowanty Creek, and Vaughan Road) and Fort Steadman.

* [Compiled from nominal lists of casualties, returns, &c.]

HATCHER'S RUN, FEBRUARY 5-7, 1865.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|------------------------------------|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| SECOND ARMY CORPS. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. ANDREW A. HUMPHREYS. | | | | | | | |
| SECOND DIVISION. * | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. THOMAS A. SMYTH. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. WILLIAM A. OLSTED. | | | | | | | |
| 10th Maine..... | | | | | | | |
| 19th Massachusetts..... | 1 | 1 | | 5 | | | 7 |
| 20th Massachusetts..... | | 1 | | 5 | | 5 | 11 |
| 7th Michigan..... | | | | | | | |
| 1st Minnesota (two companies)..... | | | | | | | |
| 50th New York..... | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| 162d New York..... | | | | | | | |
| 184th Pennsylvania..... | | | | 2 | | | 2 |
| 39th Wisconsin..... | | | | | | | |
| Total First Brigade..... | 1 | 2 | | 13 | | 5 | 21 |

* The First Division not engaged.

Return of casualties in the Union forces, &c.—Continued.

HATCHER'S RUN, FEBRUARY 5-7, 1865—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. MATTHEW MURPHY.* | | | | | | | |
| Col. JAMES P. McIVOR. | | | | | | | |
| 8th New York Heavy Artillery | | 2 | | 3 | | 3 | 8 |
| 155th New York | | | | | | | |
| 164th New York | | | 1 | | | | 1 |
| 170th New York | | | | | | | |
| 182d New York (60th New York National Guard Artillery). | | 1 | 2 | | | 1 | 4 |
| Total Second Brigade | | 3 | 3 | 3 | | 4 | 13 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Lieut. Col. FRANCIS E. PIERCE. | | | | | | | |
| 14th Connecticut | 1 | | 1 | 4 | | | 6 |
| 1st Delaware | | | | | | | |
| 12th New Jersey | | 1 | | 6 | | | 7 |
| 10th New York (battalion) | | | 1 | 1 | | | 2 |
| 108th New York | | | | | | | |
| 4th Ohio (four companies) | | | | | | | |
| 60th Pennsylvania | 1 | 1 | | 3 | | | 5 |
| 106th Pennsylvania (three companies) | | | | | | | |
| 7th West Virginia (four companies) | | | | | | | |
| Total Third Brigade | 2 | 2 | 2 | 14 | | | 20 |
| Unattached. | | | | | | | |
| 2d Company Minnesota Sharpshooters | | | | | | | |
| 3d Pennsylvania Cavalry (battalion) | | 2 | | 3 | | | 5 |
| Total Second Division | 3 | 9 | 5 | 33 | | 9 | 59 |
| THIRD DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. GERSHOM MOTT. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. REGIS DE TROBRIAND. | | | | | | | |
| 20th Indiana | | | | | | | |
| 1st Maine Heavy Artillery | | | | | | | |
| 17th Maine | | | | 3 | | | 3 |
| 40th New York | | | | 2 | | | 2 |
| 73d New York | | | | | | | |
| 86th New York | | | | 3 | | | 3 |
| 124th New York | | | | | | | |
| 60th Pennsylvania | | | | | | | |
| 110th Pennsylvania | | | | 2 | | | 2 |
| 2d U. S. Sharpshooters | | | | 3 | | | 3 |
| Total First Brigade | | | | 13 | | | 13 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. GEORGE W. WEST. | | | | | | | |
| 1st Massachusetts Heavy Artillery | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| 5th Michigan | | | | 3 | | | 3 |
| 93d New York | | | | | | | |
| 57th Pennsylvania | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| 105th Pennsylvania | | | | | | | |
| 141st Pennsylvania | | 1 | 1 | 2 | | | 4 |
| Total Second Brigade | | 1 | 1 | 7 | | | 9 |

* Mortally wounded February 5.

Return of casualties in the Union forces, &c.—Continued.

HATCHER'S RUN, FEBRUARY 5-7, 1865—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. ROBERT MCALLISTER. | | | | | | | |
| 11th Massachusetts | | | | | | | 1 |
| 7th New Jersey | | | | 1 | | | 48 |
| 8th New Jersey | | 11 | 3 | 35 | | | 3 |
| 11th New Jersey | | 1 | | 1 | | 1 | 2 |
| 123th New York | | | | 2 | | | |
| Total Third Brigade | | 12 | 2 | 39 | | 1 | 54 |
| Total Third Division | | 13 | 3 | 50 | | 1 | 70 |
| ARTILLERY. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Lieut. Col. JOHN G. HAZARD. | | | | | | | |
| Massachusetts Light, 10th Battery* | | | | | | | |
| 4th United States, Battery K | | | | | | | |
| Total Second Army Corps | 3 | 23 | 8 | 92 | | 10 | 135 |
| FIFTH ARMY CORPS. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. GOUVERNEUR K. WARREN. | | | | | | | |
| ESCORT. | | | | | | | |
| 4th Pennsylvania Cavalry, Company C | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| PROVOST GUARD. | | | | | | | |
| 104th New York | | | | | | 3 | 3 |
| FIRST DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. CHARLES GRIFFIN. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. HORATIO G. SICKEL.† | | | | | | | |
| 185th New York | | 3 | 1 | 9 | 1 | 3 | 16 |
| 198th Pennsylvania | 1 | 2 | 2 | 15 | | 1 | 21 |
| Total First Brigade | 1 | 4 | 3 | 24 | 1 | 4 | 37 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. ALLEN L. BURR. | | | | | | | |
| 187th New York (battalion) | | | 1 | 6 | | 1 | 8 |
| 188th New York (battalion) | | 7 | | 21 | | 3 | 31 |
| 189th New York | | 2 | | 13 | | | 15 |
| Total Second Brigade | | 9 | 1 | 40 | | 4 | 54 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. ALFRED L. PEARSON. | | | | | | | |
| 20th Maine | | 1 | 1 | 15 | | 7 | 24 |
| 32d Massachusetts | | 2 | 2 | 32 | | 10 | 46 |
| 1st Michigan | | 3 | 1 | 6 | | 4 | 14 |
| 16th Michigan | | 2 | 2 | 20 | | 0 | 30 |
| 83d Pennsylvania (six companies) | 1 | 1 | | 9 | | 2 | 13 |
| 91st Pennsylvania | 1 | 1 | 2 | 3 | | | 7 |
| 118th Pennsylvania | 1 | | 2 | 4 | | | 7 |
| 155th Pennsylvania | | 4 | | 30 | | 3 | 37 |
| Total Third Brigade | 3 | 14 | 10 | 119 | | 23 | 178 |
| Total First Division | 4 | 27 | 14 | 183 | 1 | 40 | 269 |

One section of Battery B, 1st Rhode Island Artillery, temporarily attached.

[†] Wounded February 6.

Return of casualties in the Union forces, &c.—Continued.

HATCHER'S RUN, FEBRUARY 5-7, 1865—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| SECOND DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. ROMEYN B. AYRES. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. FREDERICK WINTHROP. | | | | | | | |
| 5th New York (Veteran) | 1 | 1 | 1 | 11 | | | 14 |
| 15th New York Heavy Artillery | | 4 | 1 | 25 | | | 30 |
| 140th New York | | 3 | | 20 | | | 23 |
| 146th New York | | | | | | | |
| Total First Brigade | 1 | 8 | 2 | 56 | | | 67 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. RICHARD N. BOWERMAN. | | | | | | | |
| 1st Maryland | 2 | 3 | 2 | 45 | | 5 | 57 |
| 4th Maryland | | 1 | | 17 | | 2 | 20 |
| 7th Maryland | | 3 | | 13 | | 4 | 20 |
| 8th Maryland | 1 | 1 | 1 | 11 | | | 14 |
| Total Second Brigade | 3 | 8 | 3 | 86 | | 11 | 111 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. JAMES GWYN. | | | | | | | |
| 3d Delaware | | 1 | 3 | 8 | | 5 | 17 |
| 4th Delaware | | 1 | 2 | 0 | | | 9 |
| 157th Pennsylvania (four companies) | | | | 2 | | 1 | 3 |
| 190th Pennsylvania | | | | 5 | | | 5 |
| 191st Pennsylvania | | | | 4 | | | 4 |
| 210th Pennsylvania | | 2 | 3 | 21 | | 7 | 33 |
| Total Third Brigade | | 4 | 8 | 46 | | 13 | 71 |
| Total Second Division | 4 | 20 | 13 | 188 | | 24 | 240 |
| THIRD DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. SAMUEL W. CRAWFORD. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. EDWARD S. BRAGG. | | | | | | | |
| 24th Michigan | | 4 | 2 | 15 | | 1 | 22 |
| 143d Pennsylvania | 1 | 0 | 2 | 27 | | | 30 |
| 149th Pennsylvania | 1 | | 1 | 13 | | 3 | 18 |
| 150th Pennsylvania | | 2 | 1 | 5 | | | 8 |
| 6th Wisconsin | | 11 | 4 | 74 | | 14 | 103 |
| 7th Wisconsin | | 3 | 3 | 17 | | 3 | 26 |
| Total First Brigade | 2 | 26 | 13 | 151 | | 21 | 213 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. HENRY BAXTER. | | | | | | | |
| Staff | | | 1 | | | | 1 |
| 10th Maine | | 3 | 1 | 58 | | 11 | 73 |
| 39th Massachusetts | | 3 | 1 | 26 | | 3 | 33 |
| 67th New York | | 3 | 3 | 20 | | 2 | 34 |
| 11th Pennsylvania | | 0 | 2 | 08 | | 0 | 88 |
| 88th Pennsylvania | | 5 | 1 | 23 | | 7 | 36 |
| Total Second Brigade | | 23 | 9 | 201 | | 32 | 266 |

Return of casualties in the Union forces, &c.—Continued.

HATCHER'S RUN, FEBRUARY 5-7, 1865.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|--|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. HENRY A. MORROW. | | | | | | | |
| 94th New York | | 4 | | 36 | | | 40 |
| 95th New York | | 1 | | 32 | | | 37 |
| 147th New York | 1 | 3 | | 28 | 1 | 15 | 48 |
| 56th Pennsylvania | | 6 | | 6 | | | 8 |
| 107th Pennsylvania* | | 2 | | 52 | | 21 | 81 |
| 121st Pennsylvania | | 5 | 1 | 11 | | | 17 |
| 142d Pennsylvania | | 3 | | 25 | | 1 | 29 |
| Total Third Brigade | 1 | 21 | 7 | 189 | 1 | 37 | 260 |
| Total Third Division | 3 | 73 | 29 | 542 | 1 | 90 | 738 |
| ARTILLERY. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. ROBERT H. FITZBUGH. | | | | | | | |
| Massachusetts Light, 9th Battery | | | | | | | |
| 1st New York Light, Battery D | | | | | | | |
| 1st New York Light, Battery L | | | | | | | |
| Total Fifth Army Corps | 11 | 120 | 56 | 914 | 2 | 157 | 1,260 |
| SIXTH ARMY CORPS. | | | | | | | |
| FIRST DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. FRANK WHEATON. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Lieut. Col. EDWARD L. CAMPBELL. | | | | | | | |
| 1st New Jersey (three companies) | | | | | | | |
| 2d New Jersey (one company) | | | | | | | |
| 3d New Jersey (one company) | | | | | | | |
| 4th New Jersey | | | | | | | |
| 10th New Jersey | | | | | | | |
| 15th New Jersey | | | | | | | |
| 49th New Jersey | | | | | | | |
| Total First Brigade | | | | | | | |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. JAMES HUBBARD. | | | | | | | |
| 2d Connecticut Heavy Artillery | | | | 6 | | 3 | 9 |
| 65th New York | | | | 2 | | | 2 |
| 121st New York | | | | 4 | | | 4 |
| 95th Pennsylvania | | | | 9 | | 2 | 5 |
| Total Second Brigade | | | | 15 | | 5 | 20 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. JOSEPH E. HAMBLIN. | | | | | | | |
| 37th Massachusetts | | | | 3 | | | 3 |
| 49th Pennsylvania | | | | | | | |
| 82d Pennsylvania | | | | | | | |
| 110th Pennsylvania | | | | | | | |
| 2d Rhode Island (six companies) | | | | | | | |
| 6th Wisconsin | | 1 | | 5 | | | 4 |
| Total Third Brigade | | 1 | | 6 | | | 7 |
| Total First Division | | 1 | | 21 | | 6 | 27 |

* Temporarily detached from Second Brigade.

Return of casualties in the Union forces, &c.—Continued.

HATCHER'S RUN, FEBRUARY 5-7, 1865—Continued.

| Command | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| NINTH ARMY CORPS. | | | | | | | |
| THIRD DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. JOHN F. HARTSHOFF. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. CHARLES W. DIVEN. | | | | | | | |
| 290th Pennsylvania..... | | | | | | | |
| 298th Pennsylvania..... | | | | | | | |
| 299th Pennsylvania..... | | | | | | | |
| Total First Brigade..... | | | | | | | |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. JOSEPH A. MATTHEWS. | | | | | | | |
| 205th Pennsylvania..... | | | | | | | |
| 207th Pennsylvania..... | | | | | | | |
| 211th Pennsylvania..... | | | | | | | |
| Total Second Brigade..... | | | | | | | |
| Total Third Division..... | | | | | | | |
| CAVALRY. | | | | | | | |
| SECOND DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. D. McM. GREGG. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. HENRY E. DAVIES, Jr.* | | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | | | 1 | | | | 1 |
| 1st Massachusetts..... | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| 1st New Jersey..... | | 1 | 5 | 7 | | | 13 |
| 10th New York..... | | | 1 | | | | 1 |
| 24th New York..... | | 1 | | 8 | | | 9 |
| 1st Pennsylvania (five companies)..... | | 1 | | 3 | | | 4 |
| 2d U. S. Artillery, Battery A..... | | | | | | | |
| Total First Brigade..... | | 3 | 7 | 10 | | | 20 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. IRVIN GREGG.* | | | | | | | |
| Col. MICHAEL KERWIN. | | | | | | | |
| 2d Pennsylvania..... | | 1 | | 3 | | | 4 |
| 4th Pennsylvania..... | 1 | 3 | | 22 | | 2 | 28 |
| 8th Pennsylvania..... | | | | | | 2 | 2 |
| 13th Pennsylvania..... | 1 | 3 | | 10 | | | 14 |
| 16th Pennsylvania..... | | 2 | 4 | 14 | | 2 | 22 |
| 1st U. S. Artillery, Batteries H and I..... | | | | | | | |
| Total Second Brigade..... | 2 | 9 | 4 | 49 | | 4 | 70 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. OLIVER B. KNOWLES. | | | | | | | |
| 1st Maine..... | | | | 2 | | | 2 |
| 2d New York Mounted Rifles..... | | | | | | | |
| 6th Ohio..... | | | | 7 | | 4 | 11 |
| 13th Ohio..... | | | | | | 3 | 3 |
| 21st Pennsylvania..... | | | | 2 | | | 2 |
| Total Third Brigade..... | | | | 11 | | 7 | 18 |
| Total Cavalry..... | 2 | 12 | 11 | 70 | | 13 | 117 |

* Wounded February 6.

Return of casualties in the Union forces, &c.—Continued.

RECAPITULATION.

| Regiments. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|-------|-----------|-------|----------------------|-------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| Second Army Corps | 3 | 22 | 8 | 92 | | 10 | 135 |
| Fifth Army Corps | 11 | 120 | 50 | 914 | 2 | 157 | 1,260 |
| Sixth Army Corps (First Division) | | 1 | | 21 | | 5 | 27 |
| Ninth Army Corps (Third Division) | | | | | | | |
| Cavalry | 2 | 12 | 11 | 79 | | 13 | 117 |
| Grand total | 10 | 155 | 75 | 1,106 | 2 | 185 | 1,539 |

OFFICERS KILLED OR MORTALLY WOUNDED.

CONNECTICUT.

Lieut. Franklin Bartlett, 14th Infantry.

DELAWARE.

Maj. James E. Baily, 3d Infantry.

MARYLAND.

Col. John W. Wilson, 1st Infantry.
Lieut. Lewis Armucost, 1st Infantry.Lieut. Robert A. Wilson, 1st Infantry.
Lieut. Jacob L. Troxell, 8th Infantry.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Lieut. William H. Tibbitts, 19th Infantry.

NEW YORK.

Lieut. Col. Frederick L. Trombin, 10th Cavalry.
Lieut. Adolph Riemann, 15th Heavy Artillery.
Capt. Charles S. Montgomery, 5th Veteran Infantry.Lieut. Lansing Bristol, 147th Infantry.
Lieut. Hugh G. McTavish, 161th Infantry.
Col. Mathew Murphy, 182d (69th National Guard Artillery) Infantry.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Capt. John Harper, 4th Cavalry.
Capt. Nathaniel S. Sneyd, 13th Cavalry.
Lieut. James McGinley, 69th Infantry.
Capt. Benjamin A. Smith, 83d Infantry.
Lieut. John Edgar, jr., 91st Infantry.Capt. John Scott, 118th Infantry.
Capt. Asher Gaylord, 143d Infantry.
Lieut. Albert B. Cole, 149th Infantry.
Lieut. Charles W. Frazier, 198th Infantry.

WISCONSIN.

Capt. John R. Lammey, 6th Infantry.

Lieut. Israel W. Hendricks, 6th Infantry.

Return of casualties in the Union forces, &c.—Continued.

FORT STEEDMAN, MARCH 25, 1865.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured. |
|--|-----------|------|-----------|------|-----------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| NINTH ARMY CORPS. | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. JOHN G. PARKE. | | | | | |
| FIRST DIVISION. | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. ORLANDO B. WILLCOX. | | | | | |
| First Brigade.* | | | | | |
| Col. SAMUEL HARRIMAN. | | | | | |
| 8th Michigan..... | | | | | |
| 27th Michigan..... | | | | | |
| 109th New York..... | | | | | |
| 51st Pennsylvania..... | | | | | |
| 37th Wisconsin..... | | | | | |
| 38th Wisconsin..... | | | | | |
| Total First Brigade..... | | | | | |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | |
| Bvt. Col. RALPH ELY. | | | | | |
| 1st Michigan Sharpshooters..... | | | | | |
| 2d Michigan..... | | 1 | 2 | 6 | |
| 20th Michigan..... | | | | 9 | |
| 46th New York..... | | 2 | | 3 | |
| 60th Ohio..... | | 1 | 1 | 6 | |
| 50th Pennsylvania..... | | | | 2 | |
| Total Second Brigade..... | | 4 | 3 | 25 | |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. NAPOLEON B. McLAUGHLIN.† | | | | | |
| Bvt. Col. GILBERT P. ROBINSON. | | | | | |
| 3d Maryland (battalion)..... | | 1 | 1 | 5 | |
| 29th Massachusetts..... | | 8 | 2 | 4 | |
| 57th Massachusetts..... | 1 | 5 | 3 | 28 | |
| 59th Massachusetts..... | | | 3 | 4 | |
| 14th New York Heavy Artillery..... | | 12 | 2 | 48 | |
| 100th Pennsylvania..... | | 0 | 4 | 57 | |
| Total Third Brigade..... | 1 | 35 | 15 | 141 | 17 |
| Acting Engineers. | | | | | |
| 17th Michigan..... | | 1 | | | |
| Total First Division..... | 1 | 40 | 18 | 166 | 17 |
| THIRD DIVISION. | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. JOHN F. HARTENFT. | | | | | |
| Staff..... | | | 2 | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | |
| Col. CHARLES W. DIVEN.* | | | | | |
| Lieut. Col. WILLIAM H. H. McCALL. | | | | | |
| 200th Pennsylvania..... | | 0 | 0 | 107 | |
| 208th Pennsylvania..... | | 3 | 3 | 36 | |
| 209th Pennsylvania..... | 1 | 4 | 2 | 48 | |
| Total First Brigade..... | 1 | 10 | 11 | 191 | |

* Not actively engaged, and had no losses.

† Captured.

‡ Wounded.

Return of casualties in the Union forces, &c.—Continued.

FORT STEDMAN, MARCH 25, 1865—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. JOSEPH A. MATHEWS. | | | | | | | |
| 205th Pennsylvania | | | 1 | 10 | | | 11 |
| 307th Pennsylvania | | 1 | 1 | 15 | | | 17 |
| 211th Pennsylvania | | 1 | | 10 | | | 11 |
| Total Second Brigade | | 2 | 2 | 35 | | | 39 |
| Total Third Division | 1 | 18 | 15 | 226 | | | 260 |
| ARTILLERY. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. JOHN C. TIDBALL. | | | | | | | |
| 1st Connecticut Heavy, Company E | | 1 | | | | | 1 |
| 1st Connecticut Heavy, Company K | 1 | 4 | 1 | | | 35 | 43 |
| 1st Connecticut Heavy, Company L | | 1 | | 5 | | 13 | 19 |
| Maine Light, 7th Battery | | | | | | | |
| Massachusetts Light, 9th Battery* | | | | | | | |
| Massachusetts Light, 11th Battery | | | | 2 | | | 2 |
| Massachusetts Light, 14th Battery* | 1 | | | | | 11 | 14 |
| New Jersey Light, 3d Battery† | | 1 | 2 | 5 | | | 8 |
| 1st New York Light, Battery Gt. | | | | | | | |
| 8th New York Heavy, Company Gt. | | 1 | 1 | 1 | | | 3 |
| New York Light, 10th Battery | | 1 | | | 2 | 12 | 15 |
| New York Light, 27th Battery | | | | | | | |
| New York Light, 34th Battery | | 1 | 1 | 3 | | | 5 |
| 1st Pennsylvania Light, Battery B | | | | | | | |
| Pennsylvania Light, Battery D | | | | | | | |
| 5th United States, Batteries C and I* | | | | 2 | | | 2 |
| Total Artillery | 2 | 10 | 5 | 20 | 2 | 71 | 110 |
| Total Ninth Army Corps | 4 | 68 | 38 | 412 | 19 | 503 | 1,044 |

OFFICERS KILLED OR MORTALLY WOUNDED.

CONNECTICUT.

Lieut. John Odell, 1st Heavy Artillery.

MARYLAND.

Lieut. John Napo, 3d Infantry.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Lieut. Ephraim B. Nye, 14th Battery. | Capt. James Doherty, 57th Infantry.
 Lieut. Nathaniel Burgess, 29th Infantry. | Lieut. Albert M. Mardock, 57th Infantry.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Lieut. Col. Joseph H. Pentecost, 100th In- | Lieut. Franklin W. Keller, 208th Infantry.
 fantry. | Lieut. Hugh Jones, 209th Infantry.
 Capt. Prosper Dallon, 208th Infantry.

* Detached from Artillery Reserve.

† Detached from Second Army Corps.

No. 4.

*Itineraries of the Army of the Potomac, Sheridan's Cavalry Command, and the Army of the James.

ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

Engineer Brigade.

January 7.—Lieutenant O'Keefe, with 150 men of the Fifteenth [New York] Engineers, embarked on steamer George Chase, with engineering and siege material, for Fort Fisher.

January 22.—Company I, Fiftieth [New York] Engineers, Captain Folwell, left for Major-General Sheridan's army.

January 29.—Companies B and D, Fifteenth Engineers, started, with 620 feet of bridging, animals, &c., on transports for the South; destination unknown.

Troops engaged in drill and work on the fortifications around City Point.

February 5.—A train of thirty boats arrived from Washington. The whole command, 1,900 strong—composed of the Fifteenth New York Volunteer Engineers, Sixty-first Massachusetts Volunteers (leaving the pickets on Bailey's Creek), Eighteenth New Hampshire, First Maine Sharpshooters (two companies), and Michigan Sharpshooters—started, via railroad, for the front, at about 5 p. m., with orders to report to Major-General Parke, commanding Ninth Corps. Bivouacked near the Avery house.

February 6.—Received orders from General Parke to move the brigade up to the Aiken house. The troops of the command occupied the line between Batteries No. 24 and 26, the right resting on Battery 24; headquarters of the brigade in rear of Fort Howard. A detail of 287 men from Engineer Brigade relieved the First Division, Sixth Corps, from picket duty.

February 7.—Troops under arms at 5 a. m. until 8 a. m.

February 8.—The Fifteenth Engineers and Michigan Sharpshooters occupied that portion of the line between Battery 24 and the marsh; the Eighteenth New Hampshire and Sixty-first Massachusetts, Battery 25 (Fort Howard). Three hundred and eight men on picket duty.

February 9.—The command occupied the line from Battery 24 to Fort Howard, doing the picket duty.

February 10.—Troops in same position as yesterday.

February 11.—The Engineer Brigade relieved this morning by General Griffin's troops of the Ninth Corps, and ordered to return to City Point and occupy their old camp at that place. Column started at about 10 a. m., reaching City Point during the afternoon.

February 12 to 15.—Troops occupied in drill, camp duty, and work on fortifications.

February 15.—General Benham returned from duty in New York.

February 16.—A raft of thirty-two boats received from Captain Lubey at Deep Bottom, being part of the bridge at Aiken's Landing—replaced by a pile bridge.

February 16 to 28.—Troops occupied in drill, camp duty, and work on fortifications of City Point.

March 12.—Hall's Independent Battalion Sharpshooters, Michigan hunters, ordered to report to headquarters Ninth Corps, with a view being consolidated with the First Michigan Sharpshooters; started on road same day.

* returns of the commands indicated for January, February, March, April, June, 1865.

March 17.—The Eighteenth New Hampshire Volunteers ordered to report to commanding officer Ninth Corps, to be consolidated with another regiment from the same State. The First Maine Sharpshooters ordered to the Fifth Corps, to be consolidated with another regiment from same State. The Sixty-first Massachusetts Volunteers ordered to report to General Collis, commanding post. General Benham to hold the outer defenses City Point with the Fifteenth Engineers.

March 18.—The Sixty-first Massachusetts Volunteers relieved from picket duty on Bailey's Creek by the Fifteenth Engineers, and moved camp to City Point.

March 21.—Captain Lubey, with Company C, Fifteenth Engineers, arrived at City Point from Deep Bottom, having been relieved from duty with pontoon bridges on the James River.

March 25.—Captain Dibbell, Fifteenth Engineers, with his company, ordered to the fortifications from this camp. The troops ordered out to meet an anticipated attack from the enemy. Captain Farr, assistant quartermaster, reported for duty. Capt. T. Lubey, Fifteenth Engineers, with his company and a raft of twenty-four boats, started, via river, at 11 p. m., for the purpose of laying a bridge across the James River at Deep Bottom, below Four-Mile Creek.

March 26.—Captain Lubey completed his bridge across the James at 6.30 a. m. At 6 p. m. General Sheridan's command had crossed to the south side of the river.

March 27.—Captain Lubey, with his company and bridge, returned to City Point at 3 p. m.

March 29.—At 10 p. m. the whole command, including the four regiments of General Collis' brigade, ordered to the defenses of City Point to meet an expected emergency.

March 30.—Troops returned to camp at daylight.

April 1.—Engineer Brigade in camp at City Point, Va.

April 2.—Moved the command, composed of the Fifteenth New York Engineers, Sixty-first Massachusetts, Sixty-eighth and One hundred and fourteenth Pennsylvania, and Twentieth [Eightieth] New York Volunteers, and dismounted cavalry, and reported to General Parke, commanding Ninth Corps, the brigade of infantry being ordered up under Colonel Tiffin, Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania, as General Collis could not be found. Reached Fort Rice between 1 and 2 p. m., and all but the Fifteenth New York Engineers were almost immediately ordered to charge the enemy's works, which they did at the most critical moment, thereby saving the works of the enemy from recapture.

May 1.—The brigade having completed its duties at Roanoke Station in repairing the Richmond and Danville Railroad bridge across the Staunton River, broke camp and moved toward Manchester. Marched to Keysville and bivouacked for the night.

May 2.—Reached Burkeville Junction this p. m.

May 3.—Troops sent via Amelia Court-House, and general commanding took the cars for City Point, with a detachment of the Fiftieth, to ship the engineer material at that place to Washington.

May 5.—Troops reached Manchester; passed in review through Richmond. Troops ordered to march overland to Alexandria, under command of Colonel Brainerd. The general commanding went to Washington, by way of City Point, to complete the arrangements for shipping pontoon and siege material.

May 7.—Headquarters of the brigade reached Washington.

May 12.—The Fifteenth Regiment reached Alexandria.

May 16.—Headquarters of the brigade moved to near Fort Berry, Va.

May 21.—The Fiftieth Regiment arrived, having been delayed in constructing the necessary bridges on the route.

May 25.—Participated in the grand review through Washington.

Remained in camp at Fort Berry, Va. (about four miles from Washington), the remainder of the month, making preparations for the muster-out of a portion of the volunteer troops. The engineer trains and pontoon property were turned in to the proper departments at Washington.

June 4.—Received special orders to muster out all the volunteer troops in the Engineer Brigade.

Siege Train.

Capt. B. P. Learned returned from absence with leave on April 5, and joined company on the 6th.

Capt. J. M. Twiss absent on thirty days' leave since April 17, Special Orders, No 97, headquarters Department of Virginia, April 10.

Upon the movement of the Army of the Potomac six companies of the First Connecticut Artillery were assigned to the command of Major-General Parke, commanding Ninth Corps, and were engaged in the action of April 2 before Petersburg.

Since the capture of Richmond and Petersburg the entire command has been engaged in shipping the siege train and dismantling the rebel works before Richmond and Petersburg.

SECOND ARMY CORPS.

January.—No changes in the disposition of the troops of this command during the month.

February 5.—7 a. m., the Second and Third Divisions, with Battery K, Fourth U. S. Artillery, and the Tenth Massachusetts Battery, advanced to the crossing of Hatcher's Run, on the Vaughan road, and at Armstrong's Mill. The enemy in small force were driven across the run at 9.30 a. m. by the skirmishers of the First Brigade, Third Division. The First and Second Brigades, Third Division, took position on the south side of the run, while the Third Brigade took position in the vicinity of the Tucker house, [near] the Vaughan road; the Second Division was posted with its left on the run and the right near Armstrong's Mill. At 5.15 p. m. the enemy in strong force attacked the right of Smyth's division and the left of McAllister's (Third) brigade, Third Division, and were finally repulsed, the action having been continued until after 7 p. m. The Fourth Brigade, First Division, was formed in line at 4.30 p. m., near the Tucker house, to relieve McAllister's right, the First, Second, and Third Brigades of First Division remaining in charge of the old line of intrenchments.

February 6.—Reconnaissances were sent out by the Third Division without finding any forces except the enemy's pickets, who were driven inside their main line of works. At the same time all three divisions of the corps were held in readiness to attack the enemy if found outside his works.

February 9.—The First and Third Divisions took up their position on the new line from Fort Gregg to the Vaughan road crossing of Hatcher's Run.

February 11.—The Second Division was assigned a position on the new line of works along Hatcher's Run, which position the corps now [February 28] holds, with headquarters near the site of the Wilkinson house.

March 1 to 25.—In camp, as last return.

March 25.—Enemy broke through at Fort Stedman on Ninth Corps front. The Second and Third Divisions of the corps, in afternoon, attacked enemy's intrenched picket-line, capturing it with many prisoners.

March 26 to 29.—In camp.

March 29.—Broke camp at 6 a. m.; crossed Hatcher's Run at Vaughan road; formed line, with right resting on run at Vaughan crossing, and left connecting with right of Fifth Corps, near the Quaker road. Fifth Corps attacked by the enemy on the Quaker road.

March 30.—Troops advanced; connecting on the right with a division of the Twenty-fourth Corps, and on the left with Fifth Corps. Line formed, with right resting at Crow house, and left on the Boydton road, near the Mrs. Rainey house. Skirmishing with enemy all day.

March 31.—Relieved part of the line held by the Fifth Corps on the left of the Boydton road. Miles' division sent in to assist the Fifth Corps, and captured one color. Skirmishing by the Second and Third Divisions. Miles sent to report to General Sheridan. Line formed, with right resting at Mrs. Butler's, on Boydton road, and left at Crow house.

April 1.—The left of the line of the corps rested on Gravelly Run. At dusk the First Division moved to make a connection with General Sheridan, the remainder of the corps connecting with Miles by men in single rank with intervals. Our left now rests near the Claiborne and White Oak roads. A great deal of skirmishing during the night. The Second Division ordered to be ready to attack the enemy's redoubt in front of the Crow house at daylight; afterward order countermanded.

April 2.—The enemy evacuate their works in our front at 9 o'clock. Received news from the Second Division that they had carried the redoubt near Crow house, taking 280 prisoners and 3 guns. Miles' division returns from Sheridan, strikes the enemy on Claiborne road and follows them, and at 3 o'clock attacks their position near Sutherland's Station; drives them out, taking 2 guns, 400 prisoners, and 1 battle-flag. Second and Third Divisions follow the Boydton plank road, crossing Hatcher's Run, and take position within one mile and a half of Petersburg. General Humphreys takes the Second Division and moves down the Cox road to relieve Miles, who reported the enemy too strong. Upon the arrival of the Second Division Miles is found all right.

April 3.—Corps again together, and moves on River and Namozine roads to Namozine Church.

April 4.—Marched down Namozine road and encamped near Deep Creek.

April 5.—Left camp at 1.30 a. m., with slow progress, on account of the cavalry occupying the road. Issued rations and resumed the march, passing through Dennisville, and reached the Richmond and Danville Railroad at Jetersville Station. Halted in line of battle with two divisions, First and Second, on left of Fifth Corps, with Third on the right, which was afterward relieved by Sixth Corps, and was placed on the left of the corps.

April 6.—Moved at 6.30 in direction of Amelia Court-House, in three columns, with deploying distance—Second Division on right, First in center, Third on left. At 9 o'clock discovered the enemy moving past Amelia Sulphur Springs. 9.30 o'clock Mott's division moved down the Jetersville and Deatonsville road; cross Flat Creek and skirmish with their rear guard. At Deatonsville they made a stand; we charged and drove them 2 p. m. At 4.40 o'clock connected with Sixth Corps and moved down the Farmville road to Sailor's Creek, where the enemy made a stand; drove them, taking 250 wagons, 75 ambulances, several battle-flags, and between 600 and 700 prisoners. The enemy's route was strewn with wagons, camp and garrison equipage. General Barlow reported early in the morning and was assigned to the command of the Second Division.

April 7.—Marched to High Bridge and found the enemy on the high ground on other side of Appomattox River in line of battle; they retired and we followed. The bridge was set on fire, but was saved. The corps captured 18 guns and 400 prisoners. Barlow moved down the railroad, and First and Third [Divisions] took a road two miles from the bridge, turning to the right, leading to the Farmville and Lynchburg stage road, striking it some miles above Farmville. Here the enemy was found in strong force, and we failed to find their flank, so no attack was ordered. Barlow forced them and destroyed 150 wagons. General Smyth, commanding Third Brigade, Second Division, was mortally wounded.

April 8.—Left camp at 7 a. m.; marched down the Farmville and Lynchburg stage road one mile and a half toward the right, on the road leading to Buckingham Court-House. At Coalpit turned to the right and marched on a road running parallel to plank road, and marched through New Store. Rested two hours and a half. Received orders to march until we had the enemy on our immediate front. Left at 9.30 o'clock; marched until 12.30 o'clock. The men were so exhausted for want of something to eat that a halt was ordered; went into camp and rations were issued.

April 9.—Left camp at 9 o'clock and marched to within five miles of Appomattox Court-House; halted. At 4 o'clock received news that General Lee had surrendered his army.

April 10.—Remained quiet.

April 11.—Left camp at 10.30 o'clock; marched to New Store, and encamped for the night.

April 12.—Left camp at 6.30 o'clock; marched one mile and a half; struck plank road; marched through Curdsville; crossed Little Willis River, passing through Farmville; encamped near Bush River.

April 13.—Left camp at 8 o'clock; moved to Burkeville. Remained at Burkeville during the remainder of the month.

May 1.—At Burkeville.

May 2.—Moved from Burkeville to Jetersville.

May 3.—Moved from Jetersville, via Amelia Court-House, across the Appomattox at Goode's Bridge.

May 4.—Moved from Goode's Bridge to Two-Mile Creek, five miles from Richmond.

May 5.—Moved to Manchester.

May 6.—Moved through Richmond by Brook road to Brook Creek.

May 7.—Moved across Chickahominy at Winston's Bridge via Hanover Court-House; across Pamunkey at Littlepage's Bridge.

May 8.—Moved past Concord Church, Chesterfield Station, Old Chesterfield, Mount Carmel Church, by telegraph road, to vicinity of Golansville.

May 9.—Moved by telegraph road across Pole-Cat, Mat, Ta, Po, and Ny to Massaponax Church.

May 10.—Moved through Fredericksburg across Rappahannock; passed Washington, Oder's, Cockley Store, to Old Tavern.

May 11.—Passed Tusculum to Middle Run.

May 12.—Marched to vicinity of Wolf Run Shoals, on Occoquan.

May 13.—Marched to Bailey's Cross-Roads and encamped, remaining here during the rest of the month.

[June.]—No change of station during the month.

First Division.

February 5.—The Fourth Brigade of this division was ordered to Hatcher's Run, and formed in line on the right of the Third Division.

February 9.—It returned, not having been engaged. On the same day the division moved to the left, its right resting at Fort Gregg, its left at the chimneys of the Westmoreland house, and threw up a line of works.

[March 25.]—The division remained in camp in the breast-works, near Squirrel Level road, until the morning of this date, when attacking parties were sent out from the First and Fourth Brigades to occupy the enemy's picket-line. This was done, and the movement was followed by the advance of the entire command to the new position gained. During the afternoon three determined attacks were made by the enemy, with the view of dislodging us, all of which were repulsed. A strong picket-line was left upon the ground occupied, when the division returned to its former camp behind the intrenchments.

March 29.—The division marched by the left flank across Hatcher's Run, and formed line on the left of the Third Division. Advanced in line to Dabney's Mill road the next day, with the left resting at the Boylston plank road.

March 31.—Moved to the left, relieving the Fifth Corps from the position held by them. At 12.30 p. m. the division advanced to the relief of the Fifth Corps, then engaged with the enemy. The Third and Fourth Brigades, striking the rebels in flank and driving them to their works, captured large numbers of prisoners and a flag. Obtained possession of the White Oak road. Subsequently moved to the right, intrenched the line, and bivouacked.

First Brigade, First Division.

February.—This brigade broke camp on the morning of the 9th, and moved about one mile and a half to the left, in the direction of Hatcher's Run, to a new position, which we [have] since occupied.

March 9.—This brigade was reviewed by Brevet Major-General Miles, with the rest of the division.

March 23.—This brigade was reviewed, with the rest of the corps, by Major-General Humphreys.

March 25.—At 6 a. m. this brigade was ordered to be ready to move. Two hundred men of the Sixty-first New York Volunteers marched out of our intrenchments, with orders to attack the enemy's picket-line and break it if possible. They made the attack, but were repulsed, with a small loss, owing to the dense undergrowth and swamp in their front. They then moved half a mile to the left and renewed the assault, driving the enemy from their strong intrenched picket-line and holding the same. The brigade now moved out to their support and was deployed on the line. The enemy made two different assaults to regain their lost position, but were each time handsomely repulsed. At 12 midnight the brigade was withdrawn, and returned to camp.

March 29.—At 6 a. m. the brigade moved down the Vaughan road, crossing Hatcher's Run, and bivouacked about five miles from the run, near Brown house.

March 30.—We advanced our line a short distance.

March 31.—We crossed the Boydton road, relieving part of the Fifth Corps, and became heavily engaged with the enemy, though with comparatively small loss.

April 1.—The brigade, with the division, moved at 4.30 p. m. from a position near the junction of the White Oak and Boydton roads, and rested near the Butler house until 5 p. m., when we advanced, struck the Quaker road, marching down the same about two miles, and bivouacked.

April 2.—The brigade moved at 7 a. m. Were then ordered back, on intimation that the enemy were evacuating their main works. Marched through them, following the retreating enemy, and found them in temporary works near Sutherland's Station, South Side Railroad. Charged them and captured about 600 prisoners, and bivouacked near that place.

April 3 to 5.—Continued the pursuit of the fleeing enemy on the Namozine road, and bivouacked near the Danville railroad at 8 p. m. April 5, marching about twenty-four miles.

April 6.—Moved at 5 a. m. toward Amelia Court-House. At 10 a. m. observed the enemy's wagon train, and advanced rapidly in pursuit, chasing them all day. At 5 p. m. the brigade charged, making large captures in prisoners, artillery, wagons, horses, flags, &c., and bivouacked near Monkey Run.

April 7.—Moved at 6 a. m.; crossed the Appomattox River at High Bridge; found the enemy in light works near Cumberland Church. The brigade was ordered to charge them at 5 p. m., but were repulsed, on account of overwhelming numbers, losing heavily in officers and men.

April 8.—Continued the pursuit of the retreating enemy, marching down the Lynchburg road about sixteen miles; bivouacked at 11 p. m.

April 9.—At daylight resumed the pursuit of the fleeing enemy. At 11 a. m. came upon the enemy's pickets. The brigade was halted and formed in line, awaiting negotiations of peace. At 2 p. m. again advanced a short distance, but were again halted. At 4 p. m. the welcome news of the surrender of Lee's entire army was announced to the troops.

April 11.—The division moved at 10 a. m. (except this brigade, which remained to guard the surrendered and captured ordnance and ordnance stores) to Burkeville Station. Remained there until 6.30 on the morning of April 13.

April 13.—We moved up the old Lynchburg road, the train arriving at New Store at 6 p. m.

April 14.—Moved at 7.30 a. m. with the train, and arrived at Farmville, Va., at 5 p. m., and bivouacked two miles from that place.

April 15.—Marched at 7 a. m. to Burkeville Station; joined the division about 5 p. m., and went into camp.

April 17.—Col. John Fraser, One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, assumed command of the brigade, relieving Col. G. W. Scott, Sixty-first New York Volunteers.

April 18.—Broke camp and moved about one mile and a half, and went into camp near the Agnew house, where we still remain (May 1).

May 1.—In camp near Burkeville Station, Va.

May 2.—Received orders to march at 1 p. m. by direct route to Manchester.

May 5.—Arrived there at 10 a. m.

May 6.—Took up our line of march for Fredericksburg, passing through Richmond and halting about seven miles from the city for the night, near the branch of the Chickahominy River.

May 7.—Marched about twenty miles, crossing the Pamunkey River, and encamped near it for the night.

May 8.—On the march; crossed the Pole-Cat River, and encamped about seven miles from it for the night.

May 9.—On the march; crossed the Mat, Po, and Ta Rivers, and encamped for the night near the old battle-ground, Spotsylvania.

May 10.—Passed through Fredericksburg, crossing the Potomac Creek, and encamped near it for the night.

May 11 and 12.—On the march, nothing of importance occurring during the day.

May 13.—Crossed the Occoquan Creek at Wolf Run Shoals, and crossing the Orange and Alexandria Railroad at Burke's Station, encamped for the night near Mason's Hill, about seven miles from Alexandria, and remaining encamped until the morning of the 15th.

May 15.—Marched about four miles, and encamped near Four-Mile Run, where we still remain.

May 23.—Participated in grand review of the Army of the Potomac at Washington.

May 31.—Took part in the review of the Second Army Corps at Ball's Cross-Roads, and remain still encamped, with the division, at Four-Mile Run.

Second Brigade, First Division.

February.—Remained in camp employed in drill, and furnished various details until the 9th; then, from orders from division headquarters, moved camp to the left about two miles, and established in rear of First, Third, and Fourth Brigades. Since then remained in camp furnishing ordinary details. Regimental and brigade drill have been held when weather and circumstances would permit.

[March.]—The brigade remained in camp, furnishing details for picket, &c.; also employed in drill and military instruction until the 25th instant, when it broke camp and advanced, capturing the picket-lines of the enemy, who made repeated attempts to regain it, but were handsomely repulsed. The action lasted about three hours, when the brigade was relieved by a portion of the Fifth Corps and was ordered to return to camp. The losses in the action were 16 enlisted men killed, 7 commissioned officers and 154 enlisted men wounded, and 1 enlisted man missing; total, 178.

The brigade remained in camp until the 29th instant, when it broke camp and marched, with the division, to the left, across Hatcher's Run and toward the South Side Railroad, occasionally skirmishing with the enemy.

March 31.—Still continuing the advance.

[April.]—This brigade took a prominent part in the campaign, being in the charge at Sutherland's Station and in the advance through the entire campaign, capturing many prisoners, 2 battle-flags, and losing in killed, wounded, and missing 147 men.

April 11.—Joined the division in the march to Burkeville, where it remains [April 30], engaged in drill and military instruction.

Third Brigade, First Division.

March 29.—Broke camp, crossed Hatcher's Run, formed in line of battle; One hundred and twenty-sixth [New York] deployed as skirmishers.

March 30.—Resumed march in line of battle; One hundred and eleventh [New York] relieved the One hundred and twenty-sixth as skirmishers at 11 a. m. At noon met the enemy, drove them across Boydton plank road; line of battle advanced to within view of the enemy; constructed breast-work and bivouacked.

March 31.—Changed positions at about 1 p. m.; advanced, charged the enemy with much enthusiasm, driving [him] in confusion; captured one battle-flag and many prisoners.

April 1.—Changed position at 11 p. m.; the One hundred and eleventh ordered to reconnoiter and find if an assault on the enemy's works were practicable; found it doubtful, and withdrew; marched to the left until 4 a. m. April 2; rested.

April 2.—Returned three miles; again advanced and found the enemy; advanced under a fire of artillery and musketry, the enemy falling back before our skirmishers. Continued march toward South Side Railroad, driving the enemy, causing them to destroy caissons, baggage, &c. Again found the enemy in strong position; charged their works, and [were] repulsed. General Madill wounded, and sent to the rear. General MacDougall assumed command; a second charge ordered; again repulsed. General MacDougall wounded, but retained command. Artillery placed in position; enemy leave the works; follow in pursuit and take possession of railroad.

April 3.—Continued the pursuit.

April 4.—Repairing roads.

April 5.—Assisting the advance of train and artillery.

April 6.—Continued attacks on enemy's rear; charged on a battery which covered the retreat of the enemy's train. Captured some prisoners, drove the enemy, captured 140 wagons, and bivouacked.

April 7.—Moved in view of High Bridge; found the enemy strongly intrenched; Thirty-ninth and Fifty-second [New York] deployed as skirmishers; drove the enemy; advanced across the river; took up line of march toward Farmville; found the enemy again in position; bivouacked.

April 8.—Enemy evacuated during the night. Continued the advance; One hundred and eleventh, One hundred and twenty-fifth, and One hundred and twenty-sixth as skirmishers.

April 9.—Received the news of General Lee's surrender, which was received with great enthusiasm. Returned [11th] by way of Farmville, with banners flying, to our present position near Burkeville Junction, Va.

May 2.—The brigade broke camp with the corps near Burkeville Station, Va., and moved over the direct route to Manchester, Va.

May 5.—Arrived at that place about noon, resting one day.

May 6.—The command moved across the James River in the morning, passing through Richmond, and encamping for the night near Yellow Tavern, from which point, after marching easy marches of from fourteen to eighteen miles a day, moving by way of Fredericksburg, Va., the column arrived opposite Washington, D. C., on the afternoon of the 13th, and the command went into permanent camp near Bailey's Cross-Roads on the morning of the 15th, where the troops still remain.

Fourth Brigade, First Division.

February 5.—The brigade, under command of Bvt. Brig. Gen. John Ramsey, received orders to march in the afternoon, moving toward Hatcher's Run. The command formed in line of battle near the Tucker house, connecting with General McAllister's brigade of the Third Division, Second Army Corps, on the left, and the right resting near a swamp. The brigade remained in this position, and at the same time throwing up earth-works, until the 9th, when it returned to its former camp. The command was not engaged, yet still held an important part of the line. All this without the loss of an officer or a man.

Since that time no movements have taken place.

[March.]—During the month the command remained undisturbed in camp until the morning of the 25th, when marching orders were received, and the command was held in readiness to move. At 3 p. m. the brigade advanced and moved under cover of a wood one mile in advance of our main line of works. At 5 p. m. the brigade was ordered forward, and formed line of battle with the remainder of the division, connecting with Third Brigade on the right and Second on the left. The fighting was quite spirited, we remaining on the defensive, and was very favorable to our forces. In the night we withdrew to our camp, and resumed the regular routine of camp duty.

March 29.—The brigade again moved, and, advancing on the Vaughan road a short distance, filed to the right and formed line of battle near the Boydton road, connecting with the Fifth Corps. Steady advances were made and the line extended farther to the left until this command extended to the Boydton road.

March 31.—The brigade was ordered farther to the left, and at 1 p. m., the Third Division of the Fifth Corps being driven back, I was ordered to assume the offensive, and became warmly engaged with the enemy and drove them about two miles, but not without severe loss. The night closed the contest, and the command was ordered to fortify the advanced position and be prepared for future operations.

April 1.—Marched from in front of Petersburg to join the forces under General Sheridan.

April 2.—Joined General Sheridan at daylight. Entered the enemy's works and participated in the action near the South Side Railroad. Captured 2 guns and 1 battle-flag.

April 3, 4, and 5.—Marched to overtake the retreating enemy.

April 6.—Came in sight of the enemy, but were not actively engaged.

April 7.—Participated in the action near Farmville.

April 8.—Resumed the march.

April 9.—Were present at the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia. Rested until the 11th instant, when we marched toward Burkeville, where we arrived on the 13th and encamped.

May 2.—Broke camp near Burkeville and marched to Manchester, Va., where we arrived May 5.

May 6.—Entered Richmond, and marched from there, via Fredericksburg, to Alexandria.

May 13.—Arrived near Alexandria, Va., and encamped near Four-Mile Run, where we still remain.

[June.]—No change of locality of camp during the month.

Second Division.

February 5.—In the morning, in compliance with orders received, the division advanced on the Vaughan road toward Hatcher's Run to the vicinity of the Armstrong house, where the enemy's pickets were found strongly posted; they were soon driven in, and, after a short engagement, a new line was established.

February 11.—The division was assigned a position on the new line of works along Hatcher's Run.

[March.]—The command remained in camp inactive until the 25th instant, at which time the enemy made a partially successful assault on our line in front of Petersburg, when, with other portions of the corps, it participated in a successful movement on the enemy's line near Hatcher's Run.

March 26.—Having accomplished its object, the command returned to camp at night.

March 29.—Again broke camp, and took an active part during the remainder of the month in the operations against the enemy in the vicinity of Hatcher's Run.

April 2.—In the morning, in conjunction with the army, broke the lines of the enemy, carrying a redoubt and capturing two guns. Rapid pursuit of the enemy was kept up and frequent skirmishing occurred until April 9, when the enemy surrendered near Appomattox Court-House, Va.

April 11.—In the morning the troops moved on the return march.

April 14.—Arrived at Burkeville. Remained in camp at Burkeville, Va., until 30th instant.

Third Brigade, Second Division.

February 4.—In the evening this command received orders to be in readiness to move at 7 a. m. on the morning of the 5th. At the hour designated the command was under arms, and soon after moved with the column on the Vaughan road to Hatcher's Run.

The command participated in the skirmishes at the run, and also aided in repulsing several charges made by the enemy in front of the Third Division of this corps on the afternoon of the 5th instant.

February 11.—In the morning the command was assigned to its present position on the Vaughan road in reserve camp.

[March.]—This command remained inactive during the month until the enemy assaulted our line in front of Petersburg, when, with other portions of this corps, it participated in an attack on the enemy's left, near Hatcher's Run, March 25. Having accomplished the desired object, the command was ordered back to camp the night of the same date.

March 29.—In accordance with orders the command broke camp and took an active part in the operations near Hatcher's Run during the remainder of the month.

Third Division.

February 5.—Moved to Hatcher's Run; First and Second Brigades took position on the western side.

February 6.—First and Second Brigades returned to the eastern side of the run and took position near the Tucker house.

February 9.—Troops took position now held, extending from Battery B to Armstrong's Mill; headquarters at Claypole house, on Squirrel Level road.

April 1.—Remained in position on Boydton plank road.

April 2.—Occupied the enemy's line of works, and moved forward within two miles of Petersburg. Took position in line, connecting Sixth and Twenty-fourth Army Corps. Ordered to report to Major-General Wright, commanding Sixth Corps.

April 3.—Petersburg being evacuated, moved down the South Side Railroad, rejoining the Second Corps.

April 4.—Marched seven miles toward Jetersville.

April 5.—Marched to Jetersville.

April 6.—Attacked the enemy at Amelia Sulphur Springs; made six assaults upon him at different points, driving him from his position each time, capturing guns, colors, wagons, and prisoners.

April 7.—Met the enemy near Farmville, Va.; made no attack.

April 8 and 9.—Marched to Clover Hill. The Army of Northern Virginia surrendered.

April 11.—Marched to New Store.

April 12.—Marched to Farmville.

April 13.—Marched to Burkeville Junction.

April 30.—Still in camp at Burkeville Junction.

May 2.—Left camp at Burkeville, Va.; marched to Amelia Court-House.

May 3.—Marched to Haxall's.

May 4.—Marched to Manchester.

May 6.—Marched through Richmond to Yellow Tavern.

May 7.—Marched across Pamunkey River at Littlepage's Bridge.

May 8.—Marched to Hawkins' Creek.

May 9.—Marched to Ta River.

May 10.—Marched through Fredericksburg to Oder's Store.

May 11.—Marched to Tusculum.

May 12.—Marched to Webster house.

May 13.—Crossed the Occoquan at Wolf Run Shoals and marched to Annandale.

May 15.—Went into camp at Bailey's Cross-Roads, Va.

[June.]—No change of station during the month.

First Brigade, Third Division.

April 1 and 2.—This brigade participated in the attack on Petersburg (on the left flank), and, with the remainder of the corps, pursued the enemy until the surrender of Lee, capturing many prisoners, material of war, and wagons, especially April 6. After the surrender of Lee, the brigade returned to near Burkeville, where [April 9] it now is.

General Mott (commanding division) having been wounded on the 6th, General De Trobriand assumed command of the division, and Col. R. B. Shepherd, First Maine Heavy Artillery, assumed command of the brigade. The Fortieth New York Volunteers now garrisons Farmville.

Second Brigade, Third Division.

February 1.—This brigade was encamped a short distance outside of the rear line of works and about 1,500 yards west of the Weldon railroad.

February 5.—Broke camp at 7 a. m. and marched on the Vaughan road to Hatcher's Run. Participated in the engagement on that day. During the night the enemy fell back.

February 6.—In the morning a new line of works, extending from the left of the former line to Hatcher's Run, was laid out, and the brigade was engaged in constructing this line on the 6th, 7th, and 8th, making abatis and slashing the timber in front of it.

February 9.—The brigade went into camp about 1,500 yards in rear of the line and near the Vaughan road, where it has since remained, doing picket, fatigue, and camp duties.

March 1.—The brigade occupied the same camp as on February 28, viz, in rear of Union line, near Humphreys' Station.

Remained in camp doing picket, fatigue, and camp duty until the morning of the 29th, when it broke camp and marched on the Vaughan road about one mile beyond Hatcher's Creek.

March 30.—The brigade marched in line of battle toward the Dabney Mill road. Halted for the night near the mill.

March 31.—Advanced in line of battle until we met the enemy near the battle-ground of October 27, left of brigade resting near the Boydton plank road.

April 1.—Brigade lay in line of battle (in the morning in same position as on March 31) perpendicular to crossing the Boydton road where the fight of October 27 occurred.

April 2.—About 8 a. m., the enemy having been driven from their works in our front, the brigade moved by the flank up the plank road to near Petersburg. Skirmished with the enemy until near dark. Remained for the night in line around the house formerly occupied by General Mahone as headquarters.

April 3.—Marched about fifteen miles in pursuit of the enemy on river road in direction of Lynchburg.

April 4.—Marched about five miles. Brigade employed in corduroying road.

April 5.—Marched about fifteen miles, striking Danville railroad, where we encamped.

April 6.—Marched at 6 a. m. Skirmished with the enemy, capturing wagon train, one piece of artillery, small-arms, &c., at Sailor's Creek, where we remained for the night.

April 7.—Marched about fifteen miles in direction of Lynchburg.

April 9.—Marched to Clover Hill, where General Lee surrendered to General Grant.

April 10.—Remained in camp.

April 11.—Marched back to New Store.

April 12.—Marched to Farmville.

April 13.—Marched to Burkeville, where we have since remained, doing camp and fatigue duty.

Third Brigade, Third Division.

February 4.—Broke camp near the Halifax road, and joined the division in the expedition to Hatcher's Run on the 5th.

February 5.—During the engagement with the enemy in the afternoon this brigade took up line of battle on left of Vaughan road and repulsed the attack of the enemy three times, with considerable loss to them.

The new line having been formed, the command remained quiet in camp in rear of the breast-works near the Vaughan road for the rest of the month.

[March.].—Remained in camp near Hatcher's Run, participating in the affair of March 25 near the Tucker house, where, after a stubborn resistance on the part of the enemy, we succeeded in taking and retaking the enemy's picket-line in our front.

March 29..—Broke camp, and moved with the rest of the division to the left near the Boydton plank road.

March 31..—Made a gallant charge on the enemy's works to develop their strength.

April 2..—Attacked and captured the enemy's picket-line where the Boydton plank road crosses the White Oak road, and afterward occupied his main works and advanced to Petersburg.

April 3 to 5..—Pursued the enemy.

April 6..—Came up with him at Amelia Springs. Skirmished with him all day, and at night succeeded in forcing him to abandon his wagon train.

April 7 and 8..—Continued the pursuit; also on the 9th until 8 p. m., when near Appomattox Court-House the surrender of Lee was announced and the troops ordered to make camp.

April 11..—Were ordered to Burkeville, and arrived there on the 14th. April 13 and 14, acting as rear guard to the Artillery Brigade. Made camp on the 14th, where the command remained during the rest of the month.

May 2..—The brigade started from Burkeville Station with the Second Corps.

May 6..—Passed through Richmond.

May 15..—Arrived near Bailey's Cross-Roads.

May 23..—Passed in review at Washington.

[June.].—Remained quietly in camp, near Bailey's Cross-Roads, Va., during the month.

Artillery Brigade.

[February.].—The movement to and engagement at Hatcher's Run occurred between the 5th and 8th of this month. Only two batteries of this brigade—Tenth Massachusetts and K, Fourth United States—participated.

[March.].—In the engagement on the 25th four batteries of this brigade were engaged: Tenth Massachusetts Battery; K, Fourth U. S. Artillery; M, First New Hampshire Artillery; and B, First New Jersey. Six batteries of this brigade are on detached service, with Artillery Reserve: C and I, Fifth U. S. Artillery; F, First Pennsylvania Artillery; G, First New York Artillery; Twelfth New York Battery; Third New Jersey Battery; and Sixth Maine Battery.

FIFTH ARMY CORPS.

[January.].—The corps has remained in its camp between the Halifax road and Jerusalem plank road, no movement having taken place during the month.

February 5..—The corps moved from its camp between the Halifax road and the Jerusalem plank road in the morning, in obedience to orders from the major-general commanding Army of the Potomac, taking part in the actions of the 5th, 6th, and 7th, at Rowanty Creek and near Hatcher's Run, it being now [March 6] in camp near the latter place.

[March.].—The corps remained in its camp near Hatcher's Run up to 6 a. m. on the 25th.

March 25.—At 6 a. m. the Second and Third Divisions were ordered to move to the support of the Ninth Corps, in front of Fort Stedman, to aid in repelling an attack of the enemy upon that portion of our line. About the same time the First Division was ordered to move to the support of the Second Corps. The attack on Fort Stedman having been repulsed and the enemy driven back by the Ninth Corps, the Second and Third Divisions were not engaged. The Third Brigade of the First Division had a sharp fight with the enemy on the Second Corps front and repulsed his attack. At night the corps returned to its former camp.

March 29.—The corps broke camp at 4 a. m. and marched down the stage road, crossing Rowanty Creek, taking position at the junction of the stage and Quaker roads, from which point it moved up the Quaker road to near the junction of the Boydton plank road. Here, about 4 p. m., the First Division met the enemy, and, after a severe action, drove him into his works.

March 30.—The corps remained in position, and during the day advanced our lines toward the White Oak road and constructed breast-works.

March 31.—The Second and Third Divisions advanced against the enemy, who met them in superior force, causing our line to fall back. The First Division then advanced and restored the line, taking a number of prisoners and one battle-flag. The enemy did not follow, and by night-fall had completely retired from the position held by him in the morning. During the night the corps was massed near the Boydton plank road, and toward midnight the Second Division was ordered to move down the Boydton plank road to Dinwiddie to the support of Major-General Sheridan.

April 1.—The First and Third Divisions of this corps moved at daylight to support General Sheridan, at Five Forks, on the White Oak road, the Second Division having moved to that point the night previous. The corps engaged the enemy about 3.30 p. m., and after a severe battle, with the assistance of the cavalry, drove him completely from the field, capturing 5 guns, 12 battle-flags, and 3,244 prisoners. About 5 p. m. Major-General Warren was relieved from the command of the corps by Major-General Sheridan and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Charles Griffin assigned to the command. The battle ceasing about dark, the corps bivouacked on the field. Bvt. Brig. Gen. Fred. Winthrop was killed.

April 2.—Marched at 6 a. m. toward the Claiborne road; returned to the White Oak road; thence down the Ford road across Hatcher's Run to Cox's Station, on South Side Railroad; captured 1 engine and 3 cars and tore up the track; continued on march to the junction of the Namozine and River roads. Here General Crawford's division was moved down the Namozine road toward the river to support General Merritt, and had a slight skirmish with the enemy. Marched twenty miles.

April 3.—Marched down the River road, bridging and crossing Namozine Creek; picked up many straggling rebels, who were concealed in the woods. At 6.30 p. m. received the news of the capture of Petersburg and evacuation of Richmond. Halted near Deep Creek and bivouacked for the night, after a march of twenty-three miles. Picked up and turned over to the ordnance department three brass 12-pounders abandoned by the enemy.

April 4.—Marched at 5 a. m. via Dennisville, arriving at Jetersville, on the Danville railroad, at 5.20 p. m.; went into position and threw up a line of breast-works; distance marched this day twenty-five miles.

April 5.—Remained in position all day.

April 6.—Marched at 6 a. m. toward Amelia Court-House; thence along the Prideville road, via Paineville, to vicinity of Ligontown, marching about thirty-two miles. Picked up to-day 300 prisoners, and destroyed a number of rebel wagons and caissons.

April 7.—Marched at 5.30 a. m., crossing Bush Creek, to Prince Edward Court-House, a distance of eighteen miles.

April 8.—Marched at 6 a. m., moving up the Lynchburg railroad via Prospect Station, following the Twenty-fourth Corps; continued on march until 2 a. m., bivouacking within three miles of Appomattox Court-House; marched this day about twenty-nine miles.

April 9.—Marched at 4 a. m., reaching the vicinity of Appomattox Court-House about 7 a. m. Found the cavalry sharply engaged with the enemy, who were driving our skirmishers; went into position at once and advanced against the enemy, who, after a short contest, retreated, and about 9 a. m. it was announced that General Lee had surrendered the Army of Northern Virginia. Orders to cease firing were immediately given, and the troops halted where they were, having reached and taken possession of Appomattox Court-House. About 3 p. m. the troops went into camp.

April 10.—Brevet Major-General Griffin appointed one of the commissioners to arrange the terms of surrender.

April 12.—The rebel army marched out and surrendered its arms, guns, and colors, the First Division, Fifth Corps, receiving them. The captures numbered 157 pieces of artillery, 71 battle-flags, and about 17,000 stand of small-arms. Official report of prisoners surrendered 26,115.*

April 13 and 14.—Removed the captured property to the railroad for transportation to Washington.

April 15.—Left Appomattox Court-House at 2 p. m., following the railroad, halting for the night after a march of thirteen miles.

April 16.—Marched at 6 a. m., via Prospect Station, to Farmville, marching seventeen miles.

April 17.—Marched at 7 a. m., taking the road to Burkeville; thence to Little Sandy Run, where the corps went into camp; distance marched this day twenty-seven miles.

April 18 and 19.—Remained in camp.

April 20.—Marched at 7 a. m. to Nottoway Court-House, relieving the Ninth Corps in guarding the railroad from Burkeville to Petersburg; distance marched, eighteen miles. The corps continued on this duty during the remainder of the month, corps headquarters remaining at Nottoway Court-House. The casualties in the corps from March 29 to April 9, inclusive, number:

| | Killed. | Wounded. | Missing. | Aggregate. |
|-------------------|---------|----------|----------|------------|
| Officers..... | 18 | 103 | 6 | 127 |
| Enlisted men..... | 245 | 1,553 | 540 | 2,338 |
| Total..... | 263 | 1,656 | 546 | 2,465 |

May 1.—Left Nottoway Court-House at 9 a. m. and closed the corps on the First Division, which was occupying Wilson's Station; distance, sixteen miles.

May 2.—Marched at 6 a. m., via Sutherland's Station, to within five miles of Petersburg, and went into camp, a march of twenty miles.

* Compilation of lists of prisoners paroled foots up 28,231. See p. 1277.

May 3.—Marched at 6 p. m., passing through Petersburg, and by Petersburg and Richmond pike to Drewry's Bluff, a distance of twenty miles.

May 4.—Marched at 6 a. m., arriving at Manchester at 8 a. m.; went into camp outside the town; marched five miles. Then a march to Hanover Court-House, encamping at night on the edge of a field; marched twenty-three miles.

May 5.—Remained in camp; corps headquarters at Chester.

May 6.—Marched at 9 a. m. in conjunction with the rest of the Army of the Potomac, and entered Richmond, following the route laid down in General Orders, No. 114, Army of the Potomac.

May 7.—Marched at 10 a. m. to Concord Church and went into camp; distance, twelve miles.

May 8.—Marched at 6 a. m., and after a march of sixteen miles went into camp beyond Milford Station.

May 9.—Marched at 5 a. m., crossing the Massaponax River, and the Pamunkey Rivers, and encamped opposite Fredericksburg; marched, twenty miles.

May 10.—Marched at 5 a. m., crossing Potomac, Aquia, and Annapolis Rivers; distance marched, eighteen miles.

May 11.—Marched at 6 a. m. via Dumfries, crossing the Occoquan Rivers, and encamping at Fairfax Station; distance, eighteen miles.

May 12.—Marched at 6 a. m., via Fairfax Court-House, to the Warrenton pike, and went into camp at Four-Mile Run.

May 23.—Marched into Washington and took part in the movements of the Army of the Potomac; returned to camp the same day.

[June.]—The corps has remained in camp near Four-Mile Run all the month. Headquarters has remained unchanged.

First Division.

[February.]—The division remained in camp near Jomard's road until the morning of the 5th.

February 5.—A sufficient guard having been left to protect the camp and surrounding property, the division moved out along the railroad in the direction of Dinwiddie Court-House, marching that day seventeen miles.

February 6.—Returned to Hatcher's Run before daylight.

February 7.—In the afternoon took part in a very severe engagement with the enemy, during which the division lost very heavily. The division held the line of works along the bank of Hatcher's Run until February 11.

February 11.—They recrossed the run and took up a position on the rear and flank, where they have been since, performing the usual camp, and fatigue duties.

[March.]—The division performed the usual camp and outpost duties, until March 25, when it marched out, leaving, however, the First Brigade back to support the Second Corps during the fighting that day. Returned in the evening, and remained until the 29th.

March 29.—A general move was made. Participated in the engagements from Lewis' farm up to Boydton plank road, where the division lost very heavily.

[April.]—The division participated in all the engagements from the battle of Five Forks up to the surrender of Lee's army, losing many in killed and wounded.

May 2.—Marched from Wilson's Station, Va., via Petersburg, to Richmond.

May 6.—Passed through Richmond; marched toward Washington.

May 12.—Arrived at Arlington Heights.

First Brigade, First Division.

February 5.—In accordance with orders, the brigade broke camp at 6.30 a. m., and with the balance of the division moved west to the Weldon railroad; then south and southwest to a point on Hatcher's Run; then northwest on a road leading to Dinwiddie Court-House, halting at 4 p. m. on the plantation of Oliver Chappell, and remained until 11 p. m.; then returned by the same road to the Vaughan road; then marched north on the Vaughan road to the south bank of Hatcher's Run and occupied earth-works covering crossing of that stream.

February 6.—About 3 p. m. the brigade was ordered to the support of General Winthrop's brigade, then being pressed by an assault of the enemy. Formed a line of battle, facing west, and moved forward. A charge was ordered on the enemy, which was executed in a most gallant style. The enemy broke at the first volley and fled in great confusion. After pursuing for some distance, the brigade was halted, in consequence of being out of ammunition. At 5.30 p. m. rapid firing commenced on the right and to the rear, when the command was changed to face northwest, and remained under arms all night.

February 7.—In the morning the enemy threatened an attack. Sharp firing was kept up between the two lines of skirmishers for three-quarters of an hour, when, a heavy rain and hail storm setting in, the enemy withdrew to cover of woods. At 11 a. m. the brigade was relieved by General Gregg's cavalry, and reoccupied the works left the previous day. The casualties were comparatively small. Since the last-mentioned date the command has gone into new camp, and has been busily engaged in doing picket and fatigue duty and in erecting quarters.

March 25.—The brigade left camp at Hatcher's Run, Va., in the morning, and with the balance of the division supported the Second Corps in their attack on the enemy's lines, returning to camp the same night.

March 29.—Broke camp in the morning; met the enemy on Lewis' farm, near Gravelly Run, Va., and, after a desperate engagement of nearly two hours, being re-enforced by three regiments from the Third Brigade, drove him from the field. The loss in killed and wounded was severe. Bivouacked on the field of battle.

March 31.—In the morning advanced on the enemy and drove him from his defenses on White Oak road and turned the breast-works; bivouacked for the night; our losses were light.

April 1.—The brigade resumed the march at 6.30 a. m., and with the corps joined General Sheridan's command at 8.30 of the same morning. Advanced in line of battle against the enemy at 3.30 p. m. and fought the battle of Five Forks, capturing a large number of prisoners. Our loss was small.

April 2.—Crossed the South Side Railroad in pursuit of the retreating enemy, which pursuit was followed up until the surrender of General Lee, April 9, near Appomattox Court-House. Remained at this point until the 15th awaiting the parole of prisoners and gathering in captured arms and ammunition.

April 15.—In the morning took up the line of march for the South Side Railroad, arriving at Wilson's Station, on that road, the 21st. Here the brigade went into camp, doing duty along the railroad and at residences in the vicinity during the remainder of the month.

May 2.—The brigade passed through Petersburg, and marched toward Richmond.

May 4.—Arrived at Manchester, opposite that city.

May 6.—It passed through Richmond, leading the corps, and arrived in the vicinity of Washington, D. C.

May 30.—The One hundred and eighty-fifth New York Volunteers was mustered out of service, and left for home May 31.

Third Brigade, First Division.

[February.]—The brigade remained in camp near Jerusalem plank road until February 5.

February 5.—Leaving a sufficient guard to protect the camps, the brigade moved out along the line of the Weldon railroad, and proceeded toward Dinwiddie Court-House, marching on that day about seventeen miles.

February 6.—Returned to Hatcher's Run before daylight, and on the afternoon of same day took part in a severe engagement with the enemy, with considerable loss in killed and wounded. Held line of works along the bank of Hatcher's Run until February 11.

February 11.—Crossed the run in the morning and took position on rear line, where the brigade has since remained, performing the usual camp and outpost duties with an occasional detail for fatigue.

[March.]—The brigade performed the usual camp and outpost duties, with frequent reviews and several brigade dress parades, until the 25th.

March 25.—The brigade was moved out to support the Second Corps during that day, as the enemy made an attack near Petersburg, and the line on the left was pushed forward. Returned to camp at night and remained until 29th.

March 29.—A general move was made. This brigade was in the engagement at Lewis' farm on the 29th, and at Boydton road on 30th and 31st, suffering considerably in killed and wounded.

April 1.—The brigade took part in the engagement at Five Forks, losing a few men killed and wounded, and capturing a very large number of prisoners from the enemy. Followed the retreating rebel army until the 9th instant.

April 9.—The brigade took part in the engagement at Appomattox Court-House, with a loss of one man wounded on the skirmish line. General Lee surrendered the whole Army of Northern Virginia on that day.

April 12.—The brigade was drawn up in line to receive the captured arms and colors. Remained at Appomattox until the 15th.

April 15.—The brigade took up line of march toward Burkeville, which was passed on the 17th. Remained in that vicinity until the 20th.

April 20.—Took up line of march along the South Side Railroad.

April 23.—Relieved troops of the Ninth Corps on the railroad near Sutherland's Station.

The brigade remained until April 30 employed in guarding the railroad, commissary, and quartermaster's stores, and as safeguards to the citizens residing in that vicinity.

May 2.—Broke camp at Sutherland's Station, and marched to Manchester, via Petersburg.

May 4.—Arrived at Manchester, and remained there until the 6th.

May 6.—Marched through Richmond, and took up line of march for May 12.—Arrived at Arlington Heights, where the brigade went camp, and has remained up to the 31st instant.

Second Division.

February 5.—The division marched from camp near Gurley house in the morning through the — road; reached Rowanty Creek at noon; found the enemy in some force intrenched upon the farther bank, but a sharp engagement dislodged him and effected a crossing for the cavalry and corps. Continued the march to the Vaughan house, where a strong position was taken up, the First and Second Divisions coming up upon the left and right. At 11 p. m. moved down the Vaughan [road] to breast-works near Hatcher's Run, arriving at daybreak. In the afternoon engaged the enemy, two brigades supporting the Third Division, near Dabney's Mill, and one holding the Vaughan road against the enemy attacking in force. At night encamped near Hatcher's Run; spent several days in work upon new lines.

February 11.—Came back a mile to this camp, where the division still remains.

[March.]—The division lay quietly in camp near Hatcher's Run until the 25th.

March 25.—The division was suddenly marched to the Gurley house and then to the lines of the Ninth Corps to assist in repelling an attack of the enemy. At night the division returned to its former position without having been engaged.

March 29.—In the morning the command broke camp at 3 o'clock and marched to Rowanty Creek, which was crossed without opposition. The march was continued to the junction of the Vaughan and Quaker roads, where the division halted for the night with the exception of the First Brigade, which was sent to re-enforce the First Division, engaged with the enemy on the Boydton plank road.

March 30.—Crossed the Boydton plank road, and in the afternoon made a reconnaissance in a northwesterly direction to the neighborhood of the Dabney house, on the White Oak road, and leaving there a strong picket.

March 31.—In the morning re-enforced the picket-line with the whole division, and soon after received orders to take the White Oak road and intrench upon it, the Third Division being sent as a support. An attack was accordingly made, but not attended with success, as the enemy was present in overwhelming numbers. The command, however, fell back in good order toward its supports, but they suddenly, and apparently without cause, withdrawing, was compelled to continue its retreat to the position occupied the previous night. Later in the day advanced with the rest of the corps to the White Oak road without opposition, the enemy having marched toward Dinwiddie. At 11 p. m. received orders to report immediately to General Sheridan, at Dinwiddie, and midnight and the close of the month found us making a difficult night march down the Boydton plank road.

April 1.—The division joined the cavalry forces under General Sheridan near Dinwiddie Court-House early in the morning, and later in the day took a prominent part in the battle of Five Forks, finding in its front the enemy strongly intrenched, but carrying the works and capturing nine battle-flags and over 1,000 prisoners. Brevet Brigadier-General Winthrop here fell mortally wounded just at the moment that it was evident that the victory was ours. The enemy were pursued some three miles that evening.

April 2.—Crossed Hatcher's Run and marched down the South Side Railroad toward Petersburg, bivouacking at night near Beverly Ford.

April 3.—It was discovered that the enemy had evacuated Petersburg, and from that time to the 9th the division was in close pursuit, sometimes with the Army of the Potomac and sometimes with the cavalry. Long and tiresome marches were made daily, but the division was not engaged until the morning of the 9th.

April 9.—The rebel Army of Northern Virginia surrendered. At this time the division had the good fortune to be advancing rapidly in line of battle, and the flag of truce preparatory to negotiations came through its skirmish line, which had already driven the enemy more than a mile, its left wing capturing a caisson and putting to flight a battery, while the right had advanced near to the town. After the surrender the division remained at Appomattox Court-House until the 15th.

April 15.—Marched to Burkeville and afterward encamped along the South Side Railroad, doing picket on that part of the road between Burkeville and Nottoway Court-House, the headquarters being at the latter place.

May 12.—The division reached the banks of the Potomac, having left Nottoway Court-House on May 1.

First Brigade, Second Division.

February 5.—The brigade broke camp near the Gurley house, Va.; marched down the Halifax road to Rowanty Creek, and lay in line of battle until midnight, when it moved back upon the Vaughan road and occupied a line of breast-works to the left of the road about a mile west of the run. About 1 p. m. moved out to the support of Gregg's cavalry, who were skirmishing heavily with the enemy; relieved the cavalry pickets. The enemy attempted to advance several times, but were repulsed. Being relieved by the First Brigade of the First Division, the brigade was ordered out on picket, where it remained until the afternoon of the 7th. It established camp soon after its being relieved from picket, about two miles to the right of the Vaughan road, where it has since then remained.

Second Brigade, Second Division.

February 5 (Sunday).—This brigade marched from its camp near the Gurley house at 7 a. m. in a westerly direction; crossed Hatcher's Run about noon of the same day, and proceeding until 4 p. m., took position at the Vaughan house, on the rebel military road. At 11 p. m. marched back to Hatcher's Run, taking position in breast-works at daylight.

February 6.—At 2 p. m. we followed Crawford's division, formed in line, and advanced into the woods; encountered the enemy; charged and drove him to Dabney's Mill; fought him in a brisk action until all the ammunition on the persons of the men was consumed, after which we were relieved by other troops. The engagement lasted two hours and a half, during which time we sustained a loss of 3 officers and 9 men killed, 3 officers and 85 men wounded, and 15 men missing. After several days' work throwing up intrenchments, the brigade, on the 11th, went into camp near Hatcher's Run, where it has remained during the balance of the month.

March 29.—Found the brigade on the march, in the center of the division, and after passing Rowanty Creek, about 9 a. m., it reached the Vaughan road about noon, after a march of eight or ten miles.

March 30.—Crossed Gravelly Run.

March 31.—Had a spirited engagement with the attacking enemy near White Oak road, being first forced to retreat, but afterward regaining the lost ground. The casualties were 8 men killed, 3 officers and 37 men wounded, and 72 men missing; aggregate, 120. Among the wounded was Brevet Brigadier-General Denison, the commander, upon whose retirement the command devolved on Col. R. N. Bowerman, Fourth Maryland Volunteers.

April 1.—Formed a junction with Sheridan's cavalry; attacked and carried the enemy's breast-works near Five Forks. Colonel Bowerman was wounded in the early part of the engagement, leaving the command with Col. D. L. Stanton, First Maryland Volunteers; also Captain Simon, brigade inspector, who was succeeded by Capt. L. R. Cassard, Eighth Maryland Volunteers. The casualties were 8 men killed, 7 officers and 52 men wounded, and 14 men missing; aggregate, 81. Many prisoners were captured and two battle-flags taken by this brigade. After this the brigade assisted in the pursuit of the retreating enemy, acting near to and mostly in conjunction with Sheridan's cavalry. The marching was rapid and sometimes fatiguing, but with the exception of one man wounded on the 9th no further casualties occurred until the surrender of Lee with the rebel army under his command, which terminated the campaign and virtually the war.

April 15 to 17.—From Appomattox Court-House, where this took place, the brigade marched back to near Nottoway Court-House, forty-four miles; went into camp and remained quietly until the end of the month.

April 30.—This brigade received marching orders.

May 1.—Left its camp near Nottoway Court-House, marching with the corps by way of Petersburg to the vicinity of Richmond.

May 4.—Arrived in camp near Manchester.

May 6.—Left and marched through Richmond; thence northward by way of Fredericksburg to Arlington Heights, where we went into camp May 13.

May 23.—Took part in the grand review of the army in the city of Washington.

May 31.—Three regiments of the brigade, viz, Fourth, Seventh, and Eighth, and a detachment of the First, mustered out under General Orders, No. 94, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office.

This closes the career of the Maryland Brigade, which was organized by General J. R. Kenly at Harper's Ferry and Maryland Heights in the winter of 1862 and 1863, and has been an integral part of the Army of the Potomac since July, 1863.

Third Brigade, Second Division.

February 5.—In the morning brigade moved in accordance with circular from headquarters Fifth Corps of the 4th instant, reaching Rowanty Creek about noon, where the enemy was found posted in strong works on the opposite bank. These works were taken by this brigade, capturing twenty-seven prisoners. After a short delay to cover the crossing of the remainder of the division, the brigade again advanced some three or four miles and took up position before dark on the left of Second Brigade. The march was again resumed at 11 o'clock, and continued until reaching the crossing of the Vaughan road at Hatcher's Run, where the brigade was massed in reserve.

February 6.—During the morning relieved the First Brigade in the works. In the afternoon engaged the enemy at Dabney's Mill, losing 8 officers and 62 men in killed, wounded, and missing.

March 24 [25].—The command moved from camp near Hatcher's Run, Va., to a position near the Gurley house, to assist in repelling an attack made on our lines in front of the Ninth Army Corps; were not called into action during the day; returned to our former position in the evening.

March 26 [29].—Broke camp about 4 a. m. and moved south toward Dinwiddie Court-House. Did not encounter the enemy during the day. Moved next day to Boydton plank road, it having been taken the day before by the Third Division, Fifth Corps.

March 31.—Advanced against the enemy. Succeeded in reaching to a short distance of the White Oak road. Advanced again during the afternoon and occupied the White Oak road, the enemy having marched from our front and attacked General Sheridan's cavalry near Dinwiddie Court-House. Colonel Sergeant, commanding Two hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, was wounded in the engagement of the 31st.

April 1.—The command moved in the morning to a point near Dinwiddie Court-House, where it halted until about 3 p. m., when an advance was ordered, the Fifth Corps attacking the enemy on the left flank, driving him with great impetuosity. This brigade captured many prisoners, 2 guns, 2 battle-flags, and several wagons and ambulances. General Wintrop, commanding First Brigade, was killed during one of the charges in the afternoon. Learned the next morning that the works in front of Petersburg and Richmond were captured by the Sixth and Ninth Corps. Started in the afternoon in the direction of the South Side Railroad, which was occupied the next day. Pushed on in the direction of the Danville road, capturing many guns, wagons, &c., along the route. Reached Danville road after three days' forced march, occupying Burkeville before the arrival of Lee, thereby heading him off from Danville. Lee started for Lynchburg, but, after four days' very heavy marching, we succeeded in getting between his army and Lynchburg, forcing him to surrender on the 9th instant. Remained near Appomattox Court-House until his army was all paroled, when we returned to Burkeville, and from there the corps moved to relieve the Ninth Corps along the South Side Railroad, where it still remains.

April 28.—The One hundred and fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers was consolidated with the One hundred and ninety-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, per Special Orders, No. 96, paragraph V, dated headquarters Third Brigade, Second Division, Fifth Corps.

May 1.—The command moved from Nottoway Court-House toward Petersburg, following the South Side Railroad.

May 3.—Passed through the city, continuing on toward Richmond.

May 4.—Reached that place, where we rested for one day.

May 6.—Passed through Richmond and continued on toward Washington.

May 12.—Arrived there.

May 23.—The Army of the Potomac was reviewed by the President and General Grant.

May 30.—The Two hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers was mustered out of service.

May 31.—They left for their State.

Third Division.

February 5.—Moved at 8 a. m.; crossed Rowanty Creek; from that to Gravelly Run; halted for the night; portion of division on picket duty.

February 6.—Moved at 4 a. m.; marched back to Hatcher's Run. At 2 p. m. division moved upon the enemy, and drove him to his works near Armstrong's or Dabney's Mill. The enemy being heavily re-enforced, in turn drove our line back to the run.

February 7.—Line again formed at 10 a. m. and advanced on the enemy, driving them from lines of rifle-pits into their main line of works. Heavy skirmishing continued during the entire day.

February 8.—Division principally on picket.

February 9.—Returned to former camp for baggage, &c.

February 10.—Marched to and established present camp near Halifax road.

March 29.—Division broke camp at Hatcher's Run and moved in a southwesterly direction, crossing Rowanty Creek; thence following Quaker road until vicinity of Boydton plank road was reached near Gravelly Run, where enemy was found; formed line of battle on left of First Division; deployed skirmishers, covering front of division. The enemy retreated before our advance.

March 30.—Moved to Boydton plank road, forming line parallel. Same day occupied in throwing up breast-works, behind which the troops lay during remainder of day and night.

March 31.—Line formed at 6.30 a. m. and moved out; followed Boydton plank road two miles, then filed to the right, halted, and massed in woods near an open field. The advance of Second Division checked by superior force of the enemy; fell back to prevent capture of division; line was again formed and further advance of the enemy successfully arrested.

April 1.—Moved from Gravelly Run. Action of Five Forks.

April 2.—Moved to Ford's Station and down the Namozine road. Engagement with enemy's rear guard at night.

April 3.—Moved to Sweat-House Creek.

April 4.—Moved to Jetersville.

April 6.—Moved through Paineville and to Sailor's Creek, near High Bridge, over the Appomattox River.

April 7.—Moved across the Appomattox River to Prince Edward Court-House.

April 8.—Moved to Evergreen Station.

April 9.—Moved to Appomattox Court-House. Lee's surrender.

April 15.—Moved east of Pamplin's Station.

April 16.—Moved to Farmville.

April 17.—Moved to headwaters of Little Sandy River, near Price's Station.

April 20.—Moved near Nottoway Court-House.

April 21.—Moved near Blacks and Whites Station, the command guarding the railroad from Nottoway to Wilson's Station.

May 1.—Moved from Blacks and Whites Station to Wilson's Station.

May 2.—Moved to Sutherland's Station.

May 3.—Marched through Petersburg to eight miles from Manchester.

May 4.—Marched to Manchester.

May 6.—Marched through Richmond to Peake's Turn-Out.

May 7.—Marched to Concord Church.

May 8.—Crossed the Mattaponi and marched to Milford Station.

May 9.—Marched to Fredericksburg, crossing the Rappahannock.

May 10.—Marched to Chopawamsic Creek, near Aquia Creek.

May 11.—Marched to near Fairfax Station.

May 12.—Marched to Ball's Cross-Roads and encamped.

[June.]—The division has remained in camp during the entire month.

First Provisional Brigade, Third Division.

February 14.—This brigade was organized from the Sixth and Seventh Wisconsin, the other regiments of the First Brigade, Third Division, having been sent north on duty. The regiments were, at the time, in their present location, and picket and fatigue duty and the erection of quarters have occupied the attention of both officers and men since that date.

First Brigade, Third Division.

March 3.—The Ninety-first New York Veteran Volunteers was assigned to this brigade by Special Orders, No. 55, headquarters Third Division.

March 15.—The term "provisional" was dropped from the designation of the brigade by Special Orders, No. 68, headquarters Third Division.

March 26 [25].—At 7 a. m. the brigade moved to the support of the Ninth Corps, and was halted near Warren's Station until about 4 p. m., when it moved to support the left of the Sixth Corps. After dark the brigade returned to camp.

March 29.—Early in the morning the brigade broke camp and marched to a point near the Boydton plank road.

March 30.—It moved to the plank road and threw up breast-works.

March 31.—Crossed the plank road, and, after advancing about a mile, was attacked by the enemy, and the line in front of this brigade breaking suddenly, allowing the enemy to advance before the brigade could be deployed, it was forced back across a creek in its rear. The battle-field was reoccupied during the day, and our line considerably advanced beyond it.

April 1.—The brigade took a prominent part in the action which secured the evacuation of Petersburg by breaking the South Side Railroad.

April 2.—Moved to the railroad, and on it toward Petersburg three or four miles; then took the Burkeville road west a distance of about five miles, where there was some skirmishing with the enemy.

April 3.—Moved on toward Burkeville and continued in the pursuit of Lee's army, being near Appomattox Court-House the 9th, when General Lee surrendered at that place. Remained until the 14th, for the terms of capitulation to be carried out. Returned by way of Farnville to Burkeville, encamping a few miles out toward Danville.

April 18 (about).—Were ordered to guard the Petersburg and Lynchburg Railroad.

April 20 and 21.—Marched to our present location.

Second Brigade, Third Division.

February 5.—Moved from camp on Jerusalem plank road at 7 a. m., marching south, crossing Rowanty Creek; from that to Gravelly Run far as Vaughan road; halted for the night, a portion of the brigade doing picket duty.

February 6.—Moved at 4 a. m.; marched back to Hatcher's Run. At 2 p. m. moved upon the enemy, and participated in the battle near Dabney's Mill.

February 7.—Line again formed at 10 a. m.; portion of brigade deployed as skirmishers and advanced on enemy, driving them from line of rifle-pits into the main line of works. Heavy skirmishing continued during the entire day. At 5 p. m. advance was ordered, but did not succeed in carrying the works, and returned to line held by skirmishers, stopping during the day. The brigade remained on this line until 1 a. m., when it marched back to Hatcher's Run.

February 8.—On picket duty during the entire day.

February 9.—Returned to former camp for baggage, &c.

February 10.—Marched to and established present camp near Halifax road.

March 7.—The Third Division, to which this brigade is attached, was reviewed by General Meade.

March 11.—Corps reviewed by General Meade.

March 16.—Corps reviewed by Secretary of War and Generals Meade and Warren.

March 23.—Brigade marched to temporarily occupy lines of First Division, Second Corps, absent on review.

March 25.—Brigade moved to support of Ninth Corps, whose works the enemy had attacked and partially carried. Attack repelled by Ninth Corps. Division reviewed by President Lincoln.

March 29.—Brigade broke camp near Hatcher's Run and moved in a southwesterly direction, crossing Rowanty Creek; then following Quaker road until vicinity of Boydton plank road was reached near Gravelly Run, where enemy was found. Brigade here formed line of battle on left of First Division; one regiment of brigade, deployed as skirmishers, covered front of brigade, connecting with skirmishers of First Division on right and Third Brigade on left. The enemy retreated before our advance and brigade bivouacked in an open field near Boydton plank road.

March 30.—Brigade moved to Boydton plank road, forming line parallel with same. Day occupied in throwing up breast-works, behind which the troops lay remainder of day and night.

March 31.—Line formed at 6.30 a. m., and moved out from works built on 30th. Followed Boydton road two miles, then filed to right, halted, and massed in woods near an open field; one regiment placed on picket, connecting with the picket-line of the Second Division on left, right resting on Gravelly Run. The advance of the Second Division, by superior force of enemy, fell back. To prevent capture brigade fell back across Gravelly Run, when line was again formed and further advance of the enemy was successfully arrested. At 3 p. m. moved again to left and front, crossing the run, recovering our wounded lost in the morning. At night brigade threw up breast-works to complete the line between Second Corps, on right, and First Division of the corps, on left, in rear of which works the brigade bivouacked for the night.

Commissioned officers killed and wounded during the month: Lieut. Col. H. M. Tremlett, Thirty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers; Capt. W. C. Kinsley, Thirty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers (since died); Lieut. Alpheus Thomas, Thirty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers; Capt. A. H. Van Deusen, Ninety-seventh New York Volunteers; all March 31.

April 1.—The morning found the brigade lying in rear of works built on night of 31st, near White Oak road. Line of battle formed in rear of works and marched in retreat to Gravelly Run Church, which place we reached about 3 p. m. Brigade was here formed in two lines, connecting with First Division on right, and on left with First Brigade, Third Division; advance of the entire line ordered at 3 p. m. The enemy's skirmishers were driven steadily before our advance.

On reaching White Oak road changed direction to left, moving parallel with the road. We flanked the enemy's works, driving them from them in confusion. Pursuit was continued until dark, when brigade moved back on White Oak road and bivouacked.

April 2.—Marched to Hatcher's Run; crossed South Side Railroad; struck the enemy's retreating column at midnight; distance marched, twenty-five miles.

April 3.—Continued in pursuit of enemy.

April 4.—Halted for night at Jetersville, on Danville railroad; works thrown up by Third Brigade, this division, in anticipation of an attack.

April 5.—Remained in bivouac during entire day.

April 6.—Formed line of battle at daylight and advanced against enemy, who hastily retreated.

April 7.—Continued pursuit of enemy. Halted for night at Prince Edward Court-House.

April 8.—Resumed march at 6 a. m.; halted at 2 a. m. following day; day's march, thirty-five miles.

April 9.—Made a rapid march of a few miles, and soon came in sight of our lines, engaged with enemy near Appomattox Court-House. The enemy exhibiting a flag of truce, a cessation of hostilities was ordered until 4 p. m., at which hour General Lee formally surrendered his command to General Grant.

April 10 to 14.—Remained in camp near Appomattox Court-House.

April 15.—Corps ordered to Burkeville Junction, which place we reached on the 17th.

April 20.—Corps ordered to relieve Ninth Corps in performance of duty on line of Danville railroad.

April 21.—Headquarters of brigade established near Blacks and Whites Station. Brigade performed patrol duty up to 30th.

May 1.—Broke camp near Blacks and Whites Station; marched to Wilson's Station.

May 2.—Resumed march at 6 a. m.; halted for night within five miles of Petersburg.

May 3.—Marched through Petersburg.

May 4.—Resumed march at — a. m.; reached Manchester at noon, and went into camp.

May 6.—Passed in review through Richmond.

May 12.—Reached vicinity of Alexandria and went into camp near Ball's Cross-Roads.

May 23.—Participated in grand review through streets of Washington.

Third Brigade, Third Division.

February 5.—In the morning, with a strength of 59 officers and 1,301 muskets, left camp on Lee's Mill road and marched fifteen miles, crossing Hatcher's Run at Armstrong's Mill.

February 6.—At 3 a. m. recrossed Hatcher's Run and engaged the enemy near Dabney's Mill; a severely contested battle-ground, from which we were withdrawn at dusk to the pits on the run, having lost 10 officers and 193 men killed and wounded.

February 7.—Made a demonstration on the enemy, meeting with a small loss.

February 8.—Recrossed Hatcher's Run, returning to old camp on the 10th.

February 11.—Changed camp to Colonel Wyatt's plantation, south of Church road, our left resting on Halifax road.

March 29.—In pursuance of previous orders, broke camp on Halifax road, reaching point near Boydton plank road about 1 p. m., where General Griffin had already engaged the enemy. Went into line on General Ayres' left. The One hundred and forty-seventh New York Volunteers, Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Dailey, and Fifty-sixth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers (consolidated), Major Laycock, having entered the line, immediately advanced, engaging enemy's skirmishers, driving them across the plank road, which road was permanently held at this point by brigade, and further, being first occupation of that road. After several changes of position, division massed for night where plank road was first struck, Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Dailey, One hundred and forty-seventh New York, picketing front at the Butler house.

March 30.—Remained without important change in same position, making several lines of works, finally adopting and erecting works on line of plank road. In morning Colonel Dailey's picket was advanced, left resting at Gravelly Run bridge, on plank road, and right connecting with General Griffin, with reserve at Butler's burnt house.

March 31.—Marched to Dabney's house, or Gravelly Run and near White Oak road. General Ayres' division (one brigade) went into line about three-quarters of a mile from White Oak road. By orders from division headquarters reported to General Ayres, and was shown position to be occupied by brigade short distance in rear of Second Division line. While going into position (right by file) preceding line had advanced and engaged the enemy, and before this brigade was or could be properly in position first line was returning, pressed by the enemy. About same time, of four battalions in position, three of the commanders (Lieutenant-Colonel Dailey, One hundred and forty-seventh New York Volunteers; Lieutenant-Colonel Warren, One hundred and forty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Major Fish, Ninety-fourth New York Volunteers) had been wounded. The enemy had also concentrated a fire on left flank. These causes, with the retiring of Second Division, compelled the falling back of this brigade; after several temporary intermediate formations of line, secured position on ridge occupied by First Division; here bivouacked for night.

April 1.—Marched from point near Boydton plank road, reaching Gravelly Run Church at 3 p. m., where line was formed. At 3.30 p. m. advanced, crossing White Oak road; continued advance without halting; enemy's works were soon crossed, and all resistance having ceased, division then returned to Gravelly Run Church, on White Oak road, and bivouacked for night.

April 2.—Crossed Hatcher's Run, following Church road to South Side Railroad. Followed railroad to crossing of Cox road, and from that point marched to forks of Namozine and River roads. Again moved along Namozine road, crossing Chandler's Run, to junction of Church, or Ford, and Namozine road; very late bivouacked for night.

April 3 to 9.—Brigade was not again actively engaged, duties being confined to a series of long and tedious marches over miserable roads, along which was found abundant evidence of rapid and fatiguing retreat of enemy.

April 9.—Reached Appomattox Court-House 8.30 a. m. Further movements were now arrested by reception of flag of truce, which eventuated in the capitulation, same day, of Army of Northern Virginia (rebel), General Lee, to Lieutenant-General Grant.

Artillery Brigade.

[February.].—Three of the batteries accompanied the corps in the late movement to Hatcher's Run, and remained in position on the new ground until the 25th.

February 25.—They were relieved and two batteries sent to do the duty. With this exception no new movement has been made by the command, the old camp having been preserved and three batteries kept on the Ninth Corps front in turn, as heretofore.

March 29.—No event of importance transpired previous to this date, when five batteries (B, Fourth United States, D and G, Fifth United States, B, D, and H, First New York) broke camp and accompanied the infantry of the corps. Battery B, Fourth United States, participated in the engagements of the 29th and 30th, on the Quaker and Boydton roads.

March 30 and 31.—Batteries D and G, Fifth United States, were also engaged in the same locality.

March 31.—[Battery] H, First New York, was also engaged near the Boydton plank road, as was also Battery D, First New York Artillery.

May 1.—The five batteries reported present were en route from Notoway Court-House to Richmond, via Petersburg, Va.

May 4.—Arrived at Richmond.

May 6.—Resumed march to Washington, via Hanover Court-House, Bowling Green, Fredericksburg, and Fairfax Court-House.

May 12.—Arrived at Washington. Since that date the command has been encamped, with main body of the corps, on Columbia turnpike, about three miles from Washington City.

SIXTH ARMY CORPS.

January.—No change of camp during the month.

[February.].—The corps remained in camp until the night of the 5th instant.

February 5.—The First Division was ordered to move to Hatcher's Run and report to Major-General Humphreys, commanding Second Corps.

February 6, 7, and 8.—This division [First] participated in the engagements at Dabney's Mill.

February 9.—Returned to camp.

February 7.—Pursuant to instructions contained in circular from headquarters Army of the Potomac (same date), a new disposition of the lines was effected, the corps now occupying the front line from Fort Howard, on the right, to Fort Gregg, on the left, inclusive. With these exceptions, no other events worthy of record occurred.

March 1 to 25.—Remained in camp near Petersburg, nothing unusual or worthy of record taking place until the morning of the 25th.

March 25.—The enemy made a desperate assault on a portion of the Ninth Corps front, gaining a temporary advantage, at which time the First Division was ordered to the support of that corps, but before it arrived at the point of attack the enemy had been repulsed and the lost ground regained. As soon as its services were no longer needed the division was ordered back. In the afternoon of the same day an attack was made on the intrenched picket-line of the enemy, in front of the corps, which was carried and held, some 650 prisoners being captured; not, however, without a desperate fight, in which the corps lost a considerable number of officers and men.

March 27.—Sharp picket-firing. At night the enemy regained one point of the line taken on the 25th. It was not thought advisable, however, to make any strenuous exertions to retake it.

March 28 to 31.—Nothing unusual occurred; troops held in readiness to move at a moment's notice.

April 1.—During the night the corps was massed near the Jones house, with a view of making an attack on the rebel works at daylight of 2d.

April 2.—Assaulted the rebel works at daylight. Carried them, cutting the rebel army in two, capturing numerous guns and prisoners; then moved in the direction of Hatcher's Run, toward the left, carrying the entire line to that point, when, turning toward Petersburg, the lines were, before night, moved close up to the rebel works at that place, preparatory to an assault the next morning. Losses in the day's operations, about 1,100 officers and men.

April 3.—The city having been evacuated during the night, its surrender was received by our forces shortly after daylight of this day, and in a short time the corps was in pursuit of the retreating Army of Northern Virginia, and encamped at night at Mount Pleasant Church, near Sutherland's Station, about ten miles from Petersburg.

April 4.—Moved at 4 a. m. and encamped about two miles from Wintomack Creek.

April 5.—Moved at 3 a. m. to near Jetersville Station and encamped.

April 6.—Moved at 6 a. m. in line of battle toward Amelia Court-House; no enemy being found, proceeded, in the direction of Deatonsville, to Sailor's Creek. Here, the enemy disputing our advance, a severe engagement followed, in which the right wing of the rebel Army of Northern Virginia was annihilated, many prisoners being taken, among whom were Lieutenant-General Ewell and Major-General Custis Lee, U. S. Army. The Second Division was not engaged. Our losses in this battle were about 412 officers and men.

April 7.—Continued the pursuit of the enemy, encamping near Farmville.

April 8.—Marched to New Store and encamped.

April 9.—Moved to Clover Hill, near Appomattox Court-House, where the remnant of the once formidable Army of Northern Virginia was surrendered.

April 10.—Remained at Clover Hill.

April 11.—Moved in the direction of Burkeville, which was reached on the 13th. Remained encamped near Burkeville until 23d.

April 23.—Moved to Keysville, in the direction of Danville.

April 24.—Marched from Keysville to Clark's Ferry, Staunton River.

April 25.—Marched from Clark's Ferry to Halifax Court-House.

April 26.—Marched from Halifax Court-House to Brooklyn.

April 27.—Marched from Brooklyn to Danville, which was surrendered on that day, with numerous arms, projectiles, and machinery for manufacturing arms, locomotives, &c. Distance marched from Burkeville to Danville (100 miles) was accomplished in four days and four hours. Total number of miles marched during the month, over 300.

April 27 to 30.—Remained at Danville.

May 1 to 16.—Remained encamped at Danville, Va. The First Division was stationed along the line of the railroad from Burkeville Junction to Sutherland's Station, near Petersburg, and the Ninth New York Heavy Artillery, of the Second Brigade, Third Division, was placed on the line of the Richmond and Danville Railroad, between Danville and Burkeville Junction, one company at each station.

May 16.—Broke camp and embarked on cars for Manchester.

May 17 to 22.—Troops arrived at Manchester and encamped near the town.

May 21.—Broke camp and took up line of march for Washington, being reviewed, in passing through Richmond, by Major-General Halleck.

May 29.—Reached Fredericksburg, Va.

May 30 and 31.—Continued the march in the direction of Washington.

First Division.

[February.]—Remained in camp until the night of the 5th.

February 5.—Orders were received to move to Hatcher's Run and report to General Humphreys, commanding Second Corps.

February 6, 7, and 8.—The division participated in the engagements at Dabney's Mill.

February 9.—Returned to its old camp along the main line, where it has remained up to the present time.

[March.]—Remained in camp near the Petersburg and Weldon Railroad until the morning of the 25th.

March 25.—The division moved to the right to the support of the Ninth Corps, a part of the front of which had been taken by the enemy. When midway between Hancock's and Meade's Stations, learned of the recovery of the captured work by our forces, at the same time received orders from the corps commander to remove to the left, deploy and cover the front between Forts Howard and Fisher, an interval of two miles, while the Second Division demonstrated opposite Fort Fisher. At 3 p. m. moved two brigades (the Second Brigade, General J. E. Hamblin, and the Third Brigade, Col. O. Edwards) to the support of the right of the Second Division. Advanced, capturing the enemy's skirmish pits, with nearly 300 prisoners. Intrenched a new line beyond the one captured; picketed the same, and returned the command to camp at midnight.

April 1.—Moved the division from camp near the Weldon railroad and massed it outside of Fort Welch, on the left, at midnight on the right of the corps.

April 2.—4.30 a. m., successfully assaulted, in conjunction with the balance of the corps, the enemy's works, capturing 10 guns, 6 colors, and 1,000 prisoners. Participated with the corps in the other engagements of that day, which caused the evacuation of Petersburg and Richmond.

April 3.—Moved west in pursuit of enemy, continuing the march until April 6, when the division was again successfully engaged at Little Sailor's Creek with Ewell's corps, capturing many colors and prisoners, including Generals Ewell and Custis Lee.

April 7 to 9.—Moved, via Farmville, Curdsville, and New Store, toward Appomattox Court-House. After the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, returned, via Farmville, to Burkeville and encamped.

April 23.—Moved, via Keysville and Halifax Court-House, to Danville, arriving there at 3 p. m. of April 27. During the month marched over 300 miles.

May 1.—Received orders to distribute the division from Danville north to Burkeville on the line of railroad, which were subsequently modified to read from Burkeville to Sutherland's, near Petersburg. This was accomplished by May 17—First Brigade from Sutherland's west to Wilson's Station, on South Side Railroad; Third Brigade from Wilson's Station to Nottoway Court-House, same railroad; Second Brigade from Nottoway Court-House to Burkeville, inclusive, same railroad.

May 17.—Commenced the movement of the division via Petersburg to Manchester, which was completed May 20.

May 21.—Marched second in order of the corps in review through Richmond before General Halleck. Commenced the march for Washington, encamping at night near Hanover Court-House.

May 25.—Continued the march toward Washington, via Fredericksburg, arriving at Wolf Run Shoals on the 31st.

June 2.—Arrived at Hall's Hill, near Ball's Cross-Roads, and encamped, and remained the balance of the month.

June 30.—By virtue of General Orders, No. 35, headquarters Army of the Potomac, June 20, the division was reorganized and embodied in the First Division, Provisional Corps.

First Brigade, First Division.

[February.]—Since last return the brigade has been encamped in the same position near Petersburg, Va.

[March.]—Since last return the brigade remained in camp at Parke's Station, Va., until the 25th, when it moved down to the right to support the Ninth Corps—then engaged with the enemy. It was not engaged. In the afternoon moved down again to the left, near Fort Wadsworth, where it remained until midnight, when it moved back to its old camp.

[April.]—Since last return this brigade has been in all of the engagements in which the Sixth Corps has participated.

Third Brigade, First Division.

April 2.—Charged the enemy's works in front of Petersburg, successfully carrying them, with a loss of 196 killed and wounded.

April 3.—Invested the city, and then with the rest of the division pursued the enemy in the direction of Amelia Court-House.

April 6.—Engaged in the battle of Little Saylor's Creek, routing the enemy at all points, losing 320 killed and wounded.

April 7 to 9.—Pursued the enemy toward Clover Hill, where the surrender of Lee's army was announced.

April 11.—Marched to Burkeville Station, via Farmville, and encamped until the 23d.

April 23.—Marched to Danville, Va., passing through Keysville, Halifax Court-House, and Brooklyn, arriving there on the 27th, and remained in camp up to the last of the month.

May 4.—Moved from Danville, Va., to Wilson's Station, on the South Side Railroad, and went into camp.

May 18.—Marched to Richmond, via Petersburg; thence to Washington, via Hanover Court-House, Chesterfield Station, Fredericksburg, and Fairfax Station, and encamped at Ball's Cross-Roads.

Second Division.

April 1.—11 p. m. the division left the camps occupied during last winter and massed in front of Fort Welch.

April 2.—4 a. m. charged and broke the enemy's line and moved to within a mile of Petersburg.

April 3.—Marched fourteen miles and bivouacked on Whippoonock Creek.

April 4.—Marched twelve miles across Winticomack Creek.

April 5.—Marched sixteen miles to near Jetersville Station.

April 6.—Marched to Sailor's Creek.

April 7.—Marched fourteen miles to Farmville.

April 8.—Marched fifteen miles to New Store.

April 9.—Marched ten miles to Clover Hill, near Appomattox Court-House, where Lee's army surrendered.

April 11.—Moved back to Farmville.

April 12.—Moved to Bush Creek.

April 13.—Moved to Burkeville Junction.

April 23.—Moved twenty-two miles to Keysville.

April 24.—Moved twenty miles to Staunton River.

April 25.—Moved twenty miles to Laurel Grove.

April 26.—Moved twenty miles to Brooklyn.

April 27.—Moved seventeen miles to Danville, which town was surrendered to the commanding officer Third Brigade, Second Division, Sixth Corps.

May 17.—Commenced embarking for Richmond part of Second Brigade.

May 18.—Part of Second Brigade left.

May 19.—Balance of First and Second Brigades left.

May 20.—Third Brigade and division headquarters embarked.

May 21.—Arrived at Manchester, Va.

May 24.—Passed through Richmond and marched twenty-one miles to Hanover Court-House.

May 25.—Marched fifteen miles to Chesterfield Station.

May 26.—Marched about ten miles.

May 29.—Marched twenty-one miles to Fredericksburg.

May 30.—Marched sixteen miles to Oak Hill.

May 31.—Marched seventeen miles to Wolf Run Shoals.

Third Division.

February 5.—The Second Brigade of this division was moved to that portion of the line formerly held by the First Division, Sixth Corps, which was sent to the left of the army.

February 7.—They were relieved in turn by the same troops, and then marched back to their original position.

February 9.—The Second Brigade was again moved at an early hour (in compliance with previous orders to extend the lines) in rear of the works occupied by the First Division, Second Army Corps, composing that portion of the line between Forts Fisher and Gregg, and which works they now occupy. During the remainder of the month no events of importance transpired.

March 1 to 24.—Nothing of importance occurred.

March 25.—The division was ordered under arms, and at 1 p. m. offensive operations were undertaken, which resulted in taking the rebel line of works held by their pickets.

March 26, 27, and 28.—Considerable skirmishing ensued.

March 30 and 31.—Received orders to be in readiness to move at a moment's notice. Maj. Aaron Spangler, One hundred and tenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, wounded March 25, 1865. No other casualties occurred among commissioned officers during the month.

April 1.—The command remained encamped near Patrick's Station.

April 2.—At 4 a. m. the division, with the corps, assaulted and carried the enemy's works in its front, capturing six battle-flags and several pieces of artillery, besides many prisoners.

April 3 to 5.—Pursued the enemy in direction of Burkeville Junction.

April 6.—Overtook and engaged a portion of the enemy at Sailor's Creek, where a severe battle ensued, which resulted in the complete rout of the enemy and capture of General Ewell and his command.

April 7 and 8.—Continued the pursuit in direction of Lynchburg.

April 9.—After marching some twelve miles the command was halted, where it remained until the news was received of Lee's surrender.

April 11 to 13.—Returned to Burkeville Junction and encamped in that vicinity.

April 23.—With the corps marched in direction of Danville, Va.

April 27.—Arrived at Danville and encamped southwest of the city.

April 28 to 30.—Remained in camp.

May 16.—Under orders the division broke camp near Danville, Va., and embarked on cars for Manchester.

May 17.—Arrived at Manchester and encamped near the town.

May 24.—Broke camp and took up line of march for Washington, being reviewed in passing through Richmond by Major-General Halleck.

May 29.—Reached Fredericksburg, Va.

May 30 and 31.—Continued the march in direction of Washington.

June 1.—Reached Fairfax Court-House.

June 2.—Marched to Bailey's Cross-Roads and went into camp, remaining there up to date [June 30].

First Brigade, Third Division.

[February.]—Nothing of importance to relate during the month. The headquarters and troops occupy the same position as when the last report was forwarded, viz, in front of Petersburg, Va., near Warren's Station, Weldon railroad.

April 2.—In the morning this brigade was placed in position, in three lines of battle, on the extreme left of the Sixth Corps, in front of Fort Welch, and distant from the enemy's picket-line about 150 yards. At 4.30 a. m. the entire corps charged the enemy's works and succeeded in carrying them. This brigade, on entering the works, wheeled to the left and charged down the enemy's lines toward Fletcher's Run, driving and capturing all before it. We captured 14 cannon, caissons, &c., and about 1,100 prisoners. We succeeded in reaching the South Side Railroad and held our position. This movement compelled the evacuation of Petersburg, and during the night the last of the army had left. The enemy were rapidly and closely pursued, and were met again near De tonsville, at Sailor's Creek. This brigade was again engaged, and, after a severe fight, succeeded in capturing nearly the entire force. The next morning [April 7] continued the pursuit and followed the enemy closely to near Clover Hill, where, on the afternoon of April 9, General Lee surrendered the entire Army of Northern Virginia.

April 11.—In the morning we commenced retracing our steps for Burkeville Junction, which place we reached on the afternoon of the 13th. Here we went into camp and remained until the 23d.

April 23.—We marched for Danville.

April 27.—This place [Danville] we reached about midday, when we went into camp, and where we are at the present time [April 30].

Second Brigade, Third Division.

February 1 to 4.—Troops of this command were encamped near Warren's Station, Va.

February 5.—The First Division, Sixth Army Corps, being absent on a reconnaissance, this brigade was directed to occupy the works formerly held by First Division, extending from Battery 24 to Fort Wadsworth, which was done.

February 7.—The First Division having returned from the reconnaissance, this brigade resumed its original position near Fort Keene.

February 9.—In obedience to orders received, the troops of this brigade broke camp and marched about one mile and a half to the left, and took position in the line of works previously occupied by First Division, Second Army Corps.

February 10 to 28.—No events of importance transpired worthy narration.

March 1 to 25.—The brigade remained encamped near Patrick's Station.

March 25.—Early in the morning the enemy attacked the right of the line of works held by the Army of the Potomac and gained a temporary advantage. This command was immediately ordered under arms and preparations were made for offensive movements. At 1 p. m. the One hundred and tenth and One hundred and twenty-second Ohio Volunteers were detached from the brigade and ordered to charge the enemy's picket-line, which they did in gallant style; but the nature of the ground being unfavorable for the maneuvering of troops, and the enemy being in considerable force, our troops were compelled to fall back. At 4 p. m. the brigade advanced, under a heavy fire of artillery and musketry, and succeeded in carrying the line of works held by the enemy's picket-line. Skirmishing was kept up until night.

March 26.—Slight skirmishing.

March 27.—Heavy skirmishing.

March 28 to 30.—Picket-firing kept up almost constantly.

March 31.—Received orders to be in readiness to move, which were afterward countermanded.

April 2.—This brigade took an active part in breaking the lines of the enemy in front of Petersburg.

April 3 to 5.—The enemy having retreated toward Lynchburg, this command, in conjunction with the rest of the army, participated in the pursuit of the rebels.

April 6.—This brigade was actively engaged with the enemy near Sailor's Creek about 4 p. m., resulting in the complete rout of the enemy.

April 9.—The news of Lee's surrender was received with much rejoicing by the troops of this command.

April 11 to 13.—Marched from the scene of Lee's surrender to Burkeville, where the troops encamped.

April 23.—Broke camp and took up the line of march with the division and corps in the direction of Danville.

April 27.—After nearly five days of hard marching, this command arrived at Danville, Va., and encamped near the city.

Artillery Brigade.

April 2.—Engagement in front of Petersburg.

April 3 to 6.—Pursued the enemy by the river route.

April 6.—Action at Sailor's Creek.

April 7 to 9.—Marched in pursuit of the enemy till near Clover Hill, Va., where Lee surrendered the Army of Northern Virginia.

April 11 to 13.—Returned to Burkeville Junction, via Farmville, where we encamped until morning of 23d.

April 23.—Marched in direction of Danville.

April 27.—Arrived at Danville, Va.

NINTH ARMY CORPS.

[January.]—The troops occupy same position as at date of last return, and no movement has taken place during the month.

[February.]—There has been no movement of the corps during the month except the Third Division.

February 5.—Third Division moved to the left near Hatcher's Run, where it remained under the orders of Major-General Humphreys until the evening of the 10th.

February 10.—It was relieved and returned to its former camp.

March 1 to 25.—Nothing unusual occurred along the lines of the corps.

March 25.—In the morning the enemy made a desperate assault on Fort Stedman, in front of the lines of the First Division, and succeeded, after determined resistance on the part of the garrison, in gaining temporary possession of it. The lines were firmly held on either side of the fort until the Third Division, Brevet Major-General Hartranft commanding, came up, when a charge was made by his division and a portion of the First Division, which soon resulted in the recapture of the fort and the capture of a large number of prisoners, besides inflicting upon the enemy a severe loss in killed and wounded while being driven back to his works. Our loss was comparatively small.

Everything remained as usual during the remainder of the month, with the exception of more continued artillery firing.

April 1.—Corps occupied the trenches before Petersburg, Va.

April 2.—Engaged in the general assault upon the enemy, principally upon the works in front of Fort Sedgwick.

April 3.—Marched through Petersburg in pursuit of Lee's retreating army, excepting First Division, which was left to guard the South Side Railroad from Petersburg to Blacks and Whites Station, extending to the latter place.

April 15.—The Second Brigade, Second Division, moved as far as Burkeville, and the First Brigade to Farmville. The Third Division remained at Nottoway Court-House, which place it reached on the 8th.

April 20.—Corps ordered to Washington, D. C., and started at once for City Point for embarkation.

April 21.—The First Division arrived at Alexandria, Va.

April 25.—The Third Division arrived.

April 26.—The Second Division arrived. The First Division moved through Washington and encamped near Tennallytown, D. C.

First Division.

March 1.—This command occupied the trenches on the right of the Army of the Potomac—its right resting on the Appomattox River, its left extending nearly to Fort Rice, on the left of Baxter road. It garrisoned on its front eight inclosed works, batteries, and the curtains between. There was also a picket on the Appomattox, extending down the river three miles. There was no movement or change of troops on this front, or anything beyond the usual routine of garrison duty and the fire of artillery and musketry, from which some casualties resulted, until the morning of the 25th.

March 25.—At 4.15 a. m. the enemy assaulted our center in front of Fort Stedman, which they carried, after a stubborn resistance on the part of the garrison. The division temporarily lost possession of one inclosed work and a battery, but holding the rest of its lines steadily, at first were entirely occupied in repelling the repeated attacks of the enemy on other points, and finally, assuming the offensive, with the help of the Third Division, Ninth Army Corps, pressed the enemy and recaptured the works they had lost at 8.30 a. m. without loss of a gun or color. Our capture amounted to 1,005 officers and men prisoners, and 7 stand of colors; our losses, 648 officers and men. The lines were instantly re-established, the Third Division (General Hartranft) occupying Fort Stedman.

March 26.—One-half of Hartranft's troops relieved.

March 27.—The Eighteenth New Hampshire Volunteers assigned and were put on the line, relieving the rest of Hartranft's command.

March 29.—Enemy opened with their artillery and musketry with the utmost rapidity at 10.15 p. m. Firing was kept up until 1.15 [a. m.] March 30. Two attempts were made on the part of the enemy to form for a charge, but their line was broken up by our artillery and musketry. Some temporary movements of the troops of this division occurred during this disturbance, to meet threatened points.

March 31.—Preparations carried out to assault the enemy's works in the morning, if opportunity offered.

April 1.—Division in the trenches before Petersburg, extending from the Appomattox to Norfolk railroad (two miles), and picketing the river; under marching orders. During the night demonstrations made upon enemy's lines.

April 2.—General assault on enemy's works in front of Petersburg; First Brigade massed in front of Fort Sedgwick, reporting to General Hartranft; Second and Third Brigades, with Fifty-first Pennsylvania, of First Brigade, making demonstrations at 4 a. m. along the whole division line; fighting throughout the day.

April 3.—Division enters Petersburg; city authorities surrender to Colonel Ely, commanding Second Brigade, and his flags are first of all the army raised in the city.

April 5.—Division marches to Sutherland's Station, on South Side Railroad, guarding railroad to Cox road.

April 6.—Division extended to Wilson's Station.

April 13.—Moved to Wellville.

April 15.—Moved to Blacks and Whites and began throwing up works at Ford's, Wilsons, and Blacks and Whites Stations.

April 20.—Marched for City Point to embark for Washington.

April 22, 23, and 24.—Disembarked at Alexandria; encamped at Fowle's farm.

April 26.—Marched through Washington and encamped near Tennallytown, D. C.

[May.]—Division encamped near Tennallytown, D. C. Detached regiments on guard duty in Washington, D. C.

First Brigade, First Division.

[January.]—The regiments of this brigade have not changed their positions in the trenches in front of Petersburg, Va. The troops have been engaged in picket and trench guard duty, repairing picket-line and covered ways.

[March.].—The regiments have not changed their position in the trenches in front of Petersburg.

March 25.—In the morning the enemy attacked that portion of the line occupied by the Third Brigade. As soon as the nature of the move was ascertained two regiments of this brigade (Thirty-seventh Wisconsin and One hundred and ninth New York Volunteers), lying in reserve in rear of Fort Morton, were ordered to take up their line in the right of this brigade, in order to repulse the enemy should they turn the flank of the Third Brigade, but were finally driven back and the line reoccupied.

The troops have been engaged in picket and trench guard duty, repairing picket-line and covered way.

April 1.—In the night a demonstration was made on the rebel lines, in front of the position occupied by this brigade, in front of Petersburg, Va. The rebels were found in force, and no determined attack was made.

April 2.—Before daybreak the whole brigade, with the exception of the Fifty-first Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, which was ordered to hold the line occupied by the brigade, made an assault on the work of the enemy to the right of Fort Sedgwick. Their line was carried with great gallantry, five pieces of artillery were captured, also the entire garrison of Fort Mahone—some 400 officers and enlisted men. The lines were held during the day and night.

April 3.—At an early hour in the morning the brigade entered Petersburg, the city being evacuated by the enemy during the night. The loss from the brigade was 25 killed, 150 wounded, and 7 missing.

April 5.—Took up line of march along the South Side Railroad, marching to within two miles of Blacks and Whites Station, arriving there on the 9th instant, where the brigade remained engaged in guarding railroad, doing camp and guard duty, and throwing up inclosed works at the station.

April 20.—In the morning the brigade took up its line of march to City Point, arriving at that place on the morning of the 22d; embarked immediately on transports for Washington.

April 24.—In the morning arrived at Alexandria, Va. The brigade went into camp about three miles from the city.

April 26.—In the morning the brigade took up the line of march for Washington, arriving at 4 p. m., and encamping at Tennallytown, about four miles from the city, where the troops still [April 30] remain.

Second Brigade, First Division.

[March.].—The command has remained in camp at its old position, in front of Petersburg, Va., near the Appomattox.

March 25.—The line of the Third Brigade of this division was carried by the enemy, and the works known as Battery No. 10 and Fort Stedman captured. They also assaulted Battery No. 9 (garrisoned by troops of this brigade), but were severely repulsed after a brisk battle of about three hours. The enemy withdrew in haste to his own line of works, having been severely punished for his temerity. In this engagement the brigade captured 16 rebel commissioned officers and 316 men, rank and file. The action commenced at about 4 a. m.

March 29.—Late at night there was brisk artillery and musketry firing on the line, which continued till nearly morning of the 30th. There was no advance made by either party, however, and the only result was a few casualties.

April.—The brigade was actively engaged in the battles resulting in the capture of Richmond and Petersburg, Va.

April 3.—The brigade was the first to occupy Petersburg in the morning. The flag of the First Michigan Sharpshooters was unfurled on the court-house dome at 4.28 a. m., and was the first Federal flag hoisted in the city.

April 5.—The command left Petersburg, and until April 20 were occupied in picketing the South Side Railroad, guarding private property, &c., with headquarters established seventeen miles from Petersburg, on the aforesaid railroad.

April 20.—Were ordered to proceed via City Point and transports to Washington, D. C.

April 23.—Arrived at latter place.

Second Division.

[March.]—No change has taken place in the position of this division since last report.

April 1 and 2.—Engaged with the enemy before Petersburg.

April 3.—Followed the enemy's retreat through Petersburg along the line of South Side Railroad.

April 8.—Reached Burkeville Junction. The First Brigade was advanced to Farmville, remaining at that point until all U. S. forces had been withdrawn across the Appomattox to the vicinity of Burkeville.

April 21.—Commenced move to Washington, via City Point.

April 26.—Reached and encamped near Alexandria, Va., where the division is now stationed.

[May.]—No change has taken place in the position of this division since last monthly return.

First Brigade, Second Division.

[January.]—Engaged in siege operations before Petersburg, Va.

April 2.—Engaged with the enemy, and, with the Second Brigade of this division, assaulted and carried Fort Mahone, before Petersburg, Va.

April 3.—Passed through Petersburg, Va., and encamped ten miles from this place; proceeded as guards for wagon trains and prisoners of war.

April 10.—Arrived in Farmville, Va., at which place the brigade did guard and provost duty.

April 20.—Left this place en route for Alexandria, Va.

April 24.—Arrived at City Point, Va.; embarked on the eve of April 26.

April 28.—Arrived at Alexandria, Va., and went into camp about one mile from town, near Fort Lyon.

Third Division.

February 1 to 5.—Remained in camp as reserves to the First and Second Divisions, Ninth Army Corps, from Appomattox to Fort Howard.

February 5.—The division was moved to the left to the vicinity of Hatcher's Run, where it remained under the orders of Major-General Humphreys, commanding Second Army Corps, until the evening of the 10th.

February 10.—It was relieved and returned to camp, where it still remains.

During the month large fatigue details have been kept at work repairing the works and defenses on rear line, and much attention has been given to the drill and discipline of the command.

[March.]—During the month this division remained in its old position in support of the line held by the troops of the First and Second Divisions of the Ninth Army Corps.

March 11 to 20.—The whole command was engaged in constructing a new rear line of works, cutting and putting up abatis, &c., from Fort Prescott to Fort Bross. Large fatigue details were also kept at work during the month repairing the inclosed works on the rear line of defense.

March 25.—Every regiment in this division took part in the successful repulse of the enemy at Fort Stedman and Batteries 11 and 12. The loss in the command in killed and wounded was 259.

April 1.—At night this division was under arms preparing for the grand attack, which was made before daylight on the morning of the 2d on Fort Mahone, one of the strongest works of the defenses of Petersburg.

April 3.—The division marched through the city of Petersburg and encamped about five miles from the town.

April 4 to 8.—The pursuit of Lee was prosecuted, and this division performed rear-guard duty, marching toward Burkeville by the South Side Railroad.

April 8.—Encamped at Nottoway Court-House, and remained until the 20th.

April 20.—We were ordered to City Point. We marched in the morning and encamped at Wellville.

April 21.—At night headquarters were established at Five Forks.

April 22.—Arrived at Petersburg.

April 23.—Reached City Point and immediately embarked in transports for Alexandria.

April 25.—Arrived there and encamped about two miles from the city.

May 1.—A camp near Alexandria, Va., and remained during the month.

May 30 and 31.—The Two hundredth, Two hundred and fifth, Two hundred and seventh, Two hundred and eighth, Two hundred and ninth, and Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers were mustered out of service under the provisions of Special Orders, No. 22, headquarters District of Alexandria and Ninth Army Corps, based on War Department telegrams of May 17 and 18, 1865.

First Brigade, Third Division.

March 1 to 25.—Remained in camp as reserves to the First and Second Divisions, Ninth Army Corps, from the Appomattox to Fort Howard. During this time large fatigue details have been kept at work repairing Fort Bross and the defenses on the rear line.

March 25.—At 4.30 a. m. the enemy advanced and captured Fort Stedman and the adjacent batteries. The brigade was marched forward to support the First Division, Ninth Army Corps. The movements of the Two hundredth and Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers were personally directed by General Hartranft. These regiments were stationed on the right of the line, in front of the camp of the Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers. The Two hundredth and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers went into position near Fort Haskell. The regiments charged on Fort Stedman and the batteries (now in possession of the enemy), in connection with the Second Brigade, assisting to recapture Fort Stedman and batteries, with a loss of 2 officers and 16 men killed, 14 officers and 190 men wounded. The brigade returned to camp, where it still remains.

[April.]—Detailed reports of the part taken by this brigade in the capture of parts of the enemy's works in front of Petersburg on April 1 and 2, with lists of casualties, have already been forwarded.

April 3.—Before daylight the brigade passed over the fortifications in columns of regiments and entered the city. On the same day, after returning to camp, the troops took up the line of march along the Burkeville road and acted as a guard for the South Side Railroad and wagon trains, making short marches and placing pickets successively on the different parts of the road as the column advanced.

April 9.—Reached Nottoway Court-House, where we remained until the 20th.

April 20.—Orders were received for the Ninth Army Corps to go to City Point.

April 21 and 25.—The brigade embarked on transports for Washington, but was landed at Alexandria, Va., and has remained near the city last named until the present time.

Second Brigade, Third Division.

February 5.—The brigade moved to the left of the line for the purpose of aiding in the endeavor to extend the line. Reached its destination at 10 p. m. of the 5th, and at once threw up a strong breast-work in its front.

February 6, 7, 8, and 9.—The troops of the brigade were engaged in felling timber, constructing corduroy roads, bridges, &c.

February 10.—Returned to camp during the night. Since that time no movement of any importance has occurred.

[March.]—Nothing worthy of mention occurred until the 14th.

March 14.—The brigade was ordered to throw up a rear line of works, extending from Fort Prescott to a point about one mile in rear of the fort; this occupied three days.

March 25.—The brigade was engaged in the battle at Fort Stedman and in a charge on that work, which was occupied by the enemy; retook it, capturing about 850 prisoners, 3 battle-flags, and between 200 and 300 stand of small-arms. The entire loss in the brigade was 2 enlisted men killed, 2 commissioned officers, and 34 enlisted men wounded.

April 2.—In the morning the brigade charged the enemy's works in front of Fort Stedman; captured them and held them until the morning of the 3d.

April 3.—The enemy having retreated, the brigade went into Petersburg. Making short marches each day, the brigade reached Burkeville Station about the 16th. After doing all kinds of duty there for six days it was ordered to Nottoway Court-House, and from there to City Point. From the latter place the brigade came by water to Alexandria, Va., its present camp, arriving here about the 26th.

CAVALRY CORPS.

Second Division.

January 1.—Thirteenth Ohio Cavalry assigned to Third Brigade. Nothing unusual occurred during the month. Drill daily, and scouting parties sent out every day. The command pickets from Jerusalem plank road to James River on left and rear of the army.

February 1, 2, 3, and 4.—Quiet.

February 5.—The division moved out at 3 a. m. to Dinwiddie Court-House without finding the enemy in any considerable force.

February 6.—Formed junction with infantry on right at Gravelly Run. Engaged the enemy and drove them across the run and held the position.

February 7.—Engaged in skirmishing all day successfully.

February 8.—Returned to camp. Received Order No. 57, War Department, accepting resignation of Brevet Major-General Gregg.

February 9.—General Gregg relieved of command.

February 10.—General Gregg left the command, and Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. I. Gregg assumed command.

February 11 to 20.—Quiet.

February 21.—Division received orders to move out at 3 p. m.; 6 p. m., reported at headquarters Army of the Potomac; 8 p. m., returned to camp.

February 22.—Quiet.

February 23.—Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry relieved from duty with this division, per Special Orders, No. 51, Army of the Potomac.

February 24.—Twenty-first Pennsylvania Cavalry transferred from Third to Second Brigade of this division. Brigadier-General Davies returned from leave and assumed command of division.

February 25 to 28.—Quiet, nothing worthy of note occurring.

March 1.—Division encamped near Petersburg, Brig. Gen. H. B. Davies commanding; Col. H. H. Janeway commanding First Brigade, Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. I. Gregg commanding Second Brigade, and Bvt. Brig. Gen. O. H. Smith commanding Third Brigade.

March 2 to 26.—Quiet, nothing unusual occurring.

March 27.—General Crook assumed command of the division; assigned by Special Orders No. 78, March 27, headquarters Army of the Potomac.

March 28.—Quiet.

March 29.—At 6 a. m. the division moved out with First and Third Divisions, under Major-General Sheridan, to Dinwiddie Court-House.

March 30.—In camp at Dinwiddie Court-House.

March 31.—The division moved out at an early hour and engaged the enemy, driving him back. The engagement continued until about 6 p. m., when we fell back to the Court-House, having been without ammunition for some time.

First Brigade, Second Division.

[January.]—During the month the brigade has been in camp at Westbrook's house, Va., one mile west of McCann's Station, on the Petersburg and Norfolk Railroad, and engaged in picket and scouting duty.

[March.]—Nothing of interest occurred worthy of notice during the month, the brigade being engaged in its usual picket and scouting duty.

until the 29th a. m., when the brigade broke camp, taking up its line of march, in the center of the division, en route for Dinwiddie Court-House, Va., via Reams' Station, Weldon railroad, arriving at that point early in the p. m., encamping for the night near this point.

March 30.—P. m. moved to the left, encamping in a field near Chamberlain's Creek, standing ready for action, though not called on.

March 31.—P. m. were heavily engaged with the enemy near Chamberlain's Creek, and after a severely contested struggle the command was compelled to fall back to the grounds near the point occupied on the night of the 29th, where the command was reformed and encamped near this point for the night.

[April.]—The brigade has been in active duty all the month and took an active part in the evacuation of Petersburg and Richmond, Va., and the surrender of General Robert E. Lee to General U. S. Grant.

April 5.—The brigade made a reconnaissance in the enemy's rear, striking their wagon train near Paineville Cross-Roads, capturing 320 white prisoners, 310 colored teamsters, 11 battle-flags, 5 pieces of artillery and teams, and 1 caisson, 310 mules; also burning over 200 headquarters ammunition and ambulance wagons and caissons.

April 6.—In the engagement of that day the command captured 750 prisoners of war, 2 battle-flags, and 2 guns.

Was present with the corps in the march to South Boston, Va., and return to Petersburg, Va.

Second Brigade, Second Division.

May 1.—The command moved from Moseley's Ferry on the Staunton River, and returned to Petersburg and went into camp, where it remained until the 9th instant, when it marched to Lynchburg, via Burkeville, &c.

May 15.—Reached Lynchburg.

The command has since been on duty in Lynchburg and the counties of Nelson, Amherst, Appomattox, Campbell, Bedford, comprising the military Sub-District of Lynchburg, Va.

SECOND PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY.

January 1.—One battalion, which was on picket on Quaker road, returned to camp.

January 2, 3, 4, and 5.—In camp. Forage scarce.

January 6.—One battalion of regiment went on scout on Quaker and Norfolk roads; returned in evening of same day.

January 7, 8, and 9.—In camp.

January 10.—Went on picket on Quaker road.

January 11 and 12.—On picket.

January 13.—Returned from picket.

January 14.—In camp. Forage still scarce.

January 15.—Inspected by Brevet Brigadier-General Gregg, at 11.30 a. m.

January 16.—Detachment of two officers and seventy-six men went on picket.

January 17 and 18.—Remainder of regiment in camp. Camp guard doubled, with a view to prevent stealing and other depredations.

January 19.—Detachment of two officers and seventy-six men returned from picket.

January 20, 21, and 22.—In camp, engaged in building troughs for horses.

January 23 and 24.—Engaged in fencing camp.

January 25.—One commissioned officer and six enlisted men went on recruiting service.

January 26 and 27.—In camp.

January 28.—Regiment went on picket, with exception of one company and pioneers.

January 29 and 30.—On picket.

January 31.—Return to camp. Receive a larger supply of forage.

February 1 and 2.—Regiment in camp.

February 3.—A detail of two commissioned [officers] and sixty-seven men went on picket; remainder of regiment in camp, preparing for inspection.

February 4.—Regiment inspected by brigade commander, 1.30 p. m., mounted; regiment received orders to be in readiness to march.

February 5.—Regiment marched at 1.30 a. m.; dismounted men remaining in camp. Moved toward left, passing by Reams' Station at day-break. Encountered the enemy at 10 a. m. at Rowanty Creek. Charged them mounted, and, in company with Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, drove them from their works. Lost in the skirmish as follows: 1 killed, 2 wounded, 1 missing. Regiment was out beyond Dinwiddie Court-House.

February 6.—Regiment detailed a guard for wagon train.

February 7 and 8.—Still at the front.

February 9.—Regiment returned to camp.

February 10 to 15.—In camp.

February 16, 17, and 18.—Regiment on picket.

February 19.—Returned to camp.

February 20.—Inspected by Captain Hoslop, acting brigade inspector.

February 21.—In camp.

February 22.—Started from camp late in the evening; supposed to be going on raid. Returned to await further orders.

February 23, 24, and 25.—Regiment in camp. Received forty recruits from depot.

February 26.—Received ninety recruits from depot.

February 27.—Went on picket.

FOURTH PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY.

January.—During the month the regiment was on picket twice, and during the month did nothing but picket duty.

February 5, 6, and 7.—Regiment took part in the engagement Hatcher's Run. Loss, 1 officer [and] 28 men killed, wounded, & missing.

March.—During the month the regiment was on picket twice; made two scouts.

March 29.—Broke camp on Jerusalem plank road.

March 31.—Participated in the engagement at Dinw' House.

[April.]—Engaged in battles of Paine's Cross-Roads, Sailor's Creek, Farmville, and Appomattox Court-House.

EIGHTH PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY.

January 1 to 6.—In camp.

January 7.—Went on picket on Lee's Mill road.

January 8 and 9.—On picket.

January 10.—Relieved from picket. Commenced changing camp to a better locality.

January 10 to 21.—Preparing new camp for the reception of the regiment.

January 22.—Regiment inspected by brigade inspector and Major Starr, acting assistant inspector-general, Army of the Potomac.

January 25.—One commissioned officer and six enlisted men left for Harrisburg on recruiting service. Regiment went on picket.

January 26 and 27.—On picket.

January 28.—Relieved, and returned to camp.

January 27 to 29.—In camp.

January 29.—Brigade reviewed by Brevet Brigadier-General Gregg, commanding.

January 30 and 31.—In camp.

February 1.—Command received orders to move at 3 a. m.

February 5.—Regiment moved from camp, taking the plank road to Gary's Church; thence, via Wood's Shops, to Reams' Station. Crossed Rowanty Creek. The regiment then took the advance and charged into Dinwiddie Court-House, capturing 9 wagons and 50 team mules with 10 prisoners. Moved back to Rowanty Creek and camped.

February 6.—At 1 a. m. regiment moved out on the advance, marching on the old stage road to the Quaker road; thence back toward Hatcher's Run. The regiment was engaged dismounted, and in to the left, charging the enemy, driving him toward Gravelly Run.

February 7.—Command remained standing to horse all day.

February 8.—Moved to Yellow House, then went on picket; was relieved 9 p. m.

February 9.—Command moved back to camp.

Remainder of month the regiment has been in camp performing picket duty, &c.

March 1 to 5.—In camp.

March 6.—Went on picket.

March 9.—Relieved from picket and returned to camp.

March 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14.—In camp. Drill morning and evening.

March 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20.—In camp.

March 21.—Went on picket.

March 23.—Relieved and returned to camp.

March 24 [25].—Enemy made heavy attack in front of Petersburg; were repulsed.

March 25, 26, 27, and 28.—In camp, preparing to move under marching orders.

March 29.—Left camp 5 a. m. and marched to Rowanty Creek. Built bridge and crossed over. Advanced to Dinwiddie Court-House and camped.

March 30.—Remained in camp.

March 31.—Left camp and advanced to support of Third and First Brigades. Hard fighting all day. Retired at night to Dinwiddie Court-House and camped for night. Loss heavy.

April 1.—Command moved from Dinwiddie Court-House; attacked and drove the enemy.

April 2.—Command moved at 1 a. m. to South Side Railroad and went into camp.

April 3.—Marched to McKenzie's Creek and bivouacked.

April 4.—On to the Danville railroad and bivouacked near Jeters-

April 5.—Attacked the enemy, but was repulsed.

- April 6.*—Moved to Sailor's Creek; attacked and drove the enemy.
April 7.—Moved to Farmville; crossed Appomattox River; attacked the enemy. Recrossed and moved to Prospect Station and bivouacked.
April 8.—Moved toward Lynchburg. Regiment on picket; bivouacked near Appomattox Station.
April 9.—Moved toward Lynchburg and attacked the enemy. Lee surrendered the Army of Northern Virginia. Command bivouacked near Appomattox Court-House.
April 10.—Command moved toward Burkeville and bivouacked.
April 11.—Command moved to Burkeville; camped.
April 12.—In camp.
April 13.—Moved to Nottoway Court-House; camped.
April 17.—Moved toward Petersburg; camped near Wilson's Station.
April 18.—Moved to Petersburg and camped.
April 19 to 21.—In camp.
April 24.—Moved to Nottoway River and bivouacked.
April 25.—Moved to Roanoke Creek.
April 26.—Moved to near Boydton and camped.
April 27.—Moved through Boydton; crossed Staunton River and bivouacked.
April 28.—Moved to South Boston; crossed Dan River and bivouacked.
April 29.—Moved back to Staunton River; crossed at Moseley's Ferry and bivouacked.
April 30.—Moved at 12 m.; crossed branch of Meherrin River and bivouacked.

THIRTEENTH PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY.

- January 1.*—Went on picket east of Norfolk railroad.
January 4.—Relieved and returned to camp.
January 19.—Went on picket east of Norfolk railroad.
January 22.—Relieved and returned to camp.
January 31.—In camp.

SIXTEENTH PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY.

- January 1 to 8.*—In camp, performing various camp duties. Regular Sunday inspection on 1st and 8th.
January 9.—Regiment went foraging about half a mile south of Disputanta Station, Va., in compliance with circular order from headquarters Second Cavalry Division, dated January 7, 1865. The rear guard was fired into by guerrillas, killing 2 men and wounding 3. Returned same p. m.
January 10, 11, and 12.—In camp.
January 13.—Three hundred men and fifteen officers went on picket.
January 14 and 15.—On picket.
January 15.—Three officers and eighty-one men went on picket. Three hundred men and fifteen officers returned from picket.
January 17.—Monthly inspection.
January 18.—Three officers and eighty-one men returned from picket.
January 19 to 28.—In camp, performing usual duties.
January 29.—Brigade reviewed by Brevet Brigadier-General Gregg, commanding.
January 30.—In camp.

January 31.—Fifteen officers and 300 men went on picket.

Two drills a day have been had whenever the weather would permit.

February 1 and 2.—On picket.

February 3.—Relieved from picket.

February 4.—Received marching orders.

February 5.—Marched with division to Dinwiddie Court-House, via Reams' Station. Crossed Hatcher's Run at Malone's Bridge. Surprised and captured a wagon train and a small squad of prisoners on Boydton plank road. Countermarched and returned to near Malone's Bridge; camped at 11 p. m.

February 6.—Took up line of march 2 a. m.; marched to Gravelly Run. Formed line of battle. Brisk skirmish commenced 10 a. m. Regiment not engaged till 2 p. m. Relieved at dark and camped.

February 7.—In line of battle from morning till night.

February 8.—Moved by way of Yellow Tavern to Reams' Station. Picketed the Reams' Station and Dinwiddie roads. Relieved 9 p. m.; camped near Yellow Tavern.

February 9.—Returned to camp.

February 10 to 18.—In camp.

February 19, 20, and 21.—On picket.

February 22.—Returned to camp.

February 23 to 28.—In camp.

March.—In winter quarters during the month up to 28th. Guard mounting, dress parade, and drill kept up as regular as practicable.

March 29.—Broke camp.

March 31.—Participated in engagement at Dinwiddie Court-House, Va.

April 1.—In action near Cat Tail Creek, Va., and marched to within two miles of Boydton plank road.

April 2.—Marched to near Sutherland's Station, via Ford's Station.

April 3.—Marched to Namozine Creek.

April 4.—Marched, via Amelia Court-House, to Jetersville.

April 5.—In action at Amelia Springs.

April 6.—In action near Sailor's Creek.

April 7.—In action near Farmville; p. m. marched to Prospect Station.

April 8.—Marched to near Appomattox Station.

April 9.—In action near Appomattox Court-House.

April 10.—Marched to Prospect Station.

April 11.—Marched to Sandy River via Prince Edward Court-House.

April 12.—Marched to Burkeville Junction.

April 13.—Marched to Nottoway Court-House.

April 14, 15, and 16.—In camp.

April 17.—Marched to near Ford's Station.

April 18.—Marched to Petersburg.

April 19 to 23.—In camp.

April 24.—Marched to Dinwiddie Court-House.

April 25.—Marched to within twenty-eight miles of Boydton, on Boydton plank road.

April 26.—Marched to within one mile and a half of Boydton.

April 27.—Marched to and crossed Staunton River at Russell's Ferry.

April 28.—Marched to South Boston; crossed Dan River.

April 29.—Marched to and crossed Staunton River at Moseley's Ferry.

April 30.—Marched to and crossed the Meherrin River. Camped on Lynchburg Court-House road.

TWENTY-FIRST PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY.

February 5, 6, and 7.—Regiment participated in a move on the left at Hatcher's Run.

February 8.—Returned to camp; casualties, 2 men wounded.

February 25.—Regiment was transferred from Third Brigade to Second Brigade per Special Orders, No. 40, paragraph V, dated February 25, headquarters Second Division, Cavalry Corps.

March 29.—Regiment broke camp in front of Petersburg, Va.; was engaged in skirmish at Dinwiddie Court-House, Va.; then moved to Malone's Bridge, Stony Creek, to picket till April 1.

April 1.—Regiment crossed Stony Creek, Va., near Dinwiddie Court-House.

April 5.—Was engaged in battle at Amelia Springs, Va.

April 7.—Engaged in battle at Farnville.

April 9.—Engaged in battle at Appomattox Court-House.

Third Brigade, Second Division.

[January.]—The brigade has not been in any action during the month; has been doing picket duty most of the time.

January 2.—The Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Cavalry joined this brigade.

February 5, 6, and 7.—The brigade participated in the engagement at Hatcher's Run.

The remainder of the month was spent in the usual picket duty. The Twenty-first Pennsylvania Cavalry was transferred to Second Brigade per Special Orders, No. 40, extract 5, headquarters Second Cavalry Division.

March 1.—Lying in camp on the Jerusalem plank road until the 21st.

March 21.—Reported to General Parke; was relieved, and went into camp again the 27th.

March 29.—Broke camp and marched to Dinwiddie Court-House.

March 30.—Rained hard all day; lay in camp.

March 31.—Pickets driven in; brigade moved out and drove the enemy back and held the ground until toward night, when the enemy charged in force and drove the brigade back from its position. Casualties, 230.

April 1 and 2.—Brigade on picket near Dinwiddie Court-House. Afternoon of 2d instant moved near Sutherland's Station.

April 3 and 4.—Brigade marched toward the Richmond and Danville Railroad, via Dennisville, the Old Court-House, and Jennings' Ordinary, where we halted for two hours; thence to Jetersville, where we found traces of the enemy. Dismounted a part of the brigade and remained in position until dark.

April 5.—Supported the First and Second Brigades, and part of the command being engaged, dismounted, with the enemy at Amelia Springs.

April 6.—Marched parallel to and in sight of Lee's train until about 11 a. m. A part of the brigade was ordered to charge the train. The charge was pressed vigorously forward through almost impenetrable woods and thickets. Found the enemy so strong at that point that it was impossible to reach the train. Later in the day secured another position on Lee's flank and charged him, mounted and dismounted. Succeeded in breaking his lines, capturing general officers, many prisoners, wagons, &c.

April 7.—On the road at 6.30 a. m. Marched rapidly, overtook the rear of the enemy's retreating column at Briery Creek. Dismounted a portion of the brigade and drove them from the creek, making a crossing for the rest of the command, skirmishing during the day and pressing the enemy back rapidly to Farmville, where they were charged and driven in confusion back from the city, capturing a large number of prisoners. In the afternoon crossed the Appomattox. Remained in position supporting battery. At night recrossed the river; marched rapidly to Prospect Station, reaching it at 2 o'clock next morning.

April 8.—Marched to Appomattox Station; bivouacked at 8 p. m. At 9 p. m. ordered to advance to Appomattox Court-House and hold the road leading to Lynchburg. Succeeded in gaining the road, and remained in position during the night.

April 9.—Was attacked at daylight by the enemy in force, but succeeded in delaying them until the infantry got into position, and they were obliged to surrender.

April 10.—Marched to Prospect Station.

April 11.—Escorted Lieutenant-General Grant to Burkeville Station.

April 12.—Marched to Nottoway Court-House.

April 17.—Marched to Ford's Station.

April 18.—Marched to Petersburg.

April 24.—Marched by way of Boydton plank road through Dinwiddie Court-House across Nottoway River.

April 25.—Marched to Meherrin River.

April 26.—Marched all day; bivouacked near Boydton.

April 27.—Marched to Staunton River; crossed on ferry-boats, bivouacking about dark.

April 28.—Marched to and crossed the Dan River at South Boston. News of Johnston's surrender received.

April 29.—Started at 7 a. m. on the back track; crossed the Staunton River just after dark.

April 30.—Recrossed the Meherrin; bivouacked after dark.

Distance marched during the month, 433 miles.

ARMY OF THE SHENANDOAH.*

First Cavalry Division.

[January.]—The First and Reserve Brigades of the division in camp during the month at Camp Russell, picketing the line of the Opequon, sending frequent reconnaissances toward Front Royal and Strasburg.

January 28.—A picked detachment of 300 men, under Lieutenant-Colonel Hastings, marched, via Devil's Hole, to Columbia Furnace and Edenburg; surprised enemy's picket and captured 16 prisoners and horses.

During the month the Second Brigade was stationed at Lovettsville, Loudoun County, Va., picketing and guarding the Potomac. On the night of the 17th the camp of one regiment (Sixth New York Cavalry) was attacked and Lieutenant Carroll, Sixth New York, and several men wounded. The enemy were repulsed with severe loss.

February 1 to 26.—The First and Reserve Brigades in camp at Camp Russell, Va., picketing the line of the Opequon, sending out frequent reconnaissances toward Strasburg and Woodstock, Va.

February 1 to 23.—The Second Brigade stationed at Lovettsville, picketing and guarding the Potomac.

* Or Sheridan's Cavalry Command.

February 21.—The Second Brigade broke up camp at Lovettsville and marched to Harper's Ferry, W. Va.

February 25.—Marched to Winchester, Va., and joined the division at Camp Russell, Va.

February 27.—The division started on a raid up the Shenandoah Valley in the direction of Lynchburg, and marched via Strasburg to Woodstock.

February 28.—Marched to Lacey's Spring, near New Market, and encamped.

March 1.—The division marched from Lacey's Spring to near Staunton, and encamped. First Brigade marched to and destroyed railroad bridge at Christian's Creek. Twentieth Pennsylvania Cavalry marched to Swoope's Depot, on Virginia Central Railroad, and destroyed depot, stores, &c.

March 3.—Marched to Waynesborough and destroyed iron railroad bridge, stores, artillery wagons, &c.; crossed Blue Ridge, and encamped at Ivy Station, on Virginia Central Railroad.

March 4.—Marched to Charlottesville and encamped.

March 6.—Marched to Scottsville and destroyed mills, aqueduct, &c.

March 6 to 12.—Operated on the line of James River and Kanawha Canal, destroying the canal for a distance of 100 miles from Duguidsville to Goochland, together with all locks, bridges, mills, factories, and canal boats loaded with commissary, quartermaster's, ordnance, meal, and all kinds of Government stores.

March 13.—Marched to Tolersville and destroyed railroad.

March 14.—Marched to Taylorsville and destroyed five railroad bridges over North and South Anna and Little Rivers, engaging the enemy and capturing three guns.

March 15.—Moved across South Anna to Hanover Court-House, and returned at night across North Anna.

March 16.—Marched to Mangohick Church.

March 17.—Marched to Pamunkey, at White House.

March 18.—Crossed Pamunkey and encamped.

March 25.—Marched toward James River.

March 26.—Crossed James River and encamped.

March 27.—Crossed Appomattox and encamped in front of Petersburg.

March 29.—Marched to Dinwiddie Court-House.

March 30.—Marched to and engaged the enemy near Five Forks.

March 31.—Engaged the enemy near Five Forks.

April 1.—The division engaged the enemy at Five Forks and carried the position, capturing 1,000 prisoners and 2 guns.

April 2.—Marched to and cut South Side Railroad and attacked and drove Fitz Lee's cavalry division to Scott's Cross-Roads, engaging at that place the enemy's infantry.

April 3.—Marched to Deep Creek and encamped.

April 4.—Marched to Drummond's Mills and engaged the enemy's infantry and cavalry. At 10 p. m. marched toward Jetersville, arriving at 10 a. m. of the 5th; division placed in position in front of the town.

April 6.—Marched to and engaged the enemy at Sailor's Creek, capturing 500 prisoners.

April 7.—Marched by Prince Edward Court-House to near Prospect Station and encamped.

April 8.—Marched to Appomattox Station and engaged the enemy.

April 9.—Engaged the enemy in front of Appomattox Court-House; at 11 a. m. a flag of truce resulting in the surrender of General Lee's army.

April 10.—Marched to Prospect Station.

April 11.—Moved by easy marches to Petersburg, encamping four days at Nottoway Court-House.

April 18.—Arrived and encamped near the town until the 24th, when the division moved rapidly in the direction of North Carolina.

April 29.—Arrived at the line, when the news of Johnston's surrender was received, and the division countermarched toward Petersburg.

First Brigade, First Cavalry Division.

[January.]—Brigade in winter quarters on Romney pike, two miles and a half from Winchester, and picketing the right of the line held by the army.

Second Brigade, First Cavalry Division.

January 1.—The brigade marched from Halltown to Lovettsville, and commenced building winter quarters.

January 17.—The camp of Sixth New York Cavalry was attacked by White's cavalry, who were repulsed with severe loss. The country was scoured to and beyond Purcellville by scouting parties.

February 1 to 24.—The brigade was quartered at Lovettsville, Loudoun County, Va., picketing and scouting in the vicinity.

February 24.—Marched to Harper's Ferry, W. Va.

February 25.—Marched to Winchester, Va.

February 27.—Marched to Woodstock, Va.

February 28.—Marched to New Market, Va.

March 1.—Marched from Lacey's Spring, and arrived at Staunton at midnight.

March 2.—Marched through Fishersville and Waynesborough.

March 3.—Marched through Hillstown and Brownsville, destroying a large amount of rebel quartermaster's stores at Swoope's Station.

March 4.—Marched to Charlottesville.

March 5.—Destroyed the Lynchburg railroad.

March 6.—Marched to Scottsville, destroying the canal, aqueduct, factories, &c., returning to Howardsville.

March 7.—Marched to Warminster, destroying the canal, &c.

March 8.—Marched to Hardwickville, destroying several canal locks and warehouses. At 12 m. received orders to proceed to Columbia, via Howardsville and Scottsville.

March 9.—Arrived there at 5 a. m., marching fifty miles, destroying the canal and several boats loaded with stores for the rebel army.

March 11.—Marched to Goosehead Court-House; engaged the enemy, capturing several prisoners and burning the jail and several canal locks. Returned to Columbia.

March 12.—Marched to Tolersville.

March 13.—Marched to Frederick's Hall, and destroyed the Virginia Central Railroad.

March 15.—Passed through Taylorsville and crossed the South Anna River.

March 16.—Marched to Mangohick.

March 17.—Marched to King William Court-House.

March 18.—Arrived near White House Landing.

March 19.—Crossed Pamunkey River. * * *

March 26 [25].—Marched to near Harrison's Landing.

March 27 [26].—Crossed James River at Deep Bottom.

March 28 [27].—Joined Army of the Potomac near Petersburg.

March 29.—Marched to Dinwiddie Court-House.

March 30.—Engaged the enemy near Five Forks.

March 31.—Fought the enemy (Pickett's division) all day at Five Forks.

April 1.—Engaged the enemy's cavalry and a division (Pickett's) of infantry at Five Forks, and after seven hours' hard fighting, captured their works, with 2 pieces of artillery, — battle-flags, and over 1,000 prisoners.

April 2.—Gained the South Side Railroad; engaged the enemy at Scott's farm.

April 3.—Marched to near Dennisville.

April 4.—Attacked the enemy near Finney's Mills; fought until late, and marched all night.

April 5.—Marched to near Burkeville.

April 6.—Attacked the enemy's wagon train and fought all day, capturing a number of prisoners, and encamped near Sailor's Creek.

April 7.—Marched through Prince Edward Court-House and encamped near Prospect Station.

April 8.—Engaged the enemy near Appomattox Court-House; skirmishing all night.

April 9.—Engaged the enemy at daybreak and fought until 10 a. m., when General Lee surrendered his army.

April 10.—Returned to Prospect Station.

April 11.—Returned to near Prince Edward Court-House.

April 12.—Returned to near Burkeville Station.

April 13.—Returned to Nottoway Court-House.

April 14, 15, and 16.—Remained in camp.

April 17.—Marched to near Ford's Station, on South Side Railroad.

April 18.—Marched to near Petersburg and encamped.

April 19 and 20.—Remained in camp.

April 21.—Moved in camp.

April 22 and 23.—Remained in camp.

April 24.—Marched at 6 a. m. on the Boydton road.

April 25.—Marched to Meherrin River.

April 26.—Marched to near Boydton.

April 27.—Marched to Abbyville.

April 28.—Crossed the Staunton River.

April 29.—Recrossed the river and encamped.

April 30.—Marched to near Keys' Station, on Danville railroad.

Reserve Brigade, First Cavalry Division.

January 4.—Received orders from division headquarters to go into winter quarters.

January 6.—Colonel Crowninshield returned from leave and assumed command of brigade.

January 12.—Major McKendry, Second Massachusetts Cavalry, four officers and 200 men, went on reconnaissance to Strasburg, returning same day; reported no indications of enemy.

January 15.—Brigadier-General Gibbs relieved from command of division (by return of Brevet Major-General Merritt) and assumed command of brigade.

January 17.—Brigade reviewed and inspected by Brevet Major-General Merritt (present, Major-General Emory, Brevet Major-General Torbert, and Brigadier-General Fessenden).

January 18.—Brigadier-General Gibbs on fifteen days' leave of absence; Colonel Crowninshield, Second Massachusetts Cavalry, temporarily commanding brigade.

January 20.—One hundred and seventy-six recruits and remounted men joined the Second Massachusetts Cavalry from Pleasant Valley, Md.

January 21.—The Second U. S. Cavalry started for Hagerstown, Md., pursuant to orders, to relieve the Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry.

January 22.—Ninety-three recruits joined the Sixth U. S. Cavalry.

January 26.—Colonel Crowninshield, Second Massachusetts Cavalry, commanding division; Captain Rumery, Second Massachusetts Cavalry, commanding brigade.

January 29.—The Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry reported from Hagerstown, Md. Major Leiper, Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry, assumed command of brigade.

January 31.—Colonel Crowninshield relieved from command of division by Colonel Stagg, First Michigan Cavalry, and assumed command of brigade.

February 1.—The brigade formed with corps and was reviewed by Major-General Sheridan; Colonel Crowninshield, Second Massachusetts Cavalry, in command of brigade. Furnished the usual number of officers and men for picket duty during the month.

February 27.—Started with fifteen days' rations, under command of Brigadier-General Gibbs, at 7 a. m., up the Shenandoah Valley, moving with the First and Third Divisions and First Brigade of the Second Division; traveled thirty miles and encamped at Woodstock.

February 28.—Marched to Laurel [Lacey's] Spring, and encamped at 3.30 a. m. on March 1.

March 1.—Moved from camp at Laurel [Lacey's] Spring with corps and continued with it, passing through Staunton, Waynesborough, and Rockfish Gap, in Blue Ridge, Brooksville, to Charlottesville.

March 3.—The First Rhode Island Cavalry was sent to Winchester, Va., as a part guard of prisoners and guns captured by Third Division at Waynesborough.

March 6.—The brigade, as a part of First Division, was sent to Scottsville, New Market, and Bent Creek bridge, returning, via Howardsville, to Scottsville. The brigade participated largely in the destruction of property, while the division was burning mills, warehouses, factories, forges, and Confederate stores and subsistence of all kinds, as well as working vigorously in destroying the James River Canal, locks, boats, &c. Again moved with corps and passing through Columbia, Tolersville, Frederick's Hall Junction, Taylorsville, to South Anna River. Bridges on Richmond and Petersburg [Fredericksburg] and Virginia Central Railroad were destroyed.

March 11.—The Fifth United States and Second Massachusetts Cavalry captured three pieces of artillery, turning them on the enemy.

March 15.—Moved across the river and remained in position, skirmishing with the enemy. Squadron of Second Massachusetts Cavalry sent to Hanover Court-House.

March 16.—Marched through Chesterfield Station, Mangohick Church, Aylett's, King William Court-House, to White House, arriving at 2 p. m. March 18.

The trip from Winchester to White House was fatiguing to both men and horses in the utmost degree, the command marching over the worst of roads, without transportation and scantily supplied with subsistence. Its results, however, are apparent to all, and fully justify the suffering experienced.

March 19.—Crossed the river and remained in camp until March 25, when the command marched to near Petersburg, arriving March 27.

March 29.—Left camp in front of Petersburg.

March 30.—The [brigade], being in advance, fought the enemy near Five Forks all day.

March 31.—The enemy's infantry, in large numbers, attacked the brigade about 1 p. m., breaking connection between it and the First and Second Brigades, First Division. The brigade fought dismounted until night-fall, falling back, with the corps, to near Dinwiddie Court-House, opposed to Pickett's division of infantry. The brigade lost heavily in officers and men this day. Bivouacked near the Court-House.

April 1.—Moved through Dinwiddie Court-House and participated in attack on enemy's works at Five Forks, the whole line advancing at 2 p. m. The brigade fought dismounted, and did its full share in the good work of that day. The Five Forks were carried by Devin's (First) division of cavalry.

April 2.—Moved to South Side Railroad; destroyed track, and, with corps, moved west, skirmishing with enemy at Exeter Mill again on the 4th.

April 6.—Fought enemy at Sailor's Creek.

April 8.—Overtook enemy; skirmishing, when the whole brigade went on picket.

April 9.—Attacked enemy (dismounted) early and vigorously, but as vigorously repulsed by a division of infantry. The line being relieved by the Fifth Corps, brigade was mounted and charged with on right of Third Division, until near the enemy's wagon train, when a flag of truce was received. From that hour the brigade has done no fighting.

During the twelve days' campaign, which terminated so gloriously in Lee's surrender, the brigade fought and marched by day and night, fully appreciating what was required of it, and assisted to the best of its ability in the vigorous prosecution of that portion of the war which reflects so much credit on all, from the lieutenant-general commanding the army to the rank and file of Sheridan's cavalry.

April 10.—Moved, with corps, by easy marches to Petersburg, encamping four days at Nottoway Court-House, arriving April 18. Remained in camp, resting, &c., until the 24th. Moved early, marching rapidly for five days to near South Boston, Va.

April 20.—The Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry was taken from brigade for temporary duty at corps headquarters, and is not yet relieved (April 30).

April 29.—News of Johnston's surrender having been received, the corps countermarched en route to Petersburg.

April 30.—Encamped, with seventy-three miles yet to travel. The First U. S. Cavalry permanently detailed as General Sheridan's escort.

*Second Cavalry Division.

February.—No movements.

[March.]—The division was encamped near Winchester, Va., during the month, with no general movement.

April 4.—The division broke camp near Winchester and proceeded on a reconnaissance as far as Edenburg.

April 6.—Returned.

April 7.—Went into camp near Berryville, Va.

* Of the Department of West Virginia.

April 20.—Broke camp at Berryville and marched to Washington, D. C., arriving there on the 22d.

April 23.—Went into camp at Falls Church, Va., since when no more movements have been made.

Third Cavalry Division.

[January.]—The division is in winter quarters on Romney pike, near Winchester, Va.

[February.]—Division in winter quarters on the Romney pike, near Winchester, Va.

February 28.—Marched at 6 a. m., reaching Woodstock at 7 p. m.

March 1.—Encamped at Lacey's Spring, nine miles north of Harrisonburg, Va. At 3 p. m. moved toward Staunton; met rebel cavalry under General Rosser at Mount Crawford. Had a skirmish and drove them; captured 5 commissioned officers and 37 men, and a number of wagons loaded with supplies. Moved rapidly to within four miles of Staunton, and bivouacked for the night.

March 2.—Moved, via Staunton, to Waynesborough, where the enemy were met under General Early. Engaged and whipped him, capturing 11 pieces of artillery, 1,450 prisoners, and about 150 wagons loaded with quartermaster's, commissary, and ordnance stores. Command moved to Greenwood Depot, on the Virginia Central Railroad, and burned large quantities of supplies and several railroad cars loaded with munitions of war.

March 3.—Moved to Charlottesville.

March 4 and 5.—Remained at Charlottesville; command employed in destroying railroad property.

March 6, 7, and 8.—Marched to New Market, on James River, destroying canal.

March 12.—Marched to Frederick's Hall Depot, on Virginia Central Railroad.

March 13.—Commenced destroying large amount of Government stores, Virginia Central Railroad, tobacco, and munitions of war.

March 14 and 15.—Moved along Virginia Central Railroad to South Anna River bridge.

March 16, 17, and 18.—Moved, via King William Court-House, to White House Landing, on Pamunkey River. Remained here refitting until the 25th, then moved in the direction of Petersburg.

March 27.—Arrived at Petersburg.

March 29.—Moved toward Dinwiddie Court-House; arrived there at 3 p. m.

March 31.—Participated in the fight with the divisions of rebel infantry commanded by Pickett and Johnson.

[April.]—The command took part in the campaign which resulted in the defeat and surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia (rebel), General R. E. Lee commanding.

First Brigade, Third Cavalry Division.

[February.]—Brigade in winter quarters.

February 28.—Marched at 6 a. m.; reached Woodstock at 7 p. m. and encamped.

March.—February 27, this command took part in the expedition which left Winchester, Va., under command of Maj. Gen. P. H. Sheridan.

March 26 [27]. Reached the Army of the Potomac in front of Petersburg, Va.

March 28 [29].—Resumed march.

March 31.—Engaged with the enemy at Dinwiddie Court-House.

[April.]—The command took part in the campaign which resulted in the surrender of the enemy's army, called Army of Northern Virginia, at Appomattox Court-House.

Engagements.—April 1, Five Forks. April 3, Sweat-House Creek. April 6, Harper's Farm. April 8, Appomattox Station. April 9, Appomattox Court-House.

Third Brigade, Third Cavalry Division.

[February.]—Encamped near Winchester, Va.

February 27.—Command started on raid up the Shenandoah Valley, Va. Encamped on the night of the 27th at Woodstock, Va.

February 28.—Marched to Lacey's Spring and encamped for the night.

March 1.—Brigade encamped at Lacey's Spring, nine miles north of Harrisonburg, Va., and at 3 p. m. moved toward Staunton. At North River, near Mount Crawford, Va., met and drove rebel cavalry under General Rosser, capturing 5 commissioned officers and 37 men prisoners of war, and a quantity of wagons loaded with supplies. Moved rapidly to within four miles of Staunton and encamped for the night.

March 2.—Moved by way of Staunton to Waynesborough, where, in company with the remainder of the Third Division, we met and whipped the forces of General Early, killing a number of the enemy and capturing 11 pieces of artillery, 1,420 prisoners, about 150 wagons loaded with quartermaster's, commissary, and ordnance stores. This brigade then moved to Greenwood Depot, on the Virginia Central Railroad, and burned large quantities of supplies and several railroad cars laden with munitions of war.

March 3.—Moved to Charlottesville.

March 4 and 5.—Remained at Charlottesville; command employed in destroying railroad property.

March 6, 7, and 8.—Marched to New Market, on James River, destroying Charlottesville and Lynchburg Railroad and James River Canal.

March 9 and 10.—Marched to Columbia, on James River, destroying canal.

March 12.—Marched to Frederick's Hall Depot, on Virginia Central Railroad.

March 13.—Command destroyed Virginia Central Railroad and large amount of Government stores, tobacco, and munitions of war.

March 14 and 15.—Moved along Virginia Central Railroad to South Anna River bridge.

March 16, 17, and 18.—Moved, via King William Court-House, Va., to White House Landing, on Pamunkey River. Command remained at this point resting until the 25th, when it moved in the direction of Petersburg, where it arrived on the 27th.

March 29.—Marched toward Dinwiddie Court-House, where it arrived at 3 p. m. on the 31st, participating in the fight with the divisions of rebel infantry commanded by Pickett and Johnson.

April 1.—Marched dismounted from near Dinwiddie Court-House to Five Forks, where the enemy were found in strong force. An engagement was at once opened, which continued with great fury until 5 p. m., when the Second and Fifth Corps of infantry came to the assistance of the cavalry and the enemy was driven rapidly at all points, losing heavily in men, artillery, small-arms, and munitions of war generally.

April 2.—This brigade moved to Ford's Station, on the South Side Railroad, where it met and drove a body of rebel cavalry. The direction of march was then changed and the command marched to Namozine Creek, where it encamped for the night, going into camp under heavy artillery fire from the enemy.

April 3.—Marched at 5 a. m., the enemy having withdrawn from our front during the night. At Winticomack Creek met three divisions of rebel cavalry, commanded by Major-Generals Fitzhugh Lee and Rosser and Colonel Munford. After some hard fighting, the enemy was driven at a rapid rate for three miles to Deep Creek. Here the command came upon the enemy's infantry. After some hard fighting, both parties withdrew and went into camp. This brigade during the day captured about 300 prisoners, besides killing and wounding quite a number of the enemy.

April 4.—The command marched at 5 a. m. in the direction of Amelia Court-House. Countermarched at 8 p. m. and marched during the night to Jetersville, Va., where it arrived at 6 a. m. on April 5. The command remained here all day.

April 6.—Marched at 6 a. m. to Sailor's Creek, where it met the enemy and engaged him, fighting all day, driving the enemy and capturing 7 pieces of artillery, 5,000 prisoners, and a large quantity of wagons, &c.

April 7.—Marched through Prince Edward Court-House and encamped five miles west of the Court-House.

April 8.—Marched to Appomattox Station, on South Side Railroad, where the command arrived at 5 p. m. Met the enemy and engaged him at once.

April 9.—Engaged the enemy at daylight at Appomattox Court-House, and was pressing him heavily when he (the enemy) raised the white flag and asked for terms of surrender, which was the commencement of capitulations ending in the surrender of Lee's (rebel) army.

ARMY OF THE JAMES.

DEFENSES OF BERMUDA HUNDRED.

January 23.—In the evening the rebel gun-boats came down the James, and one of them succeeded in getting down as far as Battery Sawyer, at Crow's Nest tower. The darkness of the night prevented accurate artillery practice. Daylight showed three of them—two iron-clads and one wooden gun-boat—aground on Farrar's Island, below Howlett House Battery. The third shot from a 100-pounder at Battery Parsons entered the magazine of the wooden gun-boat and blew her up. The iron-clads took a very severe fire, being struck many times by shot from our heavy guns, until about 12 m., when they floated off and took shelter behind Farrar's Island until night, when they proceeded back up the river. The gun-boats did not reply to the fire of our batteries, merely firing a farewell shot as they first floated off and moved up the river.

February.—Nothing of importance transpired on this front; 135 deserters from the enemy came in during the month.

TWENTY-FOURTH ARMY CORPS.

[January.].—The Twenty-fourth Army Corps still occupies the same position since last return. The Second Division is still absent on an expedition under Bvt. Maj. Gen. A. H. Terry to Wilmington, N. C.

March 27.—The First and Independent Divisions, Battery B, First United States, Battery A, Fifth United States, and the Seventeenth New York Independent Battery were withdrawn from the north side of James River, leaving the Third Division to keep the lines. The troops marched all night and all the next day (28th), and arrived in camp in rear of the Second Corps about sundown.

March 30.—In the morning occupied the line vacated by the Second Corps.

April 1.—The First Division of the corps (Brigadier-General Foster) was engaged with the enemy at Hatcher's, driving them from their position and moving down toward the right to Petersburg until the main works outside the city were reached.

April 2.—Assaulted Forts Gregg and Baldwin—the former carried after a desperate struggle by the First Division; the latter, by Third Brigade, Independent Division, Brevet Brigadier-General Harris.

April 3.—Found Petersburg evacuated, and immediately took up line of march close on the retreating forces of General Lee, and from this date until the 5th was engaged in the rapid pursuit of his fleeing forces.

April 6.—Met the enemy strongly intrenched at Rice's Station, and before our lines could be formed and the enemy's pickets be driven in, night closed the operations.

April 7.—At daylight, when about making a charge on the enemy's works, found that he had withdrawn his force and retired toward Farmville, to which place we followed close on his rear.

April 8.—Still following the retreating column, and, after marching thirty-two miles, bivouacked about three miles from Appomattox Station.

April 9.—At daylight the corps moved out and engaged the enemy at Appomattox Court-House. The Independent Division, which were on the left of the line, were about making a charge when an order arrived that there was a cessation of hostilities, and which resulted in the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia. The corps was left from this date to the 17th to settle the business of paroling Lee's army and taking charge of all public property and sending it to Burkeville.

April 12.—The Independent Division was sent to Lynchburg, where it destroyed or carried away a vast amount of public property.

April 15.—It returned to Appomattox Court-House.

April 17.—The corps took up line of march for Burkeville.

April 19.—Arrived at that place in the evening and remained until the 20th.

April 20.—The corps received orders to march to Richmond, via Amelia Court-House.

April 25.—Arrived in Richmond, where they are still encamped.

Total distance marched about 225 miles.

April 2 [3].—The Third Division, under command of Brigadier-General Devens, entered Richmond, without opposition, at about 8 a. m., and occupied the city.

[May.].—This corps has been encamped near Richmond during the past month.

[June.].—The corps has not moved from its present camp during the month.

First Division.

March 27.—This division moved from the New Market road on the north bank of the James River.

March 29.—Arrived in the vicinity of Hatcher's Run.

March 30.—Skirmishing with the enemy; advanced the Third Brigade on the left, capturing intrenched picket-line.

March 31.—Advanced the picket-line of the division, capturing that of the enemy (325 prisoners), driving the enemy into his main works, and holding the ground gained.

April 1.—Skirmishing with the enemy at Hatcher's Run.

April 2.—Broke through the enemy's line near Hatcher's Run, moving to the right toward Petersburg, driving them before us until the main line of works around the city was reached. At 1 p. m. assaulted Fort Gregg, which was carried after a desperate struggle. Loss in killed, wounded, and missing, 419.

April 3.—Found Petersburg evacuated, and took up line of march, following Lee's army; encamped three miles beyond Sutherland's Station.

April 4.—Encamped at Wilson's Station.

April 6.—Engaged the enemy at Rice's Station, and encamped near that place.

April 7.—The enemy having withdrawn during the night, followed, overtaking the rear guard at Bush River, where we had a short skirmish; encamped at Farmville.

April 8.—Marched thirty-three miles, bivouacking about three miles from Appomattox Station.

April 9.—Engaged the enemy at Appomattox Court-House until the cessation of hostilities, which resulted in the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia. Loss, 116. Remained at Appomattox Court-House until April 17.

April 17.—Marched to Prospect Station.

April 18.—Encamped at Bush River.

April 19 to 21.—Encamped at Burkeville.

April 21.—Marched and encamped at Dry Creek.

April 22.—Encamped at Amelia Court-House.

April 24.—Encamped near Manchester.

April 25.—Marched through Richmond, Va., encamping on the Brook road on the north side.

Total distance marched, about 225 miles.

Total loss, 833 officers and men wounded, missing, and killed.

Total captured, 1,355 prisoners, 13 pieces of artillery, 5 battle-flags.

First Brigade, First Division.

[January.]—The brigade has been lying in works on the New Market road near Richmond, Va., doing picket and fatigue duty.

[February.]—The brigade has been lying in works on the New Market road, near Richmond, Va., doing picket and fatigue duty.

[March.]—The brigade has been lying in works doing picket and fatigue duty in front of Richmond.

March 27.—Marched to Hatcher's Run.

March 29.—Arrived there in the morning, and did picket duty the balance of the month.

April 1.—Left encampment on Hatcher's Run.

April 2.—Participated in the capture of Fort Gregg; from thence in pursuit of Lee's army.

April 6.—Skirmished with the enemy at Rice's Station.

April 9.—Arrived at Appomattox Court-House, at which place Lee surrendered; moved from thence to our present encampment.

Second Brigade, First Division.

January 3.—Brigade broke camp before Richmond.

January 5.—In the morning embarked on board transports at Bermuda Landing. Brigade headquarters on board steamer General Lyon.

January 13.—Arrived off New Inlet, N. C., in the morning, and immediately proceeded to disembark, which was done in small boats, landing in the surf. Held the right of the line fronting Wilmington until 4 p. m. of the 15th.

January 15.—4 p. m., the attack having commenced on Fort Fisher, the brigade was ordered to the fort. Entered the fort at 5 p. m., and at 10 attacked that part of the works not already taken. After the work was carried, moved down the beach toward Battery Buchanan, which having surrendered, together with its force, the brigade returned to the right of the line fronting Wilmington. Remained there during the rest of the month, completing earth-works and in the time making two considerable reconnaissances toward Wilmington, capturing each time between fifty and sixty men.

Second Division.

January 2.—This division received marching orders.

January 4.—Embarked on transports at Bermuda Hundred.

January 6.—Division, with the rest of the second Wilmington expedition, sailed from Fort Monroe for Fort Fisher, N. C.

January 13.—Arrived near Fort Fisher; disembarked same day.

January 15.—Stormed and captured Fort Fisher, with its entire garrison. Since then and up to the present time [January 31] it has been doing garrison duty at Forts Fisher and Caswell and at Smithville.

Second Brigade, Second Division.

[January.]—The monthly report for the month of December left this brigade in the trenches at Chaffin's farm, Va.

January 3.—In the afternoon the brigade broke camp and marched to Bermuda Hundred, where it bivouacked until the afternoon of the 4th.

January 4.—Brigade embarked on board transports Varuna and Tonawanda and proceeded to Fort Monroe.

January 5.—Arrived at that place at 12 m. and anchored in the harbor.

January 6.—At 4 a. m. the fleet weighed anchor and put out to sea en route for Fort Fisher.

January 13.—Arrived at Federal Point in the morning and disembarked during the day.

January 14.—The brigade was engaged in throwing up rifle-pits near the Flag-Pole Battery, and during the night was ordered to take a position in rear of Brevet Brigadier-General Curtis' brigade, operating against Fort Fisher.

January 15.—In the morning the brigade formed line of battle in rear of the First Brigade and about 400 yards from the fort, which was successfully assaulted at 3 p. m. After the capture of the fort the brigade was ordered to move about one mile up the river, where it bivouacked for the night.

January 16.—In the morning moved down near the Flag-Pole Battery, where it remained until the morning of the 19th.

January 19.—Brigade moved over near the Cape Fear River and encamped, where it remained during the month.

Third Brigade, Second Division.

January 3.—The brigade (except the Ninth Maine Volunteers, which remained at the front in the Army of the James) broke camp and marched to Bermuda Hundred, where it bivouacked for the night.

January 4.—In the evening embarked on board transports De Molay and Thames.

January 5.—Sailed for Fort Monroe in the morning, arriving there that afternoon.

January 6.—In the morning sailed from Fort Monroe down the coast, passing Cape Henry.

January 8.—Arrived off Beaufort, N. C.

January 9.—A storm set in, continuing nearly the whole of the 10th.

January 12.—Sailed for Fort Fisher, and effected a landing on the beach about three miles above the fort on the morning of the 13th. The brigade, being the first to land, captured a battery containing one heavy gun, also forty head of cattle near it.

January 15.—Took part in the assault on Fort Fisher, which resulted in its capture at 10 o'clock same night.

January 16.—One of the reserve magazines in the fort exploded, killing and wounding many. The One hundred and sixty-ninth New York Volunteers, being nearest, suffered the most. Since the 16th the brigade has been engaged in garrisoning Fort Fisher and Battery Buchanan, and such other duties as it has been called on to perform.

First Brigade, Third Division.

[January.]—During the month the brigade has been on the line on Chaffin's farm, Va., picketing its front. The time has been occupied in drilling, equipping, &c., the command.

January 24.—When the enemy's boats passed our batteries on the James, a few shells were thrown from Fort Gilmer into the camp.

[February.]—No events of special importance have taken place during the last month. The troops have been doing picket and fatigue duty. The time has been devoted to drilling and equipping the command.

[March.]—No events of special importance have taken place during the past month.

March 27.—The command moved from its old position and relieved the First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, and are now picketing the front, formerly occupied by that division. The headquarters are established at the old headquarters of General Foster, commanding First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps.

[April.]—At the commencement of the present month this command was stationed on the lines near Chaffin's farm, Va.

April 3.—In the morning it was discovered that the enemy's pickets had been withdrawn from our front, when we were ordered to advance up the New Market road, and entered the city of Richmond at about 8.30 a. m., being the first body of infantry to enter the city. This command was stationed in Richmond about two weeks as provost guard, when it was removed to the interior line of works west of the city, where it remained until the 24th instant.

April 24.—It was ordered across the James River, where it is now encamped on Broad Rock road, about three miles from Manchester.

The command is in a good state of efficiency. The time is occupied in drilling and equipping the command. The troops are doing light picket duty.

Independent Division.

March 26 [25] (Saturday).—This division marched from its camp at Ohaffin's farm, Va., to Long Bridge, on the Chickahominy River, to cover the crossing of General Sheridan with his command, he having crossed, however, below that point at Jones' Bridge, and we returned and encamped near Deep Bottom on Sunday.

March 28 [27] (Monday).—We received orders to cross the James River at sunset; we marched till 3.30 o'clock Tuesday morning.

March 29.—Moved on during the day about ten miles, and took up position in rear of Fifth Corps.

March 30.—We were moved farther to the left, in rear of the lines of the Second Corps.

March 31 (Friday).—We were moved still further to the left, and went into position in front of Fort Useless, on Hatcher's Run. While reconnoitering the enemy's position with the commanding general, Lieutenant Judd, aide-de-camp on his staff, was severely wounded by the enemy. All day we had heavy skirmishing with the rebels, and drove their skirmishers about three-quarters of a mile.

April 1.—Heavy picket-firing in the morning in our front opposite Fort Useless, on Hatcher's Run. The enemy attacked and were repulsed, with loss of thirty prisoners and many killed and wounded.

April 2 (Sunday).—We were moved some two miles to the right of our position, and about 10 o'clock, with the First Division, our forces stormed and carried Fort Gregg, after a severe struggle, in which this division lost some 250 in killed and wounded. The colors of the Second Brigade of this division were the first planted upon the captured work. The Third Brigade of this division also carried two other forts to the left and beyond Fort Gregg.

April 3.—We moved out on the Cox road about eleven miles, following the retreating foe.

April 4.—We marched some fifteen miles on the road to Burkeville.

April 5.—We reached Burkeville Junction about 10.15 p. m., after a hard day's march.

April 6 (Thursday).—We marched out from Burkeville about 1 p. m., and after going some eight miles we struck the flank of the enemy and skirmishing at once commenced. The enemy being in strong position and far superior in numbers, no assault was made, but we succeeded in detaining him.

April 7.—We marched to Farmville.

April 8.—We marched sixteen hours, accomplishing a distance of thirty-two miles.

April 9 (Sunday).—We marched out about 6 a. m., and after marching about three miles we formed line of battle on the road just in time to check a cavalry charge of the rebels. We advanced about a mile under a pretty severe fire of grape and shell, skirmishing as we advanced, until word was sent to the command to cease firing, as an armistice had been agreed upon; subsequently Lee surrendered his army.

[April 12.]—Wednesday, this division started for Lynchburg.

April 13.—Reached there at 8 a. m. and immediately proceeded to destroy a vast amount of munitions of war collected there by the rebels.

April 15.—This work was accomplished, and we returned to Appomattox Court-House.

April 17.—We started for Richmond.

April 21.—We arrived there.

First Brigade, Independent Division.

March 25.—The brigade marched from Camp Holly to the Chickahominy River. Returned the following day, and bivouacked at Deep Bottom.

March 27.—At night crossed the James and Appomattox Rivers.

March 28.—Arrived at camp at 4 a. m. The same day marched to Humphreys' Station and went into camp.

April 1.—The brigade repulsed an attack by the enemy near Hatchers Run at 4 a. m.

April 2.—A fort in front of the lines was captured by the One hundred and twenty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with prisoners and artillery. The Thirty-fourth Massachusetts and One hundred and sixteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry engaged in the assault of Fort Gregg.

April 6.—The One hundred and twenty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry was captured near High Bridge, at Farmville. The Thirty-fourth Massachusetts and One hundred and sixteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry engaged the enemy with their skirmishers near Rice's Station.

April 9.—Was present at the surrender of Lee's army at Appomattox Court-House.

April 13.—Occupied Lynchburg, and, after destroying a large amount of Government property, marched to Richmond.

April 21.—Arrived there.

Second Brigade, Independent Division.

January 28.—Moved from camp at Deep Bottom, Va., to Chaffin's farm, Va.; distance, two miles.

January 29.—Twenty-third Regiment Illinois Veteran Volunteers temporarily attached to Provisional Brigade, commanded by Col. W. M. McClure, on Bermuda line, per Special Orders, No. 29, headquarters Defenses Bermuda Hundred, Va.

[February.]—No change of headquarters or other events to record since last return.

March 25.—Marched to Long Bridge, on the Chickahominy River, Va.; distance, thirteen miles.

March 26.—Marched to Deep Bottom Landing, on James River; fifteen miles.

March 27.—At 6 p. m. began march, arriving at Humphreys' Station, Va., on the 29th; distance, thirty miles.

March 26.—Battalion Twenty-third Illinois Volunteers rejoined brigade at Deep Bottom Landing from detached service on Bermuda line, Va.

April 1.—The brigade was engaged in skirmishing and fortifying on the line at Hatcher's Run, Va., up to the morning of the 2d.

April 2.—It was moved the distance of seven miles against Battery Gregg, near Petersburg, Va., in the capture of which the brigade participated with marked bravery, and was the first to plant its colors upon the works. The enemy fought with desperation after the works were entered; one commissioned officer and several men of the brigade were killed inside of the works.

April 3.—Moved in pursuit of the rebel army on the Lynchburg road.

April 5.—Arrived at Burkeville, Va.; distance, fifty-three miles.

April 6.—At 4 a. m. the Fifty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers, commanded by Lieut. Col. A. P. Moulton, marched from camp on an expedition to High Bridge, Va., on the Lynchburg railroad, distance ten miles, where it was captured by the enemy, after a spirited fight with overwhelming numbers. At 12 m. same day the brigade, now comprising the Twelfth Regiment West Virginia Volunteers and one company Twenty-third Illinois Volunteers (the other four companies of the latter were left on duty), began march.

April 7.—Arrived at Farmville, Va.; distance, fifteen miles.

April 8.—Resumed march at 6 a. m., arriving at a point west of Appomattox Court-House, heading the rebel army; distance, thirty-two miles.

April 9.—Early in the morning General Lee surrendered. Although under fire of the enemy's artillery, except the skirmish line we were not engaged.

April 12.—Commenced to march to Lynchburg, Va.

April 13.—Arrived there, distance twenty-six miles, reaching there early.

April 15.—Commenced march returning to Burkeville; distance, seventy-three miles.

April 19.—Reached there.

April 22.—Left Burkeville.

April 25.—Reached Richmond, Va.; distance, fifty-eight miles.

Commissioned officers killed at Fort Gregg April 2: Maj. Nathan Davis, Fifty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Second Lieut. Joseph Caldwell, Company C, Twelfth West Virginia Volunteers. Wounded at Fort Gregg April 2: Second Lieut. John A. Briggs, Company K, acting adjutant Twelfth West Virginia Volunteers. Killed at High Bridge, Va., April 6: Second Lieut. Cyrus Patton, Company G, Fifty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Third Brigade, Independent Division.

March 1.—The command, comprising the Tenth, Eleventh, and Fifteenth Regiments West Virginia Volunteers, was encamped at Chaffin's farm, on the north side of James River and in front of Richmond, Va. Everything remained quiet, and deserters coming into our lines daily.

March 25.—The command broke camp and marched to Long Bridge, on the Chickahominy River, returning next day to Deep Bottom, Va.

March 28.—Marched across the James River, and continued the march, via Point of Rocks, to the Appomattox River, crossing that stream; thence marched in rear of the defenses of Petersburg, passing the headquarters of General Meade.

March 29.—Arrived at Humphreys' Station, on the City Point Railroad, in the morning.

March 30.—Marched in the morning, in conjunction with the remainder of the Twenty-fourth Corps and Second Corps, crossing Hatcher's Run, where the command formed line of battle and advanced, skirmishing and driving the enemy. The rain fell heavily all day, somewhat impeding the movements of the troops. At evening the command intrenched themselves.

March 31.—In the morning the enemy opened a brisk musketry fire on our men, and finally charged our skirmish line, but were repulsed, with loss on their side. Somewhat later in the morning, General Harris, in command of the brigade, with the Eleventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteers, of his command, charged the enemy's intrenched skirmish line and carried the position handsomely, with a number of prisoners, with very little loss on our side. Heavy skirmishing was kept up continually, but no general engagement has taken place up to the end of the month. The losses of this command during the last two days ending the month is 3 killed, 51 wounded, and 3 missing. The whole distance marched by the command for the month is seventy miles. At the end of the month the command is still fighting the enemy, with every prospect of success. The enemy's force is protected by formidable earth-works, with a dense slashing of felled timber in our immediate front. The number of prisoners captured by the command is nearly 100.

April 1.—The command, comprising the Tenth, Eleventh, and Fifteenth West Virginia Volunteers, were engaged skirmishing with the enemy on Hatcher's Run, to the left and front of Petersburg. Same night the Sixth Army Corps penetrated the enemy's works in front of Petersburg, Va., causing him to abandon the works in our immediate front on the morning of the 2d.

April 2.—The command, finding the enemy retreating, rushed forward on the works, capturing many prisoners, 1 battle-flag, and 2 cannon; then, in conjunction with the rest of the division, moved to the right and engaged the enemy in their forts. This command assaulted Fort Whitworth, capturing it, with little loss, the greater part of the garrison making good their escape; however, we captured 1 colonel, 2 captains, and 65 men, with a slight loss in killed and wounded. The command bivouacked for the night.

April 3.—The enemy had withdrawn when our forces occupied Petersburg, Va. The command, in conjunction with the rest of the Independent Division, took up its line of march in pursuit of the enemy, marching to the left and parallel with the South Side Railroad, via Poplar Grove Station, Wellyville, and Burkeville Junction; thence parallel with the Lynchburg and Danville Railroad, skirmishing some with the enemy at Rice's Station, and pursued him toward Appomattox Station, the point where General Sheridan's cavalry held him in check.

April 9.—Arrived there in the morning, when the command were hurried forward on the double-quick. Engaged the enemy and drove him from his position, and gained a decided advantage over him. At this time, however, it was unofficially announced to the troops that General Lee, commanding the Army of Northern Virginia, surrendered unconditionally to Lieutenant-General Grant, commanding U. S. Army. Hostilities ceased at once, and both armies lay within plain view of each other until the terms of surrender were adjusted. The rebel army were paroled and allowed to return to their homes unmolested and remain until exchanged. The command then went into camp, and remained until the 12th of the month.

April 12.—It marched to Lynchburg, Va. The rebels at that place destroyed nearly all their artillery, but left a large quantity of provisions, which was distributed to the citizens of the town and vicinity.

April 15.—The command returned from Lynchburg, marching, via Concord and Appomattox Depots, to Farmville; thence to Burkeville Junction.

April 19.—Arrived at latter place in the morning.

April 22.—Broke camp and marched parallel with the Richmond and Danville Railroad, via Amelia Court-House.

April 25.—Arrived and marched through Richmond, and were received by the Third Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, General Devens. The command proceeded about two miles outside the city and went into camp, where it remains at the end of the month, the whole distance marched by the command for the month of April being 259 miles.

The entire loss of the command in the different engagements during the month of April was 5 killed and 54 wounded. The whole number of prisoners captured during the month, 6 officers and 100 men, together with 1 battle-flag and 2 pieces of artillery.

Artillery Brigade.

BATTERY F, FIRST RHODE ISLAND ARTILLERY.

April 3.—Broke camp near Obafin's farm, Va.; moved to the city of Richmond; encamped in the suburbs.

BATTERY E, THIRD NEW YORK ARTILLERY.

[April.]—Remained in position at Camp Holly.

BATTERY H, THIRD NEW YORK ARTILLERY.

[April 3.]—Broke camp on New Market road; arrived at and encamped in the northern suburbs of the city same day.

April 11.—Moved camp to west side of the city, where it is at present date [April 30].

BATTERY K, THIRD NEW YORK ARTILLERY.

April 3.—Broke camp on New Market road; moved to the northeastern suburbs of the city, where they are encamped.

BATTERY M, THIRD NEW YORK ARTILLERY.

April 3.—Broke camp near Deep Bottom, Va., and advanced to Richmond, where it encamped in the northeastern suburbs.

SEVENTH NEW YORK BATTERY.

[April.]—Remained on Bermuda front during the month.

SEVENTEENTH NEW YORK BATTERY.

March 26.—Broke camp at Signal Hill, Va., moving with the Twenty-fourth Army Corps.

March 29.—Reached Hatcher's Run.

April 2.—Engaged and moved to the rear of Petersburg.
April 3.—Marched toward Burkeville.
April 5.—Arrived there.
April 6.—Left Burkeville; engaged near Rice's Station.
April 7.—Moved toward Appomattox Court-House.
April 9.—Arrived there.
April 17.—Left Appomattox Court-House.
April 25.—Arrived at Richmond, where it went into camp near headquarters Twenty-fourth Army Corps.

BATTERY A, FIRST PENNSYLVANIA ARTILLERY.

April 3.—Broke camp near Chaffin's farm, Va., and moved to the suburbs of the city of Richmond, where it encamped.
April 27.—Moved to Manchester, Va., where it is at present date [April 30].

BATTERY B, FIRST U. S. ARTILLERY.

April 2.—Left Hatcher's Run and advanced to Petersburg with First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps; was placed in position on skirmish line.
April 3 to 5.—Followed the enemy on line of South Side Railroad.
April 6.—Engaged him at Rice's Station, Va.
April 7 and 8.—In pursuit of the enemy.
April 9.—Engaged him at Appomattox Court-House. The engagement ended in the surrender of Lee's army.
April 24.—Arrived at Richmond, Va., and encamped near headquarters Twenty-fourth Army Corps.

BATTERY L, FOURTH U. S. ARTILLERY.

[April.]—Remained at Signal Hill, Va., during the month.

BATTERY A, FIFTH U. S. ARTILLERY.

March 27.—Broke camp on New Market road; moved with Twenty-fourth Army Corps.
March 29.—Reached Hatcher's Run.
April 2.—Moved to rear of Petersburg.
April 3.—Moved toward Burkeville.
April 5.—Arrived there.
April 6.—Left Burkeville; arrived at Rice's Station same day.
April 7.—Left Rice's Station.
April 9.—Was engaged at Appomattox Court-House.
April 17.—Left Appomattox Court-House.
April 25.—Arrived at Richmond; encamped near headquarters Twenty-fourth Army Corps.

BATTERY F, FIFTH U. S. ARTILLERY.

April 3.—Broke camp on New Market road; marched to Richmond, Va.; encamped on Hunt's Hill.
April 7.—Changed camp to Oakwood Cemetery, where it is at present date [April 30].

TWENTY-FIFTH ARMY CORPS.

[January.].—Since last return the following changes have been made in the organization of the corps: The number of the First Division is now Third, and the Third changed to the First Division, by virtue of General Orders, No. 8, from these headquarters, dated December 31, 1864. The Forty-first U. S. Colored Troops taken from Second Brigade, First Division, and placed in First Brigade, Second Division; the One hundred and seventeenth U. S. Colored Troops taken from First Brigade, Second Division, and placed in Second Brigade, First Division, by virtue of General Orders, No. 2, from these headquarters, dated January 2, 1865. The One hundred and fifteenth U. S. Colored Troops has been added to the corps, according to instructions from department headquarters, and assigned to the Second Division. During the month Brig. Gen. O. A. Heckman has been in command, Major-General Weitzel being absent with leave. A portion of the Third Division, commanded by Brig. Gen. O. J. Paine, forms a part of the expeditionary force that sailed from Fort Monroe, Va., January 6, under command of Brevet Major-General Terry. No official report of its operations has as yet been received. The remaining troops of the corps have participated in no general engagements during the month.

[January 23 and 24.].—The command was got under arms early in the morning, anticipating a move on the part of the enemy. All remained quiet, however, during the 23d.

[January 24.].—In the morning the enemy's rams came down the James River. They were fired upon from our batteries, to which they briskly replied. In the evening of the same day they were successful in returning.

The Second Division occupies Fort Burnham and a portion of the line in front of Richmond. The left of the line held by this division was severely bombarded, January 24, resulting in four casualties.

[February.].—Nothing worthy of special note has occurred during the month. The corps holds the same line at Chaffin's farm, Va., as per last return. The Third Division remains in the Department of North Carolina. The First and Second Divisions have drilled each day.

[March.].—The corps holds the same position (at Chaffin's farm, Va.) as per last return. No changes of special note have occurred except that—

[March 27.].—The Second Division, commanded by Brig. Gen. William Birney, moved to re-enforce the Army of the Potomac, near Hatcher's Run.

[April.].—March 27, the Second Division moved to re-enforce the Army of the Potomac. April 17, it rejoined the corps near Petersburg.

[April 3.].—That portion of the corps (First Division and Artillery Brigade) remaining at Chaffin's farm, Va., moved upon the evacuation of Richmond and took possession of the city, where it remained until the 13th instant, performing in and around the city the usual guard and fatigue duties.

[April 13.].—Moved to South Side Railroad, about three miles from Petersburg, and have remained at this station to the end of the month.

[June.].—May 25 to June 17, the corps embarked in ocean transports at City Point as rapidly as transports could be furnished.

[June 7.].—The headquarters of the corps embarked and proceeded toward Texas; put into Mobile Bay, Ala., to receive orders from the major-general commanding Military Division of the Gulf, and to coal and water, if possible; coal could not be obtained.

June 16.—Arrived at New Orleans, La., and coaled; then proceeded to Brazos Santiago, Tex.

June 21.—Arrived there. The Second Division had previously arrived in Texas; the headquarters of the division and the Second Brigade stationed at Brazos; Third Brigade at White's Ranch; First Brigade had received orders to garrison Indianola.

June 26.—First Division arrived at Brazos, and was ordered to Brownsville, Tex., but owing to the rise of water in the Rio Grande overflowing the low country, it could not reach that place. It is encamped at White's Ranch awaiting the fall of water, as river transportation cannot be furnished.

The cavalry and unattached infantry brigade have not arrived; only Battery B, Second U. S. Colored Light Artillery, has as yet arrived.

First Division.

[January.]—This division's number was changed from Third Division to First Division in accordance with General Orders, No. 8, headquarters Twenty-fifth Army Corps, December 31, 1864. Nothing of importance transpired during the month.

[February.]—No change during the month worthy of note.

First Brigade, First Division.

[May.]—The brigade remained quiet in camp of instruction during the month with the exception of the last two days.

May 30.—It embarked on transports bound for Texas.

[June.]—May 30 to June 22, the brigade was upon transports bound for Texas. On the latter date they disembarked at Brazos Santiago, Tex., and marched ten miles toward Brownsville, halting at White's Ranch, on the banks of the Rio Grande, where it remained four days.

June 27.—Marched ten miles farther through mud and [water] waist deep, occasioned by the overflow of the Rio Grande.

June 28.—Marched ten miles farther and encamped within six miles of Brownsville, where we remained one day.

June 30.—Marched to Brownsville in the morning.

The brigade is now [June 30] encamped close to the town, and is engaged in laying out camp and getting into shape for drills, &c.

Second Brigade, First Division.

[February.]—This brigade has been in camp in the trenches all the month in same place as last month until the 25th, when it was moved three quarters of a mile to the rear in reserve, except the One hundred and seventeenth U. S. Colored Troops, which still remains in the defenses near Fort Burnham.

Third Brigade, First Division.

[January.]—The brigade remained during the month in the same position as at the close of the last month.

[February.]—The brigade remains in the same position as at the close of January, and has taken part in no important movement.

Second Division.

[February.]—Since last month this command has remained in camp near Chadlin's farm, Va. The positions of the Second and Third Brigades have been changed. The division now occupies the entire front of the Twenty-fifth Army Corps.

March 25.—This division marched from the works near Fort Burnham, on the north side of the James River.

March 27.—At night crossed James River at Aiken's Landing and Appomattox River at Broadway Landing.

March 29.—Took position near Hatcher's Run, southwest of Petersburg about six miles, remaining in that position until the 31st instant.

April 1.—Remained in line of works near Hatcher's Run.

April 2.—In the morning advanced and took possession of the enemy's line, they evacuating; immediately marched toward Petersburg; passed through the city and along the Cox road in pursuit of the enemy, continuing the march until the 10th instant.

April 10.—Orders were received to return to Petersburg.

April 11.—Commenced the return march in the morning.

April 17.—Reached the outskirts of the city, and have since then remained in camp near the city.

May 26.—The troops broke camp at Camp Lincoln, Va., and marched for City Point. The same day embarked and sailed for Hampton Roads, arriving at that place about 1 p. m. Lay at anchor in the Roads till 10.30 a. m. May 31.

May 31.—Weighing anchor, proceeded to sea, bound for Fort Morgan, Mobile Bay, Ala. Weather calm and clear.

June 8.—Fleet put into Mobile Bay for the purpose of coaling and watering.

June 10.—Weighed anchor.

June 13.—Arrived off the coast of Texas, the First Brigade landing at Indianola, and the Second and Third Brigades at Brazos Santiago.

June 24.—The Third Brigade moved to White's Ranch, on the Rio Grande.

First Brigade, Second Division.

[January.]—Remained in camp during the month near Fort Burnham, Va.

[February.]—Remained in camp, near Fort Burnham, during the month.

[March.]—Marched from the works on the north side of James River near Fort Burnham to south side of said river near Hatcher's Run. The One hundred and fifteenth U. S. Colored Troops remained in camp near Fort Burnham.

April 1.—The brigade remained in the works near Hatcher's Run.

April 2.—In the morning advanced and took possession of the enemy's works, they evacuating. Immediately pushed into Petersburg, arriving there at noon, and took up position on the right of division.

April 3.—Shortly after daylight took possession of the city and marched out on the Cox road, halting at night.

April 4.—Resumed the march in the morning, and at noon received orders to move back to a place called Sutherland's; remained there until the afternoon of the 5th.

April 5.—In the afternoon we were relieved and started to rejoin the division.

April 10.—Joined the division near Appomattox Court-House.

April 11.—Started back to Petersburg.

April 17.—Arrived there, and since that time have remained in camp near that city. (See report appended.*)

May 7.—Brigade marched from Petersburg, Va., to vicinity of City Point, Va., where it remained in camp, employed in drilling, &c., until the 25th.

May 25.—It embarked on transports and proceeded to Hampton Roads, Va.

[June.]—May 26, the brigade sailed from Hampton Roads, with orders to rendezvous at Fort Morgan, Mobile Bay.

June 7 and 8.—It arrived there.

June 9.—Received orders to proceed to Indianola, Tex., via the Southwest Pass, Mississippi River.

June 12.—Anchored off the bar, but were unable to disembark on account of the wind blowing so violently, causing a very heavy sea to break upon the bar.

June 17.—Coal and water being nearly exhausted, were obliged to return to Southwest Pass.

June 19.—We again arrived there, and upon being supplied with coal and water, returned.

June 25.—Arrived off the bar the second time; disembarked Sunday, and are now [June 30] garrisoning the city of Indianola, Tex.

Second Brigade, Second Division.

March 27.—The brigade marched from Fort Burnham.

March 29.—Arrived at Hatcher's Run.

March 30 and 31.—It participated in the operations against the enemy's lines.

April 1.—The brigade was all day in line of battle in front of the enemy near Hatcher's Run.

April 2.—Marched inside the enemy's works to near Petersburg, and in the afternoon was engaged.

April 3.—Entered Petersburg before day, being the first Union troops in. Marched nine miles westerly on the Cox road.

April 4.—Marched to Wilson's Station.

April 5.—Marched to Blacks and Whites.

April 6.—Marched through Burkeville to within seven miles of Farmville, and bivouacked near the enemy.

April 7.—Marched to Farmville, where Brigadier-General Birney was relieved from the command of the division, and the brigade was ordered to report to Brig. Gen. R. S. Foster, commanding First Division, Twenty-fourth Corps.

April 8.—Marched till midnight, having traveled thirty miles.

April 9.—Marched at 3 a. m. to the Lynchburg road west of and near Appomattox Court-House. At 7 a. m. engaged the enemy, who was driving our cavalry; stopped him and drove him some distance.

April 10.—Reported to Bvt. Brig. Gen. R. H. Jackson, assigned to command the Second Division, Twenty-fifth Army Corps.

April 11.—Marched for Petersburg.

April 17.—Reached our camp-ground west of the town.

June 18.—Arrived at Brazos Santiago, Tex., and have been here ever since.

Third Brigade, Second Division.

[February.].—The camp of this brigade has been changed from their position to the rear and right of Fort Burnham to the line of breastworks between Batteries Nos. 3 and 5. Twenty-eighth U. S. Colored Troops are at City Point on detached service.

[April.].—This brigade took part in the campaign with the forces operating against the Army of Northern Virginia, commanded by General Lee.

April 9..—The capitulation having been consummated at Appomattox Court-House, the command returned to Petersburg.

April 17..—Arrived there at night. The troops were frequently exposed to the enemy's shell, but they being so inaccurate the casualties were light. The long and fatiguing march was borne with patience and fortitude creditable to old soldiers, and should forever put to an end any doubt as to whether colored troops can stand a campaign, however severe it may be.

May 25..—In compliance with orders, dated headquarters Second Division, Twenty-fifth Army Corps, May 24, the Third Brigade marched from Camp Lincoln, Va., to City Point, Va., where the troops were embarked on the following steamers, viz, Wilmington, William Kennedy, Nightingale, Prometheus, and Montauk, and the same day proceeded to Hampton Roads, Va.

May 26..—They arrived and anchored in the roads in the morning.

May 31..—Received orders, dated headquarters Second Division, Twenty-fifth Army Corps, May 30, to proceed to the vicinity of Fort Gaines or Fort Morgan, Mobile Bay, and there await further orders. Put to sea at 10 a. m.; passed Cape Henry light at 12 m. same day.

June 9..—The brigade arrived off Fort Morgan, Ala.; same date put to sea for Brazos Santiago, Tex., via the mouth of the Mississippi River.

June 13..—Came to anchor outside the bar at Brazos Santiago.

June 15..—Ordered to Aransas Pass, Tex., and put to sea for that place.

June 16..—Arrived off Aransas Bar; strong gales from the southeast; seven feet of water on the bar, rendering it impossible to disembark the troops. The fleet being short of coal and water, was obliged to proceed to Galveston, Tex., the nearest point, for supplies.

June 18..—Arrived off Galveston Bar.

June 19..—Went into the wharf; took in supplies of coal and water.

June 21..—Put to sea.

June 22..—Arrived at Brazos Santiago.

June 24..—In the morning all the troops were disembarked, and on the night of the same date marched to present encampment at White's Ranch, on the Rio Grande River, Tex.

Third Division.

[January.].—The number of the division was changed from First to Third per General Orders, No. 8, headquarters Twenty-fifth Army Corps, December 31, 1864. The One hundred and seventh [U. S. Colored] Regiment was transferred from the First to the First and the Twenty-seventh [U. S. Colored] from the First to Third Brigade by General Orders, No. 5, headquarters First Division, Twenty-fifth Army Corps, December 31, 1864.

January 3.—Division headquarters, the Second Brigade (with the Thirtieth [U. S. Colored] Regiment temporarily attached), the Third Brigade (with the First [U. S. Colored] Regiment temporarily attached), left camp on the north side of the James and proceeded to Bermuda Landing.

January 4.—Embarked on transports.

January 5.—Sailed on the second expedition for Fort Fisher.

January 12.—Arrived off Fort Fisher at night.

January 13.—Disembarked and constructed a line of intrenchments across the peninsula facing Wilmington.

January 15.—The division held this line during the assault upon Fort Fisher by General Ames' division.

First Brigade, Third Division.

[January.]—During the month the First and Thirtieth U. S. Colored Troops, of this command, have been on detached service in the Wilmington expedition. The remainder of the brigade has been in the defenses before Richmond.

[February.]—During the month the First and Thirtieth Regiments, of this brigade, have been engaged in the operations around Wilmington.

February 20.—The remainder of the command embarked on transports for Fort Fisher.

Second Brigade, Third Division.

January 3.—The brigade left camp at Chaffin's farm, Va.

January 4.—Embarked on transports at Bermuda Landing at night.

January 13.—Landed near Fort Fisher, N. C.; constructed and occupied the center of the north line of defenses.

January 18.—The brigade made a reconnaissance to Sugar Loaf.

January 19.—Made another [reconnaissance]. Lieut. Col. C. J. Wright, Thirty-ninth U. S. Colored Troops, was wounded; also Capt. N. J. Hotchkiss, Sixth U. S. Colored Troops.

January 21.—Captain Hotchkiss died at Fort Fisher.

Cavalry Brigade.

May 14.—The Cavalry Brigade was organized by virtue of Special Orders, No. 130, paragraphs V and VI, headquarters Twenty-fifth Army Corps, May 14, 1865, at Camp Lincoln, Va., but consisting of only two regiments, viz, the First and Second U. S. Colored Cavalry Regiments.

May 30.—The Fifth Massachusetts Colored Cavalry was assigned to the brigade by virtue of Special Orders, No. 146, headquarters Twenty-fifth Army Corps, dated May 30, 1865.

June 10, 11, and 12.—The cavalry brigade embarked on ocean steamers at City Point, Va.

June 13.—Arrived at Fort Monroe.

June 16.—Sailed from Hampton Roads. Fleet comprising brigade consisting of five vessels, steamers General McClellan, Meteor, Ashland, H. S. Hagan, and Dudley Buck. Touched at Fort Morgan for orders; thence to South West Pass, Mississippi River, for coal and water.

June 28.—Sailed for Brazos Santiago, Tex., arriving at anchor the p. m. of the 30th.

Artillery Brigade.

June 1 to 7.—The brigade embarked at City Point at different periods between these dates—Battery B, Second U. S. Colored Artillery, on the steamer Suwanee; Battery D, First U. S. Artillery, and Battery D, Fourth U. S. Artillery, on the Neptune; and Battery M, First U. S. Artillery, on the steamers Rappahannock and Beaufort. The vessels sailed separately as soon as they were loaded and ready for sea, the last steamer leaving City Point on the 7th instant. The fleet rendezvoused at Mobile, and from there proceeded to New Orleans, La., for coal and water.

U. S. FORCES AT FORT FISHER, N. C.

January 3.—The command moved from the camps of the Army of the James, in front of Richmond, Va., to Bermuda Hundred, embarking at that point on the day following for Fort Monroe.

January 6.—Left Fort Monroe for Beaufort, N. C., arriving at that point, after a stormy passage, on the 8th.

January 12.—Left Beaufort for Federal Point, N. C.

January 13.—Disembarked on the beach five miles above Fort Fisher.

January 15.—Assaulted and captured Fort Fisher, with its entire garrison of over 2,200 men, after a heavy bombardment from the fleet, the Second Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, Bvt. Maj. Gen. A. Ames commanding, making the assault, supported by the Second Brigade, First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, the Third Division, Twenty-fifth Army Corps, holding a defensive position two miles and a half from the fort against the anticipated attack of Hoke's division of the rebel army, which ended in a mere demonstration.

January 16.—The forts at the west entrance of Cape Fear River (abandoned by the enemy) were occupied by the navy, and soon after garrisoned by a portion of this command.

The remainder of the month was occupied in repairs of Fort Fisher and building wharves for landing stores, an occasional reconnaissance proving Hoke's division to be intrenched in a strong position at Sugar Loaf Hill, where it remained at the close of the month.

FERRERO'S DIVISION.

April 2.—In the morning, in accordance with instructions from Major-General Hartsuff, commanding Defenses of Bermuda Hundred, a battalion of the Tenth New York Artillery attacked the enemy's line, and succeeded in carrying it and holding the same until the object of the reconnaissance (which was to ascertain whether the enemy had withdrawn troops from Bermuda front) had been accomplished, when it fell back to its original position.

April 4.—The division moved to Petersburg, Va., since which time the division has been doing duty as provost guard and picketing the approaches to the city.

First Brigade, Ferrero's Division.

April 3.—This brigade (which was reported on last monthly return as First Brigade, Infantry Division, Defenses of Bermuda Hundred, Va.), early in the morning, after having sent out reconnoitering parties, who reported that the enemy had evidently just evacuated his works on our front, advanced across the enemy's line and proceeded onward in the direction of Chesterfield Court-House, Va., capturing scattered parties of rebel soldiers and a band belonging to a brigade of Mahone's division, and receiving numbers of deserters who delivered themselves up, all of whom were turned over to the division provost-marshal. No large force of the enemy was met with. A halt was made at Chesterfield Station, on the Richmond and Petersburg Railroad.

April 4.—A detachment, under charge of Lieutenants Michener and Haines, of General McKibbin's staff, was sent forward to the vicinity of the coal-fields, where three locomotives and a quantity of cars were captured and brought safely to Petersburg.

April 5.—The division of which the brigade forms a part marched to Petersburg, Va., via Broadway Landing, and since that period the brigade has been stationed in the defenses of that city and guarding the approaches thereto.

By order, the designation First Brigade, Infantry Division, &c., was changed to First Brigade, Ferrero's Division, &c.

U. S. FORCES, CITY POINT, VA.

April 2.—The Tenth and Twenty-eighth U. S. Colored Troops marched from Fort Harrison to Bermuda Hundred.

April 3.—In the morning marched back and took up line of march for Richmond, where they arrived at 9 a. m. Remained there until evening of the 6th, when they were ordered, with their command, to assume command of City Point, Va.

May.—Nothing of any event occurred at this post during the month.

SUB-DISTRICT OF THE APPOMATTOX.

April 30.—Marched through Mecklenburg to Mill Grove; crossed the Meherrin, and bivouacked after dark.

May 1.—Moved at 6 a. m.; marched through Lunenburg Court-House, thence, via Lunenburg plank road, across the Nottoway, bivouacking at 5 p. m.

May 2.—Marched at 6 a. m., via Blacks and Whites, to near Five Forks; bivouacked at 5.30 p. m.

May 3.—Moved at 6 a. m.; marched through Petersburg, across the Appomattox, and went into camp near Ettricks about 5 p. m.

Distance marched during the month, seventy-five miles.

General Smith was assigned to the command of the Sub-District of the Appomattox by Special Orders, No. 135, Department of Virginia, and the brigade was assigned for duty in the said sub-district by General Orders, No. 1, headquarters District of the Nottoway.

May 21.—Sent detachment First Maine Cavalry, under command of Capt. H. C. Hall, to Chesterfield Court-House; also detachment of Thirteenth Ohio Cavalry to Amelia Court-House, under command of Lieut. Col. S. R. Clark; also detachment of same regiment, under command of Capt. R. O. Campbell, to Powhatan Court-House; also detachment Second New York Mounted Rifles, under command of Lieut. Col. J. H. Wood, to Buckingham Court-House; also detachment same regiment, under command of Capt. J. C. Terry, to Cumberland Court-House.

The several commanding officers were appointed provost-marshals in their respective counties, and continued to do provost duty to the end of the month.

June.—The duties of this command during the month: Doing provost duty in the several counties composing the sub-district.

MILITARY DISTRICT OF LYNCHBURG, VA.

May 1.—Left Moseley's Ferry and marched toward Blacks and Whites; moved to within two miles and camped.

May 2.—Moved toward Petersburg, Va., on the Red Oak road; camped.

May 3.—Moved into and through Petersburg; crossed Appomattox River, and went into camp.

May 4 to 8.—In camp.

May 9.—Moved through Petersburg, on the Cox road, to Ford's Station; camped.

May 10.—Marched to Nottoway Station; camped.

May 11.—Marched via Burkeville and drew forage and rations; camped.

May 12.—Marched through Prince Edward Court-House; camped at Pamplin's Station.

May 13.—Marched to Concord.

May 14.—Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry was sent to Lynchburg.

May 16.—Twenty-first Pennsylvania Cavalry sent to Appomattox Court-House.

May 17.—The headquarters and Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry moved to Lynchburg, Va.

May 19.—Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry moved to Lynchburg; the command encamped near fair ground.

May 22.—Twenty-first Pennsylvania moved to Lynchburg from Appomattox Court-House. Details of the command performing duty as provost guard in the following [counties] of the district: Appomattox, Campbell, Amherst, Bedford, Nelson, and Franklin.

May 30.—Two hundred and sixth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, commanded by Col. H. J. Brady, reported for duty, by authority of Special Orders, No. 138, dated headquarters Department of Virginia, May 22, 1865. The command is performing guard duty in the city—Lynchburg.

Twelfth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry and detachment Twentieth New York Cavalry, under command of Lieut. Col. T. E. Barker, with headquarters at Danville, Va., are performing duty at that place and in the following-named counties: Patrick, Henry, and Pittsylvania.

[June.]—Command in camp, garrisoning city of Lynchburg and the counties comprising the Military District of Lynchburg.

CAVALRY DIVISION.

March 1 to 28.—This division lay in camp before Richmond, engaged in picketing, scouting, and performing the various duties incident to a cavalry command while in the presence of, but not engaging with, the enemy.

March 28.—Left camp.

March 29.—Bivouacked in the morning near Varina Station, on the Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad, continuing the march after a short rest to Humphreys' Station; halted till night and again marched to the crossing of Rowanty River, in the vicinity of Reams' Station, where it has since been engaged as guard to the trains of the Army of the Potomac.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. A. V. Kautz, commanding the division, was relieved on the 20th by Special Orders, No. 79, headquarters Department of Virginia, and was succeeded by Brig. Gen. R. S. Mackenzie, U. S. Volunteers, who was assigned to the command by Special Orders, No. 79, headquarters Department of Virginia, March 20, 1865. The First New York Mounted Rifles was detached from this command by orders from headquarters Department of Virginia, dated March 23, 1865. The Fourth Wisconsin Battery was also temporarily detached from the command March 28, 1865.

In consequence of this reduction the command was on the 28th, previous to leaving for the field, consolidated into two brigades, the Third Brigade, Col. A. W. Evans, being merged with the Second Brigade of this division, under the command of Col. S. P. Spear, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry.

Second Brigade, Cavalry Division.

January.—The brigade has been engaged during the month in performing picket duty, scouting, drilling, and officers' recitations. No change in the headquarters of brigade or regiments.

February.—The brigade has been engaged during the month in performing picket duty, scouting, drilling, and officers' recitations. No change in the headquarters of brigade or regiments.

CAVALRY BRIGADE.

April 1.—The command left the vicinity of Reams' Station, Va., where it had been on duty as guard to the wagon trains of the Army of the Potomac. Proceeded to Dinwiddie Court-House and reported to Major-General Sheridan.

April 3.—The command moved to Appomattox at two points, the lower at Leonard's Mills, the other three miles higher up the stream, picking up 300 prisoners and taking 4 guns.

April 4.—The command crossed Deep Creek after a sharp skirmish.

April 6, 7, and 8.—It moved through Jetersville, Burkeville, and Prince Edward Court-House to Appomattox Station, skirmishing considerably on the road.

April 12.—After the surrender of General Lee's army, the command was ordered to Lynchburg, Va., where it remained until the 16th instant, engaged in paroling prisoners and destroying munitions of war.

April 16.—The command moved, via Burkeville and Goode's Bridge, to Richmond, Va., where it arrived on the 24th instant, going into camp on the Mechanicsville road, where it has since remained.

[May.]—This brigade has remained in camp on the Mechanicsville road, about three miles north of Richmond, Va., during the entire month. It has been engaged in performing the ordinary routine of camp duties, in furnishing patrolling parties and guards to different parts of the adjoining country. The Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry was detached and ordered to Charlottesville, Va., on the 5th instant, but still remains under the orders of the brigade commander. The Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry was assigned to this brigade on the 23d instant by Special Orders, No. 139, extract 4, headquarters Department of Virginia.

[June.]—The brigade has remained in camp about three miles south of Richmond during the month. It has been engaged in performing the ordinary routine of camp duties and in furnishing patrolling parties and guards to different parts of the adjoining country. The Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry is on detached service at Charlottesville, Va., and the Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry on detached service in Henrico County.

No. 5.

Reports of Maj. Gen. George G. Meade, U. S. Army, commanding Army of the Potomac, of operations February 5-7 and March 25.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
Crossing of Hatcher's Run by Vaughan Road,
February 5, 1865—2.30 p. m. (Sent 3 p. m.)

Humphreys was in position at this point and Armstrong's Mill by 10 a. m., crossing at both places with but little opposition, taking nine prisoners, all of Pegram's division. He is now getting in position and pushing out the Vaughan road to communicate with Warren. Warren reports at 1 p. m. that he has crossed most of his infantry, but he has to build a bridge of sixty feet in length to cross artillery and trains; will be over by 3 p. m. Nothing has been heard from Gregg. From the reports of prisoners, I am led to believe the enemy may attempt to interpose between Warren and Humphreys. To keep open this communication of four miles, I have ordered up Parke's reserve division, and have directed the available troops in the City Point lines to replace them with Parke. Warren reports taking thirty prisoners when crossing the run. I can hear nothing of the enemy's cavalry, and the prisoners here know nothing of any troops, cavalry or infantry, going south.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
Vaughan Road and Hatcher's Run, [February 5, 1865—6.45 p. m.]
(Sent 7.10 p. m.)

The enemy at 5.15 attacked General Humphreys' right, and have been engaging him till this moment. General Humphreys has repulsed all their attacks. I have ordered up to his support not only a division from the Ninth Corps, but one from the Sixth Corps. General Warren is in position at Hargrave's, about three miles and a half from here; has met no enemy. General Gregg reports that having occupied Dinwiddie Court-House, and hearing nothing of any trains or the enemy, had returned to the crossing of Hatcher's Run by the Malone road. I have sent orders to General Gregg to return to General Warren and report to that officer, unless you send other orders for him. I think the enemy are trying to turn Humphreys' right and cut our communications with our line of works. Besides Pegram's and Gordon's divisions, deserters report the movement to their right of Heth and Mahone. I shall leave Humphreys and Warren in their present positions, with directions to support each other. I do not think the cavalry will do anything in the way of destroying trains. I shall await your instructions. It is estimated Humphreys' losses in wounded may amount to 300. Please acknowledge at once.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
Crossing of Hatcher's Run by Vaughan Road,
February 5, 1865—8 p. m. (Sent 8.22 p. m.)

I have withdrawn Warren and the cavalry to this point, directing two divisions to remain on the other side of the run, one to cross to this side as a reserve for contingencies. Humphreys is instructed to await developments, and to attack, if advantageous, and drive the enemy into their works. The enemy have a strong line of works passing through the Clements house; this house is the place where the shot fell near us on the last movement—that is to say, since then the enemy have advanced their line. Unless we can carry this line, we can hardly reach the Boydton plank road or South Side Railroad without a flank movement considerably to the left. I presume it was to stop this they attacked Humphreys' right.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
February 5, 1865—9.30 p. m. (Sent 10 p. m.)

Orders have been sent to Gregg to proceed to Belfield, provided he finds on reaching Dinwiddie Court-House any confirmation of the contraband's report, or obtains any reliable intelligence leading him to believe he can effect anything there. The depot is, however, undoubtedly at Hicksford, across the Meherrin, and is guarded by artillery, as it was when Warren was there. We also believe that W. H. F. Lee's division of cavalry is in that vicinity. Gregg goes without artillery.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
February 5, 1865—10 p. m.

I send a dispatch from General Gregg, received on my arrival just now. A staff officer who carried my last dispatch to General Warren reports that, on leaving, three squadrons of Gregg's cavalry came in to Warren, saying the enemy's cavalry had attacked Gregg's rear guard and cut them off. I am a little apprehensive of the enemy's cavalry interposing between Gregg and Warren, and preventing the latter using the road he advanced on to withdraw his artillery and trains. I have, however, sent orders to Gregg to open this road, if possible, and escort back Warren's trains.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
February 5, 1865—10.30 p. m. (Sent 11.15 p. m.)

GENERAL: I moved out this morning on the Vaughan road the Second Corps to the crossing of Hatcher's Run; on the road from Reams' Station to Dinwiddie Court-House, the Fifth Corps; and on a road crossing Hatcher's Run still lower down, the cavalry division under General Gregg. General Gregg was ordered to move to Dinwiddie Court-House, and to move up and down the Boydton road to intercept and capture the enemy's trains, and was further ordered to determine whether or not he could in any way inflict damage upon the enemy. General Warren was to support General Gregg; General Humphreys, to support General Warren. All other available troops of this army were to be held ready to move at short notice. The different commands reached their post in due season, but it was found difficult to open communication between Generals Humphreys and Warren along the Vaughan road. General Gregg proceeded to Dinwiddie Court-House, and moved up and down the Vaughan road and captured some 18 wagons and 50 prisoners, including 1 colonel. Finding that the Boydton road was but little used since the destruction of the bridges on that road and on the Weldon railroad, he returned to Malone's Bridge, on Hatcher's Run. At 4.15 p. m. the enemy, with what was reported to be Hill's corps and Gordon's and Pegram's divisions, attacked Humphreys. They were handsomely repulsed, with a loss to Humphreys of 300. Since this force had attacked Humphreys' right, consisting of but one division entire and one brigade, it became necessary to send for men enough to hold our communications with our rear line. One division of the Ninth and one division of the Sixth Corps were therefore ordered to re-enforce Humphreys. Warren, with the cavalry, has been ordered to connect with his left and to report to him. In the morning, if I find that this force of the enemy is outside of his works, I shall attack and drive him into them, taking advantage of anything disclosed by the operation. During the day it is estimated that we have taken 100 prisoners.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General.

Lieut. Gen. U. S. GRANT,
Oily Point.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
February 6, 1865—1 a. m. (Sent 1.15 a. m.)

I have just received intelligence that my aide, Captain Jay, taking orders to General Gregg, met the enemy in force where the Malone road leaves the Halifax road. Jay was fired on, and is missing, but his escort escaped. This is undoubtedly the enemy's cavalry come up from Stony Creek. They are now in Gregg's rear, on the road he took, and only one mile and a half from him if he is at Malone's Bridge. I have sent this information to Warren, with directions to make every effort to communicate it to Gregg, and have instructed Warren to send a division to cover our rear on the Weldon railroad, as the cavalry may advance that way to-morrow morning. If Gregg gets my orders to rejoin Warren through that officer, he can be withdrawn on the Vaughan road; but if Warren's staff officer meets the fate of Captain Jay, Gregg's position will be precarious, as the enemy's cavalry will be in his rear, and their infantry, on Warren's withdrawal, now taking place, will interpose between him and the Vaughan road. I am in hopes Warren's artillery and trains, ordered back on the road he took, will get in safely.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
February 6, 1865—7.15 a. m.

Major-Generals Warren and Humphreys have both telegraphed me this morning, and inform me of their being in position, their right, well supported, near Fort Cummings, and two divisions of the Fifth Corps over Hatcher's Run forming their left. Gregg's cavalry is now with Warren. Trains all came up the Vaughan road. I have telegraphed to them to move out at once to determine whether or not Hill's or any portion of the enemy's force is now outside of their line of works. In case any should be found they are to be driven in. Heth charged in two lines, and was badly repulsed. Subsequently the whole of Hill's corps participated in the attack. The above is the report of deserters.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
February 6, 1865.

Major Jay has returned, and it is now certain that he was captured by our own men. None of the enemy's cavalry in vicinity of Malone's Crossing.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
Hatcher's Run, February 6, 1865—7.30 p. m.
(Via Aiken's House, 8.40 p. m.)

Major-General Warren advanced about 2 p. m. on the Dabney's Mill and Vaughan roads. Both columns had a spirited contest with the enemy, and steadily drove him before them till about 6 p. m., when the column on the mill road, having forced the enemy beyond Dabney's Mill and until he opened on them with artillery, indicating he was in his line of works, when, being re-enforced, Warren's troops were, in turn, compelled to retire in considerable confusion. The enemy was, however, checked before reaching the position occupied this morning, and Warren's troops rallied in this position. The column on the Vaughan road was recalled when the others were forced back. The troops are now formed in the lines occupied this morning. The fighting has been determined, principally in dense woods, and the losses considerable, particularly in the column compelled to retire. I am not able at present to give an estimate of them.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
February 7, 1865—10.15 a. m. (Sent 10.50 a. m.)

Warren reports at 7.30 a. m. everything quiet in his front. The character of the weather to-day, and the ignorance I am under of the exact moral condition of Warren's corps, and his losses from stragglers, has restrained me from giving him positive orders to attack; but I have directed him to push out strong reconnaissances, and left to his judgment, based on the result of these reconnaissances and his knowledge of the state of his command, whether to attack or not. From all I can learn, unofficially, the disaster yesterday arose from the enemy suddenly, toward the close of the day, withdrawing from the column on the Vaughan road and concentrating on the column at Dabney's Mill, which, when one part of the line was broken, the whole retired in disorder. Warren had one whole division (Wheaton's, Sixth Corps) not engaged. One brigade reached the mill just as the line had given way, but were unable, owing to the confusion and the dense woods, to do anything toward remedying the evil. In reference to holding to Hatcher's Run, my idea was to hold it permanently by a strong line, which a small force could hold, if we moved farther to the left. If it is designed only to hold it temporarily and to abandon it, the object I had in view would not be attained. We have now a line of breast-works all the way, but my suggestion was to a permanent line, with redoubts.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

—
HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
February 7, 1865—2.45 p. m. (Sent 4 p. m.)

Cipher dispatch received.* I will notify you as soon as the troops are in position, but I hardly think it will be by to-morrow, as I have some works to erect before I can unmass the forces on the left. As soon as your dispatch of 11.30 was received* I forwarded it to Warren, directing him to cease offensive operations unless some very important advantage was to be gained. At 12.20, before my dispatch had reached him, he reported Crawford having carried the enemy's line of skirmish rifle-pits, and that a prisoner reported them in line of battle near Dabney's Mill, where they were yesterday. I expect soon to hear my dispatch has reached him. I was desirous, for the morale of the command, that the offensive should be taken. Warren has sent in the return of one division, and I hope from it that the losses yesterday will be much less than was at first supposed. Large numbers of stragglers have come in during the night and this morning. A deserter reports Rodde's old division as having been moved from the north of the Appomattox to enemy's right. Has Ord heard anything of this?

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

—
HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
February 7, 1865—5.15 p. m. (Sent 5.22 p. m.)

I have just received a dispatch from Major-General Warren, announcing he had recovered most of the ground he occupied yesterday, and had again drawn the fire of the artillery in the enemy's works. As this accomplishes all I expected him to do, I have directed him to withdraw to Hatcher's Run, and shall hold the line from Fort Sampson to Arm-

* See Part II, pp. 448, 447, respectively.

strong's Mill with the Second Corps, and post the Fifth Corps from the Vaughan road crossing back toward the Halifax road, prepared to meet a flank movement of the enemy or to support any point threatened in front.

GEO. G. MEADIE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
February 8, 1865—12.30 p. m. (Sent 1.25 p. m.)

Yesterday Major-General Warren again advanced from his position on the right bank of Hatcher's Run, and, encountering the enemy, carried the line of rifle-pits occupied by the enemy's skirmish line, and continued the advance till the fire of the artillery in the enemy's works near Dabney's Mill was drawn, and till he (Warren) had passed over most of the ground he had occupied the day before. This operation was performed during the prevalence of a violent hail-storm. The resistance offered by the enemy outside his works was not, however, so great as the day before. Having accomplished all that was practicable, and the enemy declining battle outside his works, I directed the withdrawal of the troops to Hatcher's Run, which was effected soon after night-fall. I forward Major-General Warren's report, just received.* The casualties of the three days' operations will not now, as far as I can judge in the absence of official returns, exceed 1,500, which is about double the number of wounded brought to the rear. The prisoners will exceed 200. The cavalry on the 5th captured twenty-five wagons, instead of eighteen, as previously reported. I am now preparing an intrenched line from Fort Cummings, our old left, to Armstrong's Mill. This line will be held by the Second Corps, and the Fifth will be massed to defend our left and rear. The cavalry and the reserves of the Sixth Corps have been returned to their former positions. The reserves of the Ninth will be returned so soon as the condition of the new line justifies.

GEO. G. MEADIE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
February 8, 1865—4 p. m. (Sent 4.20 p. m.)

Official returns of casualties received show: Fifth Corps, 1,400; Second Corps, 140; cavalry, 150; in all 1,690, which includes over 600 missing, of whom the greater portion will turn up, being stragglers. I send a notice found by Gregg posted up in Dinwiddie Court-House. If the enemy does not attack us to-day I think you can leave with security to-morrow.

GEO. G. MEADIE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

* See Part II, p. 487.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
March 25, 1865—8.30 p. m. (Sent 9.05 p. m.)

Since my report of 12 m. no further operations have taken place on the Ninth Corps front. Major-General Parke reports his casualties as 64 killed, 323 wounded, and 481 missing; his captures amount to 8 battle-flags and 1,800 prisoners. The enemy were permitted, under flag of truce, to carry away from our lines 120 dead and 15 very severely wounded. Under the orders sent Major-General Wright to feel the enemy, the skirmishers of the Sixth Corps were advanced, but found the enemy's pickets strongly intrenched. Major-General Wright supported his skirmishers by his Second Division, one brigade of the Third Division, and two brigades of the First Division, and after a spirited contest, under a sharp fire of artillery and musketry, the enemy's intrenched picket-line was carried, capturing 416 prisoners. This line is now held. Major-General Humphreys, commanding Second Corps, likewise advanced his skirmishers, well supported by his First and Third Divisions, and carried the enemy's intrenched skirmish line, taking over 200 prisoners; subsequently the enemy was re-enforced and made several vigorous and determined attacks, all of which were repulsed, Humphreys capturing in these last affairs 2 battle-flags and over 400 prisoners. The fighting on this part of the line continued till near 8 o'clock. Numerous deserters have been reported since dark. Total captures reported to-day, 10 battle-flags and 2,800 prisoners. Griffin's division, Fifth Corps, was sent to support Humphreys, and was engaged with the Second Corps. Crawford's and Ayres' divisions, of the Fifth Corps, and the cavalry division were held in reserve, and promptly moved to different parts of the line.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General, Commanding.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
March 25, 1865. (Sent 12.50 a. m. [26th].)

Wright holds his captured line; Humphreys had all of his at 8 p. m., but I authorized his retaining only such portions as, in his judgment, it would be advantageous to hold. Parke sends in the return of casualties in his artillery brigade, to be added to his previous return—4 killed, 14 wounded, and 25 missing; total, 43. Humphreys estimates his killed and wounded at about 450; very few missing; thinks enemy's losses in killed and wounded more than double his. Wright reported his losses small.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
March 26, 1865—10.45 a. m. (Sent 11.30 a. m.)

All has been quiet since 8 p. m. last evening. Wright and Humphreys hold and have intrenched all the advanced line captured yesterday as far as the Armstrong house, which includes all but a small portion on the extreme left near Hatcher's Run, which there was no military advantage in retaining. Humphreys now estimates his casualties at 700, Wright at 400, which will make our total casualties from all parts of the line about 2,000. Deserters report the fighting very severe, and the result as having a depressing and demoralizing effect on their army.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,

March 26, 1865—10 p. m.

Official returns from the several corps show the casualties of yesterday as follows: Second Corps—killed, 51; wounded, 462; missing, 177. Sixth Corps—killed, 47; wounded, 402; missing, 30. Ninth Corps—killed, 68; wounded, 337; missing, 506. Total—killed, 166; wounded, 1,201; missing, 713; or a grand total of 2,080, which is 80 larger than my approximate estimate of this morning. Of prisoners, the account now stands: Second Corps, 365; Sixth Corps, 469; Ninth Corps, 1,949; total, 2,783, or 13 less than reported last night; of this number some 200 are wounded in our hospitals. It has been quiet along the lines to-day. Permission was granted the enemy, on application, to remove their dead and wounded, under flag of truce, both on the Second and Sixth Corps fronts.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General, Commanding.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,

March 26, 1865—11.30 p. m.

General Humphreys estimates the enemy's losses in killed and wounded in his front as fully three times his, and I have no doubt from the character of the fighting, the heaviest being repulsing their attacks, that their losses were very much greater. Wright also thinks they lost much heavier than we did. On Parke's front their losses were quite severe from the artillery fire of adjacent batteries, not only when their supports were moving up but when they were withdrawing. On the whole, I think it would be reasonable to estimate the enemy's losses in killed and wounded as 50 per cent. greater than ours; this would make them about 2,000, which added to the prisoners would give 4,800. Taking in stragglers and deserters, I think it safe to estimate Lee's loss for the day not less than 5,000 men.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

No. 6.

Reports of Bvt. Col. James C. Duane, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, of operations January 14-February 25.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
ENGINEER DEPARTMENT,
January 23, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the engineering operations in this army for the week ending January 21, 1865:

Brevet Major Harwood was in command of the battalion of U. S. Engineers, and, assisted by Lieutenant Phillips, inspected the line from Fort Davison to Fort McMahon. The former officer also superintended the repairs of the line from Fort Bross to Fort Dushane. Brevet Captain Benyaurd had charge of the repairs from Fort McGilvery to Fort Howard. Brevet Captain Howell made an inspection of the line from Fort Welch to Battery 24, and superintended the reconstruction of Fort Fisher and repairs from Fort Howard to Fort Dushane. Lieutenant Heap, assisted by Lieutenant Phillips, inspected the line from Fort Alex. Hays to Fort Meikel.

The following extracts from the weekly report of Brevet Colonel Spaulding, commanding detachment of Fiftieth New York Volunteer Engineers, will show the extent and nature of the duties upon which the officers and men of his command have been engaged:

The work upon the battery at the left of Fort Keene has been continued during the past week, under the general direction of Brevet Major McDonald, with daily details of about 200 men from this command. This work is a small lunette containing two barbettes and three embrasures, originally thrown up and very roughly revetted by infantry. The stockade for closing the gorge of this work is 185 feet in length, with flanking arrangements. Brevet Captain Van Rensselaer (who relieved Major McDonald) reports that this stockade was completed last evening. To-day he has been at work with one company of this regiment in putting in new revetment and raising the parapet, and this part of the work is about one-sixth done. The cold weather of the past week has caused the work upon the signal tower to progress but slowly, it being very difficult and hazardous for men to work at such an elevation, upon insecure footing, when the weather is cold and stormy. Brevet Major Hine reports all the material on the ground, 130 feet framed, sixty-eight feet raised, and sixty-four feet completed.

On Tuesday, the 17th, I sent Lieutenant Paine with one company of this command to make some repairs and renewals of the works on a part of the Ninth Corps front. The work required was as follows: A new magazine to be constructed in Battery 10; in Fort Morton, two magazines to be floored and sheathed; in Fort Sedgwick, one magazine to be sheathed and another to be sheathed and drained; in Fort Davis, the magazines in the salients to be strengthened and three drains under the parapets to be framed and lined. Lieutenant Paine reports all the above-mentioned work completed, except revetting one of the drains in Fort Davis; this will be completed to-morrow, if the weather permits.

On Thursday, the 19th, I sent Captain Dolan with his company to repair Forts Stevenson, Blaisdell, Patrick Kelly, and Bross. In the construction of these forts too little time, in most cases, had been left for works that were to be maintained for any considerable length of time. The consequence was that the scarp in many places had caved into the ditch, and in some instances the parapet had followed the scarp. Seven hundred men from the Fifth Army Corps reported to Captain Dolan, and for the past two days these men, together with the one company of engineer troops, have been at work upon Forts Stevenson, Blaisdell, and Bross. Nothing has as yet been done on Fort Patrick Kelly. The amount and character of the repairs upon these forts will be best described when they are completed.

On Saturday, the 14th, I placed the following officers of this command in charge of corduroy roads: Lieutenant Warfield, all roads within the lines of the army from the Jerusalem plank road to the defenses of City Point; Lieutenant Bacon, all roads between the Jerusalem plank road and the Weldon railway; Lieutenant La Grange, all roads from the Weldon railway to the southern limit of the lines occupied by the Second Corps. During the past week these officers, with details from this command and details of men and teams from the Sixth and Ninth Corps, have built several additional bridges and put the corduroy roads upon their respective sections in good repair.

During the week 456 gabions have been made by my men and brought into camp; also, twenty sections of chevaux-de-frise. Six sections of the latter and a coil of wire were sent to Fort Sedgwick this morning, in charge of Lieutenant Taylor, with directions to instruct the officers commanding the garrison as to the manner of fastening these sections together with wire. Considerable progress has been made with the drawings of the wooden and canvas pontoon wagons, showing the modifications and improvements it has been found advisable to introduce in actual practice in the field. I have also sent for a French pontoon truck, and will have it arranged and rebuilt for the canvas train.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. O. DUANE,

Major of Engineers, Brevet Colonel, U. S. Army.

Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,

Chief Engineer, Armies in the Field.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF ENGINEER,

January 30, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the engineering operations in this army for the week ending January 28, 1865:

Brevet Major Harwood was in command of the battalion of U. S. Engineers, and had charge of repairs from Fort Bross to Fort Dushane. Brevet Captain Benyaurd assisted Colonel Duane, chief engineer, in the construction of batteries on the James River. Brevet Captain Howell had charge of the construction of Fort Fisher and of the battery to the right of Fort Welch; he also had charge of the repairs of the line from Battery 24 to Fort Dushane. Lieutenant Heap inspected the line from Fort McGilvery to Fort Alex. Hays.

The following extracts from the weekly report of Bvt. Col. I. Spaulding, commanding detachment Fiftieth New York Volunteer Engineers, will show the nature and extent of the duties upon which his command has been engaged:

The severity of the weather during the past week, and the depth to which the ground was frozen, has prevented any considerable progress being made where the digging and dressing of the banks have been principally near the surface. The old revetment has been removed from the battery near Fort Keene, most of the new revetment put in and the parapet raised, the three embrasures revetted with gabions and fagots; three platforms laid, the barbottes partially built, and the gate at the entrance completed. Upon the signal tower the balance of the framing has been completed, and a mast placed in position for raising the next section. Brevet Major Hine reports that it only requires a few days of mild weather now to push the work rapidly toward completion. During the week but little progress has been made with the repairs of the forts on the rear line. Captain Dolan reports that as soon as the ground is thawed he can complete the work on Forts Stevenson and Blaisdell in one day, and that on Fort Bross in three days. Nothing has yet been done on Fort Patrick Kelly. The unfinished work on Fort Davis has been completed. During the week Lieutenant La Grange, with small details from this regiment and from the Second Corps, has repaired the corduroy roads near the Yellow House and near the Poplar Grove Church; also built a corduroy bridge across the creek between Forts Cummings and Emery. For the past two days Captain Dexter has been engaged with his company in hewing and preparing gun platforms for Fort Fisher. These platforms are fourteen by eighteen feet. Up to this time materials for about seven platforms have been delivered. Eight sections of chevaux-de-frise have been made during the week.

On the morning of the 23d I received an order from Lieutenant-General Grant, through Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Michler, to have 500 feet of wooden pontoon bridging ready to move at short notice. It was not stated whether pontoniers would be required or not, but I deemed it advisable to send three companies (Captain McGrath commanding) to the train near City Point, with directions to have the trains ready to move at once when ordered. During the afternoon Lieutenant-Colonel Michler sent me another message from Lieutenant-General Grant, directing that 600 feet of pontoon bridge should be immediately prepared for shipment at City Point. By the advice of Lieutenant-Colonel Michler I proceeded in person to City Point to ascertain definitely what was required and to superintend operations in person. There I was informed the animals were to be shipped with the trains and pontoniers sent with them. The next morning you informed me that, after consultation with Lieutenant-General Grant, it had been decided to send a company of the Fifteenth New York Volunteer Engineers as pontoniers. I accordingly invoiced the train to Captain Lewis, commanding the company designated by Colonel Brainerd, commanding the regiment. This train consisted of thirty boats (equal to 620 feet of bridging), including all the necessary material and appliances for constructing the bridge or bridges and for moving them by land or water, also army wagons for the use of the pontoniers and quartermaster, and a little more than half the usual number of forage wagons. The animals and quartermaster's stores were turned over to Captain Lewis' lieutenant, acting quartermaster of the train. I left Captain McGrath, with one company, at Colonel Brainerd's request, to assist in loading the train, and two companies were returned to this camp. Up to this time the steamer designated for the transportation of this train has not arrived at City Point.

On the 24th I left a memorandum with the quartermaster of the Engineer Brigade for boats, wagons, and material to be ordered from Washington to supply the place of the trains turned over for shipment, with directions to have them ordered immediately. During my absence at City Point an order was received directing that a company of pontoniers be sent to the Valley of the Shenandoah to report to Major-General Sheridan, and stating that the latter would be pleased to have the same company and officers that were with him on the expedition last June. Company I, commanded in June last by W. W. Folwell, as captain (now major), was designated. This company is now commanded by Capt. M. B. Folwell, formerly a first lieutenant in the same company. I met the officers of the company at City Point, and also Major Folwell. There I arranged with Major Folwell that he should proceed to the Valley of the Shenandoah and remain there with Captain Folwell until the pontoon train (understood to be in course of preparation there) was ready for the field, when he should return to these headquarters. Directions to this effect were sent by Major Folwell from Lieutenant-General Grant to Major-General Sheridan.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. DUANE,

Major of Engineers and Brevet Colonel, U. S. Army.

Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,

Chief Engineer, Armies in the Field.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,

ENGINEER DEPARTMENT,

February 13, 1865.

SIR: The following extracts from the report of Bvt. Maj. F. Harwood, commanding battalion of U. S. Engineers, and from that of Brevet Colonel Spaulding, commanding detachment Fiftieth New York Volunteer Engineers, will show the nature and extent of the engineering operations for the week ending February 11, 1865:

Brevet Major Harwood was in command of the battalion of engineers, and was attached to the Fifth Corps headquarters during the active operations of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant, and established and constructed a line near Hatcher's Run, at crossing of the Vaughan road. Brevet Captain Benyard was attached to cavalry division during the active operations of the 5th, 6th, and 7th, and assisted Major Harwood to establish the line from Fort Sampson to Hatcher's Run; also was on a reconnaissance near Fort Sedgwick. Brevet Captain Howell was attached to Second Corps headquarters during the active operations of the 5th, 6th, and 7th, and assisted Major Harwood to establish the line from Fort Sampson to Hatcher's Run, and was in charge of the construction of the line from Fort Sampson to Hatcher's Run. Lieutenant Heap was in command of the battalion when in the rifle-pits on the 5th, 6th, and 7th, and had charge of the construction of the battery at Hatcher's Run near crossing of Vaughan road.

From Colonel Spaulding's report:

The weather has been so cold and windy during the past week that but little could be done on the signal tower. The posts have all been raised and secured in their positions and twenty-six additional feet of the tower completed at this date. Brevet Major Hine reports that three or four days of mild weather will enable him to complete the work.

On the 4th instant Captain Dexter, with a detail of two companies from this command, commenced delivering material for and constructing a strong line of abatis around Fort Fisher. On the 5th this abatis was completed on the front and flanks, and sufficient material delivered for extending it along the rear face, but this could not be placed in position until the camps in that vicinity were removed. This abatis was further strengthened by two lines of wire interlaced with the branches and a wire entanglement placed in front of the abatis.

On the 6th Captain Dexter commenced opening a road from Fort Cummings to Armstrong's Mill, on Hatcher's Run. The details for this work were, two companies from this command from the 6th to the 9th, inclusive, 14 teams from the Second Corps on the 8th instant, and 400 men and 40 teams from the Ninth Corps on the 9th. The work was finished on the evening of the 9th, having constructed double corduroy bridges over all the ravines and low grounds and cut a double track through the timber.

On the evening of the 5th I sent Brevet Major Van Brocklin, with four companies of this command, to report to you on the Vaughan road, near the crossing of Hatcher's Run. On the 6th this detachment was engaged in repairing the Vaughan road, building corduroy bridges over small streams, &c. At 9 p. m. of the 6th Major Van Brocklin received orders from you to construct an additional bridge over Hatcher's Run. This bridge was about 250 feet in length; the material was carried from the woods by Major Van Brocklin's detachment, and the bridge completed about 1.30 a. m. of the 7th instant.

On the morning of the 7th I sent an additional company from this regiment to report to Major Van Brocklin, and he commenced the construction of a permanent corduroy road from Hatcher's Run to Fort Siebert. The following details have been engaged on this work: February 7, five companies Fiftieth Engineers and 20 teams from Second Corps; February 8, five companies Fiftieth Engineers and 2,000 men and 100 teams from Second Corps; February 9, five companies Fiftieth Engineers and 2,000 men and 100 teams from Fifth Corps; February 10, five companies Fiftieth Engineers and 2,000 men and 100 teams from the Fifth Corps. This corduroy road is now completed for about three miles, with the exception of covering a portion of it with earth.

On the 8th Major Van Brocklin, leaving Captain Van Rensselaer in temporary charge of the work on the corduroy road, made a reconnaissance for an extension of the U. S. military railroad to Hatcher's Run, and reported the result to Colonel Batchelder, chief quartermaster, Army of the Potomac.

On the 9th Captain Van Rensselaer took charge of the unfinished work on Fort Fisher, this work having been turned over to him by Captain Howell.

The repairs of the several forts on the rear line, which were commenced on the 19th of January by Captain Dolan, were as follows: At Fort Stevenson, the ramps, banquettes, and gun platforms required repairs, about fifty feet of the scarp on each face to be revetted, gratings to be placed over the drains, the entrances of three magazines to be revetted, and the exterior slope to be removed from the berm and dressed off; at Fort Blaisdell, the whole revetment and parapet were to be moved in four feet, gun platforms, banquettes, ramps, and embrasures to be rebuilt. The above works in these two forts are completed. The work on Fort Patrick Kelly was about the same as that on Fort Blaisdell. The revetment on this fort has been moved in and the banquettes nearly completed, but owing to troops being taken away for the late movement on Hatcher's Run, the work on this fort was suspended. The work on Fort Bross required the revetment and parapet to be moved in four feet, the ditch to be drained, embrasures cut in the parapet and revetted, and a magazine to be built. This work is completed except the earth work in moving the parapet; it was left unfinished at the time of the late move of the army. To complete these works would probably require a detail of about 400 men for three days. Four hundred and ninety-six gabions have been made during the week and brought into camp, and 480 issued at Fort Fisher, the battery on the left of this fort, and for repairs of the works on the Ninth Corps line.

Very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

J. C. DUANE,

Major of Engineers and Brevet Colonel, U. S. Army.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,

Chief Engineer, Armies in the Field, City Point, Va.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF ENGINEER,

February 20, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the engineering operations in this army for the week ending February 18, 1865:

Bvt. Maj. F. Harwood was in command of the Engineer Battalion, and had charge of the construction of the line at Hatcher's Run, near crossing of Vaughan road. Brevet Captain Benyaurd inspected the line on Sixth Corps front with a view to making entanglements, and also inspected the line from Fort McGilvery to Fort Howard. Brevet Captain Howell had charge of the construction of the line from Fort Sampson to near Hatcher's Run. Lieutenant Heap had charge of the construction of a battery at Hatcher's Run near crossing of Vaughan road, and of a two-gun battery on Vaughan road near crossing of Hatcher's Run. This officer also inspected the line on Second and Fifth Corps front with a view to verify the position of pickets. The following extracts are made from the report of Brevet Colonel Spaulding, commanding Fiftieth New York Volunteer Engineers:

The signal tower is so nearly completed that it will be probably finished to-morrow. In the next weekly report drawings of the tower will be furnished, with a detailed description of the work. The work upon Fort Fisher has progressed as rapidly as the state of the weather would permit. Brevet Captain Van Rensselaer reports three-fourths of the parapets completed, and the remainder one-half complete. Platforms are laid for three barbette and three embrasure guns, and two additional embrasure guns will be added to-morrow. This fort can be finished, except the inner works, in four or five days. No bomb-proofs, magazines, or traverses have yet been commenced in this fort. The battery on the left of Fort Fisher (also in charge of Brevet Captain Van Rensselaer) has had during the week seven platforms and two magazines added, the parapets and traverses finished, and the work is now complete, mounting eleven guns. Brevet Major Van Brocklin reports that on the 11th and 13th instant the work was continued on the corduroy road from Fort Siebert to Hatcher's Run, the details for the work consisting of five companies of this regiment and twenty-five teams from the Fifth Corps. The road was completed on the evening of the 13th instant. With very few intervals, there is now a continuous corduroy road from the first stream south of Fort Siebert to Hatcher's Run, and a double track over all the streams and low grounds. Captain Dexter has been engaged with his company in getting out platform timber. During the week he has had hewn and delivered at Fort Fisher and the battery on its left 3,523 superficial feet of timber, equal to fourteen platforms.

During the week 204 fascines have been made and delivered at Fort Fisher and the eleven-gun battery; 693 gabions have also been made and brought into camp; of these, 417 have been issued for Fort Fisher and for repairing the works on the Ninth Corps front.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. O. DUANE,

Major of Engineers and Brevet Colonel, U. S. Army.

Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,

Chief Engineer, Armies in the Field.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF ENGINEER,

February 27, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the engineering operations in this army for the week ending February 25, 1865:

Brevet Major Harwood was in command of the Battalion of Engineers, and inspected the line from Hatcher's Run to Fort Fisher; also inspected rifle-pits on Hatcher's Run. Lieutenants Heap and Phillips were in charge of laying abatis around the tête-de-pont at crossing of Vaughan road near Hatcher's Run. The latter officer also inspected the line from Fort Cummings to Fort McMahon, and assisted Major Harwood in the inspection of rifle-pits on Hatcher's Run. The following extracts from the weekly report of Brevet Colonel Spaulding, commanding Fiftieth New York Engineers, will show the nature and extent of the engineering duties upon which the officers and men of his command have been engaged:

Lieutenant Van Rensselaer reports the parapets of Fort Fisher nearly finished. The work is ready for fifteen guns and is inclosed with abatis. The whole fort will probably be completed to-morrow, except the interior works, and these have not yet been commenced. On the 21st Brevet Major Van Brocklin commenced the work of corduroying the Squirrel Level road, and has been working an average detail of 300 men and 50 teams from the Second Army Corps. This work is about one-half done, and will require about three days of good weather to finish it.

On the 20th, 21st, and 22d Lieutenant Bacon was engaged in covering the corduroy on the Vaughan road and building additional bridges and sluices over streams and swamps. The average detail for this work was 200 men from the Fifth Corps and 100 men and 10 teams from the Second Corps.

During the week Lieutenant La Grange, with a part of one company of this regiment, has hewn out and delivered at Fort Fisher 2,315 superficial feet of timber for gun platforms and 115 lineal feet of sleepers.

For the past three days Lieutenant De Groot has been engaged with one company of this command, and for two days a detail of 400 men from the Ninth Corps, in completing the repairs of Fort Patrick Kelly. But little progress has been made to-day on account of infantry detail not reporting. The gun platforms are completed, and the parapets and drains nearly finished.

Sixty-four fascines and 300 gabions have been made during the week, and 61 fascines and 273 gabions have been issued for use at Fort Fisher.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. DUANE,

Major of Engineers and Brevet Colonel, U. S. Army.

Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,

Chief Engineer, Armies in the Field.

No. 7.

Report of Bvt. Lieut. Col. Nathaniel Michler, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, of operations March 11-18.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF ENGINEER,
March 20, 1865.

STR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the engineering operations in this army for the week ending March 18, 1865:

Brevet Major Harwood was in command of the Engineer Battalion. Brevet Captain Benyaard inspected Fort Davis with a view to repairs, and was in charge of the construction of abatis from Fort Prescott to Fort Davis, which is three-fourths finished. First Lieutenant Izdecker inspected Fort Fisher, which is completed on the north side and a traverse three-fourths finished. First Lieutenant Phillips was in charge of a line of works near Hatcher's Run, which are three-fourths finished. Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Ford, commanding detachment Fiftieth New York Volunteer Engineers, with the officers of his command, was engaged as follows:

After making a preliminary survey of the Vaughan road and its crossing of Hatcher's Run, Brevet Major Van Brocklin commenced repairing the road and constructing a substantial and permanent bridge above high-water mark. The old bridge had been entirely swept away by the late freshets.

On the 15th instant Major Van Brocklin had completed a bridge over Hatcher's Run 285 feet in length, supported by eleven cribs each sixteen feet long, six feet wide, and from two to six feet high. The roadway of the bridge consists of two tracks, each eight feet in width, separated by a longitudinal timber, firmly pinned to the corduroy flooring. In repairing the corduroy on the Vaughan road, which was only slightly damaged, Company E only was employed one day. In constructing the bridge Major Van Brocklin worked his own and Company C from the 11th to the 15th instant, inclusive, and an average of ten teams daily from the Fifth Corps.

On the 13th instant Lieutenant Taylor with Company G repaired and put in thorough order the Squirrel Level road. On the 13th and 14th Lieutenant Lang with a portion of Company H, and a detail on the 13th of 200 men and 40 teams from the Ninth Corps, constructed and put in 380 feet of abatis around Fort Blaisdell, completing the work, and repaired the damages caused to the banquettes of Fort Stevenson by the late rains.

Lieutenant La Grange, in continuing the work on the road between the Wyatt house and Warren's Station, has corduroyed 1,200 yards, making a total of 3,600 yards. He has worked three companies of this command for two days and two companies for three days, and an average daily detail of 660 men and 59 teams from the Fifth Corps. On the 11th and 12th the weather prevented any progress in the work, and on the 14th the teams did not report until 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Brevet Captain Van Rensselaer, in charge of Fort Fisher, has completed two traverses in that work, each sixty feet in length and each containing a magazine eighteen feet long; a third traverse, to protect the guns in the western curtain, is one-third finished. The entire parapet has been redressed, on account of the damage caused by the heavy rains.

On the 15th instant Captain Jackson, with Companies B and H, reported to Captain Benyaurd, near Fort Prescott, and on the 16th commenced the reconstruction of Battery 22 and a line of abatis between Forts Davis and Prescott. The work on the battery could not be continued, the enemy having opened a heavy fire of shot and shell on the working parties. At dark it was again commenced, but again interrupted by the severe storm.

On the 17th the work was pushed with but little interruption, and Captain Jackson reports that the parapet has reached its full height and the revetment is finished; that one traverse is nearly completed, the timber for the gun platforms on the ground and ready, and 1,000 feet of abatis already put in. He hopes to complete the work on Sunday, the 19th instant, or thereabouts.

During the week I have employed all the men in the detachment, not elsewhere engaged, in repairing and improving the roads in the immediate vicinity and in constructing gabions for Fort Fisher, Battery 22, and the entire line.

In the topographical department the triangulation party are pushing forward the surveys between Fort Siebert and Hatcher's Run, and in the office campaign maps are being prepared.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

N. MICHLER,

Major of Engineers and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel, U. S. Army.

Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,

Chief Engineer, Armies Operating against Richmond, City Point, Va.

No. 8.

Report of Maj. Frank W. Hess, Third Pennsylvania Cavalry, of operations February 5-7.

HDQRS. BATTALION THIRD PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY,
February 8, 1865.

In compliance with orders received on Saturday evening, February 4, I reported, at 6 a. m. on the 5th instant, with my command, to Major-General Humphreys, commanding Second Corps, and was sent by him to report to Brigadier-General Smyth, commanding division, Second Corps. My orders given me by General Smyth were to send a detachment of fifty men, under command of a commissioned officer, on the road leading from the Vaughan road to Armstrong's Mill. The rest of the battalion was to take the advance of the infantry moving up the Vaughan road; to drive the enemy's vedettes beyond Hatcher's Run, and, if possible, to force the crossing at Cummings' Ford. Lieutenant Ewing, who had command of the detachment moving toward Armstrong's Ford, was also directed to drive in the vedettes and secure the crossing.

The advance of the column on the Vaughan road struck the enemy's vedettes in the vicinity of the Cummings house, charged them, and drove them down the road to the ford. Captain Stillé, who commanded the advance, was ordered to follow them closely and to charge the ford. This was done, but the obstructions placed there by the enemy rendered it impossible for cavalry to cross. This I reported to Brigadier-General De Trobriand, commanding brigade, Third Division, Second Corps, whose command was supporting the cavalry. At about 11 o'clock, a bridge having been constructed, I moved my command across Hatcher's Run and, to comply with the orders of Major-General Humphreys, took the road leading to Armstrong's Ford, in order to open communication with the troops crossing at that point. I was also directed to post a picket of thirty men at Dabney's Mill. At about a quarter of a mile from the Cummings Ford my advance came upon the enemy's skirmish line, formed along the edge of a wood and posted behind a fence. Company A, commanded by Captain Stillé, was dismounted and ordered to drive them back, but found them too strong. I ordered Company B, under command of Lieutenant King, to charge, mounted, on Captain Stillé's left, and Company M, commanded by Lieutenant O'Donovan, to charge on the right of Captain Stillé. This was done; five prisoners were taken; the enemy was driven away from the fence and forced back into the woods, where I found them in considerable force. This I reported to Major-General Humphreys, and was directed by him to return to the Vaughan road, and open communication with the Fifth Corps at J. Hargrave's house. At about two miles from the Cummings Ford my advance, under Lieutenant Frazer, Company D, encountered the enemy stationed along the woods on the right of the road. The advance charged down the Vaughan road, followed by the rest of the command, and supported by the One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, General De Trobriand's brigade, Third Division, Second Corps, and moved forward until the column of the Fifth Corps was seen on the Reams' Station road. I reported to Major-General Warren, and then returned to General Humphreys, informing him that the road was open. Until 2 o'clock on the morning of the 6th detachments of the battalion patrolled the Vaughan road. I was then directed to take my command back to the Cummings house and await further orders. At 3 p. m. on the 6th instant I was directed by Major-General Humphreys to return to the camp at the Aiken house. The only loss suffered was 2 men killed and 3 wounded; 16 horses killed and wounded.

On the 6th instant, at 8 a. m., I was directed to move out of camp with my command and arrest all stragglers found on the roads, and to report with them to Brevet Major-General Webb at Cummings' Ford. About 500 men belonging to the Fifth Corps were taken to the front, but, being unable to find General Webb, I reported to Lieutenant-Colonel Locke, assistant adjutant-general, Fifth Corps, and was directed by him to turn them over to the provost-marshal of the corps. I was then ordered to return to camp.

On the 7th instant an order was received from the provost-marshal-general's office directing me to proceed to the camps of the Fifth Corps and drive up to the front all the men I could find there. About 100 men were arrested and about fifty more were found on the road, and turned over to the provost-marshal of the corps. I then returned with the battalion to camp.

F. W. HESS,

Major, Commanding Battalion, Third Pennsylvania Cavalry.

Capt. PH. SCHUYLER,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 9.

Reports of Bet. Brig. Gen. Henry L. Abbot, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Siege Train, of operations January 1-March 31.

HEADQUARTERS SIEGE ARTILLERY,
Broadway Landing, Va., March 2, 1865.

GENERAL: In obedience to the circular of July 29, 1864, I have the honor to submit the following report of my operations during the month of January last. The amount of firing is shown by the following table: Cohorn mortar, 219; 8-inch siege mortar, 636; 10-inch siege mortar, 15; 10-inch sea-coast mortar, 144; 30-pounder Parrott, 879; 4½-inch gun, 3; 100-pounder Parrott, 209; field guns, 137 rounds; making a total of 2,242 rounds, weighing about fifty-one tons, or at a rate of about 1.6 tons daily.

The most important event during the month on these lines was the attempt of the rebel fleet to pass the obstructions in James River on the night of January 23, when I think it may fairly be claimed that my batteries prevented a serious disaster. Three rams, the wooden gun-boat Drewry, a small steam torpedo-boat, and perhaps more, passed Fort Brady about 8 p. m., under cover of the darkness. They received about twenty-five shots from the fort—armament, two 100-pounder Parrotts and three 30-pounder Parrotts. The fort was instantly opened upon by the rebel land batteries, mounting some dozen guns, and their fire soon disabled one of the 100-pounder guns. The fleet passed on to a point near the rebel Howlett Battery, out of range of Fort Brady. My batteries below Fort Brady were three in number: Parsons and Wilcox—armament, one 100-pounder Parrott and one 10-inch sea-coast mortar; Spofford—armament, one 30-pounder Parrott, placed in position about 7 a. m.; and Sawyer—armament, one 100-pounder Parrott and two 10-inch sea-coast mortars. About 10 p. m. a ram succeeded in reaching and began removing the obstructions, receiving thirty-one shots from the mortar in Wilcox and nine from those in Sawyer, with musketry fire from all the spare artillerymen while so engaged. At 3 a. m. one ram passed the obstructions and anchored about 600 yards above Sawyer, where she remained for forty-five minutes. This position was only exposed to mortar fire. One shell fired at 60 degrees elevation struck her, and she immediately moved up the river; nineteen shells had been fired at her while lying in this position. During the night forty-four rounds from the 100-pounder and twenty-four rounds from the mortar in Parsons and Wilcox and three rounds from the 100-pounder in Sawyer were fired at the fleet above the obstructions. The darkness prevented the effect of this fire from being known.

At daylight two rams and the Drewry were discovered aground near left bank, some 1,500 yards above Parsons. Fire was at once opened from that battery with long percussion-shell from the 100-pounder. The second shot struck the Drewry and the third exploded her magazine, completely destroying her. The following table shows the fire upon the fleet after daylight, before it escaped up the river, about noon:

| Battery. | Commanding officer. | 100-pounder. | | 10-inch sea-coast mortar. | | 30-pounder Parrott. | | Range. |
|--------------------|---|--------------|------|---------------------------|------|---------------------|------|-----------------|
| | | Fired. | Hit. | Fired. | Hit. | Fired. | Hit. | |
| Parsons and Wilcox | Lieut. H. A. Pratt, 1st Connecticut Artillery. | 57 | 30 | 25 | 2 | | | Yards. 1,500 |
| Spofford | Lieut. C. N. Silliman, 1st Connecticut Artillery. | | | | | 62 | 27 | 1,800 |
| Sawyer | Lieut. E. P. Mason, 1st Connecticut Artillery. | 21 | 7 | 31 | 2 | | | 2,600 |
| Total | | 78 | 37 | 56 | 4 | 62 | 27 | |

As soon as the rams could get afloat they retreated out of range, near Howlett Battery, leaving the torpedo-boat aground. About 3 a. m. on 25th they escaped up the river past Fort Brady, receiving a number of rounds in the darkness, several of which struck them.

The ammunition used in this engagement consisted in part of solid shot, and in part of shell—percussion and time—and case. Unfortunately the line of fire when the rams were aground was oblique, and the projectiles glanced off without penetrating. Officers on picket directly opposite, however, report that the armor was started and partially ripped off in a number of places. During the firing my batteries, especially Forts Brady and Parsons and Wilcox, were under a very heavy fire from the rebel land batteries. Three men were killed in the former, and a large number slightly injured from fragments, &c. Too much commendation cannot be given to Captain Pierce, commanding Fort Brady, and to Lieutenants Pratt, Mason, and Silliman, commanding the other batteries, for their excellent conduct. The total firing, including those fired in reply to the rebel land batteries, was about 500 rounds of siege ammunition. Lieut. W. G. Ball, Thirteenth New York Artillery, also moved a 20-pounder Parrott (field gun) to the bank of the river and fired eighty-five rounds, at a range of about 1,400 yards, with creditable zeal.

At 6.30 p. m. on January 5 I received an order from General Grant to embark a siege train, which ultimately proved to be destined for Fort Fisher. I was to accompany it with a sufficient detail of artillerymen from my command and a company of volunteer engineers from General Benham's brigade, also a small detachment from General Graham's naval brigade. During January 6 I was waiting transportation, but removed three companies of First Connecticut Artillery from the lines, and also two 30-pounder Parrotts and four Coehorn mortars. The propeller C. O. Leary, 841 tons, reported at 8 a. m. on January 7, and my ordnance officers at once began loading her, from both sides, with all possible dispatch with the ordnance. They employed about 150 men. The propeller Scott, 1,086 tons, reported at 3 p. m., with 50,000 feet of lumber on board. By 8 p. m. she was ready to sail, with two companies (280 men) and thirty-six mules. At 7.30 a. m. of January 8, the propeller Governor Chase, 746 tons, reported. At noon she was ready to sail, with two companies (282 men) and forty-one animals. During the evening the three steamers, with my headquarters on the Leary, dropped down to City Point, where I received written orders from General Grant to report to General Terry. My command consisted of 20 officers, 568 men, 77 animals, 12 wagons, sixteen 30-pounder Parrotts, 20 Coehorns, with 8,000 rounds for former and 6,600 for latter, 50,000 feet of lumber, &c. We took nineteen days' rations, four being cooked. We sailed at daylight of January 9, and reached Fort Monroe that evening. On January 10 we were detained by a severe storm, but sailed at 8 a. m. of January 11, arriving at Beaufort, N. C., on the following day in time to join the fleet then starting for Fort Fisher, where we arrived about 5 p. m.

During January 13 we were ordered to remain on board. On January 14 I put the engineer company on shore, with thirty-seven animals, rations, forage, &c. The sea was too rough to land the guns. The steamer was anchored, and a warp of 3-inch rope, 120 fathoms long, was secured to the beach. The men were pulled ashore in surf-boats, and the animals slung, hoisted overboard, and towed ashore by the warp. On the 15th the sea was smoother. I had brought three launches and a detachment of thirty-five men of General Graham's naval brigade, under Lieutenant Nelson, to aid in disembarking my train. I also received all the assistance required from the navy. Acting Master Z. L. Tanner, aided by Acting Ensign L. Pope, both of the Rhode Island, took charge of removing the stores, &c., from the ship's side to the beach, and labored most faithfully and skillfully on January 14 and 15 to accomplish all that was possible. On January 15, three 30-pounder Parrotts, complete, with ammunition, &c., another company, the rest of the animals, the wagons, &c., were unloaded. The guns were unloaded in the following manner: They were raised from the hold, and slung overboard, by using purchases from the masthead and the yards strengthened by a preventer brace. They were carefully lowered overboard, and placed on the launch (one at a trip), with very considerable risk, owing to the rolling of the ship. The launch was then pulled along the warp to the edge of the surf, and the gun rolled overboard. It was then dragged up by about 200 men pulling upon a rope secured to it. It was a slow and dangerous process, and only possible in a very smooth sea. The carriages, ammunition, &c., were landed in a similar way.

Fort Fisher was carried by assault on the evening of January 15, and the disembarkation of my train was at once suspended. Captain Hatfield, my ordnance officer, was ordered by me to make a survey of the fort. A copy of his sketch will be forwarded to the department upon his return from a leave of absence.

The following list of captured guns was taken:

| Smooth-bore ordnance. | | | | Rifled ordnance. | | | |
|--------------------------------|-------------|------------|--------|--|-------------|------------|--------|
| | Good order. | Dis-abled. | Total. | | Good order. | Dis-abled. | Total. |
| 11-inch Brooke..... | 2 | | 2 | 8-inch Armstrong (150-pounder)..... | 1 | | 1 |
| 10-inch columbiad..... | 13 | 2 | 15 | 8-inch Blakely..... | 1 | | 1 |
| 10-inch sea-coast mortar..... | 1 | | 1 | 7-inch Brooke, double bands..... | 1 | 2 | 3 |
| 8-inch columbiad..... | 11 | 1 | 12 | 6.4-inch Parrott, U. S..... | 1 | | 1 |
| 32-pounder..... | 3 | 4 | 7 | 6.4-inch Brooke, double bands..... | 4 | | 4 |
| 32-pounder cannon..... | 6 | 1 | 6 | 6.4-inch, single band..... | 4 | 3 | 6 |
| 24-pounder, iron..... | 1 | 1 | 2 | 6.4-inch, no bands..... | 2 | 2 | 4 |
| 24-pounder Coehorn (iron)..... | 2 | | 2 | 5.8-inch, no bands..... | 1 | | 1 |
| 12-pounder howitzer, U. S..... | 1 | | 1 | 4.6-inch Blakely..... | 1 | | 1 |
| 12-pounder howitzer, T. F..... | 1 | | 1 | 4.2-inch Parrott (No. 2)..... | 1 | | 1 |
| 12-pounder gun, U. S..... | 3 | | 3 | 4.2-inch, banded..... | | 1 | 1 |
| 6-pounder gun, U. S..... | 2 | | 2 | 3-inch banded Richmond..... | 2 | | 2 |
| 6-pounder gun (iron)..... | 1 | | 1 | 3-inch Whitworth..... | 1 | | 1 |
| 1.5-inch gun..... | | 1 | 1 | 2.2-inch Whitworth, muzzle-loader..... | 1 | | 1 |
| Volley gun..... | | 1 | 1 | | | | |
| Total..... | 40 | 11 | 57 | Total..... | 21 | 7 | 28 |

Many of the carriages of the guns in good order were disabled. Immense quantities of ammunition, ordnance stores, &c., were taken.

On January 20 a storm drove my vessels to sea, where they remained on the following day, returning on 22d. On this date General Terry relieved myself and staff, ordering me to report to Lieutenant-General Grant in person, leaving my command temporarily to garrison Fort Fisher and my train afloat at Beaufort, N. C. I arrived at City Point on January 24, when General Grant at once ordered my train and three companies back to these lines, and placed me specially in charge of preparing additional land batteries to oppose the rebel fleet. After making all needed arrangements for placing four more 100-pounder Parrotts and three more 30-pounder Parrotts in position on James River, I received a leave of absence for thirty days, starting on January 27.

With reference to such an expedition as that at Fort Fisher, I am fully of the opinion that the ordnance (siege) should be loaded on side-wheel steamers, on account of their greater steadiness. There are very few days in the winter when a 30-pounder Parrott can be landed from a propeller on an open beach.

On relieving me General Terry published an order, a copy of which I inclose herewith.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY L. ABBOT,

Bvt. Brig. Gen. of Volunteers, Captain of Engineers, U. S. Army.

Brig. Gen. RICHARD DELAFIELD,

Chief Engineer, U. S. Army.

[Inclosure.]

SPECIAL ORDERS, }
No. 11.

HEADQUARTERS U. S. FORCES,
Fort Fisher, N. C., January 22, 1865.

* * * * *

III. Bvt. Brig. Gen. H. L. Abbot, U. S. Volunteers, is relieved from duty as chief of artillery of this expedition, and will proceed to City Point, Va., and report to the lieutenant-general commanding the Armies of the United States.

The major-general commanding desires to express to General Abbot his thanks for the zeal, ability, and energy evinced by him in landing the siege train of this command upon the open ocean beach under the most disadvantageous circumstances.

By order of Maj. Gen. Alfred H. Terry:

ADRIAN TERRY,

Captain and Assistant Adjutant-General.

—
HEADQUARTERS SIEGE ARTILLERY,
Broadway Landing, Va., March 4, 1865.

MAJOR: I would respectfully submit the following report, heretofore delayed by my absence, of the operations of my command during the action with the rebel fleet in January last, and would request that it may be forwarded to department headquarters, with a favorable indorsement upon my application for brevets for the officers commanding the batteries:

On the night of January 23, 1865, three rams, the wooden gun-boat Drewry, a small steam torpedo-boat, and perhaps more, passed Fort

Brady about 8 p. m., under cover of the darkness. They received about twenty-five shots from the fort—armament, two 100-pounder Parrotts and three 30-pounder Parrotts. The fort was instantly opened upon by the rebel land batteries, mounting some dozen guns, and their fire soon disabled one of the 100-pounder guns. The fleet passed on to a point near the rebel Howlett Battery, out of range of Fort Brady. My batteries below Fort Brady were three in number: Parsons and Wilcox—armament, one 100-pounder Parrott and one 10-inch sea-coast mortar; Spofford—armament, one 30-pounder Parrott, placed in position about 7 a. m.; and Sawyer—armament, one 100-pounder Parrott and two 10-inch sea-coast mortars. About 10 p. m. a ram succeeded in reaching and began removing the obstructions, receiving thirty-one shots from the mortar in Wilcox and nine from those in Sawyer, with musketry fire from all the spare artillerymen while so engaged. At 3 a. m. one ram passed the obstructions and anchored about 600 yards above Sawyer, where she remained for forty-five minutes. This position was only exposed to mortar fire. One shell fired at 60 degrees elevation struck her, and she immediately moved up the river; nineteen shells had been fired at her while lying in this position. During the night forty-four rounds from the 100-pounder and twenty-four rounds from the mortar in Parsons and Wilcox and three rounds from the 100-pounder in Sawyer were fired at the fleet above the obstructions. The darkness prevented the effect of this fire from being known.

At daylight two rams and the Drewry were discovered aground near left bank, some 1,500 yards above Parsons. Fire was at once opened from that battery with long percussion-shell from the 100-pounder. The second shot struck the Drewry and the third exploded her magazine, completely destroying her. The following table shows the fire upon the fleet after daylight, before it escaped up the river, about noon:

| Battery. | Commanding officer. | 100-pounder. | | 10-inch sea-coast mortar. | | 30-pounder Parrott. | | Range. |
|--------------------|---|--------------|-------|---------------------------|-------|---------------------|-------|--------------|
| | | Fired. | Hit. | Fired. | Hit. | Fired. | Hit. | |
| Parsons and Wilcox | Lieut. H. A. Pratt, 1st Connecticut Artillery. | 57 | 30 | 25 | 2 | | | Yards. 1,500 |
| Spofford | Lieut. C. N. Silliman, 1st Connecticut Artillery. | | | | | 62 | 27 | 1,800 |
| Sawyer | Lieut. E. P. Mason, 1st Connecticut Artillery. | 21 | 7 | 31 | 2 | | | 2,500 |
| Total | | 78 | 37 | 56 | 4 | 62 | 27 | |

As soon as the rams could get afloat they retreated out of range, near Howlett Battery, leaving the torpedo-boat aground. About 3 a. m. on the 25th they escaped up the river past Fort Brady, receiving a number of rounds in the darkness, several of which struck them.

The ammunition used in this engagement consisted in part of solid shot, and in part of shell—percussion and time—and case. Unfortunately the line of fire when the rams were aground was oblique, and the projectiles glanced off without penetrating. Officers on picket directly opposite, however, report that the armor was started and partially ripped off in a number of places. During the firing my batteries, especially Forts Brady and Parsons and Wilcox, were under a very heavy fire from the rebel land batteries. Three men were killed in the former, and a large number slightly injured from fragments, &c. The total firing, including those fired in reply to the rebel land batteries, was about 500 rounds of siege ammunition. Lieut. W. G. Ball, Thirteenth New York Artillery, also moved a 20-pounder Parrott (field gun) to the bank of the river, and fired eighty-five rounds, at a range of about 1,400 yards, with creditable zeal.

In my judgment, the determined reception which the rebel fleet received from my batteries, joined to the difficulties of navigation, which, under this fire, they could not overcome, saved this army from a serious disaster. The fire of the rebel land batteries upon mine was very severe. Several guns were struck; three shells passed nearly through the parapet of Fort Brady, and by their explosion knocked down many men with fragments of the revetment. In all batteries the rebel fire was effective. I think that some reward is merited for so important services thus rendered, and therefore request that brevets may be conferred upon the following officers:

First. Capt. H. H. Pierce, First Connecticut Artillery, commanding Fort Brady. This officer was actively engaged in the battle of the Petersburg Mine; was in charge of the artillery at Dutch Gap during about all the heavy firing there. He directed the fire upon the rebel fleet in James River last autumn, when it was driven back with loss. During the last action (January 23-24) with the rebel fleet he was knocked senseless and considerably injured by a shell which exploded very near him, but refused to be carried to the rear. He has been indefatigable in discharging his duty during the whole campaign.

Second. First Lieut. H. A. Pratt, First Connecticut Artillery, commanding Batteries Parsons and Wilcox, who has, on many occasions, done excellent service there during the summer.

Third. First Lieut. B. P. Mason, First Connecticut Artillery, commanding Battery Sawyer.

Fourth. Second Lieut. O. N. Silliman, First Connecticut Artillery, commanding Battery Spofford.

Fifth. First Lieut. W. G. Ball, Thirteenth New York Artillery, commanding the light 20-pounder. Although his piece was practically of little utility, his efforts deserve reward.

I would also request that a medal of honor may be bestowed upon Sergt. George L. Fox, Company H, First Connecticut Artillery, for his coolness, under a heavy fire, in pointing the piece which blew up the gun-boat Drewry. He afterward struck the ram six times in succession at a distance of nearly a mile.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY L. ABBOT,

Colonel First Connecticut Artillery, Comdg. Siege Artillery.

Bvt. Maj. GEORGE A. HICKS,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Bermuda Hundred Defenses.

HEADQUARTERS SIEGE ARTILLERY,
Broadway Landing, Va., March 5, 1865.

GENERAL: In obedience to the circular of July 20, 1864, I have the honor to submit the following report of my operations during the month of February, 1865:

I was absent on leave of absence until February 27.

The following table exhibits the amount of firing during the month on these lines: Coehorn mortar, 357; 8-inch siege mortar, 509; 10-inch siege mortar, 103; 30-pounder Parrott, 609; 4-inch gun, 63; 100-pounder Parrott, 1; field guns, 3 rounds; making a total of 1,645 rounds, weighing about 32 tons, or at a rate of about 1.1 tons daily, an amount less than in any preceding month.

There has been so much discussion of late as to the merits of the different kinds of guns and ammunition now in use in our service that I have decided to report upon certain records which I have been accumulating here, remarking that it is possible that future firing may modify the results obtained:

First, as to endurance. The only failures have been the bursting of a 24-pounder Sawyer (rifled), and the blowing off of the muzzle of a 30-pounder Parrott, caused by the explosion of a shell in the bore. The gun was not destroyed; the face was cut smooth with a cold chisel, and its accuracy seems not impaired. The following table shows the extent of the tests, the record of a few guns showing the largest amount of firing being selected:

One hundred-pounder Parrott.—No. 11, fired 302 times; No. 13, fired 533 times; No. 15, fired 304 times; No. 20, fired 458 times. All old guns; fired an unknown number of times before coming into my possession.

Thirty-pounder Parrott.—No. 100, fired 1,210 times; No. 101, fired 1,404 times; No. 121, fired 970 times; No. 255, fired 1,487 times; No. 256, fired 1,472 times; No. 259, fired 1,392 times; apparently uninjured.

Four and one-half-inch ordnance.—No. 41, fired 457 times; No. 89, fired 578 times; No. 96, fired 499 times; No. 97, fired 519 times. All rendered dangerous from not being bouché when made; this is a great defect in these guns which should be removed.

Eight-inch siege mortars.—No. 20, fired 1,530 times; No. 24, fired 1,614 times; No. 25, fired 1,521 times; No. 26, fired 1,536 times; No. 32, fired 2,015 times; No. 36, fired 2,016 times. Apparently uninjured, the vents, even, not showing much wear.

Second, as to ammunition. The following tables explain themselves; they include February:

| Kind of gun. | Projectile. | Number fired. | Uncertain. | Number tested. | Took grooves. | Tumbled. | Per cent. serviceable. |
|-----------------------|---------------------|---------------|------------|----------------|---------------|----------|------------------------|
| 100-pounder Parrott.. | Parrott..... | 1,355 | 87 | 1,268 | 1,223 | 45 | 0.00 |
| 100-pounder Parrott.. | Rebel (captured)... | 22 | | 22 | 21 | 1 | 0.05 |
| 30-pounder Parrott... | Parrott..... | 8,590 | 1,738 | 7,218 | 6,921 | 294 | 0.05 |
| 30-pounder Parrott... | Schenkl, banded... | 178 | 50 | 122 | 70 | 52 | 0.07 |
| 30-pounder Parrott... | Rebel (captured)... | 43 | 1 | 42 | 40 | 2 | 0.05 |
| 4.5-inch ordnance... | Schenkl..... | 2,002 | 520 | 2,142 | 1,767 | 375 | 0.82 |
| 4.5-inch ordnance... | Dyer..... | 1,304 | 142 | 1,222 | 981 | 241 | 0.80 |
| 4.5-inch ordnance... | Absterlum (lead)... | 240 | 30 | 200 | 65 | 144 | 0.31 |
| 20-pounder Parrott... | Parrott..... | 572 | 07 | 505 | 432 | 73 | 0.85 |
| 20-pounder Parrott... | Schenkl..... | 49 | | 49 | 40 | 3 | 0.93 |
| 5.8-inch Sawyer a.... | Sawyer (banded)... | 10 | | 10 | 10 | | 1.00 |
| 3.67-inch Sawyer.... | Sawyer (lead)..... | 125 | 20 | 105 | 81 | 24 | 0.77 |

a Gun burst.

The following table tests the fuses in use; it includes the February firing:

| Kind of fuse. | Number used. | Uncertain. | Number tested. | Burned well. | Burned variably. | Did not burn. | Per cent. serviceable. |
|--|--------------|------------|----------------|--------------|------------------|---------------|------------------------|
| Parrott { percussion | 7,649 | 2,492 | 5,157 | 4,327 | 112 | 718 | 0.83 |
| { time | 2,822 | 682 | 2,160 | 1,712 | 119 | 329 | 0.79 |
| Schenck { percussion | 2,526 | 814 | 1,812 | 1,506 | 79 | 227 | 0.83 |
| { combination | 359 | 210 | 140 | 83 | 22 | 44 | 0.55 |
| Dyer, time | 290 | 94 | 202 | 143 | — | 59 | 0.70 |
| Absterdam, percussion | 236 | 48 | 188 | 99 | 27 | 62 | 0.65 |
| Tice, concussion | 41 | — | 41 | 30 | 1 | 10 | 0.73 |
| Rebel { percussion | 7 | 0 | — | — | 1 | — | — |
| { time | 38 | 6 | 32 | 9 | 8 | 15 | 0.28 |
| Sawyer, combination | 135 | 47 | 88 | 75 | 2 | 11 | 0.85 |
| Bonmann | 706 | 218 | 488 | 359 | 34 | 95 | 0.73 |
| 12-inch mortar, wooden | 218 | 54 | 164 | 123 | 18 | 18 | 0.78 |
| 10-inch mortar, wooden | 2,349 | 854 | 1,495 | 1,206 | 231 | 58 | 0.80 |
| 8-inch mortar, wooden | 12,527 | 1,681 | 10,861 | 9,557 | 815 | 491 | 0.87 |
| Cochorn mortar, paper | 13,267 | 1,796 | 11,561 | 10,495 | 470 | 596 | 0.90 |

These figures are too simple and convincing to require remark, other than to explain that every possible care has been taken to secure accuracy. They are taken from the daily reports of the batteries, where men are specially detailed, under the close supervision of the battery commander, to note the effect of every shot. If any uncertainty exists the shot is entered "uncertain," and is not included in the final ratio. I believe that such records have never before been attempted in actual service, and therefore regard them as extremely valuable.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY L. ABBOT,

Capt. of Engineers, U. S. Army, Bvt. Brig. Gen. of Vols., Comdg.

Brig. Gen. RICHARD DELAFIELD,

Chief Engineer, U. S. Army.

HEADQUARTERS SIEGE ARTILLERY, Broadway Landing, Va., April 25, 1865.

GENERAL: In accordance with the requirements of the circular of July 29, 1864, I have the honor to submit the following report for March, 1865:

The following changes occurred in my command: On March 10 the three companies of the First Connecticut Artillery returned from Fort Fisher, N. C. On March 21 Major-General Hartsuff, commanding Defenses of Bermuda Hundred, announced me as commander of the artillery brigade of his command. This added a light battery to my forces, and thus placed me in command of eighteen companies; aggregate, 2,700 men and 199 guns. Of these, eight companies were serving with the Army of the Potomac, and ten with the Army of the James. On March 28 Brevet Major-General Hunt ordered me to report temporarily for the former to Major-General Parke, commanding Ninth Corps. During the month I was detailed by Major-General Meade as a member of a board to examine certain officers of the Fifteenth New York Volunteer Engineers, and by Lieutenant-General Grant as a member of two boards, one to report upon Col. Tal. P. Schaffner's system of artillery mining, and the other upon Mr. R. L. Fleming's incendiary shell. These boards all completed the work assigned them and adjourned.

The following exhibits the firing of my batteries during March: Cochorn mortar, 1,107 rounds; 8-inch mortar, 461 rounds; 10-inch mortar, 139 rounds; 30-pounder Parrott, 485 rounds; 4½-inch ordnance, 342 rounds; making a total of 2,534 rounds, weighing about 25 tons, or at a rate of about 0.8 tons daily, an amount less than during any month of the siege.

On March 25 an event occurred which well illustrated the advantages of the system of fortifications adopted by Colonel Duane, chief engineer, Army of the Potomac. This system consists, in general terms, of a series of small field-works, capable of containing a battery of artillery and an infantry garrison of some 200 men each. They are closed at the gorge, well-protected with abatis or palisading, often supplied with bomb-proofs, and placed at intervals of about half a mile, on such ground as to well sweep the line in front with artillery fire. They are connected by strong, continuous infantry parapets, protected in front by obstacles. They differ from those of the rebel line chiefly in being closed at the gorge, which is rarely the case with the latter. Fort Stedman is one of the weakest and most ill-constructed works of the line, being not protected by abatis in rear, being masked on its right (just in rear of Battery No. 10) by a mass of bomb-proofs, rendered necessary by the terrible fire which has habitually had place in this vicinity, and being only about 200 yards distant from the enemy's main line. The parapet had settled greatly during the winter, and, in fine, the work was very liable to being carried by a sudden assault. Company K, First Connecticut Artillery, served mortar batteries in Batteries 9 and 10, and Company L, First Connecticut Artillery, in Battery 12 and in Fort Haskell. At about 4 a. m. of March 25, three divisions of the rebels, under General Gordon, made a sudden and well-arranged attack upon this fort. It was a complete surprise, and was successful. Their columns simultaneously swept over the parapet between Stedman and Battery 9, over Battery 10, and over Battery 11, formed in rear of the fort, and carried it almost without opposition. From that time to daylight a hand-to-hand fight raged among the bomb-proofs and on the flanks of the enemy's position. He assaulted Fort Haskell again and again, but failed to carry it, or Battery No. 9, which, unlike the others named, is closed at the gorge. As soon as the light would admit, all my own artillery from Batteries 4, 5, 8, 9, and Fort Haskell, and all the light artillery which General Tidball, chief of artillery, Ninth Corps, could concentrate upon the position, opened and maintained a terrible fire upon the enemy. No re-enforcements could join them across the plain, owing to this fire; their own position was entailing deadly loss upon them. The reserves of the line were rapidly assembling, and finally, about 8 a. m., made a gallant charge, which resulted in the recovery of our works, all our artillery—even including my Coehorn mortars—and in the capture of over 1,800 prisoners. The following extract from rebel papers show the effect of our artillery fire:

It was found that the inclosed works in the rear commanding the enemy's main line could only be taken at a great sacrifice.

The enemy massed his artillery so heavily in the neighboring forts, and was enabled to pour such a terrible enfilading fire upon our ranks, that it was deemed best to withdraw.

The enemy enfiladed us from right and left in the captured works to such an extent that we could no longer hold them without the loss of many men, &c.

If the inclosed works on right and left had not fixed a limit beyond which the enemy could not extend, I think a great disaster might have occurred; as it was, my regiment's loss was heavy, being about sixty men.

The remainder of the month was spent in cannonading and in placing guns for the great assault of April 2.

My address is, "Colonel First Connecticut Artillery, City Point, via Fort Monroe, Va."

I am, general, very respectfully, &c.,

HENRY L. ABBOT,

Captain of Engineers and Bvt. Brig. Gen. of Volunteers.

Brig. Gen. RICHARD DELAFIELD,
Chief Engineer, U. S. Army.

No. 10.

Report of Maj. George Ager, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS SIEGE BATTERIES,
Before Petersburg, Va., March 27, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to transmit the following as the part taken by the batteries under my command in the action of March 25, 1865:

About 4 a. m. the garrison of Battery No. 10, consisting of about sixty men of Company K, Capt. John M. Twiss commanding, were alarmed by the sentinel on guard, that the enemy were assaulting our lines. Before the mortars could be brought into action the enemy had captured the picket-line, and were advancing over the parapet. Small-arms were brought into use, and for a short time the enemy were held in check by a hand-to-hand conflict. Owing to the darkness the entire garrison of this advanced battery was captured. Captain Twiss having been wounded, went to the rear, where a portion of his company was stationed, formed them, and continued the action from bomb-proof to bomb-proof. By this time the enemy had flanked him on the right and left, and receiving no support he conducted his men to Battery No. 4, where he reported to me. Lieutenant Odell, commanding one section of this battery, was killed at the commencement of the assault. At daylight I was informed that Fort Stedman, including Battery No. 10, was in possession of the enemy, and that they were massing troops there. I immediately ordered Batteries Nos. 4, 5, 8, and 9 to concentrate their fire on the fort and vicinity. This was done with good effect until our troops prepared to charge and retake the line.

Battery No. 12, on the left of Stedman, opened fire at the first alarm, and continued until the enemy had formed a line of battle in their rear, when the mortars were turned and several shells thrown among the troops there forming. But finding themselves the particular object of the enemy's fire, and it being impossible to serve the pieces any longer, Lieutenant Lewis, commanding, led his men by the left to Fort Haskell, where this company with small-arms assisted in repulsing the assaults on this fort, at the same time directing their mortar fire on the battery previously occupied. Having been informed that a charge was to be made by the infantry to retake the line, I ordered Lieutenant Casey, who had reported to me with the remainder of K. Company, to follow up, and, if successful, to take possession of Battery No. 10 and prepare for immediate action. This was done with promptness. He and his small detachment, arriving at the works with the charging column, found the implements destroyed and carried off, making it impossible to use the mortars.

The following is a list of casualties and ammunition expended at the several batteries:

| | Casualties. | | | | | | Ammunition expended. | | | | |
|---------------------------|-------------|------|-----------|------|-----------|------|------------------------------------|--------------------------|-----------------------------|--------------------------------|---------------------------|
| | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Missing. | | 30-pounder per- cussion-shells. | 8-inch mortar shells. | Coehorn mor- tar shells. | 4-inch percus- sion-shells. | 10-inch mortar shells. |
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | | | | | |
| Battery 4, Company I..... | | | | | | | Rounds. 136 | | | | |
| Battery 5, Company E..... | | 1 | | | | | 178 | 89 | | | |
| Batteries 8 and 9..... | | | | | | | | | 260 | | |
| Battery 10..... | 1 | 4 | 1 | 5 | | 30 | | | | | |
| Battery 12..... | | 1 | | | | 13 | | | 240 | | |
| Fort Haskell..... | | | | | | | | | 225 | | |
| Fort Morton..... | | | | | | | | | | 5 | 43 |
| Fort Mifflin..... | | | | | | | | | | 33 | |

In conclusion I take great pleasure in saying that the conduct of both officers and men is deserving of the highest praise, and for promptness and energy could not be excelled. Especially I may mention Captain Twiss, commanding Company K, at Battery No. 10; also Lieutenant Casey. Through the energetic efforts of these officers the enemy were kept in check long enough to enable the works on their right and left to prepare for action and repulse the assaults.

Lieutenant Lewis, commanding Company L, at Battery No. 12 and Haskell, Lieutenants Bingham and Couch, of the same company, are deserving of much credit for the manner in which these batteries were served. Lieutenant Bangs, Company E, at Battery No. 5, deserves to be mentioned, for though the fire of three separate batteries was directed on his work, it was entirely ignored, and his concentrated fire of four 8-inch mortars and two 30-pounder guns was directed on Fort Stedman, and with terrible effect. At his battery one of the enemy's shells penetrated and burst inside the magazine, and though there were four barrels of powder in it at the time, strange to say it failed to ignite, and no injury was done.

GEORGE AGER,

Major First Connecticut Artillery, Commanding.

Lieut. C. W. FILER,

First Connecticut Arty., Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

[First Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS SIEGE ARTILLERY,

Broadway Landing, Va., March 29, 1865.

Respectfully forwarded to artillery headquarters, Army of the Potomac.

I proceeded to the spot when notified of the attack, and was personally cognizant of the accuracy of most of Major Ager's report. The only thing which should be added is, that he himself exhibited great judgment and skill in commanding his batteries and that his exertions contributed much to the successful result of the affair. By his concentric fire the enemy were severely cut up and demoralized both while trying to form and when on their retreat.

HENRY L. ABBOT,

Brevet Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Commanding.

[Second indorsement.]

ARTILLERY HEADQUARTERS, ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
June 1, 1865.

This report, received after the active operations of the recent campaign commenced, is respectfully forwarded to be placed amongst the other reports of the action of the 25th of March, when the enemy attacked and for a short space held Fort Stedman. The reports of the siege batteries were not made to Major-General Parke, commanding the lines at that point.

HENRY J. HUNT,
Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

No. 11.

Report of Capt. Henry H. Pierce, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Fort Brady, of operations January 23-25.

FORT BRADY, VA.,
January 26, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report that, pursuant to written instructions from headquarters Department of Virginia and North Carolina, dated January 21, 1865, every available officer and man in my command was put hard at work to get my fort, then much damaged by recent rains, in readiness to receive the rebel rams. All hands worked with a will, and, as far as possible, everything was in good and seasonable order. Previous to their coming had verbal notification from the same source as the written.

About 8 p. m. January 23 my lookout man, stationed on the parapet, discovered the rams approaching, floating, not steaming, down the river. Thanks to the vigilance of my own officers and men and those of Captain Bach, commanding colored supports, I was not taken by surprise, as no alarm was given by our pickets on the opposite shore nearly a mile above, and the first shot fired at the enemy's boats was from my own heavy guns. Gave them in the neighborhood of twenty-five shots while floating a distance of thirty or forty rods; should have given them more had my best gun, left 100-pounder, not been dismounted at the second shot by one of the enemy's shell and my two left 30-pounders been run off the platforms, owing to their (platforms) being too narrow to admit of any but direct fire. Put the latter pieces in position again and fired them; also moved my right 30-pounder, previously so placed as not to bear on the river, by hand, outside the fort into the ditch, but, owing to the extreme difficulty of moving it in the mud, was unable to get it there in season to use before the boats had passed; this gun, however, did good service on their return.

In consequence of the mal-construction of Fort Brady, was unable to fire down the river; and by reason of the embrasures having been built with special reference to the enemy's land batteries, my left 100-pounder being destroyed, was prevented from injuring the boats after passing a certain point, and that point above my work.

The rams came down by twos, lashed together, which was the cause of my mistaking, in the obscurity of the night, the actual number for three, as I reported by order to department headquarters.

The construction and position of my battery with regard to the crest of the river-bank renders it little adapted for protection against gun-boats, and my parapet is so low on the down-river side that they could completely enfilade me with their stern guns without receiving a shot in return. Filled and placed sand-bags there during the night of the 23d to form a slight barrier.

During all this time the enemy were incessantly annoying us from their land batteries, comprising sixteen or more heavy guns, making good shots all the while. Did not pay much attention to them until the next day morning, when they opened one gun from Semmes in direction of our Sawyer battery. As I could get a good range, opened and dismounted it; all the enemy's guns replied to my fire, but should not have stopped had I not received orders from department headquarters to cease; dismounted another of their pieces before the order reached here.

After the boats went down, apparently somewhat crippled, had verbal and written instructions from General Turner, chief of staff, to be on the watch for their return. Had all my serviceable pieces loaded and pointed, and threw out pickets as far down as Dutch Gap. Am greatly indebted to Captain Bach and the officers under him for their coolness and willingness to take every pains to give me timely warning. About 3 a. m. January 25 was apprised by Captain Bach's pickets of the return of the boats; was on the lookout and had all prepared; waited until they came directly opposite, fired, and knocked over the smoke-stack of the leading one (this was accomplished by the gun in the ditch); thought she was sinking, but the next boat took her in tow. Sent one shot at each of the rams and iron-clads, five in all, from the same piece as they passed by, then had to wait until they arrived in front of my three remaining pieces. Worked them as rapidly and surely as possible, and succeeded in sending some 125 solid shot at them before steaming out of range. Struck them time after time, as the sound showed, but the shots crumbled or glanced off. All this was under a terrible fire; the enemy putting from 1,000 to 1,500 heavy shell in and around my battery. Was at no time silenced by their guns. Consider the rebel boats to have been much crippled in their passage down and up.

Looking at the caliber and position of my guns, the weakness of my parapet, and the severity of the enemy's fire, cannot but deem it fortunate that the affair turned out so favorably.

But three men—two engineers and one colored support—were killed inside the work; upward of forty of my company were knocked down by splinters, &c., and slightly scratched, but none so injured as to be unfitted for immediate duty.

Cannot help speaking again and again of the splendid behavior of my officers, Lieutenants Deming and Miller, and of my men. Am accountable in a great measure to them for the entire success of the whole affair.

Since writing the above, have discovered that my other and only 100-pounder was cracked at the muzzle by one of the enemy's shell; can use it in case of necessity.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

II. H. PIERCE,

Captain, First Connecticut Artillery.

First Lieut. O. A. TRUESDELL,

Adjutant First Connecticut Artillery.

12 R R—VOL XLVI, PT I

No. 12.

Report of Capt. William C. Faxon, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Fort Emery, of operations March 25.

FORT EMERY [AVERY], VA.,
March 25, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report that in the engagement this morning I fired thirty-three percussion-shell—ten at a body of the enemy's troops occupying a position in rear of Fort Stedman and the remainder in reply to the 8-inch columbiad and light guns immediately in my front, which opened on this fort and on our own troops passing in rear, and which were silenced.

The firing on the enemy's troops was by direction of a major on the staff of Major-General Parke, who pointed out the position, and who reported that it did considerable damage to the enemy.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. C. FAXON,

Captain, First Connecticut Artillery, Commanding Battery.

Lieut. W. S. MALONY,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Siege Batteries.

No. 13.

Report of Lieut. Henry A. Pratt, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Batteries Parsons and Wilcox, of operations January 23-24.

BATTERY PARSONS, VA.,
January 28, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to forward the following report of the part taken by Batteries Parsons and Wilcox in the late engagement with the rebel rams:

About 10 p. m. January 23 intelligence was brought that one ram had passed the picket-line and that another was in sight. Owing to the extreme darkness they were not visible from my batteries until close at hand. One was so far down that my gun could not be brought to bear upon it. I therefore opened on the lower one with my mortar and on the river above with my 100-pounder. The lower one put out anchor at the obstructions and began to clear a passage. I placed six men at the river edge to watch them. To annoy the working party, my spare men opened with musketry. Lieutenant Bergin, in charge of the mortar, fired thirty-one rounds at the obstructions; of these twenty-nine burst a few feet above the water, just over the obstructions; two did not burst. At about midnight the first ram passed the obstructions, and was soon followed by a second. Meantime the fire from the 100-pounder continued, but owing to the darkness it was impossible to observe the effect. After an hour or two the rams returned and proceeded a short distance up the river. Two other boats were reported as lying together under the Howlett Battery, landing troops on the left bank of the river. Both batteries continued their fire until morning—the mortar firing with long fuses at the rams; the gun directing an occasional shell at the rams when their smoke revealed their position, but mostly using case-shot to annoy the supposed landing party; solid shot were reserved for daylight. The night-firing was very uncertain, as there was no means of correcting the range. It is probable that several shots from the gun may have struck the rams, as they were heard to strike and ricochet, and it was observed during the day that shots which struck the water did not ricochet. During the night forty-four rounds were fired from the gun, fifty-five from the mortar—thirty-one at the obstructions as before stated, the remaining twenty-four at the rams on their return from below. At daybreak I discovered that two rams and one wooden gun-boat were apparently aground on the left side of the James. The largest ram and the gun-boat were together, the boat partly behind the ram. Some 300 or 400 yards to the right was the smaller ram. I estimated the distance from Battery Parsons at about 1,500 yards. The rams were so situated that the line of fire from my battery was very far from perpendicular to their broadside; this caused the projectiles to easily glance off. As soon as the breech-sight could be used I opened with long percussion-shell, Sergeant Fox pointing the gun; the second shell struck the wooden boat, the third, fired at an elevation of four degrees, penetrated it, causing a magnificent explosion. As soon as the smoke lifted struck the ram with a percussion-shell, which bounded off; we then tried solid shot; of six fired at the larger ram, one did not take the grooves, five struck it fair. I then directed to fire at the smaller ram, Corporal Hunt pointing; of nine solid shots, one did not take the grooves, one went over, seven struck the ram. I then used long shell again, next short shell, last case-shot. Fired in all, after daybreak, from the 100-pounder, fifty-seven rounds. While firing the last fourteen the rams were in motion and the last disappeared as I fired my last round. Of the forty-three rounds fired at the boat and rams, while stationary, three did not take the grooves, four went over, ten fell a little short, twenty-six struck fair. Of the fourteen fired while the rams were moving, four struck fair, ten fell short; probably nearly every shot would have struck the mark had I not been obliged to change the ammunition so many times; some which fell short struck the rams, I think, below their water line. I wished, if possible, to get under their armor. I deem the long shell superior in accuracy to the other ammunition, solid shot come next; out of thirteen solid shot which took the grooves, after daybreak, only one failed to strike the rams. Sergeant Fox struck them six times in succession, Corporal Hunt, five, with long shell and solid shot. During the forenoon twenty-five mortar shells were fired with long fuses—two struck a ram, others struck very close; the charge used was two pounds and upward. The engagement closed about noon, the 24th, the flood tide enabling the rams to float. The rebel land batteries opened on Battery Parsons with mortars, columbiads, and light pieces, about a dozen in number; the smaller ram fired one shot, the only one fired by the rebel navy. Officers on picket directly opposite the rams state that most of my shots glanced off, but that the armor of the rams was started and partially ripped off in a number of places.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. A. PRATT,

First Lieutenant, First Connecticut Artillery, Commanding Batteries Parsons and Wilcox.

Lieut. T. J. BEERS,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 14.

Report of Lieut. Frank D. Bangs, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Battery No. 5, of operations March 25.

BATTERY 5,
March 25, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In obedience to Orders, No. 11, from headquarters Siege Batteries, I have the honor to report, that I was aroused about 4 o'clock this a. m. by firing in the vicinity of Fort Stedman; upon going out found that the enemy had broken our line at that point and taken the fort. I immediately ordered my company to fall in; stacked arms; manned the pieces; caused the company rations to be brought inside the inclosure, but refrained from firing (except one gun on Chesterfield) until I was certain of the position of our own and the enemy's troops. The enemy's batteries, both guns and mortars, fired hotly upon me, but I preferred keeping my ammunition for their infantry, expecting to be cut off from communication with headquarters and not knowing when I could get any more. As soon as I was sure of the enemy's whereabouts I opened upon them with two 30-pounder guns and three 8-inch mortars, and continued the fire until they were driven back to their own line. From my own observation, and the report of others who were nearer, I am confident that the fire of this battery was very effective and aided materially in hastening the retreat of the enemy from Fort Stedman. The only serious damage received by this battery was by a 30-pounder shell from the Chesterfield, which penetrated the right magazine and exploded inside, killing one man; but by what I consider a providence in our favor, the powder, of which there was four barrels in the magazine, did not explode. After the repulse of the enemy from Fort Stedman, I turned the battery on the battery of the enemy, who had been annoying me; their fire soon slackened, and finally ceased entirely, when, after shelling out a sharpshooter who has been giving me some trouble, I gave the order to cease firing and repair damages. The amount of ammunition expended you will find in the report of the day.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANK D. BANGS,

First Lieutenant, First Connecticut Artillery, Comdg. Battery.

Lieut. W. S. MALONY,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Siege Batteries.

I would mention that both officers and men behaved in the most gallant manner, never flinching, always at their posts, cool, brave, and efficient.

F. D. BANGS,
First Lieutenant, Commanding.

No. 15.

Report of Lieut. Henry D. Patterson, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Fort Morton, of operations March 25.

FORT MORTON, VA.,
March 26, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to report that I fired forty-three mortar shell and five 4½-inch percussion-shell yesterday. I opened two mortars on Cemetery Hill battery, which was firing on our troops in rear of Fort Haskell. The other mortars were directed on the batteries near the Petersburg pike. They burst a large number of shell in the fort, wounding four men of the Fifty-first Pennsylvania; no casualties in Company A. They opened one new mortar where they were digging day before yesterday, in rear of the Crater.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. D. PATTERSON,

Lieutenant, First Connecticut Artillery, Commanding Battery.

Lieut. W. S. MALONY,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Siege Batteries.

No. 16.

Report of Lieut. Ebenezer P. Mason, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Battery Sawyer, of operations January 23-24.

BATTERY SAWYER,

James River, Va., January 29, 1865.

SIR: Pursuant to instructions from headquarters Siege Artillery, Line of Bermuda Hundred, dated January 28, 1865, I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this battery in the engagement with the rebel rams on the 23d and 24th instant:

About 8 p. m. the 23d Fort Brady opened fire; the Cox Ferry batteries replied; I opened, hoping to draw the enemy's fire from Fort Brady, in order to enable Captain Pierce to serve his guns more rapidly on the rebel rams, if they were in the river. I was partially successful, drawing the fire of two 10-inch columbiads and one 8-inch rifled gun. I expended five case-shot, six percussion-shell, 100-pounder, and five 10-inch mortar shell.

At 10 p. m. Lieutenant Reed, commanding navy picket detachment, reported to me that a high-pressure side-wheel steamer lay at the obstructions and was attempting to remove them, and that two rams lay in the channel about 400 yards above. The night was so dark that I was unable to discover their exact positions excepting by the explosion of the shell from Battery Parsons. I fired at the rams three 100-pounder solid shot, at intervals of about fifteen minutes, with what effect I am unable to tell, and at the steamer nine 10-inch mortar shell, nearly all of which burst well, annoying the men at work on the obstructions very much. At 12.30 a. m. the rams dropped down the river to the obstructions where my 100-pounder would not bear on them. At 3 a. m. the 24th one ram dropped down the stream opposite Sleepy Hollow, about 550 yards from the battery, and remained there at anchor about forty-five minutes. While she lay there one mortar shell, fired at 60 degrees elevation, charge twelve ounces, without bursting charge, struck her on the deck without any visible effect; immediately after, however, she hove up her anchor and changed her position. Thinking it might be her intention to land a force of marines and attack the battery and destroy the signal tower, I posted the supernumerary men (about thirty), with muskets, near the wharf, to prevent any boats landing. The ram, after dropping down stream about 100 yards, changed her course and steamed up the river out of sight; not being able to discover her position I ceased firing until daylight. While she lay opposite Sleepy Hollow I fired at her nineteen mortar shell, at 60 degrees elevation, without bursting charge; I cannot state positively that but one struck her. The firing was very accurate, all the shell striking within a radius of ten yards. Soon after daylight I discovered the rams in the channel about 2,000 yards distant, and partially covered by the bank of the river and a grove of trees. I again opened and fired from the 100-pounder six case-shot, three percussion, and twelve solid shot, and from the mortars thirty-one shell; four solid shot, one percussion, two case-shot, and two mortar shells struck the rams. From this point the only visible damage was by the case-shot, which perforated the smoke-stacks; the percussion-shell burst against her side. The solid shot did not appear to penetrate—some of them after striking rolled back into the water, others ricocheted beyond.

I also fired after daylight at the land batteries (not being able to bear on the rams), with the 100-pounder, eleven case-shot. At about 12 m. the rams succeeded in getting off the bar and steamed around the bend. During the morning of the 24th the battery received the fire of three 10-inch columbiads, one 8-inch and one 7-inch rifled gun.

No casualties occurred.

The men behaved with the utmost coolness and served the pieces with skill and alacrity.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. P. MASON,

First Lieut., First Regiment Connecticut Arty., Comdg. Battery.

Lieut. CHARLES A. TRUESDELL,

Adjutant First Connecticut Artillery.

No. 17.

Report of Lieut. John O'Brien, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Battery No. 4, of operations March 25.

BATTERY NO. 4,

Before Petersburg, Va., March 26, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part sustained by Company I, First Connecticut Artillery, the garrison of Battery No. 4, during the engagement of yesterday:

At 4 o'clock in the morning I heard firing on the line near Battery No. 10, but I supposed it was wholly confined to the pickets. At 5.30, an hour and a half later, I saw indications that an advance had been made by the enemy upon our lines near Battery No. 10. I had the company under arms and made arrangements for a defense, when I received orders to open on the enemy, who were now in possession of Fort Stedman and Battery No. 10; these orders were received at daylight. I fired 130 rounds of percussion and 6 rounds of time-fuse shell, nearly all of which were thrown into an advancing column of the enemy, which was in rear of the last-named work. About fifteen shell were thrown into the Chesterfield battery. This battery opened upon Battery No. 5 and the line of works near it, and six shell were thrown into a retreating column of the enemy when it was on the plain in front of Battery No. 9. Fearing an advance, in case of the failure of a pending charge by our forces, fired only when the enemy's troops were in sight, having only about 100 rounds for each piece (three pieces).

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN O'BRIEN,

First Lieut., First Connecticut Artillery, Comdg. Battery No. 4.

Lieut. W. S. MALONY,

A. A. A. G., Siege Batteries, Before Petersburg, Va.

No. 18.

Report of Lieut. Robert Lewis, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Company L, of operations March 25.

BATTERY No. 12,
Before Petersburg, Va., March 25, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to report the part taken by Capt. William G. Pride's company (L), First Connecticut Artillery, in the engagement of 25th instant.

It was reported to me at 4 a. m. that the enemy were advancing and then past our picket-line. I immediately ordered the company to stand to their pieces, which order was scarcely complied with, when an officer of the Twenty-ninth Massachusetts reported to me that Battery No. 11, 100 yards on my right, was occupied by the enemy and the most of his command taken prisoners. I immediately commenced shelling Battery No. 11 until ordered by a battalion commander to cease firing, which I immediately complied with, as I saw his battalion ready to charge and retake the work. I then saw two lines of the enemy advancing on my position from the rear, the rear line at about 500 yards distance; these I shelled by reversing my mortars until they came within 100 yards, when I ceased firing on them with mortars and opened with musketry. Seeing the strength of the enemy, which I think must have been 1,000, and being without support on either flank, I ordered the company to Fort Haskell, which place was reached, with a loss of thirteen men taken prisoners. On joining Lieutenant Bingham's detachment at Fort Haskell, I opened fire on my old battery, No. 12, and on Fort Stedman from two Coehorn mortars, which I kept up until the enemy were driven out; Lieutenant Bingham, in the meantime, replying to the enemy batteries in front from the other two Coehorns. As soon as the enemy came within 150 yards of Battery 12, Lieutenant C. Sergeant McNamara re-entered the work, taking 1 lieutenant Twenty-sixth Georgia Regiment and 12 men prisoners. As I regained the battery, I opened fire on the retreating rebels at picket-lines, from four Coehorn mortars, which was continued until they had nearly all regained their lines.

I am much indebted to Lieutenant Couch and Sergeant for their coolness and decision during the engagement; ascribe the small loss in prisoners by the company. I commend to your notice Private James T. Murphy, Company Connecticut Artillery, for distinguished bravery during the having been in charge of a light 12-pounder gun of the T Battery, after most of the cannoneers belonging to the battery had been killed.

The following is the loss of Company L, First Connecticut Artillery, during the engagement: 1 enlisted man killed, 5 missing (supposed to be prisoners).

I am, sir, yours, most respectfully,

First Lieut., First Connecticut Artillery,

Lieut. W. S. MALONY,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Siege

No. 19.

Report of Lieut. Azro Drown, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Battery No. 9, of operations March 25.

SIEGE BATTERIES, No. 9,
Before Petersburg, Va., March 26, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In compliance with order No. 11, I have the honor to make the following report:

As soon as the alarm was given by the pickets on the morning of the 25th instant, I immediately manned my pieces and opened fire on the enemy's line of battle, which was formed directly in my front; this line soon being broken, I directed my fire upon Fort Stedman, Battery No. 10 and vicinity; and also upon the road leading from the rear of Fort Stedman and Battery 10, passing the rear of my battery, this road being occupied by the enemy in force to a point within 200 yards of my battery; Fort Stedman and Battery No. 10 also being occupied by the enemy, they having turned their pieces upon my battery—one shot from Fort Stedman striking my magazine. I kept up a steady fire upon these points, with good effect, until the enemy commenced retreating, when I shelled their retreating columns, until the last of them disappeared behind their works. The enemy's mortar and gun batteries on my front kept up a steady fire upon my battery during the action, but I made no reply to them. My works were somewhat damaged by the enemy's fire, but fortunately there were no casualties among my men.

I expended during the action 266 rounds of ammunition, all of which exploded well, as far as could be observed, with the exception of a few rounds which I fired with fuses not quite long enough for the range—my long fuses all being expended.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. BROWN,

Second Lieut., First Connecticut Artillery, Comdg. Battery.

Lieut. W. S. MALONY,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Siege Batteries.

 No. 20.

Report of Lieut. William H. Bingham, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, of operations March 25.

FORT HASKELL, VA.,
March 25, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by my detachment of Company L, First Connecticut Artillery, in the engagement of the 25th instant, before Petersburg:

I was apprised of the attack of the enemy about 4 a. m. by heavy musketry firing on my right near Fort Stedman, which place was very soon reported to have fallen into their possession. I immediately ordered my men under arms, marched them to their pieces, and awaited further developments of the enemy's movements. I very soon detected a strong skirmish line of enemy advancing in our own front; they had reached and commenced to remove the abatis. I immediately directed my men to man the parapet with their small-arms, as the enemy were too close for mortar firing, and much depended upon a well-manned parapet at that critical moment. The enemy were soon repulsed by canister and infantry fire, and retired in the direction of Fort Stedman. My attention was then given to the enemy's artillery in our immediate front, which annoyed us much. I deemed it not expedient to fire my mortars from their platforms, as the contiguous parapet was heavily manned by infantry, and the effect of mortars being fired over their heads would have been demoralizing. Two of them were fired from the terre-plein and two from unoccupied gun platforms. Upon being joined by Lieutenant Lewis, commanding Company I, was informed that Battery No. 12 and line to the right was in the possession of the enemy. Two of my mortars were then trained upon the captured works, which were soon evacuated. The enemy retreated to their works in confused masses, rendered none the less so by the concentrated fire of my mortar battery, whose shell struck in their midst, doing, I believe, good execution. The engagement lasted about four hours, in which time I expended 225 rounds Coehorn shells, sustaining no casualties in my own detachment.

I cannot speak in too high terms of the conduct of my men throughout the engagement. Those not employed firing the mortars made very good use of their small-arms. I think I am not saying too much by stating that the gallant manner in which Fort Haskell was defended checked what seemed at first to be a disaster, but by our continued efforts was rendered a success.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WM. H. BINGHAM,
Lieutenant, First Connecticut Artillery.

Lieut. W. S. MALONY,
*Second Lieutenant, First Connecticut Artillery,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.*

No. 21.

*Report of Lieut. James H. Casey, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery,
of operations March 25.*

BATTERY K, FIRST CONNECTICUT ARTILLERY,
Before Petersburg, Va., March 26, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor herewith to report the part my company took in the engagement of the 25th of March, 1865.

The first intimation we had of the attack was by hearing the yelling and firing all around us. As soon as we reached our mortars we found the enemy on all sides of us, and we were driven back after hard fighting and being flanked. Lieut. John Odell was killed at the beginning of the fight, and Captain Twiss was wounded, so the charge of the company devolved on Lieutenant Casey, who, after having been driven back, collected some of the company and reported to Major Ager at Battery No. 4. He remained there a short time, and was then ordered to proceed with the company to the battery, now being charged upon by our forces, and if it was taken to open fire with the mortars. He found the implements destroyed and scattered about, so that he was unable to fire any.

The company's loss sums up to 49 in killed, wounded, and missing; there were 4 killed, 4 wounded, and the rest are missing. We took some prisoners, but how many I cannot tell. We have lost none of our pieces, and only one is damaged, and that slightly.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES H. CASEY,

Second Lieutenant, First Connecticut Artillery.

Lieut. W. S. MALONY,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Siege Batteries.

No. 22.

Report of Lieut. Charles N. Silliman, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Battery Spofford, of operations January 24.

BATTERY ANDERSON, VA.,
January 30, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In accordance with instructions, I have the honor to make the following report as the result of the artillery practice at Battery Spofford, Va., during the engagement with the enemy's rams on the 24th instant:

At about 7 a. m. I opened fire from one 30-pounder Parrott gun, at an elevation of 4 degrees, the distance to the first ram being about 1,700 yards. The first shot fired tumbled, and consequently fell short; the second took the grooves and struck the boat near the smoke-stack, the shot having no visible effect. Of the number of shots fired, but two failed to take the grooves. I fired during the engagement sixty-two projectiles, of which six were solid shot, forty-eight percussion-shell, and eight fuse-shell; of the number fired, twenty-seven struck the rams with no visible effect, with the exception of one solid shot, which, I think, penetrated near the forward port-hole on her starboard side; several shell struck near the smoke-stack, and I think some of them perforated it. Of the six solid shot fired, five struck the rams, and all, with the one exception, either glanced off or were crushed against her sides. I think had more solid shot been at hand, the result would have been much more satisfactory.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. N. SILLIMAN,

Second Lieut., First Connecticut Arty., Comdg. Battery Spofford.

Lieut. THOMAS J. BEERS,

Battalion Adjutant.

No. 23.

Report of Lieut. George Booth, Ninth Battery Massachusetts Light Artillery, of operations March 25.

FORT RICE,
March 26, 1865.

In compliance with your circular of to-day, I have the honor to state that my command was not actively engaged, further than firing one round of spherical case during the attack of the morning of the 25th. The first intimation I had of the attack was by hearing mortars shortly before 5 a. m.

I have the honor to remain, your obedient servant,
GEO. BOOTH,
Second Lieutenant, Ninth Massachusetts Battery, Commanding Gun Detachments in Fort Rice.

Lieut. GEORGE W. BOOTH,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 24.

Report of Capt. Joseph W. B. Wright, Fourteenth Battery Massachusetts Light Artillery, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS FOURTEENTH MASSACHUSETTS BATTERY,
Near Meade's Station, Va., March 26, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In accordance with circular order, headquarters Artillery Brigade, Ninth Army Corps, dated March 26, 1865, I have the honor to make report of operations during the action of the 25th instant, the substance of statements of enlisted men engaged.

The men of the section of this battery in position in Battery 10 were aroused shortly after 4 o'clock on the morning of the 25th instant by cries and yells, apparently just outside the works in front of the guns and on the works to the right. The men immediately repaired to their pieces and, under the charge of a lieutenant and non-commissioned officers, commenced firing. The right piece was loaded and discharged through its embrasure; the vent piece was blown out by this discharge. The left piece was fired immediately after the right. Directly upon the discharge of these two pieces the enemy appeared upon the parapet in front of and inside the works to the right of the first piece, which they surrounded and captured, together with its detachment, a portion afterward escaping. The enemy were almost instantly supported by others in front of the second piece, which was being reloaded. Before the friction primer could be inserted, the cannoneers of the second gun were surrounded and captured; the corporal afterward escaped. While loading the guns the sound of axes was heard in front. The men report that between the time of their arousal and the capture of the guns they noticed but a very little musketry and no artillery fire whatever. The lieutenant commanding the section was killed near the guns; the acting corporal of the guard was captured; and the sentinel on post at the guns at the time was wounded and is absent at hospital, where unknown. There was present with the section one officer and eighteen enlisted men, two of whom were wounded and eleven are missing.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. W. B. WRIGHT,
Captain, Commanding Fourteenth Massachusetts Battery.

Lieut. GEORGE W. BOOTH,
Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Artillery Brigade, Ninth Army Corps.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Christian Woerner, Third Battery New Jersey Light Artillery, of operations March 25.

THIRD NEW JERSEY BATTERY,
Fort Haskell, March 26, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report to you the following details of yesterday morning's engagement with the enemy:

Before daylight of yesterday morning much yelling was heard from the direction of Fort Stedman, also much picket-firing from the direction of Forts McGilvery and Stedman. Soon after two guns were fired from Fort Stedman. I did not understand what was going on. Soon after I saw a strong column of infantry marching in close column from Fort Stedman on Fort Haskell, inside of our line of breast-works and between the breast-works and camps, which I supposed to be our infantry, it being still so dark that they could not be distinctly seen. There seemed to be no men along the breast-work, and the advancing column came without resistance to within 100 yards of this fort, when they broke and, covering themselves behind the tents and huts, opened a strong fire on this fort. At the same time several field and mortar batteries of the enemy commenced shelling this fort, and I immediately opened upon the above-mentioned infantry force with canister, in a short time completely silencing them. Now another infantry force was seen forming in the rear of Fort Stedman and advancing in line of battle and with waving colors on Fort Haskell. I brought one of my guns in position in the right corner of this fort, commanding our line between Forts Haskell and Stedman, and fired on them with canister rapidly, inflicting to them severe loss and forcing them to run back toward Fort Stedman and their own lines and to seek shelter behind the tents and huts. Meanwhile our infantry charged up to our breast-works from the rear, and that part of the enemy covering in and behind the huts and tents threw off their arms and surrendered, while the others were retreating in disorder and confusion from Fort Stedman and its vicinity to their lines. This retreating lasted for about half an hour, and I directed the fire of my guns on them with very good effect. At about 7.30 o'clock Fort Stedman was again in possession of our troops and the Union flags in it.

During the whole engagement Fort Haskell was vigorously shelled by several field and mortar batteries, but I could reply with only one gun, the others being engaged with Fort Stedman and the enemy assailing this fort. The great many shells exploding in and above this fort have done comparatively little damage to the work; of men, about forty were killed and wounded. I am happy to state that my officers and men have behaved very well and distinguished themselves by their courage and endurance.

The following is the expenditure of ammunition by my battery during the engagement: 29 rounds of solid shot, 60 rounds of spherical case, 100 rounds of shell, 117 rounds of canister.

The following is a list of casualties: killed, 1 enlisted man; wounded, 2 commissioned officers and 5 enlisted men.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
CHRISTIAN WOERNER,

Bvt. Major, U. S. Vols., Comdy. Third New Jersey Battery.

Lieut. GEORGE W. BOOTH,

Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Artillery Brigade, Ninth Army Corps.

No. 26.

Report of Capt. Samuel A. McClellan, Battery G, First New York Light Artillery, of operations March 25.

LIGHT BATTERY G, FIRST NEW YORK ARTILLERY,
Before Petersburg, Va., March 26, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to report that about daybreak yesterday morning, March 25, 1865, I was aroused by cheering and firing of musketry in the direction of Fort Stedman. I immediately rose and started out to ascertain the cause, and had not proceeded in that direction but a short distance when I met stragglers going to the rear, who reported that the enemy had captured Fort Stedman, and was advancing on Meade's Station. Without delay I caused my battery to be harnessed, and moved the section of guns remaining in park to take a position, for the purpose of assisting in checking the advance of the enemy. Soon after arriving on the crest of the heights in rear of Fort Stedman, Major Miller rode up and gave orders to take position and open on the enemy, which I did, with apparently very good effect, causing their advance skirmishers, who were near the base of the hill, to fall back in rear of our old line of rifle-pits, about 200 yards in rear of Fort Stedman. Believing that I could get a nearer and more effective position I rode down to the front to select one. On returning I met General Tidball, who gave me orders to take the new position which I had selected. While moving into this new position the enemy opened upon my column with two light 12-pounder guns, which he had taken with the fort, but his fire was so inaccurate that he did me no harm. I returned his fire with solid shot, concentrating the fire of both my guns upon each one of his in succession, and succeeded in silencing them in about half an hour. About this time I observed the enemy passing in rear of Fort Stedman. I then changed my fire upon them, using shrapnel and solid shot, which continued about two hours, seemingly very much annoying them, and causing them to change their position. Our troops had now formed for a charge near Fort Haskell. As they advanced the enemy began to retreat, and in their haste became massed in the road in my front, giving me a good enfilading fire on their column, which I improved to the best advantage with solid shot and shrapnel, killing and wounding many of them. During this time one section of my battery at Fort Morton opened an enfilading fire upon the enemy while they were advancing upon and retreating from Fort Stedman.

I cannot speak in too high terms of the coolness and bravery of both my officers and men, and the handsome manner in which they worked their pieces; and am happy to state that no casualties occurred during the engagement.

The following is the amount of ammunition expended: solid shot, 88 rounds; spherical case, 171 rounds; shell, 29 rounds.

Very respectfully,

S. A. MCCLELLAN,

Captain, First New York Artillery, Commanding Battery.

Lieut. GEORGE W. BOOTH,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Artillery Brigade, Ninth Army Corps.

No. 27.

Report of Lieut. Thomas C. Rice, Battery B, First Pennsylvania Light Artillery, of operations March 25.

CAMP OF BATTERY B, FIRST PENN. LIGHT ARTILLERY,
Fort Davis, Va., March 26, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In compliance with circular from headquarters Artillery Brigade, Ninth Army Corps, of this date, I have the honor to report as follows:

The first intimation of an attack from the enemy was heard about 4.30 a. m., in the direction of the Appomattox. The cannoneers were soon up and at their posts ready for any emergency. But the fighting was confined to our right some distance, with the exception of a desultory fire from the enemy's batteries in our immediate front, directed on troops passing in our rear, some few shots on Fort Davis and Battery 22, to which a few shots were replied from Battery 22, viz, twenty percussion-shell, three fuse-shell.

I am, Lieutenant, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. C. RICE,

First Lieut., Comdg. Battery B, First Pennsylvania Light Arty.

Lieut. GEORGE W. BOOTH,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Artillery Brigade, Ninth Army Corps.

No. 28.

Report of Lieut. Valentine H. Stone, Batteries O and I, Fifth U. S. Artillery, of operations March 25.

BATTERIES O AND I, FIFTH U. S. ARTILLERY,
March 26, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with circular received this day from headquarters Artillery Brigade, Ninth Corps, I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by this battery in the engagement of yesterday morning:

At 5 a. m. I was awakened by a brisk fire of musketry in the direction of Fort Stedman. I immediately ordered the battery to be got in readiness to move at once. I started for Fort McGilvery. When I arrived immediately opposite Fort Stedman I met some stragglers, who informed me that Fort Stedman and a mortar battery were captured. I hastened on to Fort McGilvery; when I arrived there I found the men just coming out to reveille, they not having received any information that anything unusual had taken place. I went from there to Battery No. 9. Upon arriving there I found all the men, both infantry and artillery, at their proper places anxiously awaiting some information as to what had taken place. I looked over the parapet in the direction of Fort Stedman. I could just see in the gray of dawn (it was then about 5.15 a. m.) a line of battle drawn up, moving toward me, their right being inside of our works; this line extended along the ravine between Battery No. 9 and Fort Stedman, their left resting near the rebel lines. I immediately ordered my section to open on them with spherical case; they were in easy range, about 400 yards, maybe a little more. As soon as I opened a heavy fire was in a few minutes concentrated on Battery No. 9 from my immediate front, from Fort Stedman, from my right flank, from an 8-inch mortar, from the rear, from the "goose neck" battery. I kept up my fire for three hours. At 8 a. m. some few of the enemy surrendered and came into the fort. One of the rebel officers informed me if I would cease firing that there were 200 or 300 who were under my fire (I was firing canister then) who would come in. I did so, and over 300 came in. The enemy were all the time in easy range; my guns were fired deliberately, and I am satisfied that not a round of ammunition was thrown away. I was informed by the rebel officer mentioned above that the line of battle that I had fired upon was drawn up with the intention of charging Battery No. 9 and Fort McGilvery, and that if I had delayed firing ten minutes longer, they would have had them. I had two men badly wounded. My men behaved well. Lieut. Theodore W. Haysman, Fourth New York Artillery, deserves particular mention for his coolness and bravery. My right section was in Fort McGilvery, under command of Lieutenant MacConnell, Fifth U. S. Artillery; it was also engaged.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

VAIL H. STONE,

First Lieut., Fifth U. S. Artillery, Comdg. Batteries C. and I.

Lieutenant Boorn,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 29.

Report of Maj. Gen. Andrew A. Humphreys, U. S. Army, commanding Second Army Corps, of operations February 5-11.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND ARMY CORPS,

February 13, 1865.

GENERAL: I have to submit the following report of the part taken by the Second Corps in the recent operations, for the information of the major-general commanding the army:

I was instructed on the 4th instant to move at 7 a. m. of the 5th, with the two divisions of my corps not in the intrenchments and two batteries of artillery, to the crossing of Hatcher's Run at the Vaughan road and at Armstrong's Mill, to hold those crossings, keep open the communication with the intrenchments of the army, open communication with the Fifth Corps, under General Warren, when it reached the intersection of the Vaughan and stage roads, some three or four miles distant, and support him, if required. In accordance with those instructions, I moved at 7 a. m. of the 5th, with General Mott's (Third) division, 5,961 officers and enlisted men, and General Smyth's (Second) division, 4,607 officers and enlisted men, and Battery K, Fourth U. S. Artillery, Brevet Captain Roder, and the Tenth Massachusetts Battery, Lieut. J. W. Adams, with the rations, ammunition, &c., ordered.

Major Hess, Third Pennsylvania Cavalry, with 220 officers and men, joined me at 6 a. m. He was placed in advance, to drive in the enemy's cavalry pickets, and secure the crossing of Hatcher's Run, so as to conceal temporarily the fact from the enemy that the movement was made by an infantry force.

Major Hess found the enemy's infantry in small force holding the Vaughan road crossing, the run being dammed and obstructed by fallen trees. Being unable to use his cavalry with any effect, General De Trobriand's skirmishers, under his personal supervision, quickly drove the enemy from their rifle-pits, and secured the position at 9.30 a. m. This brigade was then rapidly crossed on the dam and put in position, covering the road, and his pickets extended to meet those of General Smyth, ordered to the crossing at Armstrong's Mill. With considerable difficulty a bridge about 100 feet in length was thrown across the stream. West's brigade, of Mott's division, followed De Trobriand's, and was subsequently crossed to the south side of Hatcher's Run, completing the security of the position. Captain Roder's battery of 12-pounders was put in position here.

Smyth's division had been directed by me to diverge to the right from the Vaughan road near the Cummings house, secure the crossing at Armstrong's Mill, cover it and extend to the right past the R. Armstrong house, and rest his right upon the small swamp in that vicinity. Lieutenant Adams' battery of rifled guns was sent with him. These instructions General Smyth executed at once, finding directly in front of his right, about 1,000 yards distant, the enemy's intrenchments, a redoubt, with the connecting curtains, being in full view. These works had been erected since the last movement in December. General Mott, by my direction, sent his rear brigade, McAllister's, to the vicinity of the Tucker house, with instructions to take position covering the Vaughan road and a small parallel road connecting the Squirrel Level road with Armstrong's Mill, the right to rest near the swamp, west of and near to the Squirrel Level road, and the left to extend toward the swamp, on which Smyth's right was to rest. Smyth's division was relied upon to fill up the interval, should there be one. These orders were promptly executed. All the troops were directed to intrench immediately upon taking up position. Major Hess, Third Pennsylvania Cavalry, was ordered to open communication, on the south side of Hatcher's Run, between Mott's right and Smyth's left, and to move out to Dabney's Mill, and establish a post of observation there, and upon effecting this to move out the Vaughan road and communicate with Major-General Warren. While he was endeavoring to carry out the first part of this direction, I proceeded to examine Smyth's and McAllister's positions. It was here that I expected the attack of the enemy. Finding that McAllister was unable to cover the ground assigned to him, with the concurrence of the commanding general of the army, I telegraphed to Major-General Miles, whose division had remained in the intrenchments, to send out a strong brigade quickly to the Tucker house, to relieve McAllister's right and enable that officer to extend to his left and connect with Smyth. Major Hess was unable to carry out the first part of his instructions, but the pickets of the two divisions connected along the south branch of Hatcher's Run. The enemy's infantry pickets were driven from the Vaughan road, and communication established with Major-General Warren.

At about 4 p. m. the enemy opened with artillery from one of his redoubts that enfiladed the road leading to Armstrong's Mill from the Vaughan road, but doing no damage, and receiving no reply, the fire ceased. At 4.30 p. m. Ramsey's brigade (Fourth Brigade, First Division), 1,100 strong, reached the Tucker house, and enabled McAllister to extend toward Smyth's right. He had not yet quite completed this change of position when, at 5.15 p. m., the enemy, having concentrated a strong force in the vicinity of the Thompson house (since ascertained to be the chief parts of Hill's and Gordon's corps), made a sudden attack upon the right of Smyth and the left of McAllister. This attack was promptly and skillfully met by General Smyth and General McAllister, and the enemy's leading troops quickly repulsed, but the action was continued by those more distant until after 7 o'clock. The enemy's artillery opened from the redoubt already mentioned and from a battery near the Thompson house, both of which were effectually replied to. Early in the action I ordered up West's brigade, of Mott's division, to strengthen McAllister's left, which it did before the termination of the engagement; I also used two of Smyth's regiments as supports. The enemy withdrew to his intrenchments shortly after the engagement ceased.

Our loss (125 killed and wounded) was small, while that of the enemy was comparatively severe and must have been six or seven times greater than ours. I append a tabular statement of the casualties.

Among the wounded is Col. M. Murphy, Sixty-ninth New York National Guard, commanding Second Brigade, Second Division, severely.

During the evening Hartranft's division, of the Ninth Corps, 3,200 strong, and Wheaton's division of the Sixth Corps, 4,500 strong, reported to me and were posted along the Squirrel Level road, connecting with the intrenchments of the army.

It having been decided by the major-general commanding to concentrate at once Major-General Warren's (Fifth) corps and Gregg's cavalry at the Vaughan road crossing of Hatcher's Run, as soon as a sufficient number of these troops arrived, Major-General Mott's troops there—De Trobriand's brigade—were moved, at about 2 a. m. of the 6th, to near the Tucker house, and General Mott resumed the command of all his brigades as well as of Ramsey's.

Early next morning, in pursuance of instructions I had received from the commanding general of the army, General Mott and General Hartranft sent out reconnaissances that advanced to within sight of the enemy's works near the Watkins house without finding any force but the pickets, which were driven inside the main works. At the same time all my command, including Miles' division, were held ready to attack the enemy should he be found outside his works. At 2 p. m. General Wheaton's division was ordered to move to the Cummings house and report to Major-General Warren, and General Mott was ordered to hold General De Trobriand's and General West's brigades ready to support General Warren. They were subsequently moved to the Vaughan road crossing of Hatcher's Run with that object, but returned to their positions at night. General Smyth, on that and the following day (the 7th), supported General Warren's movements with his artillery.

On the morning of the 9th, in pursuance of instructions from the headquarters of the army, the First and Third Divisions of the Second Corps took up the position assigned them on the new line from Fort Gregg to the Vaughan road crossing of Hatcher's Run, and commenced the construction of intrenchments.

On the morning of the 11th General Smyth's division was withdrawn from its position, covering the crossing at Armstrong's Mill, and posted on the new line. The casualties subsequent to the 5th were 13 killed and wounded.

In conclusion, I desire to express the very great satisfaction I have felt at the prompt, skillful, and spirited manner in which the duties were performed by both officers and men during the operation. It was the good fortune of Brigadier-General Smyth, commanding Second Division, Brevet Brigadier-General McAllister, commanding Third Brigade, Third Division, and Col. M. Murphy, commanding Second Brigade, Second Division, to be placed in positions where they evinced both skill and gallantry.

I am under obligations to Lieutenant-Colonel Hazard, commanding Artillery Brigade, Lieutenant-Colonel Willian, acting inspector-general, and to the other officers of my staff, for the zealous assistance they rendered me.

I transmit herewith the reports of the division and other commanders, and am,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Major-General, Commanding.

Brevet Major-General WEBB,
Chief of Staff, Army of the Potomac.

Tabular statement of casualties in the Second and Third Divisions, Second Army Corps, during the operations of the 5th instant.

| | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Aggregate. |
|----------------------|-----------|------|-----------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| Second Division..... | 3 | 4 | 8 | 25 | 40 |
| Third Division..... | | 14 | 4 | 67 | 85 |
| Total..... | 3 | 18 | 12 | 92 | 125 |

Casualties subsequent to February 5, 1865.

| | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Aggregate. |
|----------------------|-----------|------|-----------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| Second Division..... | | 1 | 2 | 0 | 12 |
| Third Division..... | | 1 | | | 1 |
| Total..... | | 2 | 2 | 0 | 15 |

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Major-General, Commanding.

ADDENDA.

GENERAL ORDERS, } HEADQUARTERS SECOND ARMY CORPS,
No. 3. } February 12, 1865.

The major-general commanding desires to express to the officers and men engaged in the recent operation the satisfaction he has felt at the prompt, skillful, and spirited manner in which every duty imposed upon them was performed. While all did their duty, some were favored by fortune in being placed at the points against which the enemy's efforts were concentrated, and were thus afforded the opportunity of displaying conspicuously their soldierly qualities.

Among those favored were, Brigadier-General Smyth, commanding Second Division, Brevet Brigadier-General McAllister, commanding Third Brigade, Third Division, and Colonel Mathew Murphy, commanding Second Brigade, Second Division.

The enemy concentrated a powerful force, composed of parts of two corps, Hill's and Gordon's, on the right of Smyth (Murphy's brigade and the artillery), and in front of McAllister, and made a determined effort to break our line. They were skillfully and gallantly met, and repulsed with severe loss to them and slight to us.

The commanding general accepts this first operation of the Second Corps under his orders as an earnest of what is to follow.

By order of Major-General Humphreys:

SEPTIMUS CARNCROSS,
Major and Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 30.

Reports of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, U. S. Army, commanding First Division, of operations February 5-7 and March 25.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, SECOND ARMY CORPS,
February 13, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this command in the operations of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

During the night of the 4th the picket-line of the Second Division was relieved by troops from my command, and at 8 a. m. on the 5th the Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers was placed in garrison at Fort Emery, and the One hundred and twenty-fifth and One hundred and twenty-sixth New York occupied Fort Siebert. At 3.30 p. m. I received orders by telegraph from the major-general commanding the corps to send a strong brigade to relieve General McAllister in the position then held by him near the Tucker house. The Fourth Brigade, Brevet Brigadier-General Ramsey, was immediately sent. At 5.30 p. m. orders were received to send another brigade to the same spot, if possible, at double-quick. The Third Brigade, Col. George von Schack, Seventh New York Volunteers, moved at once to the Tucker house and reported to General Ramsey, but returned to their old camp the same night, having received orders to do so from him. In the meantime I had received orders from the major-general commanding to recall Colonel von Schack, as his brigade was not required. February 6, at 6.45 p. m., I received a telegram from the major-general commanding the corps, ordering me to send a brigade to the Vaughan road at the crossing at Hatcher's Run. The Second Brigade, Col. R. C. Duryea, Seventh New York Artillery, was moved out accordingly, but before reaching their destination were met by orders from the same source directing it to return to camp, which it at once did. General Ramsey with his brigade reported back to me at 9 a. m. on the 9th instant.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

NELSON A. MILES,
Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

Maj. S. CARNCROSS,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Army Corps.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, SECOND ARMY CORPS,
March 28, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this division in the operations of the 25th instant:

At about 6.30 a. m. I received orders from the major-general commanding the corps to send out reconnoitering parties to ascertain the strength of the enemy in my front. I therefore directed two detachments (one of 200 men from the Sixty-first New York Volunteers, and one of 100 men from the Fifty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers) to charge the enemy's picket-line. The detachment of the Fifty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers (Fourth Brigade) succeeded in driving the enemy's pickets to their works, and occupied their picket-line; that of the Sixty-first New York Volunteers (First Brigade) was at first unsuccessful, being repulsed, but was moved to the left of my division line, near the Watkins house, where they again attacked with success, driving the enemy, capturing fifteen prisoners (one officer) and occupying their line of rifle-pits. Being in possession of the enemy's picket-line along my entire front, the remainder of the First Brigade was moved out and placed in support; they were afterward moved up to the line captured from the enemy, and the picket-line advanced about fifty yards. About 2 p. m. I received orders from the major-general commanding the corps to move my entire command out of the works into position near the Skinner house, preparatory to attacking the enemy in force—the First Brigade (Colonel Scott, Sixty-first New York Volunteers) forming the left, the Second Brigade (Col. R. Nugent, Sixty-ninth New York Volunteers) extending the line to the right, and the Third Brigade (Col. A. Funk, Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers) in reserve. The Fourth Brigade (Colonel Mintzer, Fifty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers) was on its way to still further extend my line to the right, when the enemy made a vigorous attack upon that portion of the line held by the First Brigade. After a spirited fight of about half an hour they were repulsed.

At about 4 p. m. another attack was made by the enemy farther to my right upon the line of the Second Brigade. They were met in the most gallant manner, and after repeated efforts to turn my right flank, which were foiled by the presence of the Fourth Brigade (Colonel Mintzer) and the Third (Colonel Funk), which was brought up and placed on my extreme right, they were again repulsed with heavy loss. My line of battle now extended from the Watkins house on the left to the Smith house on the right. During the progress of this fight the Second Brigade was re-enforced by a regiment from General Bartlett's brigade, of the Fifth Corps, which had arrived on the ground and was lying in reserve in rear of the Skinner house. The enemy's last attack was made at about 6 p. m., and extended along my whole division front. It was made with a heavy force (prisoners were taken from Heth's and Johnson's divisions). The enemy were repulsed and driven back at all points. Toward the close of this action the Second Brigade, being out of ammunition, after having once replenished their boxes, and having sustained a loss of about one-fourth its numbers, was relieved by three regiments of General Bartlett's brigade, Fifth Corps. The enemy fell back, leaving his dead and wounded on the field.

At 8 p. m. the Fifth Corps troops, above mentioned, were withdrawn, and their ground partially covered by men of the First and Fourth Brigades. A strong picket-line was established, and at 1 a. m. (26th), under orders from the major-general commanding the corps, I withdrew my command to the intrenchments left the previous morning.

The fighting on the part of the troops of this command was marked by an unusual spirit of determination and enthusiasm; they fought in line of battle, without works, in as perfect order as if upon drill; scarcely a skulker or coward was noticed in rear of the line of battle. Colonel Nugent particularly distinguished himself by the gallant manner in which he fought his brigade, resisting and repulsing the several attacks of the enemy in the most stubborn manner. His conduct is worthy the highest praise. Colonel Scott also commanded his brigade with coolness and skill.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

NELSON A. MILES,
Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

Lieut. Col. CHARLES A. WHITTIER,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Army Corps.

No. 31.

Report of Col. George W. Scott, Sixty-first New York Infantry, commanding First Brigade, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE,
March 27, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to forward the following report of the part taken by this brigade in the engagement on March 25, 1865:

About 6 a. m. we were ordered by the brevet major-general commanding division, through a staff officer, to detail 200 men, properly officered, from the Sixty-first New York Volunteers to charge the enemy's picket-line in our front, and break it, if possible. I personally superintended the assault, but, owing to the density of the thicket and strength of the enemy's defense, my front was repulsed, though fighting gallantly, losing 3 killed, 15 wounded, and 10 missing.

By direction of General Miles I withdrew my detachment to the left of our division line, and selected a new point for the second assault. This time, though the enemy were on the alert, my men broke and carried their line, capturing 1 commissioned officer and about 20 men, my detachment of the Sixty-first New York Volunteers here losing 2 enlisted men killed, 1 wounded, and 5 missing. The corps officer of the day, Brevet Brigadier-General Madill, now rapidly advanced our whole picket-line beyond the old line occupied by the brigade. I now advanced my brigade from our main works, taking up line of battle a short distance in rear of the new line occupied by our pickets, sending the regiments to the immediate support of the picket-line to my right and left; the Second New York Artillery to the right. Subsequently, about 1 p. m., I assembled the two regiments and advanced my entire brigade line of battle to the front, through an almost impassable thicket, woods, morass, swamps, and finding the enemy holding a strong intrenched picket-line, their front covered by deep slashing and morass. I now, by direction of General Miles, took up a new advantageous line a little to the rear, and where the enemy had had their original picket-line, closing intervals of regiments to the left, and making room for the Second Brigade (Colonel Nugent) to come into position, and continued my line to the right. We had just got into position, 3 p. m., when the enemy's bugle sounded the forward. The enemy charged my entire front, but were fairly repulsed. They renewed the assault later (6 p. m.), but with no more success, being driven back at all points, we capturing some prisoners. About this time the commanding officer Sixty-fourth New York Volunteers reported his regiment to me for duty; but not needing his services upon my front, General Miles soon ordered him to another point. Later in the evening, about 8 p. m., I was directed by an aide of General Miles to deploy my command to the right, covering the ground formerly occupied by the Second Brigade. I did this, connecting on the right with the Sixty-fourth New York Volunteers and on the left with the Third Brigade. We maintained this line until about 9 p. m., when, by direction of General Miles, I deployed a strong picket-line, anticipating a withdrawal of my main line, using for this purpose the Eighty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, part of the Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers, and part of the One hundred and eleventh New York Volunteers, the latter regiment having been reported to me by order of General Miles. This line connected on the right with the Fourth New York Artillery and on the left with the Third Brigade line, leaving reserves at the house, and on the left at the old wall near ——— house. About 1 p. m. [a. m. 26th], by orders of General Miles, through Lieutenant-Colonel Brown, acting assistant adjutant-general, I withdrew the balance of my brigade and the One hundred and eleventh New York Volunteers, returning to our camp in breast-work near Battery D.

My troops, without exception, behaved well, standing firm under the attack of the enemy, and advancing fearlessly to the charge. Too much praise cannot be awarded to the detachment of the Sixty-first New York Volunteers—men and officers distinguished themselves. The officers of my staff, Captains McCallister and Kerr, of the One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Lieutenant Hickock, Twenty-sixth Michigan Volunteers, were very efficient at all times, gallant in action, and faithful to the performance of all duty, Lieutenant Hickock being twice struck by the enemy's bullets. Accompanying is a list of casualties.*

I am, very respectfully,

GEORGE W. SCOTT,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Lieut. Col. R. A. BROWN,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, First Division.

No. 32.

Report of Capt. Patrick H. Bird, Twenty-eighth Massachusetts Infantry, Second Brigade, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-EIGHTH MASSACHUSETTS VOLUNTEERS,
March 27, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with circular from headquarters Second Brigade, First Division, Second Army Corps, March 26, 1865, I have the honor to report the following as the part taken by the Twenty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers in the engagement on the 25th instant:

The regiment with the brigade broke camp at 9 a. m. and moved into the front line of works; remained under arms in the works until 2 p. m., when it moved with the brigade into the woods in front of the works and formed line of battle. We were attacked by the enemy, whom we repulsed two different times, with severe loss. We were relieved at dark by a regiment of the First Division, Fifth Corps. After being relieved we formed in rear of the First Division, Fifth Corps, where we remained until 12 p. m., when we moved with the brigade into our present encampment.

* Shows 7 men killed, 3 officers and 73 men wounded, and 44 men missing; total 127.

In this engagement we lost 4 commissioned officers wounded, viz: Lieut. Col. James Fleming, Capt. John Connor, Capt. Patrick McIntyre, and First Lieut. Thomas J. Parker, and 7 enlisted men killed and 60 wounded, many of whom have doubtless since died.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. BIRD,

Captain, Commanding Twenty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers.

Capt. J. C. FOLEY,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 33.

Report of Capt. William H. Terwilliger, Sixty-third New York Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS SIXTY-THIRD NEW YORK,

March 26, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to forward the following statement of the part taken by the Sixty-third New York Volunteers in the engagement of the 25th instant:

Received orders to strike tents at 6.30 a. m. About 9 a. m. formed on the left of the brigade, and marched to the breast-works in front of First Brigade camp; remained until 2.15 p. m., when we moved outside the works, and formed line about half a mile in front of works. Moved line forward into woods, threw out skirmishers, and fell back to the edge of the woods; remained quiet until the skirmishers were driven in, when we opened an oblique fire on the enemy, which was kept up for two hours and a half; were then relieved by a portion of the Fifth Corps; then fell back and took up a position on the left near the picket-line occupied formerly by First Brigade; remained about one hour, when we received orders to relieve a portion of the Fifth Corps between Third Brigade, First Division, and the left of Third Division; remained about one hour; was then relieved; left one officer and thirteen men to hold the line; then returned to camp about 12 o'clock same night.

During the engagement our loss was trifling, having but 3 men wounded and 1 missing from the picket-line.

I take great pleasure in stating that the officers and soldiers of this command acquitted themselves with honor to themselves, their regiment, and the brigade.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. H. TERWILLIGER,

Captain, Commanding Sixty-third New York Volunteers.

Capt. J. C. FOLEY,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 34.

Report of Lieut. Col. James J. Smith, Sixty-ninth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS SIXTY-NINTH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
March 27, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders, I respectfully submit a statement of the operations of this regiment through the day and during the action on Saturday, March 25, 1865.

Early in the morning we, in obedience to orders, struck tents, loaded our wagons, and got under arms on the color front. About 9 o'clock the regiment was marched up and deployed inside of the breast-works in front of the First Brigade. About 2.15 p. m. the regiment was marched out, and a line formed along our old line of picket-pits and facing the woods; ten minutes afterward the line moved forward and halted about twenty paces in front of the Kenner house. About 4 o'clock the line was again advanced and halted just in rear of the line of picket-pits abandoned by the enemy during the morning. About this time part of the First Brigade, then in our front, moved to the left and the enemy commenced to make demonstrations of an attack on our front and on our right flank; and, in obedience to orders from the brigade commander, I threw out my right and left flank companies as skirmishers—the left company covering our front, and the right company covering and encircling our right flank, which was otherwise unprotected. The enemy's skirmishers being very close, our skirmishers commenced firing as soon as in line. Soon afterward the enemy's bugles sounded a charge, and from the right of our skirmish line the enemy was seen to advance in line, in very strong force, at the double-quick, and directly in our front. Our skirmishers immediately in front were driven in slowly, fighting stubbornly every foot of the ground. Captain Mulhall, commanding at this point, received a severe wound, falling some distance in front of our line, when the skirmishers (the left company) approached within twenty paces of our line. In obedience to orders, I called them in, and they formed on our left; soon afterward, the enemy having approached within about 200 yards, we opened fire. During this time the right company, under the command of Capt. Murtha Murphy, who with excellent judgment selected a good position for his men, poured in a good fire on the enemy, who were much exposed in his front; the first line of the enemy broke, and another line was immediately advanced, and also broke, but was also closed up again, and advanced as far as a swamp in our front, where they commenced firing. A heavy line of the enemy was then advanced on our skirmishers on the right, who, in consequence, had to fall back, and made a bold stand behind some old works, on a line with our right flank, in the field to our right. The enemy about this time discovered that this was our weakest [point] and commenced to pour in some of their troops. Not being able to drive Captain Murphy's company from his position, or fearing that a line of battle was there in reserve, they passed around to his right and advanced up, flanking his position, when he had to hastily fall back on the battalion to avoid capture. I then, in obedience to orders received from the brigade commander, in anticipation of such an event, threw back three companies on my right wing, and the fire changing from our direct front to our right and front, I directed our fire to the right oblique. The enemy soon afterward appeared to fall back, when the order to cease firing was given, and some four of our men went out and brought in Captain Mulhall, wounded, and who for over one hour had lain between the two fires. Some ten minutes afterward the enemy opened again from a line of battle on our right and front, and I ordered the firing to commence again. During the firing I discovered that although our men had each on coming into the fight sixty rounds of ammunition, that we were then running short, and I directed the firing to be moderate and slower, and sent some men to the rear for ammunition, which was not received until nearly every man had expended his sixty rounds and that of the killed and wounded. The firing was continued, details continually bringing up ammunition, until about ten minutes to 7 o'clock, when we were relieved by, I believe, a Michigan regiment, when I marched the regiment about fifty paces to the rear, and then had each of the men supplied with sixty rounds of ammunition. We lay here until about 8 p. m., when we were marched by the left flank to the rear and left, and halted at some of our old picket-pits, stacked arms, and let the men cook some coffee. About 1 a. m. of the 26th we got orders to fall back, and marched back to this camp.

I cannot speak in too high terms of the coolness and gallantry displayed by all of my officers and men. To Captain Milliken, acting field officer, and who superintended the left wing, great praise is due for his keeping the line well connected and steady, particularly so as it was on the center and left of our regiment that we sustained the greatest loss. To Capt. Murtha Murphy, for his good judgment, coolness, and bravery, in protecting our right from being flanked by the enemy, too much in praise cannot be said. Captain Mulhall also acted with the greatest bravery, and kept his skirmishers well to the front, and fell back only when the only alternative was annihilation or capture. I regret to say that he was severely wounded. Acting Adjutant Dolan also acted in the bravest and coolest manner, and rendered the greatest assistance and [was] continually along the line. I respectfully submit that in his case application be made to the Governor of State of New York for the position of adjutant. The non-commissioned officers all, without exception, acted with the greatest bravery, and I most respectfully decline to particularize any one of them, but they are well known at these headquarters, and no opportunity to do them justice will be overlooked.

I beg to state that our loss in killed and wounded, so far as can be possibly ascertained, is as follows: Commissioned officers—wounded, 2. Enlisted men—killed, 9; wounded, 83. Total killed and wounded, 94.

I have the honor to be, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES J. SMITH,

Lieutenant-Colonel Sixty-ninth New York Volunteers, Comdg.

Capt. JOHN C. FOLEY, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 35.

Report of Capt. John Smith, Eighty-eighth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.

HQRS. EIGHTY-EIGHTH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,

March 26, 1865.

In compliance with instructions, I have the honor to submit the following report of operations:

This command received orders to strike tents at 6.30 a. m. 25th instant, and left camp at 9 a. m., and with the several regiments of the brigade occupied the first line of works. At 2 p. m. we received orders to advance and form line of battle at the enemy's rifle-pits. We then stacked arms and threw out skirmishers, covering our front. About 4 p. m. the enemy attacked in force, driving in our skirmishers and charging our line. After a severe engagement of over two hours and a half, during which we held the enemy at bay, never yielding an inch of ground, we were relieved by part of the Fifth Corps, and moved back a short distance to the rear and formed line. We remained here for about fifteen minutes, when we received orders to move farther to the rear, stack arms, and permit the men to rest, and at 12 p. m. we received orders to fall in and return to our camp.

I feel great pleasure in reporting that the officers and men behaved in a most gallant manner when under fire, and that their conduct throughout was in the highest degree creditable.

Our losses were 9 enlisted men wounded and 2 missing.

I am, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

JOHN SMITH,

Captain, Commanding Eighty-eighth New York Volunteers.

ASSISTANT ADJUTANT-GENERAL, SECOND BRIGADE.

No. 36.

Report of Col. George von Schack, Seventh New York Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

HQRS. THIRD BRIG., FIRST DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
February 13, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with orders from headquarters Army of the Potomac, dated February 11, I have the honor to report that on the morning of the 5th of February, by orders from the brevet major-general commanding the division, I posted three regiments in garrison, viz, One hundred and twenty-fifth and One hundred and twenty-sixth New York Volunteers at Fort Siebert, and the Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers at Fort Emery. At about 5 o'clock in the afternoon of the same day I received orders from division headquarters to move all the available force of my command to the vicinity of the Wyatt house. I therefore moved the One hundred and eleventh, Seventh, Fifty-second, and Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers to the point designated, arriving there about 6.30 p. m., reporting, as ordered, to Brevet Brigadier-General Ramsey. I immediately took position, by his orders, in line on the right of the Fourth Brigade. At the time of our arrival at the Wyatt house the firing along the line had nearly ceased, although up to half an hour before reaching the position there was heavy musketry firing, apparently, along the whole line. After remaining in line about three hours, during which time the troops were engaged in throwing up breast-works, I received orders from Brevet Brigadier-General Ramsey to take my command back to camp, where I arrived about 12 o'clock the same night. On the evening of the 6th, by orders from division headquarters, I placed 200 men, properly officered, and the One hundred and twenty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, in garrison at Fort Sampson, where they remained till the night of the 7th, when they were relieved by other troops of the division.

On the 5th and 6th instant my brigade picketed the line formerly occupied by the Second Division of the corps.

Respectfully submitted.

G. VON SCHACK,

Colonel Seventh New York Regiment, Comdg. Third Brigade.

Maj. R. A. BROWN, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 37.

Report of Col. Augustus Funk, Thirty-ninth New York Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations March 25.

HEADQRS. THIRD BRIG., FIRST DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
March 27, 1865.

COLONEL: In compliance with instructions, I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of this brigade in the action of the 25th instant:

Byt. Brig. Gen. H. J. Madill, having been detailed as corps officer of the day, turned the command of the brigade over to me at about 9 a. m., at which time tents had been struck and our troops were ready to move. About 2 p. m., in obedience to orders from division headquarters, we formed line of battle in front of our works and advanced to a position about twenty rods in rear of the First Brigade of the division as a support to the front line. We remained in this position until about 4 p. m., when I received orders to form a line to the left and rear. While executing this order the enemy attacked the front line, which opened with a heavy musketry fire. The new line was formed in good order along the old picket-line. At this juncture the One hundred and eleventh New York Volunteers was detached from the brigade, by order of Brevet Brigadier-General Madill, corps officer of the day, and placed in the front line on the extreme left of the division. While this was being done the enemy attacked again, this time striking the Second Brigade of the division. In accordance with orders I moved the remaining five regiments of the brigade rapidly by the right flank, passing the rear of the Second Brigade (which was at this time heavily engaged with the enemy), and formed line on the right of the division, supporting two pieces of artillery engaged in shelling the enemy. At this point the brigade was for some time exposed to a well directed artillery fire of the enemy, as well as a fire from the enemy's sharpshooters posted in a house in our front. Firing ceased at this point about dark.

The One hundred and eleventh New York Volunteers, being on the left of the division, became engaged with the enemy about 6.30 p. m. As this regiment was detached from the brigade during their action, I forward herewith the report of Lieutenant-Colonel Husk, commanding the regiment. It is believed that the rapid and well directed fire of the One hundred and eleventh New York Volunteers on the flank of the enemy in his attack on the Third Division tended to check his advance and give that division an opportunity to form their right and re-establish it on the line from which the enemy had succeeded in dislodging it for a time.

On orders from division headquarters I posted pickets in front of the brigade, connecting with the Sixth Corps on the right and First Brigade pickets on the left, and about 1 a. m. of the 26th moved the brigade back to their old camp.

I cannot speak too highly of the conduct of the brigade, both officers and men, in the various movements we were compelled to make, a part of the time moving under the enemy's fire; and I am confident had we been called upon to engage the enemy directly, the brigade would have met the most sanguine expectations, as the troops were anxious to become engaged.

During the afternoon Second Lieut. L. Edelman, Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers, being left in camp in charge of the brigade guard, started, without permission, to join his regiment, and being somewhat intoxicated, passed through our advance lines and has not been heard from since.

I take this opportunity of calling the attention of the general commanding division to the energetic and efficient manner in which the brigade staff performed their duties during the operations of the day.

Respectfully,

A. FUNK,

Colonel Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers.

Lieut. Col. R. A. BROWN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 38.

*Report of Maj. Jacob Scheu, Seventh New York Infantry, of operations
March 25.*

HDQRS. SEVENTH REGT. NEW YORK VOL. INFANTRY,
March 26, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In accordance with circular of to-day, I have the honor to report:

About 8 a. m. this regiment was ordered to fall in; tents were struck, and the regiment was under arms in full marching order at the breast-works till 12 m., when the regiment marched off, under orders directly from brigade headquarters; took part in all the movements which the brigade was ordered to. At 1 a. m. [26th] reached the old camping-ground.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JACOB SCHEU,

Major, Comdg. Seventh Regt. New York Volunteer Infantry.

Capt. B. J. HUESTON,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 39.

Report of Maj. John McD. Hyde, Thirty-ninth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. THIRTY-NINTH NEW YORK VET. VOLUNTEERS,
March 26, 1865.

SIR: In obedience to orders from brigade headquarters of this date, I have the honor to submit the following report:

At 11.30 a. m. yesterday we were ordered to the front to support the attacking party. We remained in reserve all day. During the afternoon we supported a battery while it dislodged a force of the enemy from a large house, which was done effectually. Although we were not actually engaged with the enemy, yet the men acted brave and cool; and had our assistance been required, I am confident the men would have conducted themselves with credit.

Our loss was 1 commissioned officer (Second Lieut. L. Edelman) missing; casualties among men, none.

We were ordered back to camp, arriving at 2 a. m. this date.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. McE. HYDE,

Major, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. E. J. HUESTON,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Brigade.

No. 40.

Report of Lieut. Col. Henry M. Karples, Fifty-second New York Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. FIFTY-SECOND REGT. NEW YORK VET. VOLS.,
March 26, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that my regiment struck camp at 8 a. m., in obedience to orders, and remained under arms until 3 o'clock, when it moved forward with the brigade, and formed line of battle in the rear of the First Brigade, where it remained until 4.30 p. m., when it moved by the flank to the right, then in line of battle forward, connecting with the Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers on the right and the One hundred and twenty-sixth New York Volunteers on the left, through a piece of wood-swamp, forming with the brigade in an open field, supporting a section of artillery. The regiment remained there, part of the time under light artillery fire, until 10.40, when it moved by the flank back to its old position, and was dismissed. While under fire one enlisted man was slightly wounded.

I am, captain, respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY M. KARPLES,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. E. J. HUESTON,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 41.

Report of Lieut. Col. Lewis W. Husk, One hundred and eleventh New York Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. 111TH REGIMENT NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
March 26, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with circular received, I have the honor to make the following report of the fight of March 25, in which the One hundred and eleventh participated:

On Saturday morning, March 25, at about 7 a. m., I received orders to have the regiment fall in, and to pack up everything but tents. At about 9 a. m. received orders to strike tents, and be prepared to move at a moment's notice. We remained under arms, on the color line, until about 2 p. m., when I received orders to move out by the right flank, following the One hundred and twenty-sixth New York Volunteers. We moved out through the works, and filed left past the Smith house, formed line of battle, and moved to the front; crossing our picket-line to the left of the Smith house, moved about 200 yards to the front of the picket-line, and were halted in the open field, between two pieces of wood. We remained here about two hours, when the brigade was moved to the left about one quarter of a mile. We had just halted and were forming line of battle in the woods, when the enemy charged the brigade in our front, and for a short time the musketry was very heavy. At this time General Madill ordered my regiment to move to the left and front, and occupy the space in the open field to the right of the house, and connecting with the Third Division on my left and the Second Brigade on my right. I ordered my men to lie down, as the enemy's sharpshooters were very active. At about 6.30 p. m. we discovered a line of battle in our front, in the edge of the woods, and at the same time another line charged, with a yell, on the right of the Third Division. We gave the enemy in our front, who had already started on the double-quick, our particular attention, and after a few well directed volleys they broke and fled in confusion. The line in front of the Third Division was for the time more successful, driving back the right of the division for a short distance. I then directed my regiment to fire to the left oblique, thus getting a cross-fire on them, and punishing them severely and holding them in check. In the meantime the Third Division rallied and charged to recover the lost ground, which they did, routing the enemy and capturing a number of prisoners. By this time it was quite dark, and the firing had nearly ceased. We immediately threw out vedettes in our front, and we remained in this position until about 1 a. m. [26th], when I was ordered to post a picket in front of my line and march my regiment back to camp.

Several deserters came into my line during the evening, who reported that the enemy were badly demoralized and cut up.

My regiment was nearly all new men, who smelled powder yesterday for the first time. They fought nobly, both officers and men, and I am proud of them, knowing that when the tug of war comes they can always be depended upon.

I am, captain, very respectfully,

LEWIS W. HUSK,

Lieutenant-Colonel 111th New York Volunteers, Comdg. Regiment.

Capt. E. J. HUESTON,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 42.

Report of Capt. J. Hart Wilder, One hundred and twenty-sixth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS 126TH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
March 26, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this battalion in the operations of yesterday, March 25: I received orders at 7 a. m. to strike tents and be in readiness to move at a moment's notice. At 8 o'clock my command was in line awaiting the order to move. About 1 p. m. the battalion, with the rest of the brigade, moved a short distance in front of the picket-line held by the Second Brigade previous to the advance. The troops rested in line for one-half or three-quarters of an hour, and then moved to the left on the old picket-line of the Third Brigade. Remained there but a short time, when the brigade, with the exception of the One hundred and eleventh New York Volunteers, moved by the right flank to the right and rear of the line, then held by the pickets of the Fourth Brigade. Here we remained in line of battle until 11 or 12 p. m., when we returned to our old camp.

Respectfully submitted.

I. HART WILDER,
Captain, Commanding.

Capt. E. J. HUESTON,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 43.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. John Ramsey, Eighth New Jersey Infantry, commanding Fourth Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQUARTERS, FOURTH BRIG., FIRST DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
Near Petersburg, Va., February 13, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by the troops under my command during the operations of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

In obedience to the order of the brevet major-general commanding the division, the disposable force of my command, consisting of the Fourth New York Artillery, Sixty-fourth New York Volunteers, Fifty-third, One hundred and sixteenth, and One hundred and forty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, moved from camp on Sunday afternoon, the 5th instant, to relieve Brevet Brigadier-General McAllister, commanding Third Brigade, Third Division, then in line of battle at the Tucker house. Arrived on the ground about 4 p. m.; relieved General McAllister of the position he then held, he subsequently going into line of battle on my left. About 5 p. m. the enemy made a determined assault upon the line occupied by the two brigades, but massing on McAllister's front and extending to my left; the fire in my front, however, was not of a very serious nature. General McAllister's brigade held this line. I am satisfied, from the heavy assaults of the enemy, he could not have held it alone; my arrival, under the circumstances, was very portentous and opportune.

Find report of regimental commanders accompanying this.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN RAMSEY,
Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Maj. RICHARD A. BROWN,
Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., First Division, Second Army Corps.

No. 44.

Report of Lieut. Col. William Glenny, Sixty-fourth New York Infantry, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQUARTERS SIXTY-FOURTH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
February 13, 1865.

In compliance with circular of 12th instant from brigade headquarters, I have the honor to report that on Sabbath afternoon of the 5th instant, in obedience to orders from the brevet brigadier-general commanding, the regiment proceeded in the direction of Hatcher's Run, and were assigned position on the left of the brigade, joining the troops of the Third Division, behind works hastily constructed by other troops, near the Tucker house, where they remained without being engaged, and participated in the operations only by strengthening their works, building abatis, slashing timber, furnishing details for guard, picket, &c.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
 WILLIAM GLENNY,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Lieut. J. F. CRAIN,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Fourth Brigade.

No. 45.

Report of Col. William M. Mintzer, Fifty-third Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQRS. FIFTY-THIRD PENNSYLVANIA VETERAN VOLRS.,
February 13, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to submit the following report relative to the operations of this regiment on the 5th and 6th and 7th instant:

On the afternoon of the 5th instant I received verbal instructions from brigade headquarters to have my command in readiness to move at once. Very shortly afterward I was ordered to move, following the One hundred and sixteenth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers. Our line of march was parallel with the Squirrel Level road and south of it. We moved in that direction about two miles, when I was ordered to form line of battle, connecting on the right with the One hundred and sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and on the left with the Sixty-fourth New York Volunteers, relieving part of the Third Division, Second Corps. This was about 4 p. m. Soon afterward the enemy made an attack upon the line to the left of our brigade, through the woods in front. Three successive attacks were made. During these attacks I ordered the left of my regiment to fire to the left and front of it, thus subjecting the enemy to a cross-fire. I have reason to believe that this had some effect upon the enemy. At about dusk, the enemy having been repulsed, firing ceased. I stationed pickets in my front, connecting with the One hundred and sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers on the right and the Sixty-fourth New York Volunteers on the left. No casualties occurred in my command during the attack. Officers and men behaved well. My command remained in the position first occupied (with slight maneuvering on the 6th instant) until we returned to camp on the forenoon of the 9th instant. I now occupy the camp I left on the 5th instant.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
 W. M. MINTZER,
Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Lieut. J. FRANK CRAIN,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Fourth Brigade.

No. 46.

Report of Lieut. Col. George C. Anderson, Fifty-third Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.

HQRS. FIFTY-THIRD PENNSYLVANIA VETERAN VOLS.,
March 26, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of this regiment in yesterday's engagement:

Received orders from Colonel Mintzer, commanding brigade, at 3 p. m., to move by the left flank, following the Sixty-sixth New York Volunteers. We moved forward and formed in line of battle in rear of a house in front of the Fourth Brigade picket-line, connecting with the Sixty-sixth New York on the right and the One hundred and sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers on the left. Shortly afterward received orders to move by the left flank, following the One hundred and sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to the position formerly held by the Fourth Brigade picket-line. Soon afterward we again moved by the left flank, following the One hundred and sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers; formed line of battle to the right of the Fourth New York Heavy [Artillery]; was ordered by Colonel Mintzer to move forward until we engaged the enemy. I advanced to the edge of the woods, threw out a strong skirmish line, drove the rebel pickets from their position, and captured five prisoners. I was ordered to let my regiment remain there and hold the position. While we were in this position the enemy charged on the brigade to my left. I ordered my men to fire on them, thus subjecting them to a cross-fire. I have reason to believe that good execution was done. At about 11 p. m. I received orders from the colonel commanding brigade to withdraw, moving by the left flank. We moved back to camp, arriving at 12 m.

During the engagement I had five men wounded and one man missing. Officers and men behaved well.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. C. ANDERSON,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Lieut. S. P. CORLISS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 47.

Report of Col. St. Clair A. Mulholland, One hundred and sixteenth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-7.

CAMP 116TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
February 13, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In compliance with instructions from brigade headquarters, I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by my regiment during the recent operations of February 5, 6, and 7:

My regiment left camp on Sunday, the 5th instant, and with the rest of our brigade, under command of Brevet Brigadier-General Ramsey, moved to a point about one mile and a half to the left of our present position. Here we relieved a portion of the Third Division, who were constructing breast-works. I at once, in obedience to orders from brigade headquarters, threw out a few pickets, and also employed a part of my command in strengthening the earth-works in our front. During the afternoon heavy musketry firing was heard on our left, and several pieces of the enemy's artillery opened fire (with shell) in our front. As my command was sheltered by breast-works, it did not suffer any therefrom. We remained in the same position until Thursday morning, 8th instant, and then moved back to our present camp.

No casualties occurred during the movement in my command.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ST. CLAIR A. MULHOLLAND,
Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Lieut. J. F. CRAIN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Fourth Brigade.

No. 48.

Report of Capt. James H. Hamlin, One hundred and forty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQUARTERS 145TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
February 12, 1865.

LIUTENANT: Pursuant to instructions, I have the honor to submit the following statement of the operations of this command from the 5th to the 7th instant, inclusive:

On the 5th instant, as per orders, the command moved out in front of the Cummings house and formed line on left of brigade. The enemy hereupon opened with musketry almost before the alignment was completed. The line not being complete at the right, by direction of brevet brigadier-general commanding, the regiment was moved to that position on double-quick at this juncture. By this time the enemy had commenced shelling the position. One man of the command was wounded. On the 6th and 7th instant the same position was held, nothing of importance transpiring.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES H. HAMLIN,
Captain, Commanding Regiment.

Lieut. J. F. CRAIN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 49.

Report of Capt. Alfred A. Rhinchart, One hundred and forty-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS 148TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
March 27, 1865.

LIUTENANT: In compliance with existing orders, I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of this command on Saturday, the 25th instant:

Immediately after daylight the regiment was got under arms and kept in hand in the breast-works until about 3.30 p. m., when orders were given to have the regiment march out and join the brigade, then moving to the front. My command remained with the brigade in support of the picket on the right of the division line, and afterward in support of the general line of the division, until about 4.15 p. m., when I was directed by Lieutenant Corliss, of the brigade staff, to take my command into an open field, just in rear of an old house and barn and to the right of a swamp fronting the center of the brigade camps, for the purpose of supporting the picket-line. I here deployed the line to some extent along a rail fence, ordering the men to take down the fence, pile up the rails, and make covers of them for themselves. I also directed Captain Sutton, of the regiment, to take twelve or fifteen men, armed with Spencer rifles, to the picket-line and front as sharpshooters; with these he was enabled to annoy considerably a body of the enemy in a large white house just behind their picket-line, and he finally succeeded almost entirely in silencing the sharpshooting kept up from this house. At about 5 p. m. the picket reserve in front, being pressed by the enemy, came back in confusion on my line. The enemy kept up a rapid fire, and part of my line on the right and left were thrown into confusion; this was aided by the fact, as some of the men persistently declare, that an officer repeatedly cried, "fall back, men; fall back, men." The whole line was immediately rallied, however, and moved forward in a few moments to the old buildings on the crest of the hill. Here a constant and rapid fire was kept up on the left flank of the enemy's column, attacking the main line of the division until dark. The regiment then held position here until about 12.30 a. m. of the 26th, when orders were received to return to camp.

During the day I lost 1 man killed, 1 officer and 8 men wounded, and 1 man missing.

I am, lieutenant, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALFRED A. RHINEHART,

Captain, 118th Pennsylvania Volunteers, Commanding Regiment.

Lieut. S. P. CORLISS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Fourth Brigade.

No. 50.

Report of Maj. Seward F. Gould, Fourth New York Heavy Artillery, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQUARTERS FOURTH NEW YORK ARTILLERY,

February 13, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In compliance with circular of the 12th instant from headquarters Army of the Potomac, I have the honor to transmit the following report of the operations of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant, as regards this regiment:

About 5 o'clock on the afternoon of the 5th instant this command broke camp, and repaired by the way of the Squirrel Level road to the Tucker house, where we joined our brigade, and were ordered into line on the right of the same. I immediately sent out a picket; the remainder were engaged all night in building a breast-work. On the 6th instant we had details out cutting, slashing, &c. Late in the afternoon I had an abatis put in front of my regimental line; we remained in the same place and position until relieved with the brigade, and returned to our old camp on the morning of the 8th instant.

I am, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. F. GOULD,

Major, Commanding.

Lieut J. FRANK ORAIN,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., 4th Brig., 1st Div., 2d Army Corps.

No. 51.

*Report of Brig. Gen. Thomas A. Smyth, U. S. Army, commanding
Second Division, of operations February 5-11.*

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, SECOND ARMY CORPS,
February 13, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with orders from headquarters Second Corps, received the afternoon of February 4, I have the honor to report that this division marched from camp at 7 a. m. on the 5th instant, in the following order: First Brigade, Colonel Olmsted; Second Brigade, Colonel Murphy; Tenth Massachusetts Battery; and Third Brigade, Lieut. Col. F. E. Pierce. The command was massed at the McDougall house, and a squadron of cavalry ordered to report to me was ordered to the front as an advance guard, supported by the Nineteenth Massachusetts Volunteers, belonging to the First Brigade. Upon the advance arriving at the road leading to the Armstrong house, the cavalry drove the enemy's vedettes across Stony Creek Run, where they were checked. The Nineteenth Massachusetts then charged and drove the enemy across Hatcher's Run. The Nineteenth Maine, of the First Brigade, and the Seventh West Virginia Volunteers, of the Third Brigade, crossed the run (Hatcher's) and occupied the ground on the opposite side. The rest of the division was then marched up the road leading to the Armstrong house, and placed in line of battle beyond said house, in the following order: the Second Brigade, with two regiments of the Third Brigade, on the right; the First Brigade, with two regiments of the Third Brigade, on the left; the remaining regiments of the Third Brigade being on the extreme left. The right of the line, after being formed, rested upon Stony Creek, and the left upon Hatcher's Run, after which disposition I ordered the Twentieth Massachusetts Volunteers, Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and the One hundred and sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers, across Stony Creek, in order to make connection with McAllister's brigade, of the Third Division of this corps. Four guns of the Tenth Massachusetts Battery were placed in position, in rear of my line, upon an elevated piece of ground. The enemy opened upon them after being placed in position, but were not replied to, as it was evident that they were only feeling our position. About 3 p. m. the enemy made an attack on the left of the R. Armstrong house, also on the left of the line, which was also a feint to cover their movement on the right. About 4.30 p. m. they made a vigorous attack upon the right of my line, driving in my skirmishers, when I took the One hundred and eighth New York Volunteers and the Fourth Ohio Volunteers, of the Third Brigade, across the run to support them; at the same time I ordered the Fourteenth Connecticut Volunteers, of the same brigade, to change front on the edge of the swamp. Upon making the above-mentioned dispositions I found McAllister's brigade, of the Third Division, filing in to occupy the ground that I intended to occupy with those regiments, after which I ordered the Tenth Massachusetts Battery to change front and open upon the enemy, who were by this time engaged with my right and McAllister's (of the Third Division) left. After three attacks the enemy was repulsed.

About 4 o'clock of the 6th instant the Fifth Corps advanced on the left of this division, and soon afterward appeared to be hotly engaged with the enemy; and observing that they appeared to be giving away I ordered a section of Roder's battery, Fourth U. S. Artillery, commanded by Lieutenant Smith, of the same regiment, to open, and ordered two regiments of the Third Brigade, which I had in reserve, into position on the left, covering the bridge across Hatcher's Run.

On the 7th instant the division was not engaged, with the exception of some artillery, which opened in compliance with instructions received from headquarters Second Corps and at the request of an officer belonging to the Fifth Corps, which corps, at that time, was advancing.

On the 8th, 9th, and 10th instant nothing of importance transpired. At daylight on the 11th instant the division moved to the position it now occupies.

Herewith please find inclosed the reports of the brigade commanders. The conduct of both officers and men was good.
Respectfully submitted.

THOS. A. SMYTH,

Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Commanding Division.

Maj. S. CARNCROSS,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Corps.

No. 52.

Report of Brig. Gen. William Hays, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, SECOND ARMY CORPS,

March 28, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this division on the 25th instant:

The Second Brigade was in position on our line during the day. The First Brigade remained in position along the lines until about 6 p. m., when they went forward, by order of the general commanding the corps, to support the Third Division of this corps. On reporting to the major-general commanding it was ordered back to its place in the line.

In compliance with orders from the major-general commanding the corps to make a demonstration on the enemy's right, the Fourteenth Connecticut Volunteers, Twelfth New Jersey Volunteers, and the Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, all under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Moore, Fourteenth Connecticut, assaulted the enemy's works about 4 p. m. and carried the works over Hatcher's Run and Pictune Run, capturing seventy prisoners. The skirmish line, under the command of Captain McAnally, Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, advanced to within sight of the Boydton plank road. Brig. Gen. T. A. Smyth, commanding the Third Brigade, accompanied the command ordered to make the demonstration. On receiving word from General Smyth, that if the remainder of the brigade were sent to him, he could hold his position, I ordered the brigade to join him. General Smyth held his advanced position until 10 p. m., when he retired to the advanced picket-line.

The officers and men of the Fourteenth Connecticut, Twelfth New Jersey, and Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania behaved in the most gallant manner. Lieutenant-Colonel De Lacy, One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Volunteers, division officer of the day, was severely wounded on the picket-line. This is the third or fourth time this meritorious officer has been wounded during the war.

A report of casualties has been forwarded.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM HAYS,

Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Commanding Division.

Lieutenant-Colonel WHITTIER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Army Corps.

Report of Col. William A. Olmsted, Fifty-ninth New York Infantry, commanding First Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

HQRS. FIRST BRIG., SECOND DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
February 13, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with circular of the 11th, Second Division headquarters, I report the part taken by this brigade on the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant.

February 5, the brigade was formed at its old camp, and marched at 7 a. m. down the Vaughan road, where we halted for the Third Division, Second Army Corps, to pass. The Nineteenth Massachusetts, Lieutenant-Colonel Rice, was advanced as skirmishers in front of a brigade of the Third Division. The balance of the brigade moved on the Vaughan road, and changed direction to the right through the woods, arriving at or near Hatcher's Run, crossed over Wild Cat Run, and formed line of battle, facing the woods and westward, as follows: The One hundred and eighty-fourth Pennsylvania on left; Thirty-sixth Wisconsin, One hundred and fifty-second New York, Fifty-ninth New York, the Seventh Michigan, and First Minnesota were thrown out as skirmishers to the left and front, with their left resting on Hatcher's Run. The Nineteenth Massachusetts connected with the First Minnesota, picketing to the Nineteenth Maine, who advanced and carried the enemy's works on Hatcher's Run. Along the base of Hatcher's Run the Twentieth Massachusetts was sent, by order of General Smyth, to support a brigade of the Third Division. They were relieved after the engagement on Sunday, February 5.

February 6 and 7, no material change of troops.

I have the honor to report that during the engagement of Sunday, the 5th, on our right, and Monday, the 6th, on our left, the conduct of officers and men was more than could be expected; their coolness and contentment and patient waiting attracted the attention of myself and staff; and I can safely say, had an opportunity offered itself, they would have done credit to the general commanding the division.

I wish to mention for brevet promotion, for gallant and fearless discharge of duty, and for general attention thereto, Lieut. Col. George W. La Point, commanding Seventh Michigan Volunteers, and Maj. M. Van Sickle, of the same regiment; also Capt. Frank Houston, commanding First Minnesota Battalion; also Lieut. W. H. Tibbitts, Nineteenth Massachusetts, and First Lieut. and Actg. Adj. J. F. Aytoun, Nineteenth Massachusetts, and Maj. John Kelliher, Twentieth Massachusetts Volunteers, for gallant and meritorious conduct on picket-line. I cannot close this report without mentioning with credit the officers of my staff; always ready, prompt, and each showed the disposition of the soldier, by obeying strictly their orders and delivering them under fire; and I do therefore ask for a brevet for Capt. Will Gilder, assistant adjutant-general; Capt. A. B. Holmes, acting brigade-inspector; Capt. Thomas Huggins, temporary aide-de-camp; and Second Lieut. William H. Tripp, personal aide.

Herewith I subjoin the reports of the regimental commanders.

I am, major, yours, respectfully,

WILLIAM A. OLMSTED,

Colonel Fifty-ninth New York Veteran Vols., Comdg. Brigade.

Maj. JOHN M. NORVELL,

Asst. Adj. Gen., Second Division, Second Army Corps.

No. 54.

Report of Lieut. Col. Joseph W. Spaulding, Nineteenth Maine Infantry, of operations February 5-11.

HEADQUARTERS NINETEENTH MAINE VOLUNTEERS,
February 12, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this regiment in the late movement:

This regiment left its camp in front of Fort Emery at 6 a. m. the 5th instant. Marched shortly after with the division out about two miles and a half on the Vaughan road, and filed to the right into a by-road. Before reaching the Armstrong house, and while on the march, General Smyth ordered me to move the regiment in line of battle off to the left; this was done, deploying two companies as skirmishers in front. When the skirmish line reached Hatcher's Run the enemy's vedettes were posted on the opposite bank, but immediately fell back to their skirmish line, which lay in a rifle-pit running nearly parallel to and about ten rods from the opposite bank. The skirmishers crossed the run and were held under cover until the regiment crossed, which could only be done by one man crossing at a time on a fallen tree. The skirmishers then showed themselves and engaged the enemy's skirmishers. In less than fifteen minutes after the firing began, the enemy ran from their rifle-pit, which was immediately occupied by our skirmish line. This line, increased by two more companies, now made connection on its right with the line on this side of the run, and about one hour after, the skirmishers of the Third Division advancing, made connection with our left. At 4.30 p. m. the enemy advanced upon this line (which was immediately strengthened by two more companies), but were checked, and in about one hour driven back.

At 12 m. the 6th instant this regiment, having been relieved by troops from Fifth Army Corps, rejoined the brigade, and threw up breast-works in the afternoon. Lay in this position until the evening of the 10th instant, when the regiment was deployed and engaged until 12 at night in digging pits for the picket-line, and remained as pickets until 5 p. m. of the 11th instant, when it was relieved and moved into its present camp.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. W. SPAULDING,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. WILL GILDER,
Assistant Adjutant-General, First Brigade.

No. 55.

Report of Lieut. Col. Edmund Rice, Nineteenth Massachusetts Infantry, of operations February 5-7.

HDQRS. NINETEENTH MASSACHUSETTS VOLUNTEERS,
February 12, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report the following operations of this regiment during the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

At 4.30 a. m. of the 5th we broke camp, marched out, and massed with brigade. The brigade moving out to the left, this regiment was sent forward to support cavalry skirmishers. At 8.30 a. m. two companies were deployed to the front, under command of Lieutenants Stone and Libby, and another in charge of the adjutant and Lieut.

William H. Tibbitts. The latter found the enemy in the vicinity of Armstrong's Mill, at Hatcher's Run, and drove them steadily until progress was impeded by the ford. This latter was occupied by skirmishers from this regiment all day. That part of the regiment still in reserve was then sent forward, and the whole were placed on the skirmish line, where they remained all night, the works on the opposite side being occupied by the enemy. The regiment remained in this position during the 6th and 7th, and on the evening of the former day participated in checking the advance of those of the enemy's troops which had repulsed the Third Division of the Fifth Corps. The regiment lost on the 5th, 1 officer killed and 1 man killed and 4 wounded; on the 6th, 1 man wounded.

I have the honor to be, captain, very respectfully,

EDMUND RICE,

Lieut. Col. Nineteenth Massachusetts Vols., Comdg. Regiment.

Capt. WILL GILDER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, First Brigade.

No. 56.

Report of Lieut. Col. Arthur R. Curtis, Twentieth Massachusetts Infantry, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTIETH MASSACHUSETTS VOLUNTEERS,
February 12, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with circular from headquarters First Brigade, Second Division, Second Army Corps, of this date, I have the honor to report the following in relation to the part taken by this command in the operations of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

The regiment broke camp early on the morning of the 5th instant. On afternoon of same day was deployed as skirmishers on right of Second Brigade of this division, connecting on right with Third Brigade, Third Division. About 4.15 p. m. the enemy advanced in force, driving in the skirmishers, and in which affair this regiment lost 1 killed, 5 wounded, and 5 missing; most of those missing are supposed to have been wounded and made prisoners. The regiment withdrew on the evening of 5th instant, taking its position in line behind hastily constructed breast-works, or rifle-pits, where it remained until the afternoon of the 7th instant, when it was detailed for picket duty, the left resting on Hatcher's Run, connecting with Fifth Army Corps.

A. R. CURTIS,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

[Capt. WILL GILDER,

Assistant Adjutant-General.]

No. 57.

Report of Lieut. Col. George W. La Point, Seventh Michigan Infantry, of operations February 5-7.

HDQRS. SEVENTH MICHIGAN VETERAN VOL. INFANTRY,
February 12, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to make the following report of operations of my command for the 5th, 6th, and 7th of February, 1865:

I reported at brigade headquarters at 6 a. m. on the 5th instant, as per orders from brigade headquarters. I marched in rear of the brigade until we reached the Cummings house; then received orders from the colonel commanding brigade to take my regiment, together with the First Minnesota Battalion, and deploy them as flankers on the right of the brigade, so as to cover the front and right flank of the brigade. I marched through the woods until I reached the field in front of the Armstrong house. I then received orders from Colonel Olmsted to deploy my regiment, together with the First Minnesota Battalion, so as to cover the left flank of the brigade. I then received orders from the colonel commanding the brigade to advance into the timber, and connect on the right with the One hundred and eighty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and on the left with the Nineteenth Massachusetts Volunteers, and in so doing we drove in the enemy's skirmishers and captured two prisoners of war. During the night of the 5th Maj. M. Van Sickle captured a prisoner of war, together with one horse and equipments. Held our line until 3 p. m. of the 6th. Received orders from the colonel commanding brigade to advance my line so as to connect with the Fifth Corps, and in so doing drove in the enemy's pickets and occupied the woods on the banks of Hatcher's Run. Fell back to our old line on the evening of the 6th; held our line until 3 p. m. of the 7th instant; received orders from the colonel commanding brigade to advance with the Fifth Corps, and in so doing drove in the enemy's pickets; fell back at 6 p. m. of the 7th instant to our old line.

I have the honor to be, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. W. LA POINT,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. WILL GILDER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, First Brigade.

No. 58.

Report of Capt. Frank Houston, First Minnesota Infantry, of operations February 5-11.

HQRS. FIRST BATTALION, MINNESOTA VETERAN VOLS.,

February 12, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to forward the following report of operations of my command in the late action near Hatcher's Run, Va.:

On the morning of the 5th, in obedience to instructions, I deployed my command as flankers, and acted as such until 12 o'clock of that day, when I received orders to deploy my command as skirmishers and to take position on the left of the brigade, with left resting on Hatcher's Run and connecting with right of the Fifth Corps; and, in compliance with orders received from General Smyth, I advanced, keeping connection with the Fifth Corps when they advanced against the enemy, skirmishing and driving the enemy before me. The Fifth Corps being repulsed and driven back, my left was exposed and I was obliged to fall back to my former position on the left of the brigade; and, finding the enemy there, I drove them back, and held the position until the morning of the 6th, when I again advanced about half a mile, holding that position until the morning of the 11th, when I was relieved and placed in our present position.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANK HOUSTON,

Captain, Commanding Battalion.

Capt. WILL GILDER,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 59.

Report of Lieut. Col. James A. Jewell, Fifty-ninth New York Infantry, of operations February 5-7.

HDQRS. FIFTY-NINTH REGIMENT NEW YORK VET. VOLS.,
February 12, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In obedience to circular of this p. m., I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the Fifty-ninth New York Veteran Volunteers, during the 5th, 6th, and 7th days of February:

At 6 a. m. of the 5th the regiment was promptly on the parade ground in front of brigade headquarters, in heavy marching order, in obedience to orders received about 2 a. m. of same day. About 7 a. m. marched on the right of the brigade along the Vaughan road in the direction of Hatcher's Run, and after having deployed the right division of the regiment as skirmishers, marched in line of battle to the edge of the woods in front of the Armstrong house, and at once commenced throwing up breast-works; before these were completed the enemy shelled our position for some time, without inflicting any injury. About dark, by order of the brigade commander, moved by the flank through the woods to the top of the hill and to the support of the Seventh Michigan Volunteers, upon the skirmish line; upon reaching this point, at the request of Lieutenant-Colonel Kleckner, of the One hundred and eighty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers, brigade officer of the day, thirty men were sent, under the command of three officers, to occupy the posts just previously deserted by a portion of our troops. Upon approaching the position they were to occupy they were fired upon by the enemy, who had immediately occupied the posts upon their being deserted; our men at once returned the fire, and retired a short distance and established a new line, connecting the broken line of skirmishers with the main body of our troops, and remained in that position until the line was re-established by the division officer of the day. The only casualty in this affair was one man supposed to have been wounded, and afterward captured by the enemy (as nothing whatever could be found of him, though the ground was afterward visited by several of those who were present at the time our men were fired upon). Two prisoners were captured by our men during this affair. A strong line of works was during the night constructed in the position occupied by the regiment, which was afterward established as our front line. All remained quiet until the afternoon of the 6th, when an attack was made upon the left of our supports and vedettes; a portion of this regiment was then thrown out to the support of the Twentieth Massachusetts Volunteers, and the attack repulsed. The same position was retained, with an occasional feeler from the enemy of our line, during the 7th.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JAMES A. JEWELL,

Lieut. Col. Fifty-ninth New York Vet. Vols., Comdg. Regiment.

Capt. WILL GILDER,
Assistant Adjutant-General, First Brigade.

No. 60.

Report of Capt. Charles H. Dygert, One hundred and fifty-second New York Infantry, of operations February 5-11.

HEADQUARTERS 152D NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
February 12, 1865.

I have the honor to report that this regiment broke camp on the morning of the 5th instant, in accordance with orders, headquarters First Brigade, 4th instant, proceeding without interruption to a position near Hatcher's Run, and there threw up a line of works, which we occupied until the early morning of the 11th instant, and then, according to orders, fell back to the position now occupied, without any casualties occurring during the time above specified.

Very respectfully,

C. H. DYGERT,
Captain, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. WILL GILDER,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 61.

Report of Col. John H. Stover, One hundred and eighty-fourth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-11.

HEADQUARTERS 184TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
February 12, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report that, in obedience to orders, my command was reported on the brigade parade ground at 6 a. m. February 5. The regiment marched with the brigade until we reached the picket-line on the Vaughan road. The One hundred and eighty-fourth was then assigned to the right of the brigade, and, after several maneuvers, was formed in line immediately west of the Riddle house. Here fortifications were erected and skirmishers thrown in front. I remained in this position until the morning of the 11th instant, when, after destroying all the fortifications of the brigade, I withdrew the regiment to the line it now occupies. The regiment was not heavily engaged with the enemy, and consequently I lost but two men wounded, viz, Joseph Jenkins, sergeant, Company B, wounded, and John Adams, private, Company K, wounded in hand. I have every reason to be proud of the deportment of the officers and men during this campaign. No special opportunity was presented for unusual gallantry, except on the night of the 5th, when a portion of the picket-line was driven in by the enemy. Lieut. Col. Charles Kleckner promptly re-established the line, driving the enemy from the pits he had captured. I accordingly recommend him to the favorable notice of the colonel commanding the brigade.

Respectfully, &c.,

JOHN H. STOVER,
Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. WILL GILDER,
Assistant Adjutant-General, First Brigade.

No. 62.

Report of Lieut. Col. Clement E. Warner, Thirty-sixth Wisconsin Infantry, of operations February 5-7.

HDQRS. THIRTY-SIXTH REGIMENT WISCONSIN VOLUNTEERS,
February 13, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following account of the operations of this regiment on the 5th, 6th, and 7th of this month:

The regiment left camp at 7 o'clock on the morning of the 5th, marched about three miles west, and formed a line of battle in an open field near the Armstrong house. Seventy men were sent forward into the woods as skirmishers; the rest of the regiment threw up breast-works, and occupied them. On the evening of the 5th two men were captured by the enemy and one slightly wounded. On the 6th and 7th the regiment remained in the same position, and sustained no casualties.

Very respectfully,

C. E. WARNER,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. WILL GILDER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, First Brigade.

No. 63.

Report of Col. Mathew Murphy, One hundred and eighty-second New York Infantry (Sixty-ninth National Guard Artillery), commanding Second Brigade, of operations February 5.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIG., SECOND DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
February 12, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following as the operations of the Second Brigade, Second Division, Second Army Corps, for the 5th of February, up to 5 p. m.:

About 7 a. m. took position in column in rear of First Brigade, marching out on the Vaughan road to the south. After halting near the site of the McDougall house, continued the march and diverged to the right toward the Armstrong house. Formed line of battle on right of First Brigade, my right resting on a swamp. Here the First Delaware Veteran Volunteers joined my command, forming in line on my right, refusing their right wing, with their two right companies thrown perpendicularly to the rear. This line was in advance of the Armstrong house and in rear of the Armstrong, jr., house. In obedience to orders from division commander, rifle-pits were thrown up in front of my command, and the men rested, awaiting further orders. During the day occasional shots from the enemy passed over us injuring no one, but about 4 p. m. the enemy opened with a battery on my left and another on my front. Believing that this fire was but a cover for an attack on my right no reply was made, but a sharp lookout was kept on the right flank. As soon as the enemy's artillery ceased, their infantry advanced on my right, having in their front a strong line of skirmishers. Our pickets—consisting of the Sixty-ninth Regiment New York State National Guard Artillery—engaged them, and, after a spirited fire of about fifteen minutes' duration, drove them back, when they again advanced and were again repulsed by our skirmish line. When the enemy advanced the second time I was placed hors de combat by having been struck in the knee by a minie-ball, when I was conveyed to the rear, after having turned over the command to Col. James P. McIvor, of One hundred and seventieth New York Volunteers.

I had almost forgotten to report that after the advance of the enemy's infantry became engaged with our skirmishers, they again opened with their artillery. The whole command, including the First Delaware, behaved with much coolness.

Lieut. Col. William De Lacy, One hundred and sixty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers, by his equanimity and exposure, set his command an example worthy of emulation.

Second Lieut. Hugh G. McTavish, Company G, One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Volunteers, acting assistant adjutant-general, and Capt. Robert Heggart, Company G, Sixty-ninth Regiment New York State National Guard Artillery, as well as the other members of my staff, ably assisted me. I would respectfully recommend the two last named officers, as also Capt. Michael McGuire, Company D, Sixty-ninth Regiment New York State National Guard Artillery, who had charge of that part of the skirmish line which met the chief assault of the enemy, for such distinction as is usually given to bravery in action—brevet rank. Captain McGuire and Lieutenant McTavish were both severely wounded—the former, in the breast; the latter, in the head.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MATHEW MURPHY,

Colonel Sixty-ninth Regiment New York National Guard, Late Commanding Brigade.

Maj. JOHN M. NORVELL,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Div., Second Army Corps.

No. 64.

Report of Col. James P. McIvor, One hundred and seventieth New York Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQRS. SECOND BRIG., SECOND DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
February 13, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with orders I beg leave to submit the following as the operations of this brigade, from the time I assumed command of it to include the 7th instant:

At about 5 o'clock on the 5th instant the command of the brigade devolved on me, by Col. Mathew Murphy, Sixty-ninth Regiment New York National Guard Artillery, being, from a wound, placed hors de combat. On assuming command I found the brigade in line of battle behind a rifle-pit, hastily thrown up, left resting on First Brigade, right resting near a tributary to Hatcher's Run, the line running in rear of and near the Armstrong, jr., house. Nothing of note occurred during the night of the 5th instant, only a few shots having been exchanged between the enemy's and our pickets. On the 6th instant the rifle-pits were enlarged and strengthened, the timber in front of the left and right of the brigade was slashed, and an abatis constructed in the open ground in front of the center. During the night of the 6th the picket-line was advanced, compelling the enemy's vedettes to retire. On the 7th nothing transpired.

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. P. MCIVOR,

Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Maj. JOHN M. NORVELL,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 65.

Report of Lieut. Col. Francis M. Pierce, One hundred and eighth New York Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

HQRS. THIRD BRIG., SECOND DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
February 12, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this brigade during the operations on the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

The brigade left camp on the morning of the 5th, and moved out the Vaughan road. Shortly after passing the picket-line the Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers was thrown out on the right as flankers. The brigade moved nearly to the place where the Vaughan road crosses Hatcher's Run, where it took a road bearing to the right and leading to the Armstrong house. The brigade was there massed under cover of a slight ridge, and held in reserve. The First Delaware was ordered to report to Colonel Murphy, commanding Second Brigade, and it remained with that brigade until the morning of the 11th. At 11 a. m. the Seventh Virginia was ordered to report to Colonel Olmsted, commanding First Brigade, and, under direction of a staff officer from these headquarters, it crossed Hatcher's Run on the dam, under a severe musketry fire, and took position on the opposite side. The Fourteenth Connecticut Volunteers was placed in support of the Tenth Massachusetts Battery, and remained with it until the morning of the 11th. The Tenth New York Volunteers was sent in support of the skirmish line of the First Brigade. At 2 p. m. the Twelfth New Jersey was sent to build corduroy road. At 4 p. m. the enemy attacked in force on the right. The Fourteenth Connecticut Volunteers changed front, under a severe fire, in order to prevent the enemy's advancing across a small run, while the Fourth Ohio and One hundred and eighth New York Volunteers were sent to form on the left of General McAllister's brigade, Third Division, in order to make connection with that division. As they were moving away the Twelfth New Jersey, which was just returning from fatigue duty, formed on their right, and as two regiments were thought sufficient, the Fourth Ohio and Twelfth New Jersey were conducted to the point indicated, and the One hundred and eighth New York Volunteers sent in support of the skirmish line of the First Brigade. The Twelfth New Jersey remained with the Third Division until about 9 p. m., when it was withdrawn, and commenced work on the road, which it completed about 1 a. m. of the 6th. The Fourth Ohio was returned to its original position, and the Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, which had been relieved from the skirmish line in front of the Third Division, was established near it. On the morning of the 6th changes were made in the position of some of the regiments, and, with the exception of the Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania and Fourth Ohio, all were in line on the left of the division, the left of the brigade resting on the run, the right connecting with the First Brigade. About 5.30 p. m. the enemy attacked the Fifth Corps on the left, and as it seemed to be breaking and the flank of this brigade was threatened, the Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers and Fourth Ohio Volunteers were moved to the left of the brigade and placed in position, facing the dam, and covering the dam and a bridge that had been constructed across the run. They moved to their position in good order, under quite severe musketry fire, and were ready to repulse the enemy if it attempted to make a crossing at that point.

The conduct of the Fourteenth Connecticut Volunteers during the whole movement, and especially while changing front on the afternoon of the 5th, entitles it to commendation. The Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers particularly distinguished themselves by their coolness and bravery on the skirmish line on the afternoon of the 5th. All the troops in the brigade conducted themselves in a highly creditable manner, cheerfully obeying all orders and enduring the rain and cold without complaint. The various regimental commanders were zealous in the performance of their duties, and by their willingness and promptness greatly assisted in the execution of whatever the brigade was directed to do. All of the staff officers at these headquarters were prompt, energetic, and efficient.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. E. PIERCE,

Lieutenant-Colonel 108th New York Volunteers, Comdg. Brigade.

Maj. JOHN M. NORVELL,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Div., Second Army Corps.

No. 66.

Report of Lieut. Col. Samuel A. Moore, Fourteenth Connecticut Infantry, of operations February 5-11.

HEADQUARTERS FOURTEENTH CONNECTICUT VOLUNTEERS,

March 10, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following as a report of the part taken by this regiment in the late operations:

We left camp near the Davis house on the morning of the 5th of February, about 7 a. m., and marched down the Vaughan road until near Hatcher's Run, when we countermarched and marched by a road on the left to the Armstrong house, where we took position in support of the Tenth Massachusetts Battery. Here we remained until about 5 p. m.; at that time, the enemy having attacked the line on our right, we changed front forward on first company, bringing our line at a right angle with the line attacked. This was done to repel any attack which might come from that direction. It was here, and while changing front, that the casualties* which I have to report occurred. We remained in this position until the morning of the 11th instant, when we marched to our present camp.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. A. MOORE,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Brig. Gen. H. J. MORSE,

Adjutant-General State of Connecticut.

No. 67.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Gershom Mott, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, SECOND ARMY CORPS,

February 13, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by my division in the operations of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

On the 4th, at 3.30 p. m., I received orders to make arrangements to move my division, with four days' rations and fifty rounds of ammunition on the person and forty rounds of ammunition in reserve train, one-half the ambulances, and all of the stretcher-bearers. At 10 p. m. instructions received to move at 7 a. m. on the 5th, with the addition of one medical wagon and one hospital wagon with each brigade. At 11 p. m., in accordance with orders received, I reported in person to Major-General Humphreys, commanding the corps, and received verbal instructions and explanations in regard to the anticipated movement, which were afterward received in circular dated 11.55 p. m., headquarters Second Army Corps, at 1 a. m. of the 5th.

* One officer killed, and 1 officer and 4 men wounded.

February 5, at 6.20 a. m., Roder's battery reported. At 7 a. m. moved the division to the Vaughan road, following the Second Division to near the McDowell house, when orders were received from Major-General Humphreys to send forward the brigade that was to cross Hatcher's Run. The First Brigade, Brigadier-General De Trobriand, was immediately forwarded, with one section of Roder's battery, with instructions to force the crossing and make disposition to hold the roads leading to Armstrong's and Dabney's Mills. The crossing on the Vaughan road was found to be obstructed by felled trees, and deep holes dug in the bed of the stream. For the dispositions made by General De Trobriand and the crossing of the brigade, I respectfully refer to his report. All the pioneers of the division were immediately put to work, building a bridge across the run where the Vaughan road crosses it and also at the dam a short distance below. This latter bridge was soon completed, so that the cavalry were enabled to cross. The Second and Third Brigades having followed the Second Division now arrived near the Cummings house. In pursuance to instructions I sent the Third Brigade, Brevet Brigadier-General McAllister, down the cross-road to near the Tucker house, to take up a position in front of said house, covering any roads leading to the front. The Second Brigade, Brevet Brigadier-General West, placed in position near the crossing on the Vaughan road. The bridges being completed and communication across the run easy, I crossed the Second Brigade and formed it on the left of the First, and threw up breast-works in the shape of an arc of a circle, the right of the First and the left of the Second Brigade resting on the run, in the meantime sending forward a small force to hold a wood road near the F. B. Keys house, leading to Dabney's Mill. This force consisted of the Fortieth New York Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Cannon, supported by the One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers. A small force of the enemy were posted at that point but soon retired after exchanging a few shots. Pursuant to orders from Major-General Humphreys I now sent the One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers to support the cavalry down the Vaughan road, and to open communication with the Fifth Corps at or near Gravelly Run. This was done with some little skirmishing, and a picket-line established with the infantry and cavalry, connecting with the First Division of the Fifth Corps at the run. Ramsey's brigade, of the First Division, having been ordered to relieve McAllister, I sent him instructions that as soon as relieved to move to the left and extend toward, and, if possible, to make a connection with, the right of Smyth's division. At about 3.35 I was somewhat surprised to receive word from General McAllister, by his adjutant-general, that on being relieved he had massed his command in rear of his former position. I ordered him to hasten back and tell General McAllister to deploy immediately, and fill the gap between General Ramsey's brigade and General Smyth's division. Also sent Captain Moore, my aide-de-camp, to see the order executed. It was while going into this position that the skirmishers were driven in, and an attack was made on and handsomely repulsed by the brigade. As soon as the firing commenced I sent a staff officer to General McAllister to see how he was making out. The general was most gallantly encouraging his command, and sent me word that he was fighting with and without breast-works; also, that he could whip the rebels away. About 4.45 two regiments of West's brigade, viz, the One hundred and forty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers and the First Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, were sent to report to General McAllister. These regiments arrived in time to render efficient service in repulsing the last attack of the enemy. Going into position, under a very heavy fire, at about 5 p. m., the balance of brigade, with the exception of the One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, was ordered to the support of McAllister. The enemy charged this line three distinct times, and each time he was signally repulsed. It now becoming dark the enemy withdrew, leaving a portion of his dead on the field.

The conduct of General McAllister and his troops deserves special mention, having repulsed successfully the vigorous attack of the enemy, who were in greatly superior numbers (prisoners being taken from each division of Hill's and Gordon's corps), part of the command without any protection; yet all bravely stood firm and inflicted severe loss on their assailants, who were employed through the night in carrying off their wounded and dead; yet my pioneers who were sent out next day buried thirty-three, and found twenty-two newly made graves, some of them large enough to contain five to six bodies.

February 6, at 3 a. m., the First Division of the Fifth Corps, Brevet Major-General Griffin, relieved all my troops on the other side of Hatcher's Run. As soon as relieved, in accordance with orders received from the major-general commanding the corps, I marched De Trobriand's brigade and the One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, of the Second Brigade, and massed them in the rear of the Tucker house, near the line held by McAllister's and West's brigades, of this division, and Ramsey's brigade, of the First Division, assuming command of the latter. At 9 a. m. I sent General De Trobriand with four small regiments to reconnoiter the enemy's position, and to watch if there was any movement of troops in my front. We met the enemy's skirmishers and drove them into his line of works near the Watkins house; also sending out a force on a wood road, marching west toward the Duncan road, found the enemy in his intrenchments and a small redoubt, with two guns mounted, on the rising ground, near a barn in front of the Armstrong house. The object of this reconnaissance having been accomplished General De Trobriand was withdrawn. At 3 p. m. I sent General McAllister out with a small force to reconnoiter the same ground, but nothing further was developed. At 5 p. m. I received orders from the major-general commanding to immediately send De Trobriand's brigade down the Vaughan road to the crossing of Hatcher's Run, to the support of the Fifth Corps, which was actively engaged and apparently hard pressed by the enemy. A few minutes afterward orders were received to withdraw West's brigade from the line, to follow De Trobriand. I also withdrew one regiment from McAllister's and one from Ramsey's line to have ready to send, if necessary. Stretching the balance of McAllister's and Ramsey's brigades out so as to occupy the line, I reported these brigades as on the way to Major-General Webb, by Captain Moore, aide-de-camp, who was informed that the emergency having passed they would return. The regiments of McAllister and Ramsey were now returned to the line, and De Trobriand's and West's brigades massed in the rear.

February 7, the positions of the troops were not changed, but large details were at work slashing in front.

The conduct of officers and men of this division merit high commendation, and fully maintained their well-earned reputation. My brigade commanders were prompt, and carried out my orders with alacrity. Brigadier-General De Trobriand superintended the crossing at Hatcher's Run, himself dismounted and crossing on foot with his skirmishers, it being at that time impossible to cross mounted. Brevet Brigadier-General McAllister I have recommended on former occasions for promotion, and take pleasure in again urging it. Brevet Brigadier-General West rendered efficient service. The officers comprising my staff performed their part energetically and efficiently. Capt. George W. Perkins, judge-advocate of the division, and Capt. C. F. Moore, aide-de-camp, rendered efficient service—the former in establishing, in connection with the cavalry, a picket-line to connect my left with the Fifth Corps, on the 5th instant, also in accompanying the reconnaissance made by General De Trobriand on the 6th, and giving valuable information as to the enemy's position; the latter was with the advance of General De Trobriand when it crossed Hatcher's Run in the morning, and with McAllister's brigade when attacked in the evening, acting in his usual gallant manner. I would respectfully recommend that the services of these two officers be acknowledged by a brevet promotion. The casualties in my division were, 13 enlisted men killed, 3 commissioned officers and 52 enlisted men wounded, 1 enlisted man missing, and 7 enlisted men injured by the falling of trees while cutting slashing.

Annexed is a nominal list. I also inclose brigade commanders' reports.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. MOTT,

Brevet Major-General, U. S. Volunteers.

Maj. S. CARNCROSS,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Army Corps.

No. 68.

Report of Brig. Gen. Regis de Trobriand, U. S. Army, commanding First Brigade, of operations February 5-9.

HDQRS. FIRST BRIGADE, THIRD DIVISION, SECOND CORPS,
February 12, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by my brigade in the active operations of February 5, 6, and 7, on the Hatcher's Run:

According to orders, we broke camp and moved forward on the Vaughan road Sunday, the 5th instant, at 7 a. m., and, passing the Second Division, massed in McDowell's field. I took the lead of the column, with three companies of cavalry in advance. This cavalry force was instructed to force the passage of the run, but found it so obstructed by felled trees, and made so impassable by deep holes dug everywhere in the bed of the stream, that the major in command reported to me as useless any attempt for his mounted men to cross the run. I therefore proceeded at once to force the passage with part of my command. I deployed the Second U. S. Sharpshooters, Major Doughty commanding, as skirmishers, in front and right of the enemy's works, so as to keep his attention engaged by a threatening advance; while I ordered the Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers (Colonel Biles), supported by the One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers (Major Hamilton), to make the real assault some 200 yards below, near a broken dam, and to carry the position. After waiting about a quarter of an hour without hearing any report from Colonel Biles, I went myself to ascertain the cause of the delay, when, to my astonishment, I found the two regiments lying down in the woods and completely inactive. When asked why he did not even attempt to execute my orders, Colonel Biles answered that the run was reported to him as impassable for the men, and that he supposed that he had to regulate his movements on the Second U. S. Sharpshooters. Without losing any more time in explanation I ordered the two regiments forward, and charged with them across a small open field to the run, whereupon the enemy abandoned his position, and we crossed the stream without further resistance, but not without material difficulty, as the men had to jump, one after the other, from log to log, and I myself had to leave my horse on the bank and to pass the stream on foot among my men, in order to put them at once in proper position to secure the possession of the ground just carried. My first object was to cover the two roads by which an attack would likely be made—that is, the Vaughan road and the Armstrong Mill road. I disposed my regiments in line immediately as they arrived, in the shape of an arc of a circle, crossing the two roads, my right resting on the run and my left on a small swamp, while a strong picket-line covering my front was connecting on the left with the captured works, where I had left two full companies. The First Maine Heavy Artillery (the strongest of my regiments) I kept in reserve, so as to re-enforce any part of my line in case of an offensive return of the enemy, who had kept his skirmishers at a short distance in front of my center and right. The position was very soon strengthened by a parapet, extending from the run on the right to the swamp on my left, across the two roads already mentioned. In the meantime two bridges had been thrown across the run by the pioneers and had enabled the cavalry to pass, while easy communication was established between the two banks. Major-General Humphreys, commanding the corps, and Brevet Major-General Mott, commanding the division, having then come over to inspect my position, I was instructed to push forward on the Vaughan road, so as to take possession of the Dabney's Mill road at F. B. Keys' house. The Fortieth New York Volunteers and the One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers (which had reported to me from the Second Brigade) were sent forward, supported by the One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers. The enemy's skirmishers were driven back and the position secured, when the Second Brigade was brought to take position on my left and rear; and soon after, the connection was established with the Fifth Corps by the cavalry and the One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers. I remained in that position during the afternoon of the 5th and most of the night.

Between 3 and 4 o'clock on the following morning I was relieved by General Griffin, commanding First Division, Fifth Corps, and ordered to move in reserve near Tucker's house, behind the line, where Brevet Brigadier-General McAllister had repulsed the enemy the day before and where his command was still in position.

At 9 a. m. (Monday, 6th instant), the enemy having disappeared during the night from in front of the Third Brigade, I was ordered to make a reconnaissance, in order to ascertain his whereabouts, if he had retired behind his works, and what was his position. I therefore took with me four regiments—Second U. S. Sharpshooters, Twentieth Indiana Volunteers, Seventeenth Maine Volunteers, and First Maine Heavy Artillery. I deployed the Second U. S. Sharpshooters right and left of the road running north, with an advance guard on the road and a reserve. On the left of Thompson's house I found a side road through the woods, where I left two companies of the Twentieth Indiana to secure my rear, and proceeded on without meeting the enemy, who had withdrawn his advance picket-line, until I reached an opening where a light work had been built across the road. Some rebels were occupying them, but were dislodged after a few shots and ran toward the left, where we could see the Watkins house, and 200 or 300 yards farther a continuous line of works occupied by the enemy. Moving therefore my skirmishers in that direction, I advanced toward the Watkins house, where the rebel outposts were again dislodged without resistance after an exchange of a few shots. It became the more and more apparent that we were in front of the enemy's works, and in order to more fully develop their strength I pushed nearer my skirmishers, when the enemy was seen moving rapidly in some force toward the side road where I had left two companies of the Twentieth Indiana. Supposing that an attempt would be made there in my rear to cut me off, I sent back the balance of the Twentieth Indiana, following soon after with the two other regiments, while my skirmishers were marched by the left flank in a direction parallel to the one of the enemy. The reconnaissance was then transferred from the road running north to the road running west of Thompson's house, and the enemy showing no disposition to attack us I sent forward two companies deployed as skirmishers through the woods. These two companies, under the able command of Lieut. Col. A. S. Andrews, Twentieth Indiana Volunteers, advanced across a swamp, and soon found themselves in front of the enemy's intrenchments, with a fortified battery, or redoubt, armed with two guns, commanding the road. My men opened on the rebels visible above the parapet, when their fire was briskly returned, many of the enemy jumping above the parapet to occupy small pits in front of their intrenchments. The progress of the movements were reported successively to division and corps commanders, and the object of the reconnaissance being now fully accomplished, I received the order to return to my position inside of our lines.

In the evening of the same day, part of the Fifth Corps having met with a repulse on the other side of Hatcher's Run, I was ordered to take my command over as rapidly as possible, which was promptly obeyed, but, when near the bridge, I was informed by Major-General Meade, commanding the army, that my services were not needed any more, and that I could take my brigade back. I remained two days (7th and 8th instant) in the same position, and on the 9th I was ordered to the new position in line which my brigade now occupies.

During these operations the Second U. S. Sharpshooters, under command of Maj. J. Ed. Doughty, has done good service. This regiment being about to be broken up, and this being probably its last engagement as a distinct organization, I take this opportunity of acknowledging its good and efficient services on this as on many other occasions during the campaigns of 1863 and 1864 when it was under my command.

All my regiments have done their duty well, as usual.

Outside of my command, I am indebted to Capt. George W. Perkins, of division staff, for his valuable and spirited assistance during the reconnaissance of Monday, the 7th [6th] instant.

Respectfully submitted,

R. DE TROBRIAND,

Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Commanding.

Maj. WILLIAM R. DRIVER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Div., Second Army Corps.

No. 69.

Report of Capt. John W. Shafer, Twentieth Indiana Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTIETH INDIANA VOLUNTEERS,
March 26, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with circular from headquarters First Brigade, Third Division, Second Army Corps, just received, I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the Twentieth Indiana Volunteers in the engagement on the 25th instant:

At about 9 a. m. the regiment was advanced to the picket-line of this brigade, and there formed, with the Seventy-third New York Volunteers on its left flank, both regiments being under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Andrews. Orders were at once given to advance and occupy the picket-line of the enemy. We met with a sharp infantry fire from the enemy's picket-line, strongly posted behind earth-works, but gained the position with but slight loss, capturing a number of prisoners. Finding no connection on the right, and discovering the enemy moving from their works with the probable intention of getting on the flank of the regiment, Lieutenant-Colonel Andrews ordered the right wing of the regiment deployed to form connection with troops of the First Division. This movement was executed under a sharp fire of infantry and artillery. The picket-line on the left was still occupied by the enemy, but an incessant fire from this regiment and the Seventy-third New York Volunteers kept them under the cover of their works until about 2 p. m., when the Third Brigade of this division captured the rebel line about 500 yards to the left, which being accomplished, this regiment, accompanied by the Seventy-third New York Volunteers, had no difficulty in occupying their works, taking a large number of prisoners. About 3 p. m. the Third Brigade, on our left, was driven back in apparent confusion, necessitating the withdrawal of the Seventy-third New York Volunteers and a part of this regiment to the corner of the woods, a few yards to the rear. The Third Brigade rallied and recaptured the line they had lost a few moments before, and this regiment at once occupied its old position, which it held until relieved after night. About 6 p. m. the right wing of the regiment was attacked with considerable impetuosity by part of the force which struck the First Division. They, being opportunely re-enforced at this time by the picket forces of this brigade, held their ground manfully, and rendered material aid in repulsing the attack of the enemy.

The loss during the day was 4 commissioned officers wounded, 2 enlisted men killed, and 17 enlisted men wounded. The regiment captured 1 officer and 46 men during the day.

In closing this brief report of the operations of this regiment I cannot speak too highly of the good conduct of both officers and men. When all did so well I refrain from making discriminations. Especial mention is made, however, of the conspicuous gallantry of Sergt. Maj. Hiram B. Johnston and First Sergt. William A. Chapman, Company F, both of whom lost their lives.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN W. SHAFFER,

Captain, Twentieth Indiana Volunteers, Comdg. Regiment.

Capt. J. M. LINNARD,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., First Brig., Third Div., Second Army Corps.

No. 70.

Report of Col. Russell B. Shepherd, First Maine Heavy Artillery, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST MAINE HEAVY ARTILLERY,
Before Petersburg, Va., March 26, 1865.

CAPTAIN: Pursuant to circular from headquarters First Brigade, Third Division, Second Army Corps, I have the honor to transmit the following report of the operations of this command in the affair of the 25th instant:

The regiment was moved out by the left flank, at about 2 p. m., and, marching out in the front of the line occupied by the left of the First Brigade, struck a road running nearly parallel with the line of works about 1,200 yards distant. The regiment was moved to the left on this road a short distance, and halted, preparatory to forming a line, when the skirmish line in front and to the left was assaulted and driven in. The regiment was hastily brought into line of battle, and advanced to the edge of the field under a sharp fire, and after [getting] in position was joined by the Eighty-sixth New York Volunteers on the right and the One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers on the left. This movement, seconded by the prompt advance of the One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, checked the advance of the enemy, and a well-directed fire either threw them back from the rifle-pits or caused others to surrender. One commissioned officer and nine men were captured by this regiment. The rifle-pits in front were occupied by detachments from the regiment, while a temporary line of works was thrown up. For about an hour the enemy kept a scattering fire, and in this time [the] regiment on the right moved forward to the edge of the field, and this regiment was ordered to move forward to connect on the right. This movement was being executed by company, when the enemy, assaulting the skirmish line on the left flank, drove them in and occupied rifle-pits of the left, which enabled him to enfilade that part of the line already advanced, which consisted of a large part of the right wing. In this position the men were exposed to a galling fire, to which they could not effectively reply, and such was their position that only the companies of the left wing could be employed to check the enemy. After a stubborn resistance the right wing fell back to their former position, while the left wing checked the enemy and caused them to abandon the line. In this attempt the enemy's loss must have been severe, as the men fired with steadiness and at short range, while the cover of the regiment almost shielded them from the fire of the enemy. Nothing of further importance occurred until dark, when the regiment was moved farther to the right and established the line of the brigade picket. During the tour of picket duty the works were turned and rendered very strong.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. B. SHEPHERD,
Colonel First Maine Heavy Artillery.

[Captain LINNARD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.]

No. 71.

Report of Lieut. Col. Madison M. Cannon, Fortieth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. FORTIETH NEW YORK INFANTRY VOLUNTEERS,
March 26, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this command during the action of March 25, 1865:

At about 12.30 p. m. moved out of the works, with the remainder of the brigade, to the front, and was ordered by the general commanding brigade to advance to the opening and form on the right of the Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers. I moved out by the left flank, and just as the head of my regiment arrived at the opening I was surprised to see the Ninety-ninth Regiment break and run in confusion to the rear. I at once checked the colors of the Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and formed them on the left of my regiment. At this time I saw but two officers with the Ninety-ninth Regiment, viz, Captain Lewis and a lieutenant. The Ninety-ninth Regiment was under my command until the arrival of Colonel Biles. Temporary works were then erected on the captured line of pits. The regiment remained in these works until near dark, when the enemy attacked on the left of the brigade, when the regiments on my left abandoned the line. I immediately refused the left wing of my regiment, and held the position until the attack was made on the right, when, the enemy having a cross-fire from both flanks, my men fell back to the woods, where they were reformed, and again went forward and occupied the line. This position it occupied until after dark, when it moved to the left, and occupied a space between the Twentieth Indiana and Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, where it remained until relieved by a portion of the First Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, when it returned to camp about midnight.

The following are the losses: 2 enlisted men killed, 10 wounded, and 4 missing.

In consideration of the large number of recruits in the ranks, many of them being ignorant of the English language, the conduct of the regiment was very satisfactory.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
M. M. CANNON,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Fortieth New York Volunteers.

Capt. JAMES M. LINNARD,
Assistant Adjutant-General, First Brigade.

No. 72.

*Report of Capt. James McKenna, Seventy-third New York Infantry,
of operations March 25.*

HDQRS. SEVENTY-THIRD NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
Near Hatcher's Run, Va., March 26, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this command in the action of the 25th instant:

This command formed on the left of the Twentieth Indiana Volunteers, and advanced to the position formerly held by the enemy's outpost pickets. Capturing this position the command was deployed to the left and connection made with the Third Brigade, and the line then advanced, taking the enemy's first line of pits, capturing 3 commissioned officers and 124 enlisted men. Upon this advance the men of this command conveyed thirty stand of arms to the rear, and were compelled by the heavy fire of the enemy to destroy sixty stand of arms, which were found in the captured pits. Owing to no support on the left, the command withdrew to the line formerly occupied by the enemy as outposts, which position was held until the men were relieved.

The officers under my command all acted splendidly, but I cannot refrain from mentioning Capt. John G. Noonan, who, by his noble example, inspired the men to many deeds of valor. With regard to the men, all behaved nobly, and to mention any one individually would be an act of injustice to many brave and deserving soldiers.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES MCKENNA,

Captain, Comdg. Seventy-third Regiment New York State Vols.

Colonel ANDREWS,
Twentieth Indiana Infantry.

No. 73.

Report of Lieut. Col. Nathan H. Vincent, Eighty-sixth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. EIGHTY-SIXTH REGT. NEW YORK VETERAN VOLS.,
Near Hatcher's Run, Va., March 26, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by my command in the action of yesterday:

At about 4 p. m. I left the breast-works, following the First Maine Heavy Artillery, and moved to the front, passing the old picket-line near the reserve of the First Brigade, to the road between our line and the rebels. Before my regiment had got fairly across the swamp, the enemy opened a brisk fire of musketry from ahead and commenced shelling from the right, when, by direction of the general commanding brigade, I moved my regiment by the rear rank to the right of the road, swinging to the left, in order to keep the connection, and moved forward to the edge of the woods, halting within about sixty yards of the rebels' old line of picket-pits, and commenced constructing defenses. After remaining a short time I advanced to the pits, connecting with the First Maine Heavy Artillery on the left, and the Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers on the right. After remaining in this position a short time the enemy advanced and took possession of the line of picket-pits on the left, and commenced a sharp fire on my flank and rear. At the same time the forces on the right fell back into the woods, leaving both my flanks exposed, when I was obliged to fall back into the woods to make the connection, where I immediately reformed and placed my regiment on the line, connecting with the First Maine Heavy Artillery on the left, and the Fortieth New York Veteran Volunteers on the right. At about 8 p. m., the First Maine Heavy Artillery having been relieved, I moved to the left and occupied their works, connecting with the One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers. After remaining there about two hours, most of the time under a sharp fire, was relieved, and returned to camp.

My losses during the engagement were, 2 first lieutenants wounded severely, 1 captain, slightly; 1 enlisted man killed, and 6 wounded.

I am, very respectfully,

N. H. VINCENT,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. J. M. LINNARD,

Assistant Adjutant-General, First Brigade.

No. 74.

Report of Lieut. Col. Charles H. Weygant, One hundred and twenty-fourth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS 124TH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,

March 26, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to forward the following report of the part taken by the One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers in the action of yesterday, March 25, 1865:

About 10 a. m. I received orders to report to Brevet Brigadier-General Madill, corps officer of the day, at the ruins of a house on the picket-line, in front of General McAllister's brigade. Upon arriving at that point I learned that General Madill had gone to some other portion of the line. We remained there about an hour, and were then conducted by a staff officer to a ravine about 300 yards to the left and rear of the Watkins house, where we remained until 6 p. m., when we moved forward in line of battle and occupied the position from which the Fifth New Hampshire had just been withdrawn, my right resting on the Watkins house, and my left connecting with the Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania. Immediately after taking this position I had a temporary line of works thrown up. About 7 p. m. the pickets in our immediate front were driven in, closely followed by a force of the enemy, composed of Forty-second, Fifty-ninth, and Sixtieth Alabama Regiments, under command of Lieut. Col. D. S. Troy. I allowed them to advance to within about eighty yards of the temporary line of works, behind which our men were concealed, when we poured a volley into them, driving them back about 100 yards to the picket-pits, where they rallied and made a stand. Cautioning the men to fire low, which order was well carried out, our fire soon became so effective as to almost silence the enemy, and caused them to crouch into the pits. After holding them there a few minutes I ordered a charge. The regiment rushed forward in a gallant style, capturing the battle-flag of the Fifty-ninth Alabama, 6 officers, and 159 men, about 20 of whom were wounded, including Lieutenant-Colonel Troy, of the Sixtieth Alabama. The enemy being completely dispersed I returned to my former position, leaving between 20 and 30 of their dead upon the field. At 11.30 p. m. I received orders to withdraw and return to camp, which I did, bringing with me about seventy-five stand of small-arms. All this, I am happy to say, was accomplished without the loss of a man, either in killed, wounded, or missing.

I cannot speak in too high terms of the officers and men of my command; all behaved in a gallant manner.

Respectfully, &c.,

CHAS. H. WIEGANT,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding 124th New York Volunteers.

Capt. J. M. LINNARD,

Assistant Adjutant-General, First Brigade.

No. 75.

Report of Capt. Frederick W. Lewis, Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. NINETY-NINTH PENNSYLVANIA VETERAN VOLS.,
Near Petersburg, Va., March 26, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by this regiment in the engagement yesterday:

About 1 p. m. the regiment left the breast-works, following the First Maine and Eighty-sixth New York to the line of the enemy's pickets, previously captured by our forces. Shortly after occupying this position the First Maine, being flanked by the enemy, retreated to the wood, the Eighty-sixth New York followed, and we having no connection then on the left, and being exposed to a sharp flanking fire, withdrew to the woods also. In a short time we again advanced to the former line, and held it until relieved by a part of the Third Brigade, when we went farther to the left, holding this portion of the line until about 10 p. m., when we were relieved. Falling back a short distance, we remained near the swamp until about 1 a. m. [26th], when we were ordered to our old camp.

We lost during the engagement 1 commissioned officer and 10 enlisted men wounded.

Colonel Biles was wounded early in the fight, but remained until we were established on the line.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRED. W. LEWIS,

Captain, Comdg. Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers.

Capt. JAMES M. LINNARD,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 76.

Report of Capt. John B. Fite, One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. 110TH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VETERAN VOLS.,
March 27, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with a circular from your headquarters, I have the honor to make the following report of the part which this regiment took in the engagement on the left of the brigade, March 25, 1865:

We charged the enemy about 2.30 p. m., driving him from his picket-line, capturing thirty prisoners. The distance charged was about 350 yards. We held our new position and commenced turning the captured pits to convert them to our own use, when, about sunset, the enemy came in upon our left flank with an overwhelming force. The troops on the left commenced to waver, and finally broke, leaving our left flank unprotected. We contested the ground as stubbornly as the same amount of men could, when it became obvious that we had but two alternatives—to fall back, or be captured in the pits. After having fallen back about 150 yards, we reformed and rallied again; but finding our force insufficient to regain the pits previously lost we retired about 150 yards from the enemy's pits, reformed our line on the left of the First Maine Heavy Artillery, commenced putting up temporary works, where we remained until relieved about 12.30 a. m. March 26, 1865.

Our entire loss is, 3 killed, 8 wounded, and 10 missing.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. B. FITE,

Captain, Commanding 110th Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers.

[Capt. JAMES M. LINNARD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.]

No. 77.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. George W. West, Seventeenth Maine Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIGADE, THIRD DIVISION, SECOND CORPS,
February 13, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this command in the operations of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

In obedience to orders, the brigade broke camp at 7 a. m., and marched on the Vaughan road, following the First Brigade, to near the point where the picket-line crosses the road, when I received orders to follow the ambulance train of the Second Division. Marched in this order until arriving at Hatcher's Run, where the brigade was placed in line of battle across the Vaughan road, on the north side of the run. At 2 p. m. I received orders to move my brigade across the creek and form line of battle to the left of the road, my right resting on the road, and left, refusing, rested on the creek. I then advanced a strong skirmish line and threw up a temporary line of work. While executing the above I received an order from the brevet major-general commanding the division to send a regiment to support the cavalry, which had advanced on the Vaughan road. The One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, accordingly, was ordered to report to a division staff officer. Heavy firing being heard on the right, about 5 p. m., I received an order for two regiments to report to General McAllister. In obedience to this order I immediately sent the One hundred and forty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers and First Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, which reported as directed. Soon after I received orders to report in person with the balance of the brigade and assume command of the whole. On arriving near the battle-field the Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers (leading regiment) was formed in line of battle, in a small ravine, in rear of General McAllister's left, and gallantly charged, under direction of Capt.

E. H. Shook, acting brigade inspector. The Fifth Michigan as soon as formed also charged and formed on the left of the Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania, filling the gap between General McAllister and General Smyth, Second Division. These troops arrived just in season to check the enemy, who were making a desperate effort to make a break at this point. The ground occupied by the Fifth Michigan was for a time held by troops of the Second Division, who had retired under the heavy fire of the enemy. Night coming on the fighting ceased and the enemy retreated. I immediately proceeded to straighten the line, throwing forward a strong picket-line, and at the same time threw up strong works. During the night some sixteen prisoners were brought in.

The One hundred and forty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Tyler commanding, which was the first to arrive upon the ground in the afternoon, deserve special mention for the gallant manner in which they went into the fight, under a most severe musketry fire from the enemy, fighting in an open field, without any works whatever for protection.

6th, occupied the same ground as on the evening of the 5th. I sent out the pioneers of the brigade to assist in burying the dead of the enemy which were left on my front. In the early part of the evening I received orders to move to the left to support a portion of the Fifth Corps; after marching a short distance the order was countermanded, and, by orders from the brevet major-general commanding the division, the brigade was massed in the woods on the right of the Second Division, where it remained until coming into its present camp, furnishing large details for fatigue duty.

The casualties during the brief engagement on Sunday evening were small, a report of which has already been forwarded.

The conduct of the officers and men of the entire command was all that could be desired. Thanks are due to the staff of this brigade for the prompt and cordial manner in which they executed my orders.

Respectfully submitted.

GEO. W. WEST,

Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Maj. WILLIAM R. DRIVER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Division, Second Corps.

No. 78.

Report of Brig. Gen. Byron R. Pierce, U. S. Army, commanding Second Brigade, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIG., THIRD DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,

March 27, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this brigade in the action of Saturday, March 25, 1865:

At 6 a. m. received orders from the general commanding division to break camp and be ready to move; remained under arms until 2 p. m., when I received orders to move my brigade to the front and place it in two lines in rear of General De Trobriand's brigade and be ready to assault the enemy's works. I moved my brigade at once to the front through the main line of works, and in advance of the old picket-line, where I commenced the formation as ordered, by placing the following regiments in line in rear of General De Trobriand's brigade: Fifth Michigan, Col. John Pullford; First Massachusetts [Heavy Artillery], Major Nathaniel Shatswell; Seventeenth Maine, Lieut. Col. William Hobson; Ninety-third New York, Lieut. Col. Haviland Gifford. The Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, Col. George Zinn; One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Maj. James Miller; One hundred and forty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieut. Col. Joseph H. Horton, were halted, by order of Brevet Major-General Mott, commanding division, and placed on the right, near the Watkins house.

Colonel Pullford, commanding the right wing, finding his right exposed, deployed skirmishers across the swamp to connect with the right wing, commanded by Colonel Zinn. As soon as Colonel Zinn's line was formed he sent out details from each regiment, with orders to connect the pits that had been captured from the enemy in the morning; while these details were at work a brigade of rebels charged them, driving them back on the line of battle. Colonel Zinn at once ordered a charge of the regiments under his command; they went forward with a cheer, retook the pits, and captured 6 commissioned officers and 167 enlisted men. Our men drove the enemy, by getting on their flank and rear, in the direction of the One hundred and twenty-fourth New York Volunteers, which were on the right of my brigade, the One hundred and twenty-fourth New York charging after we had driven the enemy from their position on the crest of the hill. The same charge of the enemy extended to the front of the left wing of my brigade, when the line in front of the Fifth Michigan Infantry and First Massachusetts Heavy Artillery gave way and came near carrying the second line with it; but through the exertions of Colonel Pullford and Major Shatswell, they rallied their regiments and advanced them to the first line, which they held until relieved by the posting of the pickets.

At 1 a. m. of the 26th, the picket-line having been established, I moved my brigade back to their old camps, by orders from the general commanding division.

The casualties in this brigade were: 4 enlisted men killed, 1 commissioned officer and 29 enlisted men wounded, 2 enlisted men missing; total, 36. A nominal list herewith attached.

Officers and men of my command, with the exception of a few recruits, behaved with great gallantry and coolness. I would especially mention Col. John Pullford, Fifth Michigan, commanding the left wing, for exertions used in rallying his men after being broken by the First Brigade; also, Colonel Zinn, Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, commanding the three regiments on the right, for the gallant manner in which he charged the enemy, taking a large number of prisoners. My staff officers, with their usual bravery and gallantry, rendered me efficient aid.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. R. PIERCE,

Brigadier-General.

Maj. WILLIAM R. DRIVER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Div., Second Army Corps.

No. 79.

Reports of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Robert McAllister, Eleventh New Jersey Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations February 5-6 and March 25.

HDQRS. THIRD BRIG., THIRD DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
February 13, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with orders from division headquarters, I have the honor to report the part taken in the operations of the 5th and 6th instant:

According to orders received, we broke camp and left at 7 a. m. on the morning of the 5th, the brigade following the Second, commanded by General West. In passing the Cummings house we were halted, and I was ordered by Brevet Major-General Mott to place my brigade in line of battle near the Tucker house, across the road leading past it, and to throw out pickets well to the front, connecting them with the Second Division pickets on my left; also, to guard well my right. This was accomplished in a very short time, giving my personal superintendence to the placing of the pickets and their connection with the Second Division pickets on the road leading through the left center of my line of battle, as directed. After taking a survey of the whole field, and making myself acquainted with the roads and swamps in my front and right, I returned to my command. At 12.30 p. m. I received orders from General Humphreys to build breast-works. My men went at it with a will, and soon had the works under way, at the same time extending them toward the swamp on the right, to prevent my being flanked. Meanwhile an order was received from Brevet Major-General Mott to throw a regiment across a road a considerable distance from my left, leading down toward the Armstrong Mill. I placed there the Seventh New Jersey Volunteers, commanded by Colonel Price, and had my brigade to connect with him by taking distance to the left. These works are now nearly completed. 3.30 p. m. a staff officer from Brevet Brigadier-General Ramsey presented a telegram from Major-General Humphreys, ordering General Ramsey to relieve me in my position; at the same time the head of General Ramsey's brigade was on the ground, with the general leading it. I obeyed the order, and sent my adjutant-general, Captain Finkelmeier, to division headquarters for orders, massing, in the meantime, my brigade in my rear. 4 p. m. received orders to form on the left of General Ramsey. I at once commenced the movement; my right regiments were just filing in, when the attack was made on the picket-line. I then ordered "double-quick," and we were moving in rapidly. Lieutenant-Colonel William, of Major-General Humphreys' staff, then informed me that there was a gap in the line between myself and Ramsey, caused by General Ramsey closing to the right; my rear regiment (the Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers, Colonel Schoonover), intended for the left of the line, was taken off and hurried into this gap. They received a fire from the enemy and returned it, causing the left of the enemy's advancing line of battle to falter and lie down. The fire was taken up all along the line as fast as my troops were formed. The pickets in my new front having come running in without firing a shot, left the enemy right on us before I had my line completed. Regiment after regiment opened on the rebels as fast as they wheeled into position, causing their line to halt and lie down. The left regiment, the Eighth New Jersey Volunteers, under command of Major Hartford, or the left wing of it, had no works, and were exposed to a terrible fire in this unprotected position, but they stood nobly and fought splendidly; not a man of this regiment, or indeed of the whole brigade, left for the rear.

Major Hartford and his regiment deserve particular credit for the gallantry displayed in getting into position under the severe fire and holding it without works, while two regiments from the Second Division that had been lying for hours a little to my left, on the approach of the enemy gave way without firing a gun, leaving much larger space without troops between my left and the right of the Second Division.

After completing the line on the left, under charge of Captain Bowers, acting aide-de-camp, I rode along the line with my adjutant-general, encouraging the men to stand firm and the day would be ours; the One hundred and twentieth New York Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Lockwood, on the right of the Eighth New Jersey Volunteers, and the colonel and his officers were all on their feet doing the same.

The Seventh New Jersey Volunteers, Colonel Price, came next. This regiment was formed at a different angle, so as to enable the men to pour an enfilading fire onto the enemy's lines and prevent them advancing into the gap. I gave this order, and it was executed handsomely and added very much to the repulse of the enemy. Had it not been for this and the aid of the artillery, commanded by Lieutenants Green and Adams, of the Tenth Massachusetts, who were throwing their fire across the swamp at a right angle with my enfilading fire, all would have been lost. These artillery officers deserve great credit, and I have the pleasure to mention them favorably.

The enemy advanced with a yell known to us all, and fell back; again they advanced with a determination to break my line, but again my ranks stood firm, and rolled back the tide of battle in a highly creditable manner. Prisoners say that they advanced in three lines of battle. From all I could see and learn, I think that was the case, though the woods prevented our seeing their movements.

In riding along the line, I found Chaplain Hopkins, of the One hundred and twentieth New York Volunteers, using a gun and firing constantly, and encouraging the men to stand firm. He is deserving of mention.

Before the battle ended Major-General Humphreys and a part of his staff came up on the line, and was an eye-witness to the scenes before him. It was a pleasing sight to see how the appearance of our corps commander inspired our men to new efforts.

The third attack of the enemy then attempted ended in a complete rout, and night closing in they fell back to the woods, leaving their dead behind.

During the latter part of the engagement two regiments of the Second Brigade came up to support my line, and at the close the whole Second Brigade formed on my left.

A number of prisoners came in during the evening and in the night, and were forwarded. During the night our pickets were thrown out, and, tired and exhausted as the men were, the most part of the night was spent in building breast-works on the left of the line; the rest of the troops laid on their arms during the night.

On the 6th of February the strengthening of the line was continued, our picket-line advanced; details were sent in front to slash the timber and bury the enemy's dead. In the afternoon a part of my command was sent out on a reconnaissance toward the enemy's lines, which were then discovered about one mile and a half from our own.

February 7, packed up and remained under arms till dark, one-fourth of the command remaining under arms all night.

In conclusion permit me to say that my officers and men did all that could be desired of them. The former encouraging the men to stand firm, regardless of their own personal safety, and the latter firing low as directed. To mention some would be doing injustice to others. I must not, however, omit to notice my adjutant-general, Capt. J. P. Finkelmeier, who fully sustained his previous reputation for gallant bravery in action, advising and encouraging officers and men everywhere, under the most terrific fire; also my aides, Capt. Charles F. Bowers, Capt. L. M. Morris, brigade inspector, and Lieut. William Plimley, who went into the thickest of the fight with a will whenever ordered.

Subjoined I have the honor to submit a statement of casualties:

| Troops. | Killed. | | | Wounded. | | | Aggregate. |
|-------------------------------------|-----------|------|--------|-----------|------|--------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Total. | Officers. | Men. | Total. | |
| 7th New Jersey Volunteers | | | | | 1 | 1 | 1 |
| 8th New Jersey Volunteers | | 11 | 11 | 2 | 35 | 37 | 48 |
| 11th New Jersey Volunteers | | 1 | 1 | | 1 | 1 | 2 |
| 11th Massachusetts Volunteers | | | | | 2 | 2 | 2 |
| 120th New York Volunteers | | | | | | | |
| Total | | 12 | 12 | 2 | 39 | 41 | 53 |

Respectfully submitted.

R. McALLISTER,

Brevet Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers.

Maj. W. R. DRIVER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Div., Second Army Corps.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD BRIG., THIRD DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,

March 28, 1865.

In compliance with orders from headquarters Third Division, Second Army Corps, dated March 27, 1865, I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this command in the operations of the 25th instant:

At 6 a. m. the brigade was ordered under arms at the breast-works, ready to move, and at 8 a. m. an order was received to send a reconnoitering party in our front. Captain Holmes, whom I sent with fifty men, soon found a strong line of pits, four and five in a pit, and engaged the enemy's pickets. Pursuant to orders to send a force strong enough to press back the enemy's pickets and discover the strength of their main line, I dispatched (at 9.50) Lieutenant-Colonel Schoonover with his regiment, who, upon arrival at the woods left of the open space, near Armstrong's house, found his command insufficient to make a successful attack on the enemy's picket-line. The One hundred and twentieth New York was ordered up for his support, and the combined forces then made a most gallant charge, and succeeded in capturing the enemy's pits and abatis and 100 prisoners, under an enfilading fire of artillery from a redoubt on the right of the enemy's line and heavy volleys of musketry from the main line of their works. It was then discovered that the enemy on this point had a heavy slashing and a palisade in advance of their works. The line was held till 3 p. m., when the enemy, under cover of their works on our left, succeeded in flanking our left flank and recapturing a portion of the line. Our men rallied a short distance in the rear, and drove the enemy again out of the recaptured pits. After re-establishing the line the Eleventh Massachusetts was ordered up for support and placed on the left of the Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers. At this time General Smyth here requested Colonel Schoonover to make connection with his right and protect his flank. To accomplish this Colonel Schoonover was compelled to stretch a thin line through the woods. Meanwhile the remainder of my brigade, consisting of the Seventh and Eighth New Jersey Volunteers, were ordered forward and massed in rear of the First Brigade, right of the Armstrong house. Remaining there a short time, intelligence was received at about 6 p. m. that the enemy, in strong force, made a second attack through the woods on our left toward the right, and, after a stubborn resistance by our men, had succeeded in retaking the line and capturing a number of Federal prisoners. The Seventh and Eighth New Jersey then was again ordered to move to the left and fill up the gap existing between the One hundred and twentieth New York Volunteers and the First Brigade. Colonel Price, commanding the Seventh New Jersey Volunteers, with promptness, deployed his command through the woods right of the open space, and succeeded in making the desired connection on his right, and with the Eighth New Jersey Volunteers, hastily, in the open space on his left. Almost simultaneously with this attack from the left another strong skirmish line of the enemy opened a brisk fire on the center of Colonel Rivers' regiment, which, however, was checked in a short time by the steady and well-directed fire of his men.

It is very evident, from the report of Lieutenant-Colonel Schoonover, and the regimental reports under his command, that the cause of the recapture of the line by the enemy was owing to the long line to be held by Lieutenant-Colonel Schoonover, with a force inadequate in numbers to the task, making it easy for the enemy to charge it with a strong line of battle; also, to the exposed position of our troops to the range of the enemy's guns, and his line of works affording a cross-fire on our troops, so that, without a line of works to protect us, we could not hold it.

I cordially indorse the honorable mention of the officers contained in the inclosed report of Lieutenant-Colonel Schoonover, viz: Lieutenant-Colonel Schoonover, then division officer of the day, for assistance in pushing ahead his regiment to the pits just evacuated; Major Scott, in command of the One hundred and twentieth New York Volunteers; Captain Holmes; Captain Newkirk, who was wounded; Adjutant Russell; Captain Gage, in command of the Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers; Captain Moorhous; Captain Thompson; Lieutenant Oliver; and would call particularly attention to the deliberate bravery of Colonel Price in checking the enemy's advance toward evening. Colonel Schoonover deserves great praise for his gallantry and bravery in making his first and second charge and capturing and recapturing the enemy's picket-line, as well as during the entire engagement.

Subjoined is a copy of casualties.*

In conclusion, I have the honor and pleasure to say, my adjutant-general, Captain Finkelmeier, and my aides and staff officers rendered

* Shows 9 men killed, 2 officers and 50 men wounded, and 1 officer and 91 men captured or missing; total, 153.

valuable service all through the day, ever ready and willing to go amidst danger to carry orders and see the line connected, for which they richly deserve favorable mention.

Very respectfully,

R. McALLISTER,

Brevet Brigadier-General of Volunteers.

Maj. W. R. DRIVER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Div., Second Army Corps.

No. 80.

Report of Capt. James F. Mansfield, Eleventh Massachusetts Infantry, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQUARTERS ELEVENTH MASSACHUSETTS BATTALION,

February 13, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with circular from headquarters Army of the Potomac, dated February 11, 1865, I have the honor to forward the following report of the proceedings of this command during the operations of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

At 6 o'clock on the morning of the 5th instant the Eleventh Battalion Massachusetts Volunteers, under command of Capt. Thomas H. Dunham, left their camp near the Halifax road, and took up their line of march in the direction of Hatcher's Run. The men were provided with five days' rations. The battalion marched about three miles, to the vicinity of Rowanty Creek, where a line of battle was formed in a pine woods to the left of the Vaughan road, and a breast-work thrown up in front of the position. We remained there until about 4 o'clock, when the troops were withdrawn from the breast-works, and the Third Brigade massed in a field about 200 yards in the rear. After remaining there a short time ordered to resume position behind the works, and had only time to do so before firing began on the left, and a line of skirmishers belonging to the Second Division, Second Army Corps, that had been out in front, fell back inside our works, and reported the enemy advancing in force. The skirmishers of the enemy being discovered in front, our battalion received orders to commence firing, and the advance [was] checked. The firing was continued for an hour and a half, with more or less spirit, as the enemy advanced or fell back, but at no time did he reach a point nearer than 100 yards to our line of works. After the firing ceased the works were strengthened; pickets thrown out 100 yards in advance of the line. The command laid on their arms all night. No one was injured during the day in the battalion.

On the morning of February 6 picket-line was advanced. Two of the enemy's dead were found in our front, and indications of the removal of many wounded. In the afternoon the battalion took part in a reconnaissance toward the enemy's line of works, which were discovered about two miles from our own. At sunset returned to our original position. Slashed the woods fifty yards in front during the night.

February 7, packed up and remained under arms until dark; one-fourth of the command remained under arms all night.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES F. MANSFIELD,

Captain, Commanding Battalion.

Capt. J. P. FINKELMEIER,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., Third Brig., Third Div., Second Army Corps.

No. 81.

Report of Lieut. Col. Charles C. Rivers, Eleventh Massachusetts Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. ELEVENTH MASSACHUSETTS VOL. BATTALION,
March 27, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the proceedings of this command during the operations of the 25th instant:

At 10 a. m. the battalion moved into the works running parallel with the camp, where it remained until about 1 p. m., when orders were received to move out to the front and support the Eleventh Regiment New Jersey Volunteers. Upon arriving there line was formed on the left of that regiment, and soon after the left of this battalion was connected with the right of the Second Division, which space was unoccupied by any troops until the arrival of this command. Remained in this position until the charge was made across Hatcher's Run by General Smyth's troops, which drove the enemy from their position on the crest of the hill on the south side, when this command moved forward and formed a line on the left of the Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers, and two companies from the left of this battalion were ordered across the run, where they formed a junction with the right of General Smyth's command. Soon after dark I learned that the enemy had broken the connection in the Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers and were advancing on my right, which fact was immediately reported to General Smyth, who placed a regiment to fill the gap until the line of troops on the left could be withdrawn, which was soon successfully done without any interruption from the enemy, and the command marched to the open field near the old picket-line, where it remained until about 2 a. m. on the following morning, when it returned to camp.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. C. RIVERS,

Lieut. Col., Comdg. Eleventh Massachusetts Vol. Battalion.

Lieut. Col. J. SCHOONOVER,

Commanding Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers.

No. 82.

Reports of Col. Francis Price, Seventh New Jersey Infantry, of operations February 5-7 and March 25.

HDQRS. SEVENTH REGIMENT NEW JERSEY VET. VOLS.,
February 13, 1865.

SIR: The following report of the part taken by my command in the action of the 5th, 6th, and 7th of February, 1865, is respectfully submitted:

Broke camp early on the morning of February 5, and moved down to Rowanty Creek, quite near the Squirrel Level road, where I was assigned a position in a dense wood, and there ordered to erect breast-works. After the works were nearly completed I was ordered to move my command a short distance to the left, and again threw up intrenchments. In the afternoon my command was withdrawn and assigned to the position held in the morning, the Eleventh Massachusetts on my right and the One hundred and twentieth New York on my left. I had hardly occupied the line when the enemy made a vigorous and sudden attack on the pickets, driving them in. The enemy then, in strong force, attempted to carry the intrenchments on my left by assault, but were repulsed. In the charge they exposed themselves to a severe oblique fire from my front. After the action I proceeded to strengthen my position, working all the night of the 5th and morning of the 6th.

On the 6th my command was withdrawn and ordered to take position a short distance to the left, the Eleventh New Jersey on my right and One hundred and twentieth New York on my left. Here we remained during the 7th, strengthening the works and slashing the timber in our front.

During the action of the 5th the officers and men acted with coolness. As all did their duty I have no special act to mention.

The only casualty that occurred was Corpl. Aaron Courtright, acting sergeant-major, who was slightly wounded in the right breast.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANCIS PRICE,

Colonel Seventh New Jersey Veteran Volunteers.

[Capt. J. P. FINKELMEIER, Assistant Adjutant-General.]

HDQRS. SEVENTH REGIMENT NEW JERSEY VOLUNTEERS,

March 27, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by my command in the operations of March 25 instant:

At about 3 p. m. I left the works behind which my command was encamped, marched beyond the picket-line of the First Brigade, and there massed in column of divisions. Remaining in that position for a short time, I was directed to move my command toward the left. After proceeding to the edge of the wood, and having received orders to move forward in line of battle and connect with the left of the One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers (First Brigade), I established my line, the left of which connected with the Eighth New Jersey, which shortly after joined us. I had just completed a small breast-work of logs, hurriedly thrown up, when the enemy, with apparently a strong skirmish line, opened a brisk fire, which, however, was silenced in a short time by the steady and well-directed fire of my men. Nothing further of note occurred, and at about midnight of the 25th I received orders to return to camp.

My loss during the movement is as follows: 1 officer wounded; enlisted men—wounded, 6; missing, 3.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANCIS PRICE,

Colonel Seventh New Jersey Volunteers.

ASSISTANT ADJUTANT-GENERAL, THIRD BRIGADE.

No. 83.

Reports of Maj. Henry Hartford, Eighth New Jersey Infantry, of operations February 5-7 and March 25-26.

HDQRS. EIGHTH BATTALION NEW JERSEY VOLUNTEERS,

Near Hatcher's Run, Va., February 13, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report the operations of this battalion on the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

On the 5th instant, at 6.30 a. m., we broke camp, marched to the right of the division camp-ground, and took our position in order of march. In conjunction with the brigade we proceeded along the Vaughan road, passed the original picket-line, and went into line of battle to the right of Hatcher's Run, where we constructed breast-works. In the afternoon were relieved by a portion of Brevet Brigadier-General Ramsey's brigade, and were massed in his rear. A few minutes past 4 p. m. we moved to the left of our former position, and went into line of battle behind the extreme left of the works, with the exception of the left wing, which was without any protection and formed the left of the brigade. Before the battalion had got into position the skirmishers were driven in, and the enemy, keeping up a desultory fire, soon made their appearance. They were greeted with a terrific volley of musketry from our men, and thrown into confusion. Again they advanced in strong force, and, notwithstanding the destructive fire poured into them, succeeded in gaining the shelter of stumps and fallen timber on our left front, and for a time kept up a fatal fire on the exposed wing of the battalion, but they were forced to retire. They again made their appearance, seemingly determined upon carrying the line, but the well-directed fire checked them when within eighty yards of our works; they fought for some time quite determinedly, but eventually gave way in confusion, suffering severely for their temerity. The last repulse was after dark, and was the end of the engagement. Our loss was 11 killed and 38 wounded. Pickets were established, and the night passed in quiet, the enemy making no further demonstration.

On the morning of the 6th seven rebel prisoners were brought in who could not succeed in getting away during the night. The 6th and the 7th instant were occupied by us in cutting slashings in our front.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. HARTFORD,

Major Eighth Battalion New Jersey Volunteers, Commanding.

Capt. J. P. FINKELMEIER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Brigade.

HEADQUARTERS, EIGHTH BATTALION NEW JERSEY VOLUNTEERS,

Near Petersburg, Va., March 27, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with circular from headquarters Third Brigade, Third Division, Second Army Corps, of this instant, I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by this command in the operation of the 25th and 26th instant:

The battalion was formed soon after daybreak, and stood under arms at the breast-works until ordered out as support to the advance. Several changes occurred in our position during the day. A little after dark the left wing of the battalion advanced, under fire of the enemy, and occupied the line of rifle-pits, suffering the loss of 1 killed and 2 severely wounded. Connection was made on the left with the Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers, on the right with the Seventh New Jersey. Subsequently the remainder of the battalion joined the left wing and extended along the line of the Seventh New Jersey Volunteers, connected on the right with the Seventeenth Maine. A few shots were exchanged during the night, resulting in no casualties to us. New pits were made and old ones repaired.

The battalion was relieved about dark of the 26th instant, and returned to camp.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. HARTFORD,

Major Eighth Battalion New Jersey Volunteers, Commanding.

Capt. J. P. FINKELMEIER, Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 84.

Report of Lieut. Col. John Schoonover, Eleventh New Jersey Infantry, of operations February 5.

HDQRS. ELEVENTH REGIMENT NEW JERSEY VOLUNTEERS,
February 12, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In obedience to circular from superior headquarters, I have the honor to report the part taken by my command in the action of the 5th instant, as follows:

In accordance with orders received at 3 a. m. on the 5th instant, the regiment was ready to move at 7, and half an hour later took up the march, with the brigade, to the left. Arriving at the Tucker house, on the right of the Vaughan road, the right wing of the regiment was deployed as skirmishers, and advanced to the front, connecting with the skirmish line of the Second Division on the left, and that of the One hundred and twentieth New York Volunteers on the right. This portion of the regiment, except fifty men under charge of Lieutenant Rosetter, was relieved during the afternoon by the pickets of the First Division. In the meantime the left wing was employed in throwing up a breast-work on the crest of the hill in front of the Tucker house. About 4 p. m. the regiment was taken to the rear and halted, with the brigade, near the Tucker house, where it remained a short time, when it was again put in motion. Almost simultaneously with this movement firing was heard in the front, and, by order, I went into line double-quick along the works, my right joining General Ramsey's left and my left the Eleventh Massachusetts. About this time the skirmishers began to come in, many belonging to the Second Division crossing the works on my front. When Lieutenant Rosetter, with his men, was crossing the open field in front of the works the enemy opened a vigorous fire upon his line with a battery posted to the left and rear of the Thompson house. Shortly after the enemy commenced firing over the works from the thick woods in front of my left.

During the action the enemy did not attempt to advance across the open field in my front, but kept up a steady and scattering fire from the ravine. At no time did I find it necessary to fire a volley, but kept up a steady fire by file. This fire was continued until nearly 8 o'clock, when pickets were thrown out.

I never saw the regiment steadier than on this occasion; the fire was very deliberate.

The conduct of the officers, without an exception, was good.

Loss, 1 man killed and 1 wounded.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. SCHOONOVER,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. J. P. FINKELMEIER, Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 85.

Report of Capt. Charles F. Gage, Eleventh New Jersey Infantry, of operations March 25.

CAMP ELEVENTH NEW JERSEY VOLUNTEERS,
March 27, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to report the following as the operations of the regiment during the action of the 25th instant:

We filed in the woods beyond the picket-line about 9 a. m., and Companies B and E were deployed as skirmishers, under command of Captain Moorhous, and were moved forward toward the enemy's rifle-pits. The regiment followed by the flank until near the edge of the wood, when the line was formed for a charge. Companies A, D, and F were then deployed upon the left of the skirmish line to form a connection with the Second Division. Soon after these preparations the One hundred and twentieth New York was formed upon our right, and the order to move forward was given by Colonel Schoonover, and the enemy's picket-line was captured, scarcely a man making his escape. During the charge the regiment was under a very severe fire from the enemy's batteries, also from their works about 400 yards in rear. About 3 p. m. the enemy succeeded in getting a force upon our left flank, at the point where the skirmish line connected with the captured pits, and forced us back. In consequence of the destructive fire from their batteries we were unable to rally until we arrived at our old line of picket-posts. After the rally we moved forward to the enemy's pits and again succeeded in getting possession of them, and men were placed in all the pits. The skirmish line was formed as before, connecting with the captured pits. About 4 p. m. the Eleventh Massachusetts formed on our left, and were deployed to connect with the Second Division. About 5 p. m. General Smyth captured the pits in his front, and the regiment was moved forward to keep up the connection. I was then sent to Lieutenant-Colonel Rivers with a message, and while delivering it the enemy again attacked the line in nearly the same manner as before, but with a larger force, and again obtained possession of it. The regiment was reformed at the picket-line, and was not again advanced. We remained on the line until 1 a. m. [26th], when we were relieved by the Eighth New Jersey Volunteers. The company on the left of regiment which was not struck remained at their posts until the Eleventh Massachusetts came in.

The loss during the day—2 killed, 9 wounded, 41 missing.

Respectfully submitted.

C. F. GAGE,

Captain Company E, Acting Major Eleventh New Jersey Vols.

Lieut. Col. JOHN SCHOONOVER,

Commanding Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers.

No. 86.

Report of Lieut. Col. Abram L. Lockwood, One hundred and twentieth New York Infantry, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQUARTERS 120TH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,

February 13, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this regiment in the operations of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

In obedience to orders received this command was formed on its color line at 7 a. m. February 5, in heavy marching order, with four days' rations. It was then marched, with the rest of the brigade, to the left, about three miles, where a line of battle was formed, running east and west. At 12.30 p. m. orders were received to throw up a line of works. The line was almost completed when orders were received to withdraw from these works and mass near the Tucker house, being relieved by troops of General Ramsey's brigade about 4 p. m. We were then ordered into line again farther to the left, connecting with the Seventh New Jersey Volunteers on our right. While I was engaged in getting my regiment formed, the approach of the enemy was made known by rapid skirmishing for a few moments, and the falling back of the picket-line in our front. Before I got my regiment into position fairly the firing from the enemy became very severe, advancing through the woods with a yell, apparently making a desperate charge to break through our hastily formed line. I immediately ordered my regiment to open fire, which they did, pouring into the enemy so destructive a fire that they were driven back. Two distinct advances were afterward made by the enemy, apparently in heavy force, but they were both times repelled, and with considerable loss, as was afterward ascertained by the number of dead left on the ground and buried in our front. A fire was kept up by the enemy until dark, but was not returned with as much vigor as it would have been had a good supply of ammunition been at hand. After dark a picket was thrown out, and it was discovered that the enemy had withdrawn from our front. The command was kept at work all night strengthening the line of works.

Both officers and men of the command behaved with great coolness and bravery, and where all behaved so well it is difficult to make particular mention of any one person. Chaplain H. Hopkins, of this regiment, deserves particular mention, however, he being in the line with a musket and fighting bravely side by side with the men, and by his coolness and bravery exerted a good influence over them.

Our loss was trifling—only two men wounded—owing to the protection afforded by a low, hastily thrown up line of works, behind which the command was partially sheltered.

On the 6th instant a new line was laid out, and the men were engaged during the 6th and 7th in building the new works.

This command suffered severely from exposure to rain and cold, and the number of sick is increasing rapidly.

Very respectfully, yours,

A. L. LOCKWOOD,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. J. P. FINKELMEIER,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 87.

Report of Maj. Walter F. Scott, One hundred and twentieth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS 120TH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
March 27, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this regiment in the engagement with the enemy, March 25, 1865:

About 11 a. m. of the 25th instant I was ordered by the brevet brigadier-general commanding to report to you with my regiment, and pursuant to orders received from you I formed my regiment in line of battle, my left joining the Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers, my right resting near the edge of the woods in front of the Armstrong house. I was ordered to advance steadily to the edge of the woods, and, upon reaching there, dash forward and capture and hold the enemy's picket-line, conforming my movements with those of the Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers. We charged across an open field, about 300 yards, carried the enemy's line, capturing 2 commissioned officers and about 40 enlisted men. We held the line until about 3 p. m., when the enemy sent a force on our left through a ravine which entirely concealed them until they were within a few yards of our line; they dashed upon us, driving us from the line. I immediately reformed my regiment and charged the line the second time, driving the enemy from it and capturing about twenty prisoners, and held the line until about 5 p. m. The enemy again massed a strong force on our left, and charged our left, driving a portion of my regiment away from their pits, and moved by the flank along our line toward our right, driving our men away pit by pit. I reformed my regiment in the woods, when the Seventh New Jersey Volunteers came up in line of battle and took up a line in the woods about fifty yards in my front. I reported to brigade headquarters, and was ordered to remain where I was until further orders.

At 1 a. m. March 26 I received orders to return to our original camp. During the day our loss was, 6 killed, 32 wounded, and 46 missing.

I am, sir, yours, respectfully,

WALTER F. SCOTT,

Major, Commanding 120th New York Volunteers.

Lieut. Col. J. SCHOONOVER,

Commanding Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers.

No. 88.

Reports of Bvt. Lieut. Col. John G. Hazard, First Rhode Island Light Artillery, commanding Artillery Brigade, of operations February 5-7 and March 25.

HDQRS. ARTILLERY BRIGADE, SECOND ARMY CORPS,
February 12, 1865.

MAJOR: In obedience to instructions received from headquarters of the corps, February 4, 1865, three batteries of this brigade were got in readiness to move. On the evening of the 4th I was informed that only two batteries would go, and designated Battery K, Fourth U. S. Artillery, Brevet Captain Roder commanding, with a section of Battery B, First Rhode Island Artillery, attached, and the Tenth Massachusetts Battery, First Lieut. J. Webb Adams commanding. Captain Roder was directed to report to Brevet Major-General Mott, commanding Third Division, at 6.30 a. m. February 5, and Lieutenant Adams to Brigadier-General Smyth, commanding Second Division, at the same hour. Capt. A. J. Clark, First New Jersey Artillery, was left in command of the batteries on the First Division line. The batteries moved with the troops at 7 a. m. on the Vaughan road toward Hatcher's run. When the First Brigade of the Third Division carried the ford at the run, one section of Battery K, Fourth U. S. Artillery, was put in position to cover the ford of the Third Division, and another to protect the flank, and remained there during the day. When General Smyth's division moved toward Armstrong's Mill ford it was followed by the Tenth Massachusetts Battery. One section was placed in position near the Armstrong house, covering the ford and another commanding the Duncan road. The remaining section, under command of Lieutenant Day, was, at a later hour, put in position in rear of the Tucker house. At about 5.30 a. m. the enemy attacked our forces on the right of the Duncan road; the section of Adams' battery, placed to cover the ford, commenced firing to the rear. At the point where McAllister's brigade was connecting with the Third Division the enemy forced our troops back at one time, but, with the assistance of a vigorous shelling from two sections of Adams' battery, which had been brought to bear on this point, the enemy were driven back. During the attack on General McAllister's brigade the four guns of Adams' battery were enabled to render good service, as their fire enfiladed the advancing line of the enemy completely. The assault was successfully repulsed, and on examination of the ground showed that the artillery fire had been very destructive.

No casualties occurred during this engagement, and only one horse was killed.

During the night of the 5th Smith's section of Roder's battery was sent to the neighborhood of the Armstrong house, and the rest of Roder's battery moved back from the Vaughan-road ford at the time of the withdrawal of the Third Division, and were placed in reserve near the Cummings house.

In the afternoon, when the Fifth Corps was engaged and had returned from Dabney's Mill, Smith's section, from its position near the Armstrong house, and a section of the Tenth Massachusetts Battery, near the same house, kept up a vigorous fire on the enemy in the woods opposite the Armstrong-Mill ford. Nothing worthy of remark occurred until the afternoon of February 7, when Smith's section again opened fire on the woods in front of the advancing line of the Fifth Corps, and continued to fire until our troops advanced so far as to render it dangerous to them.

The batteries remained in their positions until the 11th instant, when they were disposed on the new intrenched line now held by the corps.

The casualties during the three days were, 3 horses killed, 1 horse wounded.

Respectfully submitted.

JNO. G. HAZARD,

Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding.

Maj. SEPTIMUS CARNCROSS,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Corps.

HDQRS. ARTILLERY BRIGADE, SECOND ARMY CORPS,

March 27, 1865.

I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by this command in the operations of the 25th instant:

At about 6 a. m. the command was ordered to harness up and hitch in. Battery F, First Pennsylvania Artillery, was moved from its camp and parked near Third Division headquarters at 12 o'clock. Battery B, First Rhode Island Artillery, and B, First New Jersey Artillery, were parked in rear of Battery F, in anticipation of being placed in position at the Watkins house. At 5 p. m. one section of Roder's battery was placed in position on the right of Miles' division, to protect his flank in case of an attack at that point. At 5.30 p. m. the other section of the battery was placed in position at the Skinner house, and opened fire on the enemy in the woods with solid shot, expending thirty-three rounds. The two sections of the battery remained in position until after dark, when they were withdrawn by order of Major-General Miles, and took up their old position in Battery A. During the day the Tenth Massachusetts, B, First New Jersey Artillery, Eleventh New York, and First New Hampshire fired on the enemy's position from their respective works, but the distance being so great it is doubtful if they rendered any material assistance. During the attack upon General Miles, Battery E, Fifth U. S. Artillery, was ordered to report to me, by order of Major-General Griffin. I placed one section in position near the enemy's old work in rear of the Skinner house, to right of Roder's battery. On account of its being a three-inch battery I considered it would be of little or no use in firing over the heads of our troops. After firing a few rounds I ordered it to the rear. On the withdrawal of the troops the batteries of the command were ordered to their former positions.

There were no casualties nor loss of material.

The following is the amount of ammunition expended:

| Command. | Solid shot. | Spherical case. | Shell. | Hotchkiss percussion. | Hotchkiss case. | Schenkl percussion. | Schenkl combination. |
|---|-------------|-----------------|--------|-----------------------|-----------------|---------------------|----------------------|
| Battery K, 4th U. S. Artillery..... | 33 | 28 | 8 | | | | |
| Battery B, 1st New Jersey Artillery..... | 8 | | | | | | |
| 11th New York Battery..... | | | | 8 | | | |
| 10th Massachusetts Battery..... | | | | 12 | 77 | | |
| Battery M, 1st New Hampshire Artillery..... | | | | 42 | 20 | 27 | 80 |
| Total..... | 41 | 28 | 8 | 62 | 97 | 27 | 80 |

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. G. HAZARD,

Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Lieut. Col. CHARLES A. WHITTIER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Corps.

(Copy to Bvt. Maj. John N. Craig, assistant adjutant-general, artillery headquarters, Army of the Potomac.)

No. 89.

Report of Bvt. Capt. John W. Roder, Battery K, Fourth U. S. Artillery, of operations February 5-11.

HEADQUARTERS BATTERY K, FOURTH U. S. ARTILLERY,

Before Petersburg, Va., February 12, 1865.

COLONEL: In compliance with instructions from headquarters Artillery Brigade, Second Corps, of this date, I have the honor to submit the following report of the participation of Battery K, Fourth U. S. Artillery, in the recent movement:

In obedience to orders from headquarters Artillery Brigade, Second Corps, I reported with my battery to Brevet Major-General Mott, commanding Third Division, Second Corps, at 6.30 o'clock on the morning of the 5th instant; was directed by the general to follow the division, which would take the Vaughan road and march in the direction toward Hatcher's Run. Soon after we had started I was requested by one of General Mott's aides to send one section to the front, which I did, sending the right section, under the command of Lieutenant Smith. I afterward found it in position in a small field near Hatcher's Run. I brought the rest of the battery in the same field; remained there all day without firing any. Some time during the night I was directed by the chief of artillery to detach one section, under command of Lieutenant Smith, which I did (you will find his report inclosed herewith), and ordered to move the rest of the guns back in a field near the Cummings house. Here I remained from the 6th to the morning of the 11th instant, when I was ordered to go back to my old camp.

I have no losses or casualties to report of any kind.

Respectfully submitted.

J. W. RODER,

First Lieut., Fourth U. S. Arty., Bvt. Capt., Comdg. Battery K.

Bvt. Lieut. Col. J. G. HAZARD,

Commanding Artillery Brigade, Second Corps.

No. 90.

Report of Lieut. Edward S. Smith, Fifteenth Battery New York Light Artillery, commanding section Battery K, Fourth U. S. Artillery, of operations February 6-11.

HEADQUARTERS BATTERY K, FOURTH U. S. ARTILLERY,

Before Petersburg, Va., February 12, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my section after having been detached from the battery, on the night of the 6th instant:

I was conducted by Lieutenant Bull (inspector of artillery of the Artillery Brigade, Second Corps) to the Second Division line. I was then directed by General Smyth, commanding Second Division, Second Corps, to take position on the crest of a hill in the rear and left of the Armstrong house. Remained there until about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when ordered to move my section to the front of the house and open as quickly as possible on a piece of woods through which the enemy were charging. Fired eighty-two rounds of solid shot, spherical case, and shell. Remained in position all night. On Tuesday, about 3 p. m., was again ordered to open a brisk fire into the woods where the enemy were supposed to be massing to make an attack on the Fifth Corps; fired twenty-six rounds of solid shot. Remained in position until the morning of the 11th instant, when I was directed by Lieutenant Deane, aide-de-camp to the chief of artillery, to move my section to the rear and right, take position on the Third Division line. Remained there about five hours, when I was relieved by Lieutenant Chase, with a section of Battery B, First Rhode Island Artillery, and ordered to report back to the battery.

The non-commissioned officers and privates behaved in their usual good manner.

I have no losses or casualties to report, with the exception of my own horse being wounded.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. S. SMITH,

First Lieutenant, Fifteenth New York Battery,

Attached to Battery K, Fourth U. S. Artillery.

Bvt. Capt. JOHN W. RODER,

Commanding Battery K, Fourth U. S. Artillery.

No. 91.

Report of Maj. Gen. Gouverneur K. Warren, U. S. Army, commanding Fifth Army Corps, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
February 15, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to make the following report of the operations intrusted to me in the late movement. My instructions, received on the 4th instant, say:

The commanding general directs that you move with your corps to-morrow morning at 7 o'clock down the Halifax road to Rowanty Post-Office, then by the road direct to the crossing of Rowanty Creek, at W. Perkins', thence to J. Hargrave's, on the road leading from Dinwiddie Court-House, taking position at or near that point, to support General Gregg's cavalry. General Gregg has been ordered to strike the Boydton plank road at Dinwiddie Court-House. He is to endeavor to intercept and capture any wagon trains carrying supplies from Bellfield, and to take advantage of any opportunity of inflicting injury on the enemy.

I set out, as directed, at 7 a. m. on the 5th. My divisions were in the following order: First, General Ayres'; second, General Griffin's; third, twelve field pieces (with eight horses to each piece and to each caisson); fourth, General Crawford's division; fifth, train, consisting of half my ambulances, fifty wagons of infantry ammunition, and fifty-six wagons heavily loaded with forage and ammunition for the cavalry. We took four days' rations. The column was preceded by three squadrons of the Sixth Ohio Cavalry, commanded by Captain Saxon. We reached the crossing of Rowanty Creek, at W. Perkins', about 10 a. m., and found the place defended by about 100 of the enemy's infantry. A squadron of cavalry, dismounted, was unable to keep down their fire so as to cross, and General Gwyn's brigade was at once ordered up. This silenced the enemy's fire, and a crossing was made by swimming and wading, beside a few on the ice.

About twenty-five prisoners were taken. This was about 11 a. m. We lost eight wounded, among whom was Maj. D. H. Kent, of the Fourth Delaware.

The stream was about sixty feet wide, and could not be forded by men or horses, but trees were soon cut for the men to scramble over. The horses were able to cross on a bridge we made for them about a quarter to 1 p. m., and a bridge practicable for the artillery and trains was completed about 3.45 p. m. The column, as fast as it crossed, moved out to the Vaughan road and toward Dinwiddie Court-House, and took up the position assigned it, by the orders of the preceding day, without any opposition. We communicated with General Gregg's column on reaching the Vaughan road, and learned he had gone on to Dinwiddie Court-House. At 4.30 p. m. I was informed by Maj. H. E. Trémain, aide-de-camp to General Gregg, that he had reached Dinwiddie Court-House and was on his way back to the Malone crossing of the Rowanty Creek, where he should bivouac for the night. Immediately after this I met some of the enemy's cavalry coming down the road from Dinwiddie Court-House toward us, and the meeting was quite unexpected to them from the way they scampered off, and to me, as I had supposed General Gregg would send information to me as soon as he uncovered the road leading to my position. The enemy's cavalry thus picked up one or two stragglers and caught sight of our infantry; this was all.

Being in frequent communication with the major-general commanding the army during the evening, I, at 9 p. m., received orders to move up and join General Humphreys at the Vaughan road crossing of Hatcher's Run, to be prepared for any concentration of the enemy in the morning. This gave me specific instructions about the posting of my divisions and of General Gregg's cavalry, which was ordered up to join me for that purpose. I, as soon as practicable, ordered General Griffin's division in motion, but the relieving of pickets, &c., made it nearly midnight before he was fairly on the road. My train all followed him, then General Ayres' division and the artillery, and then General Crawford's division.

General Gregg reached me on the Vaughan road at 4 a. m. on the 6th instant, and his troops filling up the road which my instructions required his forage train to return by, I directed it to follow General Crawford. The cavalry then brought up the rear, skirmishing with the enemy and punishing him severely when he came close enough. The night was very cold and the roads were frozen hard before morning. The troops had little rest and no sleep. The enemy's cavalry followed General Gregg up the Vaughan road, but were easily repulsed in their attempt to crowd us, and did not show themselves to the infantry in the position I placed them, according to previous instructions. At 8 a. m. I received notification to feel the enemy along my front, and fight him if outside his lines. This I took to refer to the enemy in front of General Humphreys' troops, where the fighting had been the evening previous, and at which point the enemy were expected to attack, that being a part of my front, in the event of my being the ranking officer present, which I thought might be meant, as the concentration of our troops had been made under the supposition that General Humphreys outranked me, and then he was to command the whole, which my rank, when known, would put upon me. This left me in some doubt, and before I could make any definite arrangements I received notice from General Humphreys that he was about to attack the enemy if outside his works; and then I thought it best to await the result of his operations and hold all the Fifth Corps and cavalry in hand to co-operate with him if needed. I sent General Winthrop's brigade, of General Ayres' division, to hold the Vaughan road and relieve the cavalry. At 11 a. m. General Humphreys informed me that the enemy on his front had retired to his intrenched lines, and I then waited further instructions from the general commanding after his receiving this information. At 12.15 I received orders to make a reconnaissance south and west of Hatcher's Run, to ascertain the whereabouts of the enemy's lines in that direction; I also had a personal interview with the general commanding at my headquarters; consequently, at 1.15 p. m., I issued instructions to General Crawford to move out on the Vaughan road to where it turns off to Dabney's Mill, and then follow up that road toward the mill, drive back the enemy, and ascertain the position of his intrenched lines said to be there; also, to General Ayres to follow General Crawford with his division, taking with him General Winthrop's brigade, then with the cavalry down the Vaughan road. General Gregg was directed to send a force of cavalry and drive the enemy down the Vaughan road across Gravelly Run, and also to watch the left flank of the infantry column (composed of General Crawford and General Ayres) as it advanced.

This I thought the cavalry could easily do, as no considerable force of the enemy had been reported to me to be in that direction. General

Griffin's division was left in reserve to support either the column toward Dabney's Mill or the cavalry on the Vaughan road, and posted where the road diverged. General Humphreys informed me also that Wheaton's division, 4,500 strong, at the Cummings house, was available as support, as well as General De Trobriand's brigade, 2,500 strong. My orders were obeyed very promptly. General Crawford had not proceeded far before the enemy's intrenched picket-line was encountered. This was soon carried by General Bragg's brigade of his division. Having intrusted the direction of affairs on the Vaughan road to General Gregg with his cavalry, I went with the infantry column toward Dabney's Mill. We had proceeded but a short distance when heavy firing began on the Vaughan road, and reports came that General Winthrop's brigade had been attacked by the enemy in force and could not rejoin General Ayres, as both he and General Gregg had all they could do to maintain themselves and needed assistance. I then directed General Griffin to re-enforce General Winthrop by a brigade and to take command of operations on the Vaughan road, reserving to myself General Griffin's Third Brigade (his largest and best), which was on his right, to send to General Ayres, in place of General Winthrop's, if it was needed there. Being again called upon by General Gregg for re-enforcements, as the enemy was turning his left, I sent over to order across the run the supports from General Humphreys. Having made these arrangements, I went along with the movement toward Dabney's Mill, to which place General Crawford soon drove the enemy. Rallying there, the enemy forced back General Crawford's left somewhat, when General Ayres was sent in to his support on that flank with his two brigades. The enemy was again driven and to some distance beyond Dabney's Mill. The firing continuing now to be constant and severe I brought up the Third Brigade of General Griffin's division in close support, and was obliged to put it all with General Ayres to hold our left. I sent then also, at once, for at least a brigade of General Wheaton's division, intending to order the whole division up if affairs on the Vaughan road would permit. Unfortunately, however, the enemy got up re-enforcements faster than I could, and when a brigade of General Wheaton's division was nearing the scene of action a charge was made by the enemy in a force (according to the Petersburg Express consisting of three divisions) against which I had but six brigades opposed.

Our line, despite all the exertions of the prominent officers and much good conduct among those in the ranks, gave way and fell back rapidly, but with little loss after the movement began; portions of the line continued to fire as it retired, and General Wheaton got his brigade in line, and with it a portion of the others reformed, so that the enemy was checked before our old lines were reached by us. The resistance the enemy's attack met on the Vaughan road, together with the vigor of our attack at Dabney's Mill, drew off all his troops to the latter place, which was the natural place for both his retiring columns to meet, as was our line at the run for our two columns if pressed back. Could the true state of the case have been ascertained in time, so as to have transferred our troops on the Vaughan road to the enemy's right flank at Dabney's Mill, we should have driven him beyond the plank road with ease. As it was, a reconnaissance in force (see General Lee's report) began nearly simultaneously by both parties, resulted in the enemy being repulsed on one road and ourselves upon the other, with probably nearly equal losses. I must say if our troops had all stood as firm at Dabney's Mill as the best of them did, that I had enough there to have held the enemy till any amount of re-enforcements could have arrived. On the whole, it was not a bad fight and in no way discouraged me in my willingness to try the same thing again with the same men. Nearly all the operations of the column toward Dabney's Mill I was an eye-witness to, and can speak of the good conduct of all those officers on whom I have heretofore relied. I, however, refer you to the division and brigade reports for specific details. The operations on the Vaughan road were completely successful, but they required and took up a very considerable force that I expected to use on the other road, and thus rendered us too weak at that point, to which I gave my personal attention, and which, from the relation of our forces, was the important one. I beg to refer to the reports of General Gregg, of the cavalry, General Griffin, commanding First Division, and General Winthrop, commanding First Brigade, Second Division.*

The moonlight night served to reform the brigades, and at dawn of the 7th we were ready for whatever might be offered by the enemy. At daylight changes in the brigades were begun successively so as to bring all of each division together. This was effected by 10 a. m.; and the enemy having made no demonstrations I ordered General Crawford to move out from our right near Armstrong's Mill and attack the enemy. This was promptly done. The enemy's pickets were found on the same intrenched lines as on the preceding day, but in stronger force. General Baxter's brigade drove them out. General Crawford having reformed his men I sent over two brigades of General Wheaton's division to secure his flanks, in case of a farther advance, which he was directed to make just before sunset. I did not think it proper to make more extensive operations in the severe storm which prevailed all day, having instructions not to do so without I was confident of great advantages. About 6 p. m. General Crawford again advanced and drove the enemy back to his line near Dabney's Mill, regaining part of the battle-field of the preceding day and burying those killed found there.

During the night I withdrew his command to this side of Hatcher's Run, to be able to make the disposition of troops contemplated by the commanding general, in making a new defensive line. General Crawford's division was the only one engaged this day and behaved most creditably. It lost in killed and wounded 175 officers and men, but drove the enemy at all points of attack. General Wheaton's division performed very arduous service and underwent severe exposure on this day. The prompt execution of orders and the good service rendered by the brigade of General Wheaton's division, engaged on the 6th, I most gratefully acknowledge.

I take this occasion to deny the newspaper correspondent's statement that this brigade fired into any of our troops. It was under my eye the whole time, and did not fire except upon the enemy. I would also state that there was no ammunition wagon abandoned on the 6th. I wish further to state that our falling back from Dabney's Mill under the fire of the enemy was, in my opinion, unnecessary and was against my orders; I had force enough to have held on longer. The enemy did

* Griffin's report not found. On February 16, 1865, General Griffin transmitted to corps headquarters the reports of his brigade commanders, with the remark that he submitted them "as my report of the movements of the troops under my command during the operations of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant."

not flank us but came square in front, and I believe we can do better next time. Our losses in the whole movement are as follows:

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Missing. | | Total. | | Aggregate. |
|-------------------------------------|-----------|------|-----------|------|-----------|------|-----------|-------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| First Division | 4 | 27 | 14 | 181 | 1 | 40 | 19 | 248 | 267 |
| Second Division | 4 | 21 | 13 | 180 | 1 | 25 | 18 | 232 | 250 |
| Third Division | 12 | 61 | 20 | 482 | 1 | 86 | 23 | 623 | 652 |
| Cavalry Division | | | | | | | | a150 | a150 |
| Brigade of Wheaton's division | | | | 17 | | 40 | | 57 | 57 |
| Total | 10 | 100 | 47 | 860 | 3 | 191 | 60 | 1,310 | 1,376 |

a About.

The above table is made out from the nominal lists.

I beg to record here the names of my staff officers present during the operations, all of whom did their duty: Bvt. Col. Fred. T. Locke, assistant adjutant-general; Bvt. Col. H. O. Bankhead; Lieut. Col. A. L. Thomas, chief quartermaster; Bvt. Maj. D. L. Smith, chief commissary; Surg. T. Rush Spencer, medical director; Asst. Surg. C. K. Winne, medical inspector; Capts. E. B. Cope and James W. Wadsworth, aides-de-camp; Capts. Gordon Winslow, jr., and H. S. Melcher, acting aides-de-camp.

Colonel Bankhead, inspector-general, was wounded, and Captain Melcher had his horse killed. Majors Pease, Sanders, Mason, and Rosencrantz, officers of General Meade's staff, also aided me in their duties most creditably. Major Pease's horse was shot under him.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. K. WARREN,
Major-General of Volunteers.

Col. GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the Potomac.

ADDENDA.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
March 9, 1865.

Major-General WARREN,
Commanding Fifth Army Corps:

GENERAL: I have the honor to report the following as the operations of the corps during the late movement on Hatcher's Run, commencing February 5, 1865, so far as they came under my observation:

We marched from our old camp between the Halifax road and the Jerusalem plank road at 7 a. m. February 5, taking the Halifax road, via Rowanty Post-Office, to the crossing of Rowanty Creek. The Sixth Ohio Cavalry had the advance of the column. At the creek we found the bridge destroyed, the stream deep and unfordable, and the crossing disputed by a small force of the enemy, who were protected by a strong rifle-pit on the opposite bank. The cavalry, deployed as skirmishers, dismounted, and subsequently Gwyn's brigade, of the Second Division, were sent forward, effected a crossing, drove the enemy away, capturing twenty-three prisoners. This brigade pushed forward about half a mile and threw out a strong picket, while the bridges across the creek were being constructed under the personal superintendence of the major-general commanding. The bridges were completed about 4 p. m., when the whole command crossed and proceeded to the intersection of the Vaughan road with the Quaker road. Captain Cope, aide-de-camp, was directed to go forward on the road toward Dinwiddie Court-House and effect a communication with General Gregg's cavalry. This was done, Captain Cope meeting an officer from General Gregg, whom the latter had sent for the purpose. About the same time a connection was made on our right with the Second Corps. Griffin's division was sent out about half a mile on the above road, taking position on the Chappell farm. Ayres' division was posted on the Quaker road, while Crawford's division was stationed on the Vaughan road, the trains and artillery being parked near him. About 5 p. m. heavy firing was heard in the direction of Hatcher's Run, the Second Corps having engaged the enemy near Armstrong's Mill.

About 9 p. m. orders were received from the major-general commanding the army to move up at once to the crossing of the Vaughan road over Hatcher's Run. The command was put in motion, Griffin, with the trains, leading. Ayres followed with the artillery, Crawford bringing up the rear, and soon after daylight, February 6, the troops and trains arrived at the point designated. The infantry were placed in the breast-works near the crossing of Hatcher's Run. General Gregg with his cavalry was directed to cover the Vaughan road as far as the crossing of Gravelly Run. Winthrop's brigade, of Ayres' division, was sent to the support of the cavalry, and went into position on the right of the Vaughan road near the Keys house. About 1.30 p. m. the enemy made his appearance in considerable force on our left. About 2 p. m. Crawford's division was advanced up the Vaughan road in the direction of Dabney's Mill, Bragg's brigade leading. The enemy was discovered in rifle-pits about 800 yards in front of our breast-works. A sharp picket-fire was delivered by the enemy, who quickly left his pits and retired to his own rear. General Ayres, with two brigades of his division, coming up at this time was sent to support Crawford. About 3 p. m. I was sent by your orders to the left to communicate with General Gregg on the Vaughan road. I found him on the left of the road, not far from the Keys house. Our troops had been forced back by the enemy for a short distance, but had reformed in good order, and at the time I was there were maintaining their ground and fighting bravely. General Gregg told me that he had called on General Griffin for support, and on my return I met Brevet Brigadier-General Sickel with the First Brigade, First Division, marching down the road to the battle-field, conducted by an officer of General Gregg's staff. I reported the condition of affairs on the left to Major-General Meade, and immediately after to yourself in the rear of the line of battle, a little past 4 p. m.

You left me in the open field just east of the wooded crest overlooking the run, with instructions to remain there while you proceeded to the front. Shortly after stragglers began to break to the rear in considerable numbers. I deployed the provost guard of the corps across the field, and also used the cavalry escort in the same duty. Perceiving a mass of troops with colors retiring through the wood to the left of the open, I rode toward them to see who they were. I found a large portion of General Gwyn's (Third) brigade, Second Division. I ordered them to halt and form. General Gwyn coming up soon after said his brigade had broken after receiving but a slight fire from the enemy. I requested him to form his brigade and advance to the woods in front and deploy so as to stop the men from falling back. I discovered many men from the Maryland brigade, rallied quite a number of them, and asked General Gwyn to take charge of them along with his own command. I then sent Captain Melcher with a dispatch to you informing you of this state of affairs (hour, 5.15 p. m.). Gwyn's brigade advanced just to the edge of the woods and halted. In the meantime several hundred men from the Second Brigade, First Division, had fallen back in great disorder, their officers having no control of them whatever. With the assistance of several officers, this mass of men was halted and faced to the front. Some straggling shots coming over, these men became frightened and commenced firing into our own troops who were in their immediate front. Very many of the men fired almost perpendicularly into the air. They then broke and ran panic-stricken to the rear. One brigade of General Wheaton's division of the Sixth Corps was on the ground at this time, but their presence availed nothing toward stopping the flight of the fugitives. The enemy having withdrawn from our left, Winthrop's brigade was ordered up about dusk and went into position on the left of the Second Corps, and remained there during the night. The troops of the First and Second Divisions were placed in the breast-works, and Crawford's division, which had retired in good order from the field, were massed in rear on the line near the Vaughan road.

On the morning of the 7th General Crawford was directed to relieve Winthrop's brigade and push out toward the enemy's works. This was done in a heavy storm of rain, which continued nearly all day. The enemy was driven from his advanced line of rifle-pits, and nearly the whole of the battle-field of the preceding day regained, affording an opportunity of getting in our wounded from the field and burying our dead. In this movement General Crawford was supported by two brigades of General Wheaton. These troops remained in this position all night, and on the morning of the 8th were withdrawn to the north bank of Hatcher's Run.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRED. T. LOCKE,

Brevet Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,

March —, 1865.

Maj. Gen. G. K. WARREN:

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following statement of the operations of the Fifth Corps from February 5 to 8, 1865, as seen by me:

I left camp near Fort Stevenson on the 5th instant at 6 a. m., directed by your order to proceed to Billup's Post-Office, on the Halifax road, with the advance (one regiment of cavalry assigned to the corps), there to take the right-hand road to Rowanty Creek. We found this road obstructed; this delayed us so long that the infantry column had come up when we arrived at the stream. Upon the south bank of this creek the enemy was posted, in recently constructed works, prepared to contest the crossing. The cavalry dismounted some men, formed a skirmish line, and attacked at once. Gwyn's brigade, Second Division, formed line of battle and advanced to the bank of the stream, driving the enemy from their works. Trees were felled to facilitate the crossing, and as it was found impossible to ford, a temporary bridge was constructed upon felled trees for the cavalry. Upon this they crossed and again went forward, the head of the column in a westerly direction. They reached the Vaughan road in two miles and proceeded down it to Great Cat-tail Creek. Here we communicated with Gregg's cavalry, by parties sent toward us for that purpose. As this was the point to be reached, the troops began to take up the positions assigned to them in the following order: The Second Division, covering the Quaker road and roads leading north; the First Division went into position near the Hargrave house, covering the Vaughan road and roads leading west; the Third Division, on the right in a field east of the Vaughan house. Communication was opened with the Second Corps, and about 5 o'clock heavy firing was heard in that direction. As soon as the proper disposition had been made of the troops you established your headquarters at the crossing of the Vaughan and Quaker roads.

About 10 p. m. you sent me with an order to General Gregg. His command was about five miles down the stream at the next crossing. I reached him by a road on the north side of Rowanty Creek; he was then ready to march. I came back with an officer of his staff in advance of the cavalry, and reached you at 3 a. m. on the 6th. The troops were then moving on the Vaughan road toward the crossing at Hatcher's Run. By 8 o'clock all the infantry were massed near the run, some of them inside of the rifle-pits thrown up to protect the crossing by troops of the Second Corps. The cavalry came up in the rear and went into position, covering the Vaughan road half a mile from the crossing, in a large field near the Keys house. The enemy followed them up, and Winthrop's brigade was sent to their support. The Third Division crossed Hatcher's Run and massed on the north side. From the south side a picket-line was thrown out, connecting on the right with the Second Corps and with cavalry on the left. The enemy's pickets were discovered on the edge of timber beyond a small open lot, a few hundred paces outside of the works. About 4 o'clock you sent an order to General Crawford to advance to Dabney's Mill, and drive the enemy into his works. I went with him to assist in carrying out the order. A line of battle was formed in the open ground before mentioned, and advanced by an old wood road, driving the enemy out of their picket-pits and pushing them rapidly through the woods and beyond Dabney's Mill. Here the line halted and engaged the enemy until the necessary disposition had been made. The Second Division came up and went into line on the left of the Third. The right of the line of battle rested in a field near the Brouder house, covering the road to Armstrong's Mill. About 5 o'clock you sent me from this part of the field with an order to General Griffin to send you one brigade to the support of the Second and Third Divisions, to take his best brigade to the large open ground to the support of Winthrop's brigade, and to take command at that point. He was on the field when I reached him, and had already sent for one brigade. This was about the time of the attack on the Second and Third Divisions.

On my return I saw two brigades of the Sixth Corps halted near the rifle-pits, apparently awaiting orders. I ascertained that they were support to the Second and Third Divisions, and put them in motion immediately. General Wheaton then came up. I pointed out the road to him and joined you at the front. I was then ordered to go back and hurry them up. About this time I saw a number of men giving way and running to the rear, and amid the confusion I found General Wheaton endeavoring to form a line of battle where his command had reached, which was 200 yards in rear of where the troops were giving way, but the men became panic-stricken and fled as if by common consent, firing into their officers and among one another as they ran. General Gwyn's brigade came out of the woods en masse before the action was over, stating that they were out of ammunition. A part of the Third Division came back, slowly and in comparative order, and succeeded in checking the enemy in the woods. This gave time to form a line of battle in the field from which the advance was made. The enemy did not seem disposed to push farther than to recover the ground lost in the morning. At dark all became quiet, and when the troops who had lost their formations were formed in their respective regiments, they took up their former position within the breast-works, the Third Division camping for the night on the north side of Hatcher's Run.

On the morning of the 7th instant you sent me up the run to find a position for a battery to reply to the enemy's battery at Dabney's Mill. I found a good position near Armstrong's Mill, and a battery in position at the Armstrong house belonging to General Smyth's division of the Second Corps. I then crossed the run at the right of the First Division and went out on the open ground in front of the works to the pickets. From no indications of the enemy I judged they had withdrawn their pickets some distance, and reported it to you on my return. About 12 o'clock you sent me with an order to General Crawford to take his command across Hatcher's Run and up the stream to near Armstrong's Mill; from there push out as far as possible toward Dabney's Mill, bury his dead of the day before, and see what was going on. The order was carried out promptly. The enemy, contrary to our expectations, were found in their old picket-line and were driven back about one-quarter of a mile; the line of battle was advanced as far as practicable and temporary works were thrown up, the right of the line resting on Hatcher's Run above the mill-dam, after which I came back and reported to you. Two brigades of Wheaton's division had been sent to support the Third Division. I then returned to General Crawford with a written order from you to use all his support and to drive the enemy into his works at Dabney's Mill. I went from there to General Smyth (by your order) to ask him to render what assistance he could with his artillery. He immediately opened a battery at the Armstrong house, firing toward Dabney's Mill. General Crawford then advanced and drove the enemy to their works, recovering most of the battle-field of the 6th and burying a number of the dead. Firing was kept up until late in the night. On the morning of the 8th instant all was quiet, and at 8 o'clock General Crawford's command was withdrawn by order to the north side of Hatcher's Run. Therewith submit map showing the country marched through, position of troops, &c.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. B. COPE,
Captain and Aide-de-Camp.

No. 92.

Report of Surg. T. Rush Spencer, U. S. Army, Medical Director, of operations February 5-April 30.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
MEDICAL DIRECTOR'S OFFICE,
April 30, 1865.

COLONEL: *

On the 5th of February we were again ordered to move with our flying hospital, leaving the balance of the hospital train, &c., behind. On reaching Rowanty Creek the enemy made a sharp and determined resistance to our crossing. We had some fifteen wounded. These were immediately sent back to our hospital, left at Parke's Station. Effecting a crossing, building bridges, &c., consumed some hours. Evening found us at the Quaker road, down which we marched during the night (to reach Hatcher's Run early in the morning), after a day and a night without rest to officers and men.

The cold was the most intense encountered in any movement during the winter. The men had hardly time to prepare a hasty dish of coffee when they were ordered forward to attack the enemy, with varying fortune. Night left much of the field of battle of the 6th in possession of the enemy. So promptly and so thoroughly had the wounded been removed from the field that when recovered next morning very few were found to have been left unsuccored or in the hands of the enemy. The hospitals of the corps were promptly established at the Cummings house, a mile to the rear of the run. Here every attention was rendered, the medical officers never resting until every man was fed, dressed, or operated on, as the case required, and loaded into the ambulances. They were at once conveyed to the railroad at Patrick's Station, numbering 502.

The battle of the 7th, a brief one, resulted favorably to our arms. Promptly the wounded were again placed in the hands of the untiring surgeons; again and again the field and woods were gleaned by the faithful stretcher-bearers, until all were cared for.

Another night and morning of unremitting labor, and 184 wounded were on their way to the depot hospital.

The corps went into camp in the immediate vicinity, on a high, dry, and rolling surface, with good water and plenty of wood. The benefit of the improved site of our camps was immediately visible in the prompt disappearance of intermittent and kindred diseases.

The hospitals were all removed from Parke's Station and each placed in the more immediate vicinity of its own division. They soon vied with each other in increased comforts for their sick and in external ornamentation. Again a period of rest, under favorable sanitary conditions, prepared the troops for that short, sharp, and decisive campaign which was in fact to finish, not only the great, but the greatest rebellion. During this period of rest all reports were brought up, property unfit for further use, or in excess, turned in, and all deficiencies supplied. The ambulance and hospital train was also put in complete order for the spring campaign. After the maximum of supplies had been laid in, an order reducing the transportation left no alternative to the overburdened wagons, in our hurried marches over the worst of roads, but to abandon more or less of the supplies deemed necessary to the emergencies of a campaign. Fortunately the reserve supplies of the medical department came so promptly to supply all deficiencies that never for a day was there any lack.

* For portion of this report here omitted, see Vol. XLII, Part I, p. 451.

The field hospitals were once more cleared, the flying hospitals separated, the ambulance boxes filled with their battle supplies, when, on the morning of March 29, we once more took up our line of march. One-half the ambulances and the flying hospitals accompanied the troops, the balance remaining back with the heavy train. Crossing Rowanty Creek along the stage road to Quaker road, thence passing along the Quaker road, we nearly reached the Boydton plank road to find the enemy, about 4 o'clock, in position. Immediately a very sharp engagement ensued, resulting in driving the enemy back into his works.

As rapidly as possible a hospital was established at a house (name never certainly known, but said to be called Spain house) near the Quaker Church on Quaker road. For the first and only time the battle supplies of the ambulance boxes came into requisition. Soon the wounded began to reach the hospitals, operating tables were extemporized, and regimental supplies of dressings were seized upon, until the restriction against bringing any wagons across Gravelly Run was removed by the success at the front. The engagement was sharp, the wounded numerous; but all were promptly dressed and comfortably provided for in the several hospitals. By 7 a. m. the wounded were on their way to the railroad at Humphreys' Station, over roads rendered almost impassable by rain and travel. The following day was occupied in advancing our lines and constructing defenses, slight skirmishing only taking place.

On 31st our whole corps again took the advance. The Second and Third Divisions, driven back, being supported by the First Division, soon forced the enemy to retreat with considerable loss. During the night the corps was massed near the Boydton plank road, and its Second Division sent to the support of General Sheridan toward Dinwiddie Court-House. The other divisions, marching by another road converging, brought all the divisions into the engagement of the Five Forks, where, in conjunction with General Sheridan's cavalry, under whose orders we had been placed, a most decisive battle was won, resulting in the capture of many guns and several thousand prisoners. Our wounded, though considerable, by no means equaled in number the loss in the fight of the Quaker road.

A hospital was promptly established at the Methodist Church on the White Oak road. From here some patients were sent to Humphreys' Station, some to Quaker Church hospital. Both hospitals were promptly broken up. All that were not disposed of when the pursuit of Lee began on the 2d, were brought forward to Sutherland's Station, on the South Side Railroad. Here they were left in fourteen hospital tents, with a surgeon and all necessary supplies, the balance of the hospital train, and the ambulances hastening after the troops.

Owing to the rapidity of the march, the condition of the roads, and the cutting of the trains by troops, much anxiety was felt lest the delays should be detrimental; but on the 5th, at Jetersville, our trains all reached us and remained with us.

By marches, varying from twenty to thirty miles between the 2d and 9th, we reached the vicinity of Appomattox Court-House to find the enemy driving General Sheridan's cavalry, with the intention, as we afterward learned, of breaking through and continuing their retreat. Right promptly General Sheridan put our Second Division into line on our extreme left, nearest the Twenty-fourth Corps, while in person he superintended the advance of the First Division and the artillery. As the skirmishers advanced they rapidly encountered those of the enemy, but were promptly followed by the line of battle. As they rose the crest of the hill overlooking Appomattox Court-House, the already demoralized rebel army and their despairing general gave up all hope and fell back into the valley, his last ditch, and speedily sued for terms of surrender. By 3 o'clock the troops were in camp, and we had gained a bloodless victory. The great joy of the men seemed to save them from the ill effects naturally to be expected from such unprecedented marching.

From the 9th to the 15th we remained at Appomattox Court-House, receiving the surrendered property of the rebels, viz, 157 pieces of artillery, 71 battle-flags, 17,000 stand of arms, and 26,115 prisoners. On the 15th we started for Nottoway Court-House, which we reached on the 20th, relieving the Ninth Army Corps in the duty of guarding the railroad from Burkeville to Sutherland's Station. For the remainder of the month the corps continued at this point; the usual amount of sickness, presenting no peculiar feature, attended our stay.

Inclosed herewith please find reports of surgeons-in-chief of divisions and artillery brigade, as well as of the medical inspector of the corps. To these, in addition to the daily, weekly, and monthly reports, I beg leave to refer for the detail of operations.

I cannot close this report without expressing in warm terms my appreciation of the great fidelity and ability with which those several officers have performed their respective duties. In addition to these should be mentioned with especial commendation the surgeons in charge of the several division hospitals, viz, Joseph Thomas, surgeon One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, in charge of First Division hospital; H. C. Dean, One hundred and fortieth New York, in charge of Second Division hospital; H. Strauss, One hundred and fiftieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, in charge of Third Division hospital.

With rare exceptions the medical service has been well and faithfully performed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. RUSH SPENCER,

Surg., U. S. Vols., Lieut. Col. and Med. Director, Fifth Army Corps.

Bvt. Lieut. Col. THOMAS A. MCPARLIN,

Surg. U. S. Army, Col. and Med. Director, Army of the Potomac.

No. 93.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Horatio G. Sickel, One hundred and ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding First Brigade, First Division, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQRS. FIRST BRIG., FIRST DIV., FIFTH ARMY CORPS,

In the Field, near Hatcher's Run and Vaughan Road, Va.,

February 13, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In accordance with circular from division headquarters of the 11th instant I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the First Brigade, First Division, Fifth Corps, in the operations of the army on the 5th, 6th, and 7th of the present month:

Pursuant to orders we broke camp at 6.30 a. m. on the 5th instant and marched west to the Weldon railroad, then south on the Halifax road about three miles, then southwest to a point on Hatcher's Run, when the column crossed and was halted for a few minutes in an old earth-work just previously abandoned by the enemy. We were again put in march, heading northwest, on a road leading toward Dinwiddie Court-House, halting at 4 p. m. on the plantation belonging to Oliver Chappell, where we remained until 11 p. m., when we returned by the same road to its junction with the Vaughan road, then marched north on the Vaughan road to the south bank of Hatcher's Run. Upon arriving at this point we were directed by Major-General Griffin to occupy the earth-works covering the crossing of that stream, in which position we remained until about 3 p. m. of the 6th instant, when I was ordered by Major-General Griffin to report with the First Brigade to General Gregg, commanding cavalry division, on the left of our lines, about five-eighths of a mile south on the Vaughan road. Upon reaching the field occupied by the cavalry and reporting to General Gregg, I found General Winthrop's brigade, of the Second Division, Fifth Corps, fiercely engaging the enemy upon the open ground on the west side of the Vaughan road. I was directed by General Gregg to support General Winthrop, whose line at the time was being pressed by a vigorous assault of superior numbers of the enemy. I immediately formed my brigade in line of battle, facing west, and marched forward in that order. On reaching General Winthrop's line his troops retired. As I am informed his men had exhausted their ammunition. I at once ordered a charge upon the enemy's line, whose numbers, I believe, were equal, if not superior, to those of my own. This was executed in a most gallant style and with great steadiness, both officers and men conducting themselves in a manner which would have done credit to the best veteran troops. The enemy broke at the first volley from our men and left the field in great disorder, leaving their killed and wounded in our hands, together with several prisoners. After pursuing them for some distance my line was halted, in consequence of the troops having exhausted their ammunition. This fact was communicated to Major-General Griffin, then present, who directed me to hold the ground we then occupied and to throw forward a strong skirmish line, which was promptly done. In the meantime Major Ashbrook (ordnance officer) issued to the regiments a supply of ammunition.

It was now about 5.30 p. m. Rapid firing had commenced on my right and to the rear, when, by direction of General Griffin, my line was changed to face northwest. A brigade of dismounted cavalry, commanded by Colonel Knowles (Twenty-first Pennsylvania Cavalry), formed on my left, facing west, and some of General Winthrop's troops formed on my right, the right of his line resting on the Vaughan road. At dark General Winthrop received orders to withdraw his brigade from the position it was then holding and to form his line on the Vaughan road, when the command on the left devolved upon me, General Gregg having previously turned over the command to General Winthrop. At this juncture the cavalry also withdrew from the field, except one small company on our extreme left, picketing the Vaughan road, which remained on duty all night. Finding my troops the only occupants of the field, I at once proceeded to establish my picket-line, connecting on the right with General Ayres' pickets at a point on the Vaughan road, and on the left with General Gregg's cavalry. I then took up a new and more eligible line for defensive operations and remained under arms all night. Our casualties during the engagement were comparatively small, consisting of 1 officer and 3 enlisted men killed, 3 officers and 24 enlisted men wounded, and 1 officer and 4 enlisted men missing. The enemy's loss was much greater.

On the morning of the 7th the enemy's cavalry appeared on our left in considerable force, followed by a skirmish-line of infantry, which for a time seemed to threaten an attack. Sharp firing was kept up between the two lines of skirmishers for three-fourths of an hour, in which two of my men were severely wounded. I reported these facts immediately to Major-General Griffin, and, by his direction, to General Gregg, who immediately sent to the left a regiment of cavalry, and a battery of artillery was also sent to our support. About 7 a. m. a heavy rain and hail storm set in, when the enemy withdrew to cover of the woods. At 11 a. m. my brigade was relieved by General Gregg's cavalry, and by orders from General Griffin we returned and reoccupied the works we had left on the previous day.

Among the officers who particularly distinguished themselves in the engagement I am happy to present the names of Col. Edwin S. Jeune, of the One hundred and eighty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, and Maj. Edwin A. Glenn, of the One hundred and ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, both of whom displayed great coolness on the field and ability in the management of their troops. Indeed, the conduct of all the field officers was unexceptionably good, as also of the line. My staff, consisting of Capt. Francis B. Jones, brigade inspector, Lieut. Thomas Mitchell, acting assistant adjutant-general, Lieut. Theodore K. Vogel, aide-de-camp, and Lieut. Amos N. Seitzinger, acting pioneer officer, were all present on the field and rendered good service; particularly Captain Jones, who displayed upon this, as upon former occasions, a zeal, ability, and gallantry worthy of imitation, and I respectfully submit his case to the commanding general as especially deserving notice. Among those missing I regret the loss of that gallant and efficient officer, Maj. Robert P. Bush, of the One hundred and eighty-fifth New York Volunteers. He was lost on the evening of the 6th instant, while establishing the pickets a short distance west of the Vaughan road.

I am, captain, with great respect, your obedient servant,

H. G. SICKEL,

Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Capt. G. M. VAUGHAN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, First Division.

NO. 94.

Report of Brig. Gen. Joshua T. Chamberlain, U. S. Army, commanding First Brigade, of operations March 25.

HQRS. FIRST BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,

Near Hatcher's Run, Va., March 28, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders this day received, I have the honor to submit a report of the operations of this command on the 25th instant.

The First Brigade moved out at about 8 o'clock a. m. (following the Third Brigade) in the direction of Third Division headquarters. Remaining massed in that vicinity for a few hours, we then moved to our left, passed the line of works occupied by the Second Division, Second Corps, and massed near a house, known as Mrs. Warren's. Soon after, we moved to the right and massed in rear of General Miles' division of the Second Corps. At about 3 p. m. I was ordered to return to the Warren house and report to Major-General Mott. Arriving there I received the order from Major-General Humphreys to move directly to the front. I moved by the right flank along a narrow road through the slashing, and on reaching the thin belt of woods in front of which General Mott's line was formed and in a position to overlook this line, I was directed by General Humphreys to halt. In this position I remained for about two hours, during which there was some skirmishing along the line, with some artillery firing from the right and left and from a battery directly in our front. I could distinctly see the men working at one of their guns.

At about dusk there was very heavy firing to the right of our position, and in the midst of this an advance was made by the enemy in our front with great vigor and boldness, though not in heavy force. Our skirmishers were driven back in confusion, and the enemy were close upon the main line and advancing with spirit. As I feared they might follow up their attack with sufficient force to break through the main line, I immediately ordered Brevet Brigadier-General Sickel to form "forward into line" at a double-quick with his two battalions of the One hundred and ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and to occupy the edge of woods close in rear of General Mott's line, and in full sight of the enemy, which was promptly done. At the same time General Humphreys requested me to strengthen General Mott's right, which was then very hard pressed. I directed Colonel Sniper, commanding the One hundred and eighty-fifth New York Volunteers, to move up rapidly to the front line and occupy the space between General Mott's and General Miles' divisions, which he did, his center being nearly in front of the Watkins house.

Simultaneously with these movements of General Sickel and Colonel Sniper, the troops of General Mott opened a vigorous fire on the enemy's advancing line, followed by a gallant charge, in which the rebels were handsomely repulsed, with considerable loss on their part in killed, wounded, and prisoners.

My regiments remained in the position last indicated until 9 p. m., when I was ordered to withdraw and to report to Major-General Griffin in camp.

The casualties in my command were as follows: Wounded, 2 privates One hundred and ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers. The captures from the enemy, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 1 sergeant, 8 privates. These were turned over to the provost-marshal of General Mott's division. The lieutenant-colonel (who was wounded) stated that he was in command of the portion of the attacking party in Colonel Sniper's front, and that it consisted of the Forty-third, Fifty-ninth, and Sixtieth Alabama Regiments.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. L. CHAMBERLAIN,
Brigadier-General.

Capt. WILLIAM FOWLER,
Assistant Adjutant-General, First Div., Fifth Army Corps.

No. 95.

Report of Col. Allen L. Burr, One hundred and eighty-ninth New York Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

HQRS. SECOND BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,
February 13, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with circular from headquarters Army of the Potomac, February 11, 1865, I have the honor to transmit the following report of operations of this brigade during the late engagements on the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

Sunday, February 5, 1865, broke camp near Parke's Station and marched to the left, reaching Hatcher's Run about 11 a. m.; drawn in line of battle, and finally crossed the run and halted in the vicinity of Dinwiddie Court-House, about six miles from Hatcher's Run. Brigade placed in line of battle, its right resting on General Ayres' left, and our left resting on the right of the First Brigade. Our pickets were about half a mile in advance. We were ordered back at 10.30 p. m., and marched until striking the Vaughan road, which we followed to the earth-works of the Second Corps, near Kettle [Cat-tail?] Creek.

On the 6th instant we occupied these works, relieving the Second Corps. The Third Division becoming engaged in the afternoon, we were ordered to follow the First Brigade to the scene of action and support of cavalry who were charging the enemy. This order was countermanded, and an order given to follow a brigade of the Sixth Corps to the scene of action on the left of Hatcher's Run. We formed in line of battle in open field opposite enemy's breast-works, where a vigorous fire was going on. A portion of the Sixth Corps and Crawford's division of the Fifth Corps were forced back and we were ordered to hold them in check until they were rallied. This was done until our brigade was ordered to close up an interval on the left flank, and in facing to the left to obey that order, the disordered mass broke through and succeeded in breaking our ranks. We again rallied the brigade and forwarded to the front, driving the enemy and doing good execution in the premises. From this position we were finally ordered back to the Vaughan road by an order from General Meade. The brigade was formed anew in works and remained there over night.

Tuesday, the 7th instant, it rained. About 10 a. m. brigade was ordered to the field occupied the previous day to relieve General Winthrop's and to do picket duty. We so relieved him, forming the brigade in line of battle, and constructed earth-works. The right of our picket-lines joined General Ayres and the left rested on the Vaughan road. There was a good deal of musketry in front of our lines and the woods we occupied were shelled by the enemy during the day. We were undisturbed during the day, and remained in same position the three following days.

Very respectfully,

A. L. BURR,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Capt. WILLIAM FOWLER,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, First Division.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
February 18, 1865.

Respectfully returned.

The major-general commanding believes from his own observation that to this brigade is due the report of the First Division, Sixth Corps, firing into the Fifth Corps. He saw them fire into, or more properly over, General Ayres' division that was reforming, and also into the brigade of the Sixth Corps in their front, but fortunately at so great an elevation as to be nearly harmless. The men fell out of line rapidly and joined the fugitives from other brigades that they were formed to stop and give cover to while reforming. The newness of the organization is the best excuse that can be given for such conduct and demands the most earnest efforts of its officers to discipline the men and make them more steady in the excitement of battle.

By command of Major-General Warren:

FRED. T. LOCKE,
Brevet Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 96.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Edgar M. Gregory, Ninety-first Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,
March 28, 1865.

CAPTAIN: According to instructions received from headquarters, on the morning of the 25th I moved my brigade to the defenses at Hatcher's Run and occupied the same, my lines extending from the extreme left of the works to the Second Corps; we so occupied the works until 8 p. m., when one brigade of the Second Corps being removed, we extended our lines so as to fill up the interval. Nothing of importance transpired, and the enemy did not make their appearance. We occupied the defenses until about 11 a. m. of the 26th instant, when we moved back to our camp, according to instructions from headquarters.

Very respectfully,

E. M. GREGORY,
Brevet Brigadier-General.

Capt. WILLIAM FOWLER,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, First Brigade.

No. 97.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Alfred L. Pearson, One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

HDQRS. THIRD BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,
February 13, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the movements and operations of this command during the 5th, 6th, and 7th days of February, 1865:

In obedience to orders I moved from camp near Petersburg, Va., on Sunday, February 5, at 6.30 a. m., passing along the line of the Weldon Railroad in the direction of Reams' Station. Left the railroad before reaching that point and moved in the direction of Dinwiddie Court-House, crossing Rowanty Creek at 2 p. m., and halted about three miles from the Court-House. Placed the command in line and bivouacked. Threw out a strong picket force connecting with the Second Brigade, First Division, on my right and Third Division on the left. At 11.30 p. m. received orders to withdraw the picket-line and to move back, covering the First and Second Brigades of First Division.

Marched until daylight, when we halted near Hatcher's Run and rested until 10 a. m. (6th), when, by orders received from Brevet Major-

General Griffin, commanding First Division, moved to a line of partially constructed works (thrown up by the enemy) occupied by a brigade of the Second Corps. Relieved said brigade and placed my command in line of battle, right resting at Armstrong's Mill on Hatcher's Run and extending along the line of works to within fifty yards of the Vaughan road. Threw out a strong picket-line in my front and built a good line of works. Remained in that position until 4.15 p. m., when I received the following order:

FEBRUARY 5 [6], 1865—4 p. m.

Brevet Major-General GRIFFIN:

I want to take your right brigade from the line further to the right. I wish you would have the commanding officer of that brigade place himself there on the right to receive a call from me.

G. K. WARREN,
Major-General, Commanding.

In pursuance of said order and by direction of a staff officer from Major-General Warren, I moved my brigade (through the line of works) by the flank through a strip of woods. The enemy at this time opened on us with a battery of 3-inch guns on my right, killing and wounding a few of my men. Was met by Major-General Warren who ordered me to place my command in line of battle, which I immediately did, my right resting in rear of center of one of the brigades of Third Division and extending along to rear of a brigade of Second Division and in following order: Thirty-second Massachusetts (Colonel Edmonds); One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers (Capt. J. T. Bell); Sixteenth Michigan (Brevet Colonel Partridge); One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers (Brevet Colonel Herring); Twentieth Maine (Lieutenant-Colonel Gilmore); Eighty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers (Lieutenant-Colonel Rogers); Ninety-first Pennsylvania Volunteers (Captain Donnell), and First Michigan (Lieutenant-Colonel Lockley). Had no sooner formed than I received orders from Major-General Warren (in person) to double-quick a portion of brigade to the front and report to Brevet Major-General Ayres, whose troops were then hotly engaged with the enemy. Took the One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers and Thirty-second Massachusetts Volunteers, and double-quickened them by the left flank to the front and quickly placed them on the left of a brigade of Second Division near Dabney's Mill, where they immediately became fiercely engaged with the enemy.

By order of General Ayres I brought up another regiment (Sixteenth Michigan) and placed it on the right of the brigade of the Second Division spoken of above, with orders to the commanding officer (Colonel Partridge) to hold the position as long as possible. The brigade on my right having broken, I proceeded to bring up the rest of the brigade, but was met by a flank fire, which caused the troops to falter and finally to fall back. At the same time the Thirty-second Massachusetts and One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers were forced to fall back in consequence of a body of the enemy's troops attacking them on their left and also from a severe fire from their rear, which, in my opinion, came from troops of the Third Division of Fifth Corps and a mass of troops (seemingly without officers) of the Sixth Corps, who had become partially demoralized. After much hard labor and exertion the brigade was again nearly reformed, when a volley from our rear (killing and wounding many, among whom was Captain Smith of the Eighty-third Pennsylvania, killed) caused my command to break. Fell back a short distance, and again reformed and advanced in good order to the edge of the woods and again became engaged. The enemy having retired I placed the brigade in a new and more favorable position, forming on the right of a brigade of Sixth Corps which was being reorganized, and threw out the First Michigan Volunteers and One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers as skirmishers. Remained in that position until relieved by Brevet Brigadier-General Winthrop's brigade of Second Division, when (by order received from General Warren) I moved back to and occupied my old position near Hatcher's Run. Remained there all night and during the day of the 7th.

I cannot speak too highly of the conduct and gallant bearing of the following-named officers, who did all officers could to insure success, viz, Col. J. Cushing Edmands, Lieut. Col. J. A. Cunningham, Maj. E. O. Shepard (wounded and taken prisoner), Thirty-second Massachusetts Volunteers; Bvt. Col. Charles P. Herring, One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers (wounded); Bvt. Col. B. F. Partridge, Sixteenth Michigan Veteran Volunteers; Adjutant Laird, Sixteenth Michigan Veteran Volunteers; Capt. John T. Bell, commanding One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Capt. George P. McClelland, One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers; and also the following-named officers acting on my staff: Capt. E. S. Farnsworth, Thirty-second Massachusetts Volunteers, acting assistant adjutant-general; Capt. George F. Morgan, One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, acting brigade inspector; Lieut. George W. Williams, One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, acting aide-de-camp; Lieut. William Griffin, Twentieth Maine Volunteers, acting aide-de-camp. I would also make especial mention of Private John Gottlieb Heydlauff, Company B, Sixteenth Michigan Volunteers, who acted as color-bearer and bugler of my brigade, and who placed himself on the front line, and by constantly sounding the brigade call did much to help reorganize the troops of the brigade. I would earnestly recommend that a gold medal be granted him for meritorious conduct.

Following is a numerical list of casualties during engagements: Officers—killed, 3; wounded, 7; missing, 1; total, 11. Enlisted men—killed, 15; wounded, 122; missing, 30; total, 167. Aggregate, 178.

Respectfully submitted.

A. L. PEARSON,

Brevet Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding.

Capt. GEORGE M. LAUGHLIN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

[First Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,

February 18, 1865.

Respectfully returned.

The major-general commanding witnessed the action of this brigade until the brigade of the Sixth Corps came up, and the latter did not fire into Pearson's brigade. The fire complained of came from Colonel Burr's brigade, but did not amount to much in effect. This part of the within report ought to be corrected. The firing from the rear is mainly attributable to the mass of fugitives rushing from the front upon the lines formed to stop them. Their fire did not occasion their lines to break in the first instance.

By command of Major-General Warren:

FRED. T. LOUCK,

Brevet Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Second indorsement.]

HEADQRS. THIRD BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,
February 22, 1865.

Respectfully reforwarded.

I am compelled, after mature consideration, to return my report unaltered. I did not see Colonel Burr's brigade until after I had fallen back to the open field. The first shots that were fired from the rear into my troops came from the Third Division and when my men were engaged and in good order at the old mill. Colonel Burr's brigade then could not have been within 800 yards of me. After I had fallen back and was trying to reform, I rode up to a person, whom I supposed to be an officer, wearing a Sixth Corps badge, and asked him to stop his men and make them cease firing, as my own men were in front. He replied: "By God, you do not command this regiment. Colonel —— (I have forgotten the name) commands here." I am willing to withdraw my entire report.

A. L. PEARSON,
Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding.

No. 98.

Report of Capt. George R. Abbott, First Battalion Maine Sharpshooters, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST MAINE SHARPshootERS,
March 28, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with instructions from brigade headquarters I respectfully submit the following report of the proceedings of this command on the 25th instant:

Left camp about 7 a. m. the 25th instant, in light marching order, proceeded to brigade headquarters, and there joined brigade; marched thence to near corps headquarters; remained until noon. Then took up line of march to the position of the Second Corps, occupying the breast-works vacated by them. About 6 p. m. moved to front; formed line of battle (constituting the third in number) in support of part of First Division. Returned to camp about 10 p. m. Was not engaged with enemy, consequently no casualties.

Respectfully submitted.

GEO. R. ABBOTT,
Captain, Commanding First Maine Sharpshooters.
 Capt. E. S. FARNSWORTH,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 99.

Report of Lieut. Col. Walter G. Morrill, Twentieth Maine Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTIETH MAINE VOLUNTEERS,
March 28, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that this regiment left camp about 7 o'clock Saturday a. m., March 25, 1865, and proceeded toward the right of the army, remaining there until noon. From thence proceeded toward the left near Hatcher's Run, acting as support to the Second Corps in their advance. Remained upon the field in their support during the engagement, then proceeded to camp, which was reached about 11 p. m. Lost one man, slightly wounded.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WALTER G. MORRILL,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Twentieth Maine Volunteers.

Capt. E. S. FARNSWORTH,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Brigade.

No. 100.

Report of Lieut. Col. James A. Cunningham, Thirty-second Massachusetts Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS THIRTY-SECOND MASSACHUSETTS VOLUNTEERS,

March 28, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with circular from Third Brigade headquarters relating to the operations of this command on the 25th instant, I have the honor to make the following report:

In obedience to orders received, the command was put under arms at 7 a. m. and repaired to brigade headquarters; then marched, in company with brigade, about one mile down the railroad; remained there three hours, and returned. Marched to the front to support the Second Corps, but was not actively engaged, and no casualties occurred in the command, which was in the second line of battle.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAS. A. CUNNINGHAM,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. EZRA S. FARNSWORTH,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 101.

Report of Maj. William O. Colt, Eighty-third Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Sixteenth Michigan Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS SIXTEENTH MICHIGAN INFANTRY,

March 28, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report, in compliance with instructions from brigade headquarters of this date, that the Sixteenth Michigan Infantry Veteran Volunteers, of which I was in command upon the 25th instant, left camp that morning immediately upon the bugle sounding the assembly at brigade headquarters, and was the second regiment to reach the appointed place of assembly, and remained with the brigade until about 5 p. m., when the regiment was ordered to advance upon the left of the One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers and relieve a portion of the Second Corps. Upon arriving at the position directed to a sharp musketry fire was encountered from the front and right, which was replied to for about ten minutes, when the firing ceased on that portion of the line. Casualties were very slight—one man killed, Private Davis, Company D, and Lieutenant Nellis, Company I, slightly wounded. The regiment remained in this position until about 10 p. m., when orders were received to return to camp. Throughout the entire day the officers and men behaved well.

I have the honor to be, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. O. COLT,
Major, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. E. S. FARNSWORTH,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Brigade.

No. 102.

Report of Lieut. Col. Chauncey P. Rogers, Eighty-third Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.

HQRS. EIGHTY-THIRD PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
March 28, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that, in obedience to orders received, I moved with my command on the morning of the 25th instant to the field in front of Third Brigade headquarters, and there awaited orders. At 9 a. m. I received orders to follow the One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, which I did in all its peregrinations. About 6 p. m., from near the Smith house, moved out with other regiments of the brigade to, as I understood, support General Miles' division of the Second Corps. After arriving in rear of General Miles' line I was requested by Colonel ———, commanding a brigade of the Second Corps, to support him, which I did in a desperate assault on the dense woods in our front. My regiment was not at any time during the day engaged with the enemy. Two enlisted men, severely wounded by random shots, was the only loss I sustained. Shortly before midnight, with other regiments of the brigade, I returned to my old camp.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. P. ROGERS,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. E. S. FARNSWORTH,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 103.

Report of Lieut. Col. Eli G. Sellers, Ninety-first Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.

HQRS. NINETY-FIRST PENNSYLVANIA VETERAN VOLS.,
March 28, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report the following operations of my command on the 25th instant:

Moved from camp about 6.30 a. m.; halted at brigade headquarters and awaited orders. Marched to the right along the railroad about two miles and halted. About 12 m. moved to the support of the Second Corps; lay in reserve outside of breast-works; moved into breast-works about 3 p. m. About 5 p. m. moved out in front of breast-works and formed on the right of second line of battle, in rear of One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, while the Second Corps was engaged. About 9 p. m. returned to camp.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ELI G. SELLERS,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. E. S. FARNSWORTH,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 104.

Reports of Bvt. Lieut. Col. Henry O'Neill, One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-7 and March 25.

HDQRS. 118TH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

February 12, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with instructions contained in circular from headquarters Third Brigade, dated February 11, 1865, I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of this command, together with the casualties of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

On the 5th left camp near Petersburg at 6.30 a. m.; marched to and crossed a small stream near the rebel Dr. Perkins' farm; continued the march until 5.30 p. m. and bivouacked. At 11.30 p. m. commenced falling back toward Hatcher's Run, and, crossing Pebble Run, halted on the bank of Hatcher's Run at 3 a. m. on the morning of the 6th. At 9 a. m. moved into position and formed a line, the right resting on Hatcher's Run; pickets were then sent forward and the remainder of the command employed in throwing up breast-works. Remained in this position until 4 p. m. when we advanced to meet the enemy and soon became sharply engaged. Reached a hastily constructed line of works belonging to the enemy and held them a short time. The troops on our right falling back soon caused the entire line to waver and retreat. A portion of the regiment was rallied and advanced as skirmishers, and remained in that position until 7.30 p. m., when they were relieved.

Remained on the night of the 6th and the whole of the 7th in the works near Hatcher's Run, performing picket and fatigue duty.

Casualties on the 6th instant.*

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. O'NEILL,

Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. GEORGE F. MORGAN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

HDQRS. 118TH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

March 28, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with instructions contained in circular of present date, I have the honor to report that at 7 a. m. 26th [25th] instant

* Nominal list, omitted, shows 1 officer killed and 2 officers and 4 enlisted men wounded.

the command was placed under arms and moved out at once. Marched to near headquarters Fifth Army Corps; there halted until about 11 a. m. Then marched to front of works of Second Corps; moved from point to point until about 6 p. m., when this command advanced with a part of the brigade and relieved a portion of the Second Corps line of battle, then engaged. Commenced firing as soon as the command was halted and continued it at intervals until dark. Remained in line undisturbed until about 10 p. m. Were then withdrawn from the front and marched to camp, arriving there at 12 p. m.

This command experienced no losses in the operations of the day.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. O'NEILL,
Bvt. Lieut. Col., Comdg. 118th Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Capt. E. S. FARNSWORTH,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 105.

*Reports of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Romeyn B. Ayres, U. S. Army, commanding
Second Division, of operations February 5-7.*

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
February 14, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to report that this division marched from camp on Sunday morning, 5th instant. Resistance was offered by a detachment of rebels (who had destroyed the bridge) at the crossing of the Rowanty (Hatcher's Run). The place was quickly carried by the Third Brigade, and a portion of the defenders captured. The division proceeded and took up a position on the Quaker road. Marched that night on the Vaughan road to the crossing of Hatcher's Run. The First Brigade was sent out next morning along the road to support the cavalry. Later I received an order to support the Third Division in a reconnaissance to Dabney's Mill. I sent an order to withdraw the First Brigade in time for it to take its place in the column, but the enemy having advanced along the Vaughan road, that brigade became briskly engaged to my left and could not be withdrawn. Having received notice from General Crawford that his left was hard pressed, I was pushing forward rapidly with two brigades, marching in two lines by a flank in the thick underbrush ascending a ridge, when a quantity of our cavalry, riding rapidly, came on to my ranks suddenly. A portion of my troops were swept away, but I pushed rapidly on with what I had, soon engaged the enemy, and quickly retook the mill site, which I held, re-enforced by three regiments of the First Division, till the troops on my right were pressed back by overwhelming numbers. My troops then fell back to the open ground and were subsequently withdrawn to the position held previous. I refer you to the reports of the brigade commanders for further particulars of their operations. Those officers—Brevet Brigadier-General Winthrop, Brevet Brigadier-General Gwyn, and Colonel Bowerman, Eighth [Fourth] Maryland Volunteers—seconded me with zeal and energy. General Winthrop handsomely repulsed the enemy's attack on the Vaughan road. I must bear testimony in this connection to the zeal, intelligence, and good conduct of my staff—Bvt. Col. C. E. LaMotte, Fourth Delaware Volunteers, acting assistant inspector-general; Bvt. Maj. W. W. Swan, Seventeenth U. S. Infantry, acting assistant adjutant-general; First Lieut. R. P. Warren, One hundred and forty-sixth New York Volunteers, aide-de-camp; First Lieut. John J. Diehl, Fifteenth New York Heavy Artillery, aide-de-camp.

The courage and fidelity of my mounted messengers under trying circumstances entitles them to be named in this report. They are: Henry Bonnet, Company D, Fifteenth New York Heavy Artillery, standard-bearer and acting corporal; John T. Thomson, Company I, Eighth Maryland Volunteers; William H. Yingling, Company I, Eighth Maryland Volunteers; John T. Bratt, Company H, Eighth Maryland Volunteers; Munroe Fowler, Company H, Eighth Maryland Volunteers; John T. Mackison, Company H, Eighth Maryland Volunteers, severely wounded.

Tabular and nominal lists of casualties will be forwarded as soon as completed.

Brevet Brigadier-General Pearson, commanding the re-enforcements from the First Division, bore himself with gallantry.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. B. AYRES,

Bvt. Maj. Gen., Comdg. Second Division, Fifth Army Corps.

Bvt. Col. FRED. T. LOCKE,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., Fifth Army Corps, Army of the Potomac.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
February 18, 1865.

Respectfully returned to Brevet Major-General Ayres.

General Warren requests to know particularly whether the retiring of the division from Dabney's Mill to the breast-works was due to orders received or to the misconduct of the troops on the right of it, or to the misconduct of the troops of the division itself, or to an irresistible force of the enemy. The general commanding does not think there were sufficient reasons for good troops to give way. The losses are not sufficient to justify a retreat. It was his positive orders to remain and fight it out, and he wishes his troops to understand that he will not shield them in his reports. If they won't fight the country must know it. General Warren knows that General Ayres used his best efforts to make them hold their ground and, for his honor as well as that of the commander of the corps, wishes to have it plainly stated that it was the troops and not the generals who would not fight.

By command of Major-General Warren:

FRED. T. LOCKE,

Brevet Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General.

—
HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,
March 17, 1865.

COLONEL: In accordance with the indorsement on my report of the fight near Hatcher's Run on the 6th instant [ultimo], I enter more into detail concerning the fight.

A portion of my command was on picket at the old camp when the cavalry ran through the troops (see report). I was pushing rapidly forward to support the left of the Third Division, so instead of halting till I could get together all my troops, I moved on with what I had. The re-enforcement sent me I ordered formed, one regiment to the right of the mill site, two on the left of my troops. I then ordered my men to roll up some logs near by for a cover, and was directing this when the two regiments just alluded to suddenly moved, without orders, some 300 yards forward, forming a line somewhat at an angle with the main line, having the mill site, say, at the apex. To the right and front of the site was a thick grove of small pines, covering the left of the Third Division. General Pearson, commanding the re-enforcements, says (and for the above reasons, their being masked by the pines, it may well be so) that the Third Division fire struck his troops. Those two regiments then broke. About this time a retrograde movement commenced along the whole line, I presume without and against all orders and authority, though I have recently seen an editorial in a Philadelphia paper which, speaking as though by authority, says that the Third Division came back by command. Between Dabney's Mill and the open ground in front of our breast-works are several ridges, with marshy ground in the valleys between. I seized upon the occasion of arriving on these ridges to use every effort, assisted by my staff and messengers, to halt the troops and form lines, well satisfied from the favorable nature of the ground that, could this be done, the enemy could be repulsed. I succeeded in one case in halting quite a force, but the main mass to my right sweeping along, the contagion spread to those who had halted and they could not be held.

On arriving at the open, whilst halting and forming the troops, a line of the troops was brought up in rear, when, some little agitation occurring in the edge of the woods and a few persons riding out at a gallop, this line behind mine lost presence of mind and fired into mine. I think my men were justified in not remaining there; numbers of them were struck. When I pushed forward at first to support the left of the Third Division, I supposed General Gwyn, the most of whose brigade was disorganized by the cavalry, would rejoin as soon as he got his men together. He seems not to have found the direction, and to have gone forward in the woods quite to my left. This accounts for his finding himself without anyone on his right or left. This command (General Gwyn's) had a flight in the woods, doubtless with the troops of the enemy which attacked ours on the Vaughan road as they were endeavoring to pass around us to join the enemy near Dabney's Mill. The troops with me struck them and pushed them at the double-quick. In fact, my division fought on an extended front and held the ground covered by it, beginning with my first brigade on the Vaughan road and running around to Dabney's Mill. At one time (when I sent for re-enforcements) there was a strong effort made by the enemy to push through to the (our) left of the mill site. That effort was foiled with the assistance of those re-enforcements. It will be seen that I arrived at the mill site with quite a small force, mostly Maryland troops. When the line gave way there was no panic in these troops; they had not fired for some time, and I am persuaded to believe were out of ammunition. Whether the troops on my right (the question is asked in the indorsement) were justified in falling back, I am not prepared to say, though I had received the impression that they were overborne by superior numbers. I gave my attention to my own command. It did not, and certainly would not have been justified in falling back alone.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. B. AYRES,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding Division.

Bvt. Col. FRED. T. LOCKE,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Fifth Army Corps.

No 106.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Frederick Winthrop, Fifth New York Veteran Infantry, commanding First Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

HDQRS. FIRST BRIGADE, SECOND DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,
February 14, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the command during the recent movement on Hatcher's Run:

At 8 a. m., on the 5th instant, broke camp near Garley's house and marched down the Halifax road to Rowanty Creek; crossed the creek and so on to the intersection of the military pike road with the Vaughan road. Here the command lay in line of battle until midnight, when it moved back on the Vaughan road and occupied a line of breast-works to the left of the road, about a mile west of the run. At 1 p. m. moved out to the support of Gregg's cavalry, who were skirmishing heavily with the enemy some distance farther down the road. Relieved the cavalry pickets with the One hundred and forty-sixth New York Volunteers, and deployed the Fifth New York Veteran Volunteers and One hundred and fortieth New York Volunteers on the right-hand side and the Fifteenth New York Heavy Artillery on the left-hand side of the road in a large open field. These dispositions had hardly been made before our cavalry advanced to the attack with two brigades, and a third in support. They soon became actively engaged with the enemy's infantry, and, getting rather roughly handled, retired in considerable confusion, the enemy closely following. I immediately ordered up my three regiments at a double quick, and, delivering some very fair volleys, succeeded in checking their advancing column and driving it back to its shelter in the woods. Once or twice again the enemy attempted to advance over the open, but each time were handsomely repulsed by my troops, who fought with great spirit. Finally, about 5 p. m., being relieved by the First Brigade, First Division, and having replenished our cartridge boxes, we were ordered out on picket, covering the road leading to Dabney's Mill, where we remained until the afternoon of the 7th.

I regret to mention the loss of Capt. Charles S. Montgomery, commanding Fifth New York Veteran Volunteers, who was shot through the brain during the engagement. He handled his regiment in a most creditable manner, and is a severe loss to the command. It is but simple justice to say that I have rarely seen troops fight with more animation or maintain their ground so stubbornly against such superior numbers as confronted them in the earlier part of the engagement. With such troops I shall always feel confident of success. From my staff—Lieutenant Campbell, acting assistant adjutant-general, and Lieutenant Leatz, aide-de-camp, and Lieutenant Raymond, pioneer officer—I received the most efficient assistance, and each and all of these gentlemen were conspicuous along the line, encouraging the men by their gallant bearing.

I have the honor to remain, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRED. WINTHROP,
Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Bvt. Maj. W. W. SWAN,
Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Second Division, Fifth Army Corps.

[First indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
February 18, 1865.

Respectfully referred to Brevet Major-General Griffin.

According to the orders of the major-general commanding, Brevet Brigadier-General Winthrop came under your orders. Will you please state whether or not he received any orders from you during the afternoon of the 6th instant, and make any indorsement on this report you think called for. Please return this report with indorsement.

By command of Major-General Warren:

FRED. T. LOCKE,
Brevet Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Second indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,
March 8, 1865.

I would respectfully state that General Winthrop received no important orders from me whilst engaging the enemy. I was not aware that he was supporting the cavalry until after he had been relieved by First Brigade, First Division, and when I went on the field General Winthrop reported to me that his command had not a round of ammunition.

CHAS. GRIFFIN,
Brevet Major-General.

[Third indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
March 8, 1865.

Respectfully referred to Brevet Brigadier-General Winthrop, who will please state whether or not it was a fact that his command had entirely exhausted their ammunition at the time he was relieved by the First Brigade, First Division.

By command of Major-General Warren:

FRED. T. LOCKE,
Brevet Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Fourth indorsement.]

HDQRS. FIRST BRIGADE, SECOND DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,
March 13, 1865.

Respectfully returned.

It is a fact that the brigade had certainly exhausted their ammunition at the time it was relieved by the First Brigade, First Division. For a considerable length of time before the First Brigade, First Division, came up a large number of my men had not a single round left in their boxes. So soon as I was relieved by the First Brigade, First Division, I retired 75 to 100 yards in rear of my position and replenished my boxes with the ammunition which I had just then succeeded in procuring. I received no orders of any description from Major-General Griffin during the time my troops were engaged, something over two hours, he not being on the field at that period. While I was replenishing my cartridge-boxes General Griffin rode up and, so soon as my troops were all supplied, I reported to him, as he was then the senior officer present. Shortly after this I received orders to report to Major-

General Warren with my command. Out of ammunition, is an old story, and with me has always been received with a certain amount of suspicion, but in this instance there was some merit in it.

FRED. WINTHROP,

Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding.

No. 107.

Report of Col. Richard N. Bowerman, Fourth Maryland Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQRS. SECOND BRIGADE, SECOND DIV., FIFTH CORPS,
Near Hatcher's Run, Va., February 12, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report the following as the part taken by this brigade in the affairs of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

Marched from camp near the Gurley house Sunday, the 5th instant, 7 a. m., going toward Hatcher's Run, crossing same about noon; proceeded till 4 p. m., going into position at the Vaughan house on the military pike. At 11 p. m. marched on Vaughan road back to Hatcher's Run. Daylight, Monday, 6th instant, went into breast-works; 2 p. m. followed Crawford's division, forming into two lines, advanced into the woods near the run, an engagement going on. A line of troops going to the rear at this time disarranged the line. Continuing to advance, encountered the enemy charging ahead. The enemy rapidly falling back, reached Dabney's Mill; pressing on about 200 yards beyond, a brisk action commenced. Falling short of ammunition, withdrew slowly to the mill; remained here fighting the enemy till the ammunition gave entirely out, and the troops on the flank having fallen back, the brigade was withdrawn in good order and slowly back to the position occupied previous to going into the battle. Time engaged, about two hours and a half. Tuesday, 7th instant, remained in breast-works.

Herewith is list of casualties.*

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHARD N. BOWERMAN,

Colonel Fourth Regiment Maryland Vol. Infy., Comdg. Brigade.

Maj. W. W. SWAN,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Second Division, Fifth Army Corps.

[First indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
February 18, 1865.

Respectfully returned.

The major-general commanding desires to know whether this brigade retired (when, as is stated within, it was not supported on either its right or left flank) by orders from its division commander, and whether any of our troops were on its right or left flank; and further, whether the enemy assailed on either of its flanks, rendering its position untenable. The major-general commanding the corps wishes to secure his troops from charges thus made in official reports by one part of his command against another, and therefore makes these inquiries so that the report may be made more specific in its allegations against those who left this brigade unsupported. It is his present opinion the brigade left the front without orders and without encountering a sufficient force of the enemy to justify it. It hardly seems creditable that this command should have exhausted its ammunition so soon; but if so, it is no sufficient reason for a brigade commander to retire from the field without orders. If the command was so withdrawn, charges will be preferred against this officer, if it shall appear that he retired his brigade in the face of the enemy without orders or without being driven back by the enemy. This report to be returned.

* Embodied in table, p. 66.

By command of Major-General Warren:

FRED. T. LOCKE,
Brevet Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Second indorsement.]

HDQRS. FOURTH REGIMENT MARYLAND VOL. INFTRY,
March 16, 1865.

Maj. W. W. SWAN,
Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Second Division, Fifth Corps:

MAJOR: In obedience to indorsement I have the honor to report that when the Second Brigade (under my command February 6) was withdrawn from the field there were none of our troops on either of its flanks, and that it was driven back by the superior force of the enemy.

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
RICHD. N. BOWERMAN,
Colonel, Commanding Fourth Regiment Maryland Vol. Inftry.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIG., SECOND DIV., FIFTH CORPS,
February 13, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor, in connection with my report of the 12th instant, to mention the gallant conduct of the brigade staff—Capt. Josiah Bankerd, Fourth Maryland, acting assistant adjutant-general; Capt. Fred. W. Simon, Eighth Maryland, acting inspector-general; Capt. Jesso D. Childs, First Maryland, acting aide-de-camp; also, Maj. Harrison Adreon, commanding Fourth Regiment Maryland Infantry, and Maj. Edward M. Mobley, Seventh Regiment Maryland Infantry. Their conduct was of the most meritorious character and deserving of all praise.

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
RICHD. N. BOWERMAN,
Colonel Fourth Regiment Maryland Vol. Inftry., Comdg. Brigade.
Maj. W. W. SWAN,
Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Second Division, Fifth Army Corps.

No. 108.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. James Gwyn, One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

HDQRS. THIRD BRIGADE, SECOND DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,
February 14, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations during the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

At 6.30 o'clock on the morning of the 5th of February my command moved, in accordance with circular from corps headquarters, of the 4th instant, left in front, in the following order: First, Two hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Col. William Sergeant commanding; second, Third Delaware Volunteers, Maj. James E. Baily commanding; third, One hundred and ninety-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, Capt. P. L. Norton, commanding; fourth, One hundred and ninetieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Capt. R. M. Birkman commanding; fifth, One hundred and fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, Capt. J. W. Scott commanding; sixth, Fourth Delaware Volunteers, Bvt. Maj. D. H. Kent commanding. The route was along the Halifax road, my brigade being in the advance. The cavalry being unable to overcome the opposition made by the enemy at Rowanty Creek, the One hundred and ninetieth and One hundred and ninety-first Pennsylvania Volunteers were advanced as skirmishers, supported by Fourth Delaware Volunteers, and ordered to take the works beyond the creek. The other regiments of brigade were also brought up. But few men could get across, as the bridge was destroyed. These few, however, succeeded in dislodging the enemy and capturing a few prisoners. After a short delay, to cover the crossing of remainder of division, the brigade again advanced some three or four miles and took up position before dark on the left of Second Brigade. The march was again resumed at 11 o'clock, and continued until reaching the crossing of Vaughan road at Hatcher's Run, when the brigade was massed in reserve. During morning of the 6th instant relieved General Winthrop's brigade in the works. In the afternoon moved right in front, following the Second Brigade to the right and in front of the works occupied by the First Division. Then, forming in two lines, moved by the right flank through the woods till the Second Brigade had gained position.* While waiting the order to advance the left of brigade was broken by the stampede of a portion of General Gregg's cavalry, but was afterward rallied and placed in position on left of Second Brigade. I advanced the brigade and engaged the enemy for about two hours; not being supported on either my right or left flank I returned to crest of hill in front of breast-work. Tuesday, 7th instant, reoccupied the line of works on left of Second Division.

I herewith transmit nominal and tabular list of casualties during the engagement.†

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES GWYN,

Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding Brigade.

Bvt. Maj. W. W. SWAN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,

February 18, 1865.

Respectfully returned.

The major-general commanding desires to know whether this brigade retired (when, as is stated within, it was not supported on either its right or left flank) by orders from its division commander, and whether any of our troops were on its right or left flank, and further, whether, the enemy assailed on either of its flanks, rendering its position untenable. The major-general commanding the corps wishes to secure his troops from charges thus made in official reports by one part of his command against another, and therefore makes these inquiries so that the report may be made more specific in its allegations against those who left this brigade unsupported. It is his present opinion the brigade left the front without orders and without encountering a sufficient force of the enemy to justify it. This report to be returned.

* The following portion of this report was subsequently amended. See p. 285.

† Embodied in table, p. 66.

By command of Major-General Warren:

FRED. T. LOCKE,
Brevet Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General.

HDQRS. THIRD BRIG., SECOND DIV., FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
March 15, 1865.

Bvt. Col. FRED. T. LOCKE,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Fifth Corps:

COLONEL: I have the honor to transmit herewith my report of transactions, dated the 14th of February, together with an amended report, which I request to substitute for it. In explanation of this request I desire to say that when I made the first report I did not intend to charge dereliction of duty upon any troops when I said that I was "not supported on either my right or left flank," but deemed my position in that respect then, as I do now, as the direct result of the confusion caused by the cavalry breaking through a portion of my brigade. I was not conscious of using language which would bear such construction, but see now, the report having been returned to me, that such construction can be placed upon it. In the report which I desire now to send, I have avoided language which makes any charge by implication upon other troops than my own, and have endeavored to be more explicit throughout. In case my request may be granted, I have the honor further to request that the first report may be returned to me. I trust that the amended report will be deemed a satisfactory reply to the inquiries in the indorsement of the commanding general, dated the 18th of February.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES GWYN,
Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding Brigade.

[Inclosure.*]

The order was then given to move by the left flank to the front, and the movement had commenced, when the brigade was broken by the stampede of a portion of our cavalry, which came back directly through it and caused it to divide, and threw it into such confusion for a few minutes that the brigade never again, through the day, became thoroughly united. A large portion of the brigade was rallied, and I advanced with it a considerable distance to the front engaging the enemy for about two hours. At the expiration of this time, finding that my course had been different from that of the troops on my right, and that consequently I was without support upon either flank, and that the enemy's fire had ceased in my front and was becoming quite brisk upon both flanks, I considered the position untenable by the troops of my command and retired to the crest of the hill in front of the breast-works.

* So much of this report as corresponds with that on p. 284 is here omitted.

A D D E N D A .

HDQRS. THIRD BRIG., SECOND DIV., FIFTH ARMY CORPS,

February 17, 1865.

Bvt. Maj. W. W. SWAN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General:

MAJOR: I have the honor to forward the following names of officers of my command who, under my personal observation, especially distinguished themselves in the engagements of Rowanty Creek and Hatch-er's Run on the 5th and 6th instant:

Col. William Sergeant, commanding Two hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Adj. Morris Shlesinger, Two hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Bvt. Maj. D. H. Kent, commanding Fourth Delaware Volunteers; Adj. William H. Cloward, Fourth Delaware Volunteers; Capt. R. M. Birkman, commanding One hundred and ninetieth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Capt. P. L. Norton, commanding One hundred and ninety-first Pennsylvania Volunteers; Capt. J. W. Scott, commanding One hundred and fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers; Capt. D. D. Joseph, Third Delaware Volunteers. I have also the honor to refer to the gallant behavior of the following members of my staff: Bvt. Capt. H. Gawthrop, Fourth Delaware Volunteers, acting assistant adjutant-general; Bvt. Capt. Charles H. Hand, One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, aide-de-camp; Bvt. Capt. John L. Benzon, One hundred and ninety-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, aide-de-camp; First Lieut. Pierce Neals, Fourth Delaware Volunteers, pioneer officer; Bvt. Maj. Thomas E. Carter, One hundred and fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, brigade inspector.

These officers I cannot too highly praise for their coolness, courage, and gallantry.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES GWYN,

Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding Brigade.

No. 109.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Henry A. Morrow, Twenty-fourth Michigan Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, Third Division, of operations February 5-6.

HDQRS. THIRD BRIG., THIRD DIV., FIFTH ARMY CORPS,

February 9, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the Third Brigade in the late operations of the army on the left, near Dabney's Mill:

The brigade was composed of the following regiments: Fifty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, Lieut. Col. J. T. Jack, 9 officers and 155 men; One hundred and twenty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Maj. West Funk, 5 officers and 82 men; One hundred and forty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieut. Col. H. N. Warren, 8 officers and 135 men; Ninety-fourth New York Volunteers, Capt. George French, 9 officers and 212 men; Ninety-fifth New York Volunteers, Lieut. Col. James Crenney, 6 officers and 247 men; One hundred and forty-seventh New York Volunteers, Capt. James Coey, 15 officers and 249 men. The One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania

Veteran Volunteers was attached to my command on the 5th instant, and its movements are included in this report. The brigade, having 59 officers and 1,301 muskets, making a total of 1,360, moved from camp at 6.30 o'clock on the morning of the 5th instant, following the First Brigade, under General Bragg, and after a march, variously estimated at from fifteen to eighteen miles, halted near ——— Mills, on Gravelly Creek. Pickets were established, and the men had built fires and were preparing to bivouac, when orders were received to retrace our steps for the distance of two miles in order to form a junction with the Second Brigade, under General Baxter. This was accordingly done; the troops, though greatly fatigued with their long march and suffering with intense cold, exhibited the greatest good feeling and cheerfulness. I at once forwarded a strong line of pickets in our front, and extended them to a swamp on our left, having advanced posts on the road near ——— Mills. The duty of establishing the pickets was intrusted in its details to Lieutenant-Colonel Jack, who discharged the duty in a manner altogether satisfactory. This officer deserves credit also for the handsome manner in which he withdrew his pickets the next morning. To appreciate the difficulties under which this officer labored and the delicate task he had to perform, it is only necessary to state that he was totally unacquainted with the ground, which was much broken and covered with a dense wood. It may be stated here also that it was currently reported among the troops, and generally believed, that we were in the immediate vicinity of a division of rebel infantry.

On the morning of the 6th, before daylight, the brigade was again placed in motion and marched to Hatcher's Run, where with other troops of the division it was bivouacked on the right bank. Early in the afternoon we recrossed the run and filed off through a woods in a northerly direction. The First Brigade was in the advance, and on reaching a cleared field, distant perhaps a quarter of a mile from our bivouac, the First Brigade was deployed and advanced in line of battle into the woods beyond, and at once became engaged with the enemy's skirmishers. My command was now formed in line of battle, perhaps 300 yards in rear and overlapping the left of the First Brigade, my right and left being a little refused, and in this order advanced. The Second Brigade subsequently took position on my left. General Bragg was now actively engaged in our front, and I diminished the distance between the brigades to about 100 yards. The left of the First Brigade being driven back and falling considerably to the right, my front became entirely uncovered, and I ordered the troops at once into action. The several regiments advanced in handsome style at the double-quick, and drove back the advancing enemy for a considerable distance into a wood beyond a small cleared field.

The fighting was now heavy and continuous, and our losses very considerable. This line was held by us until the troops fell back, late in the afternoon, though the bulk of our ammunition had long before that time been exhausted. The enemy repeatedly pressed forward in our front, but was as often repulsed. It was here that all our losses occurred, and it may give some idea of the fierceness of the contest when it is told that our losses number 1 officer killed and 9 wounded, and 22 men killed and 171 wounded, a total of 10 officers and 193 men killed and wounded on this single line of battle without our yielding a foot of ground.

Our ammunition failing and the enemy being largely re-enforced, as it now appears, the troops became restless under a galling fire without the means of returning it, and it required the greatest gallantry and exposure on the part of officers to keep the men up to the work. At this time the following regimental officers particularly distinguished themselves: Lieut. Col. James Creney, Ninety-fifth New York Volunteers; Maj. West Funk, One hundred and twenty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers; Captain Coey,* One hundred and forty-seventh New York Volunteers, and Captain Bush, Ninety-fifth New York Volunteers. Colonel Creney and Maj. West Funk seized the colors of their regiments, and rushing to the front, by both word and gesture, urged their men to advance. Captain Coey repeatedly exposed himself in front of his men, attempting in every possible way to keep his command up to their duty. Indeed, I must say the conduct of Colonel Creney, Major Funk, Captains Coey and Bush was of the most daring and inspiring character and deserving of every praise. Colonel Creney, Major Funk, and Captain Coey were each severely wounded. Captain French, Ninety-fourth New York Volunteers, exhibited much coolness throughout the engagement. About 5 o'clock I received a wound in my right side from a musket-ball, and was forced to leave the field, not, however, until I had formally turned over the command to Colonel McCoy, of the One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, and delivered to him the brigade colors, which I happened to hold in my hand at the moment, and which he brought safely back from the field.

Great praise is due to each of the regimental commanders and their officers and men for their gallantry in this engagement. The conduct of officers whom I specially named came under my own observation, and for this reason is prominently noticed in this report. Others may have done as well, though I did not see them.

My thanks are due to the officers of my staff for their prompt, efficient, and gallant assistance rendered throughout the engagement.

Capt. Harrison Lambdin, assistant adjutant-general, deserved special mention for his gallant conduct; he was cool, methodical, and daring, and everywhere on his horse, which was twice wounded, urging forward the troops and inspiring them by his own example.

Lieut. Richard Esmond, acting aide-de-camp, exhibited much courage and coolness under fire; he was conspicuous everywhere on the field for his daring.

Capt. D. J. Dickson, brigade inspector, rendered gallant service. Capt. E. B. Cochrane is deserving more than a passing notice, not only for his conduct during the engagement, but from the fact that his term of service had expired before the troops left camp, but he volunteered to serve with me as an aide. He had his horse shot under him early in the engagement; such devotion is worthy of special mention. Capt. H. R. Whiting and Lieut. George W. Chilson, of the Twenty-fourth Michigan Volunteers, were volunteer aides, and deserve credit for their coolness and the efficient manner in which they discharged their duties.

This report would be imperfect did it fail to notice the gallant conduct of Orderlies James Titus, Ninety-fifth New York Volunteers, Eldridge T. Rogers, One hundred and forty-seventh New York Volunteers, and George H. Hardman, One hundred and forty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, each of whom displayed courage worthy of officers far above them in rank.

The following named officers and enlisted men have been particularly mentioned for gallantry by their respective regimental commanders: Lieut. Alba A. Johnson, Ninety-fourth New York Volunteers, for coolness and bravery; Sergt. Maj. William Shields, One hundred and forty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, who was severely wounded, for distinguished gallantry; Corpl. James N. Walter, One hundred and forty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, promoted to sergeant on the battlefield for bravery in grasping and carrying the colors after the sergeant and two corporals had been wounded; Sergt. Maj. William Boyce, Color-Sergt. Patrick Cashman, Sergt. Peter Fannon, Sergt. John A. McDonald, Sergt. John S. McCoy, Corpl. Volney Russell, Private William Wilson, and Corpl. Patrick Cunningham, all of One hundred and forty-seventh New York Volunteers, volunteered their services to follow Lieutenant Esmond with the brigade colors to the front of the line. Sergeant Fannon was severely wounded, and Private Wilson killed.

* Awarded a Medal of Honor.

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. A. MORROW,
Brevet Brigadier-General.

Maj. E. C. BAIRD, Asst. Adjt. Gen., Third Div., Fifth Army Corps.

—
No. 110.

Report of Col. Thomas F. McCoy, One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations February 6-9.

HDQRS. 107TH PENNSYLVANIA VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,
February 12, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of the Third Brigade in the late engagement, while temporarily under my command:

I was in command of my regiment in the battle of the 6th instant up to the time of the second advance of the brigade across the orchard near Dabney's Mill. This was at the period of the hottest part of the engagement, and when Brevet Brigadier-General Morrow, commanding the brigade, was wounded. Fortunately, being near where the general partially fell from his horse from the stunning effect of his wound, he immediately addressed me, stating that he was wounded, turned over the command to me as the next ranking officer, and placed in my hands the brigade flag, which he had been carrying through the most dangerous part of the engagement. At this time the enemy was making a most vigorous onset upon our lines. Their advancing columns were approaching and putting into our lines a most destructive fire. A great many brave officers and men had been killed and wounded. The battle swayed to and fro again and again, and had been contested with the greatest tenacity. Ammunition that was expected did not arrive to replenish our cartridge-boxes. No supporting column came as was expected and longed for. The enemy had artillery and were using it effectively. We had no artillery in the engagement. It was now nearly night. The line on our left had already fallen back. Our forces that were still on the advance line were battling with great courage, but were rapidly dwindling before a more vigorous and increasing volume of fire. The enemy had, as their fire indicated and as has since been clearly authenticated, large re-enforcements, and were before us in overwhelming numbers. It was time to retire if we would save our brave men now contending without any fair prospects of success. The movement was therefore made as quickly and rapidly as possible to obtain the cover of our works, where the brigade was reformed in the early part of the night and rested on its arms, ready for the arduous duties of the coming day.

During the night a fresh supply of ammunition was received. On the morning of the 7th instant I found myself in command of the following regiments: Fifty-sixth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Jack; One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, Maj. H. J. Sheaffer; One hundred and twenty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieut. R. S. Shute; One hundred and forty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieut. Col. H. N. Warren; Ninety-fourth New York Volunteers, Capt. George French; Ninety-fifth New York Volunteers, Capt. A. McC. Bush, One hundred and forty-seventh New York Volunteers, Capt. John McKinlock. The largest of these regiments did not exceed 200 muskets, and several of them had less than 100. The troops passed a very uncomfortable night, and this morning it began to hail and rain and continued throughout the day, making it a day of extreme hardships upon the soldiers. Early in the day the movement against the enemy commenced. The movement was against the same position of the enemy as yesterday, at Dabney's Mill, but the approach was made from the direction of Hatcher's Run from near the point of Armstrong's Mill. The Second Brigade (Baxter's) led the column, the Third Brigade in support of the First Brigade on the left flank and in reserve. The Second Brigade soon drove the enemy from their first line of rifle-pits. The Third Brigade occupied the position at once, and under the instructions of Brevet Major-General Crawford breast-works were thrown up in this line. While engaged in this we were exposed to the enemy's artillery, and to an attack on the right of the brigade near the run, indicating a design to turn our flank at that point. In order to guard that flank until other troops could be obtained Captain Lambdin, assistant adjutant-general, very opportunely had a force of skirmishers deployed. They were soon attacked, and partly driven back. I then reported the condition of affairs to the general commanding division, and requested that additional troops should be ordered there, which was promptly done, a part of General Bragg's (First) brigade, in command of the general himself, was soon in position, which afforded perfect security to that flank. At this time it was ordered by the general commanding the division to send a regiment of my command to the support of the Second Brigade on the skirmish front. I immediately ordered the Fifty-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers to report to Brigadier-General Baxter, under whose command they did good service the balance of the day.

The battle continued, Baxter again advancing and the enemy retiring to their works and artillery, which were but a few hundred yards in our front. Later in the day, about 4.30 o'clock, the remaining part of the First Brigade (Bragg's), on the left of my command, was transferred to the right, and in order to afford sufficient space for them in the works the Third Brigade was marched by the left flank several hundred yards, the left thrown back, forming almost a semi-circle, and resting on a swamp, beyond which there was a constant firing from the enemy's skirmishers. As soon as this movement was accomplished I was directed to form a line of battle, with the First Brigade on my right, in front of the works, with a view of making another advance, and if possible carrying the enemy's works, a part of the Sixth Corps coming up to occupy the works we were about to evacuate. It was now late in the evening. My command was formed in line on the left of the First Brigade, the left wing, however, being retired, and under instructions from the general commanding division this part of my command was to be brought around upon the line as the movement progressed. This was accomplished at a run, and just before the enemy opened with canister upon the advancing column. Part of the line under this artillery fire gave way and retired to the works in their rear before they could be rallied. That part of the line under Maj. H. J.

Sheaffer, and several other officers whose names I have not been able to obtain, held nearly all the ground gained, and the line being reformed at this advanced point, another line of breast works were thrown up, by direction of the division commander. It was now 10 p. m. The enemy's line and our own were now quite close, but only occasional firing occurred when the pickets were in close proximity. All these operations took place in a pine wood, and during a heavy sleet and rain, the ground being covered with ice and water. Officers and men were greatly exhausted. The lines had been thinned to some extent by straggling to the rear. At 11.30 o'clock I received orders to have my command in readiness to move within an hour. At about 1 o'clock my command, with other troops of the division, were relieved and withdrawn to near the bridge on the east side of Hatcher's Run, where we remained until the afternoon of the 8th, when the brigade was ordered to form a picket line from the run eastward to connect with the cavalry at the Halifax road, at the junction near Reams' Station. This was accomplished before dark of the same evening.

On the morning of the 9th, Brevet Brigadier-General Hofmann having returned from his leave of absence, I was relieved from the command of the brigade and again assumed the command of my regiment.

I cannot close this report without expressing my high appreciation of the services and gallant conduct of Capt. Harrison Lambdin, assistant adjutant-general, and Lieut. Richard Esmond, acting aide-de-camp. Their courage, activity, and efficiency excited my admiration. I would also in this connection add the names of Capt. D. J. Dickson, the brigade inspector, and Lieut. George W. Chilson, acting aide-de-camp, as worthy of commendation for their courage and intelligent discharge of duty. I feel pleasure in acknowledging my indebtedness to these very worthy officers for the important aid rendered me during the brief but important period I had the honor of commanding the Third Brigade.

Not having received the reports of the regimental commanders, I cannot speak of the many officers and non-commissioned officers whose gallantry entitle them to honorable mention. Officers and men fought bravely and well, and certainly merited greater success than it was their fortune to obtain. For particulars I would refer the general commanding the division to the reports of regimental commanders, which will be, if not already, forwarded by Brevet Brigadier-General Morrow, whose duty it is to note all individual acts of gallantry.

The list of casualties will also accompany these reports.

T. F. McCOY,

Colonel 107th Pennsylvania Vet. Vols., Comdg. Third Brigade.

Maj. E. C. BAIRD, Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 111.

Report of Capt. Aaron Bright, jr., Eighty-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-10.*

HDQRS. EIGHTY-EIGHTH PENNSYLVANIA VETERAN VOLS.,

February 11, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report the following as the part taken by this regiment during the movement upon the enemy, viz:

We moved from our camp on Jerusalem plank road on February 5, 1865, and at 6 p. m. arrived two miles to the left of Hatcher's Run; we formed line of battle and remained over night. Morning of February 6 marched at 4 o'clock, and crossed Hatcher's Run and laid in open field until 3 p. m. We recrossed Hatcher's Run, and moved in toward Dabney's Mill; formed line of battle and charged the enemy twice; gained and lost ground. We were fired into from the rear by Sixth Army Corps. We withdrew and lay over night. Morning, February 7, moved to the right, advanced and drove the enemy out of his first line of pits; we then formed heavy skirmish line and charged the enemy's main works twice, and were repulsed each time with heavy loss to regiment. We were then relieved by a part of Sixth Army Corps; we formed on their right and threw up works. February 8, 1865, moved out, recrossed Hatcher's Run, and lay over night. February 9, relieved the One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, of Third Brigade, on picket; remained on picket until 10th; we were relieved by a detachment from several regiments; we then marched to old camp on Jerusalem plank road.

* Of the Second Brigade, Third Division.

The officers and men behaved nobly throughout the entire move, and in one or two instances deserve special mention. First Sergt. William Sands,* Company G; Color-Sergt. D. Devine, Company K, both displayed bravery unequalled throughout any engagement we were ever in.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

AARON BRIGHT, Jr.,
Captain, Commanding Regiment.

Lieutenant LEAVITT,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 112.

Report of Col. Thomas F. McCoy, One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-6.

HDQRS. 107TH PENNSYLVANIA VOL. INFANTRY,
THIRD BRIGADE, THIRD DIVISION, FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
Camp near Hatcher's Run, Va., February 11, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with circular of 10th instant, I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of my regiment in the late movements:

On the morning of the 5th instant, when about to march with the Second Brigade, to which my regiment belonged, I received an order from the brevet major-general commanding the division to report to Brevet Brigadier-General Morrow, temporarily commanding Third (Hofmann's) Brigade, to which command I was conducted by Captain Cochrane, of the staff, when it was then massed in front of corps headquarters. The column was soon on the march, heading in the direction of the Yellow House and Halifax road, and upon reaching followed that road and the Weldon railroad, which run parallel and near together, south in the direction of Reams' Station. When within a mile of the latter point the column moved on the road leading westward, and by a circuitous route in the direction of the Boydton plank road. When near that road, having crossed Rowanty Creek several miles south of where the Vaughan road crosses Hatcher's Run, the corps having formed connection with the Second Corps extended along that road, went into camp for the night. There was but little skirmishing during the day, the column having encountered nothing but a few pickets of the enemy.

*Awarded a Medal of Honor.

While preparing for our bivouac by collecting wood and making fires, the night being very cold and the men weary after the long march of the day, the brigade was again put on the march and returned to the rear of the corps, and bivouacked at the junction of the Vaughan road and the road upon which we had advanced.

On the morning of the 6th we, with the whole corps, were on the march, at 4 o'clock, on the Vaughan road in the direction of Hatcher's Run, near the Armstrong Mill, some three miles distant, and arrived soon after daylight at the point from which the Second Corps had driven the enemy. Here the three divisions composing the corps were concentrated with Gregg's cavalry. It was reported during the forenoon that the enemy was demonstrating in our front. At about 2 p. m. our division received orders to move. We crossed to the west side of the run, the First Brigade leading, ours next, with the Second following, the One hundred and seventh being second in line. After crossing, the head of the column turned toward Dabney's Mill, about a mile distant. The ground in the direction of the enemy, who was posted in force at this point, was rolling and principally covered with a heavy growth of wood, part of it with thick underbrush, a swamp, and several old fields. The lines were soon formed, the First Brigade in advance, ours (the Third) following in support, the Second having deployed to the left. The battle soon began. The enemy's skirmishers were driven in and their first line of rifle-pits taken. The advance was continued, our part of the line in the woods, until we came to an opening of perhaps 150 yards, and just as we reached this point the first line was rapidly retiring under a charge from the enemy and rushed into our line. Under the trying circumstances we had great difficulty in preserving our line, but did succeed in so doing and in pouring a heavy fire into the advancing column of the enemy, causing him to stop at the opposite margin of the field. Our brigade, now becoming the front line, with a cheer charged across the field and into the opposite woods, driving him in turn through this woods into his fortifications at or near the Dabney Mill. Forming our line along the margin of this opening, the fight was continued with great tenacity, and evidently with considerable loss on both sides. It was here that the enemy brought artillery to bear upon our line, partly enfilading it. We brought no artillery into the action. Ammunition was nearly exhausted as the day advanced, it being nearly dark. The enemy's fire was growing more destructive, and their lines of battle were advancing, evidently being strongly re-enforced. At this time part of our line gave way on the left of our brigade, which had the effect of causing part of ours to retire. Many of these were rallied again and brought back to the line.

At this period of the engagement Brevet Brigadier-General Morrow, commanding the brigade, who had been displaying the greatest gallantry during the action, was struck from his horse by a rifle-ball piercing his body, and was compelled to leave the field. As he fell from his horse, being near him, he turned over the command and the brigade flag, which he had been carrying through the thickest of the fight, to me, and I immediately relinquished the command of my regiment to Maj. H. J. Sheaffer, and proceeded to the performance of the duties imposed by the exigency to the best of my ability. No ammunition and no supporting column arriving, it was now evident that our troops must retire to their original line, and this they did just in time to preserve themselves from utter destruction, as it has since been ascertained that the enemy in our front was in overwhelming force.

I must express myself as highly gratified with the gallant conduct of my regiment in the afternoon's contest. I had in my command about 275 muskets; three-fourths of these men were now under fire for the first time. Many of these men fought with uncommon courage. Nearly one-fourth of the number engaged were killed or wounded. I am pleased to have it in my power to name the following officers as having conducted themselves with a high degree of courage: Maj. H. J. Sheaffer; Capt. Theo. K. Scheffer, wounded slightly, Company A; Lieut. Oliver P. Stair, commanding Company D; Lieut. John P. Williams, commanding Company F; Lieut. H. H. Hutton, commanding Company K; Lieut. J. B. S. Venai, commanding Company G; Lieut. Aaron Treher, commanding Company B, wounded. I would also name the following sergeants who have been named to me as having displayed commendable courage: First Sergt. John A. Tompkins, Company F; Sergt. Isaac S. Dissinger, commanding Company I; Sergt. John Delany, Company I; First Sergt. Michael J. Hawley, commanding Company C; First Sergt. William C. Beck, commanding Company H; First Sergt. Martin V. Cochran, wounded, commanding Company E; First Sergt. Edwin S. Wilcox, wounded, Company G; Sergt. Francis J. Swoyer, color bearer, Company C; and Sergt. Maj. Lord B. Green. I have also to commend the courage of Asst. Surg. R. S. Dana, who was in the thickest of the fight attending to the wounded.

As soon as the battle commenced Chaplain W. T. Campbell repaired to the division hospital and rendered excellent service. I would respectfully bring to the notice of the commanding general the name of Private John M. Duff, of Company B, who having been captured in consequence of having fallen in crossing a ditch in retiring from the field, but who, upon being required to take off his accouterments and surrender his gun, embraced a favorable opportunity, shot down his captor, and made good his escape. He is an intelligent, brave boy of about sixteen years, and this was his first battle. I feel it a duty in closing this report to express my appreciation of the efficiency and high degree of courage exhibited by my adjutant, James B. Thomas, who was slightly wounded in the action and had his clothing in several places cut with balls. He, in charge of a part of the regiment retiring by the right and closely pursued by the enemy, took advantage of a rifle-pit near the run and fired with good effect their last remaining cartridges.

Attached will be found a list of the casualties.*

I am, captain, very respectfully, &c.

T. F. MCCOY,

Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. HARRISON LAMBDIN,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Brigade.

No. 113.

Report of Maj. Henry J. Sheaffer, One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 6-9.

HEADQUARTERS 107TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
February 12, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that on the evening of February 6 I took command of the One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, the regiment at that time forming part of the Third Brigade, Third Division, Fifth Army Corps. We bivouacked for the night on the south side of Hatcher's Run, near the bridge. The regiment lay here until 11 a. m. on the morning of the 7th and then marched up the stream about three-quarters of a mile, and then formed part of the brigade line of battle and advanced in support of Baxter's brigade, who was skirmishing the enemy in front. We advanced in support of this brigade, entering the woods and taking possession of the unfinished rebel works captured in Baxter's advance. Here we halted, and, felling trees, threw up additional works and slashed the timber in front. While here the enemy threw shells, but they all passed over, doing us no injury. About 4.30 p. m. we were marched to the left by the flank about half a mile (troops of the Sixth Corps occupying the works we left). I then received orders to cross the breast-works and advanced in line with the brigade. I also received instructions that the guide would be right. We had not advanced far until I found the regiments on my left had great difficulty in keeping up with the line, on account of the guide being right; it required nearly a right half wheel to do so. A charge being ordered, I advanced the regiment under fire until within a very short distance of the rebel works, but before penetrating that far the troops on my right and left gave way, falling back to the breast-works which we had crossed, part of my own regiment falling back with them; but with the colors of the regiment, the three commissioned officers I had with me, and about one-half of my men, we fell back about 100 yards, halted, and reformed my line, the enemy making no attempt at an advance. After dark the regiments composing the brigade returned and took position on my right and left. A short time after we were marched by the flank to the right, making connection with the left of General Bragg's brigade, and were ordered to build breast-works.

* Embodied in table, p. 67.

About 1 o'clock on the morning of the 8th we were marched to the rear, crossing Hatcher's Run, and bivouacked in the field on the north side of the run. On the afternoon of the 9th I was relieved of the command of the regiment by the return of Colonel McCoy. Lieut. John F. Williams was injured by a fall in the charge. I had 1 man killed and 6 wounded.

The three commissioned officers with me, viz: First Lieut. O. P. Stair, Company A; First Lieut. John F. Williams, Company F, and Second Lieut. H. H. Hutton, behaved with great gallantry. Sergts. John Delany, John A. Tompkins, William C. Beck, and Michael J. Hawley, behaved very bravely and rendered a great deal of assistance. Sergt. F. J. Swoyer, color bearer of the regiment, behaved with his usual courage until compelled to relinquish the same, being wounded in the hand.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. J. SILEAFER,

Major One hundred and sereneth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Capt. HARRISON LAMB DIN,

Asst. Adj. Gen., Third Brig., Third Div., Fifth Army Corps.

P. S.—For names of wounded, see list of casualties accompanying report of Colonel McCoy.*

* Embodied in table, p. 67.

No. 114.

Report of Lieut. Col. Horatio N. Warren, One hundred and forty-second Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations February 5-10.

HDQRS. 142D REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
February 11, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by my command in the recent operations near Hatcher's Run:

Left camp February 5, 1865, at 6 a. m.; marched to and crossed Hatcher's Run about 2 p. m.; marched to telegraph road, halted and threw out pickets; expected to stay for the night; received orders to march in retreat at about 9 p. m. that night; marched about two miles and massed in an open field, where we remained until about 5 p. m. [a. m.], then marched down the Vaughan road; massed in an open field on east bank of Hatcher's Run.

About 1 p. m. February 6, recrossed the run and advanced by the right flank to protect the left flank of General Bragg's brigade, which advanced in line of battle. Proceeded about one mile, driving the enemy's skirmishers; arrived at an open field near some house, when General Bragg's brigade changed front to the left. By order of General Crawford I formed my regiment on the left of his brigade, General Baxter's brigade coming up and forming on my left. We then advanced and engaged the enemy. We fought on this ground until about 5 p. m., when our ammunition was exhausted and we were forced to fall back, the enemy following closely. We retired inside of some temporary works erected near the run, where we reformed and remained until next day, February 7, at 9 a. m., when we moved up the run. Advanced in line in rear of General Baxter's brigade until we reached a temporary line of rebel works, which we turned and strengthened. Our right being exposed I threw out a few skirmishers to form a line to Hatcher's Run. At about 5 p. m. we were moved forward and soon encountered the enemy in works with artillery; we charged and attempted to carry the works but failed; then formed a line about 300 yards from their works and commenced throwing up a line of breast-works, which we had partially completed when we were ordered to march and returned to east bank of Hatcher's Run, where we were massed 4 a. m. February 8.

About 4 p. m. on the 8th went on picket and remained until 3 p. m. on the 9th, when we were withdrawn, and threw up a line of breast-works on the north side of the Vaughan road. February 10, started out at 6 a. m. and helped finish a piece of corduroy road. At 4 p. m. started for our old camp and arrived about 7 p. m.

Loss in the engagement was 3 killed, 25 wounded, and 1 missing.

For distinguished gallantry I have the honor to name Sergt. Maj. William Shields, who was severely wounded near the close of the action on the 6th; Corpl. James X. Walter, whom I promoted to sergeant on the battle-field for his bravery in grasping the colors and carrying them with perfect coolness after one sergeant and two color corporals had been wounded.

Respectfully submitted.

H. N. WARREN,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. HARRISON LAMB DIN,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 115.

Report of Bvt. Lieut. Col. Robert H. Fitzhugh, First New York Light Artillery, commanding Artillery Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

HQRS. ARTILLERY BRIGADE, FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
February 11, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the batteries under my command—D, First New York Artillery, Capt. James B. Hazelton; L, First New York Artillery, Bvt. Maj. George Breck; Ninth Massachusetts Battery, First Lieut. George W. Foster—in the late operations near Hatcher's Run:

The batteries moved with the Fifth Corps from the camp near the Jerusalem plank road February 5, 6 a. m., and after crossing Hatcher's Run the same afternoon on the Dinwiddie road, went into camp at 6 p. m. about a mile and a half beyond the junction of the Vaughan and Dinwiddie roads. At 10 p. m. the batteries broke camp and moved with the corps to Hatcher's Run at the Vaughan road crossing, reaching that point about 4 a. m. February 6.

In the fighting of that day near this point the batteries took no part, the ground occupied by the corps toward Dabney's Mill being too densely wooded to admit of the use of artillery. During the attack on the cavalry and on the brigades of Generals Winthrop and Sickel, on the left, Battery D, First New York Artillery, Capt. J. B. Hazelton commanding, was sent to that point, but before its arrival the enemy were repulsed. Not a shot was fired by either of the batteries during the whole movement, except that by direction of Major-General Warren, about 4 p. m., February 7, Bvt. Maj. George Breck, commanding Battery L, First New York Artillery, fired half a dozen shots toward a supposed position of the enemy near Dabney's Mill, with what effect not known.

The batteries remained near the Vaughan road crossing until 10 a. m. February 11, when, being relieved by Batteries B, C, and E, First New York Artillery, they returned to the old camp near the Jerusalem plank road.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. H. FITZHUGH,
Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel, U. S. Volunteers.

Lieut. FORD MORRIS,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 116.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Frank Wheaton, U. S. Army, commanding First Division, Sixth Army Corps, of operations February 5-8.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
February 14, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report that at 8 p. m. of the 5th instant I received orders from the corps commander to move to Hatcher's Run with my division and report to General Humphreys, commanding Second Corps. While en route and near Fort Siebert a staff officer of General Humphreys brought me orders to form on and covering the Squirrel Level road, on the right of a division of the Ninth Corps just going into position. A short time after the leading brigade arrived upon the ground we were to occupy, the right of the Ninth Corps was fixed, and this division line was then formed as follows: Third Brigade, Bvt. Brig. Gen. Joseph E. Hamblin, on the left, one regiment in reserve; the First Brigade, Lieut. Col. E. L. Campbell commanding, on its right in one line, reaching nearly to the abatis at Fort Cummings, and the Second Brigade (Mackenzie's), commanded by Col. James Hubbard, Second Connecticut Volunteer Heavy Artillery, in reserve, and in rear of the left of the line, which was near the Claypole house. The front was at once intrenched as ordered, and the troops held ready to meet an attack which was anticipated on our left. The troops were in position by 11.30 p. m., and two hours after an excellent rifle-pit had been constructed all along our front and slashings made across the two swamps through which our line ran. No attack was made by the enemy and nothing of interest transpired during the remainder of the night or morning of the next day, the 6th.

At 2.30 p. m. on the 6th General Humphreys directed me to move to the vicinity of the Cummings house on the Vaughan road, and hold my division in readiness to support a movement about to be made by General Warren's corps, the Fifth. The rear of the last brigade of this division had just reached the Cummings house when a staff officer from General Humphreys directed me to move down the Vaughan road, and to send a staff officer to General Warren to learn whether he wished the division massed on the east or west side of Hatcher's Run. From the sound of firing on the left I supposed General Warren's troops to be engaged, and ordering the division to follow quickly I went to General Warren's headquarters in person to report and receive his instructions. General Warren was not at his headquarters, but I was directed by General Meade to move over Hatcher's Run, and be in position to support the Fifth Corps on the Vaughan road or elsewhere. Riding rapidly down the Vaughan road, I learned from Generals Gregg and Griffin that no re-enforcements were needed at that point of the line, and that they could hold their fronts without assistance. While receiving this information Major Fitzhugh, of General Warren's staff, who had just come from the right of the line, where the Third Division of that corps was engaged, informed me that re-enforcements were needed at that point. By this time the leading brigade had crossed Hatcher's Run, and, guided by a staff officer of General Warren, was being conducted through the intrenchments and on the road to Dabney's Mill. Leaving the assistant adjutant-general of the division to conduct it and follow me, I started ahead to learn the condition of affairs and where General Warren desired the division to form. Before leaving the head of the column the staff officer from General Warren who was guiding us stated that he was ordered to bring to General Warren but one brigade. Orders were then given for the other two to form in the intrenched line in our rear and there await further instructions.

When three-quarters of a mile from the run, at about 5.30 p. m., the stragglers from the Third Division, Fifth Corps, increased to such a number and the changes of the sounds of firing indicating to my mind some misfortune to that division, I immediately ordered the Second Brigade into line, which was but partially effected when the mass of the troops in front came rushing through the dense woods and quite over us, and it was with the greatest difficulty that the line could be formed, so obstructed was it by the fugitives, who were deaf to every entreaty of myself and staff and refused to rally on the flanks or in support of the brigade there forming. Squads, companies, and regiments went rapidly to the rear despite our greatest efforts to halt them. During this confusion I was joined by General Warren, who informed me that the line in front had broken irreparably. Up to this time there had been only skirmish firing, and no firing from a line of battle of the enemy upon my Second Brigade. While preparing to throw out skirmishers to check his we received several volleys from a line of our own troops to our left rear, who, fortunately for us, fired too high.

Most of the casualties reported occurred at this time, and I was compelled to withdraw from the woods to an open field some 300 yards in rear, in order to secure a better position and to avoid being slaughtered by our own men, who, on account of the darkness, were unable to distinguish friend from foe. While we were being fired upon, Maj. R. P. Lincoln, the division inspector, had been dispatched to General Warren, who was close at hand, and informed him of our danger from his men, and through General Warren's exertions the firing was stopped. While moving to and reforming in the open field we were rapidly followed by the enemy's skirmishers, and on that account, together with the increasing darkness and general confusion, it was almost impossible to form any line at all, and I think our success in re-establishing the line was in a great degree attributable to the personal exertions of Col. James Hubbard, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, commanding Second Brigade, and Lieut. Col. E. Olcott, One hundred and twenty-first New York. Pearson's brigade, of Griffin's division, Fifth Corps, which joined us in the open field, was formed in excellent order on our left, and one of his Michigan regiments and the One hundred and twenty-first New York from the Second Brigade of this division were deployed as skirmishers and the security of the new line insured, General Warren expressing himself very much gratified with the conduct of the Second Brigade of this division and Colonel Pearson's brigade. About 10 p. m. General Winthrop with his brigade relieved the skirmishers in our front, and I was directed to withdraw my division to the east side of Hatcher's Run and mass in some convenient place. The Second Brigade, joined by the First and Third Brigades, which had been in reserve in the intrenchments in the rear, was marched across Hatcher's Run and went into bivouac near Cummings' house.

At 10 a. m. of the 7th I was directed by General Warren to mass a brigade in the open field, near his headquarters, east of Hatcher's Run. At 12 this same brigade (Third, General Hamblin) was ordered across to report to and support General Crawford. The Second Brigade, Colonel Hubbard, was then ordered to be massed in the field vacated by the Third, and at 1 p. m. it was ordered across the run and massed near the bridge to support the Third, if necessary. At 3 p. m. the First Brigade, Lieutenant-Colonel Campbell, was massed in the open field, east of the run, vacated by the Second. The Second and Third Brigades were used as supports by General Crawford, but were not engaged. At 12 p. m. orders to withdraw and rejoin the corps were received, and at 6 a. m. on the 8th the division reached its old camp on the right of the Sixth Corps, in the main line of works. The conduct of the division in this movement was most satisfactory in all respects. The Second Brigade was most actively employed and well commanded by Col. James Hubbard, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers.

Before closing this report I desire to call the attention of the commander to the gallant bearing of Lieut. Col. E. Oldred and twenty-first New York, who, on the evening of fire and during great confusion, took the colors of his regiment, leading them to the front did much to re-establish a line. He has commanded a regiment over a year; has been long as colonel, but cannot be mustered, as his regiment is not recommended for the brevet of colonel for distinguished gallantry in commanding a brigade at the battle of Cedar Creek, an action of his abilities and services I should be pleased to have vetted to a higher grade.

The following are the casualties during the period covered by the above report: 1 enlisted man killed, 21 wounded, and 1 missing, total, 27.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
FRANK WHELAN

Brevet Major-General, U. S.

Capt. C. H. WHITTELSEY,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Sixth Army Corps.

No. 117.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Joseph E. Hamblin, Sixty-first Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations

HEADQUARTERS, SECOND BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, SIXTH
ARMY CORPS, MAY 1, 1862.

COLONEL: In reply to your note of the 26th instant I inform you that on Saturday the 25th instant, about 8 a. m., in compliance with verbal orders through First Lieutenant Cooke, aide-de-camp, the brigade was marched to the vicinity of headquarters of Major-General Sherman to support the Ninth Corps. The affair was over before the brigade arrived. After about three hours' delay the brigade was marched to the front of Fort Fisher, forming the Third [First] Brigade, Second Division, commanded by Major-General Sherman, on left, and Third Brigade, First Division, on right. The enemy's skirmishers in front, carried their line of pits, at about one-quarter of a mile beyond to a house near the front. Finding the brigade far in advance, without supports on either flank, exposed to a sharp fire from the enemy on my right flank, I withdrew to a crest about 300 yards beyond the enemy's line, connecting on either flank with the brigades above. Constructed pits for protection of pickets, detailed 175 men, were ordered, left behind as pickets, and at 1.30 a. m. of the 26th I returned to camp, arriving at 2.30 a. m.

Our losses, amounting to sixty-four killed and wounded, have been reported in detail. The brigade captured rather more than 100 prisoners. The advance was under a sharp fire from sharpshooters on right flank, and heavy artillery from enemy's batteries on our left, which completely enfiladed our line.

The command behaved admirably. Col. James Hubbs, commanding Second Connecticut Volunteer Artillery; Maj. James commanding One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, who had a horse shot under him; Maj. John A. Ward, commanding Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, who also lost a horse, and Capt. M. Devine, commanding Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, led their men with great coolness and bravery. To Maj. A. H. Fenn, Capt. James Deane, and Capt. Charles H. Woodman, of my staff, I am largely indebted. The gallant manner in which they performed the arduous duties of the day, and fearlessly exposed themselves to its many perils, entitles them to special consideration.

I have the honor to be, colonel, your obedient servant,

JO. E. HAMBLIN,

Brevet Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Comdg. Brigade.

Lieut. Col. GEORGE OLENDENIN, Jr.,

Assistant Adjutant-General, First Division, Sixth Corps.

No. 118.

Report of Col. Oliver Edwards, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. THIRD BRIG., FIRST DIV., SIXTH ARMY CORPS,
March 26, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to return the following report of yesterday's (March 25) movements:

At 7 a. m. I received orders from the general commanding the division to get under arms, and move at once to support a part of the Ninth Corps on our right, whose lines had been broken by the enemy. I accordingly moved at once, marching four miles to our right, halting by your orders. I remained there about two hours, when I received orders from you to return to camp. Before reaching camp I received orders from you to go on and mass between Forts Wadsworth and Fisher, which we did, remaining there several hours, when I received orders from you to move to the left and to cover the right of the Second Brigade in an attack upon the enemy's skirmish works. Finding the ground in front of Hamblin's right a bad swamp, covered with heavy underbrush, entirely impassable for a line of battle, I moved by the left flank in two lines, covering Hamblin's right. On the inner edge of the swamp we found the enemy on Hamblin's flank, and quickly drove them out, capturing about 100 prisoners. I then changed front forward on my left regiment, continuing the line of the Second Brigade, using the Thirty-seventh Massachusetts to cover the right. In this position the enemy soon moved to my right and rear, which obliged me to refuse my right nearly at a right angle to Hamblin, with a strong skirmish line of six companies of the Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers and four companies of the Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, under Lieutenant-Colonel Bull, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers. The enemy attacked with a double skirmish line, but were handsomely repulsed by our skirmishers. After dark orders were received from you to intrench our picket-line, which was accomplished by 12.30 a. m., when the brigade returned to camp, leaving 250 men on the picket-line.

The brigade behaved entirely to my satisfaction, and I would particularly mention the Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, Col. T. S. Allen, and the Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, Maj. M. W. Tyler commanding; also the members of my staff, to whom I am indebted for every aid and assistance.

I herewith transmit a nominal list of the killed, wounded, and missing of my command.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. EDWARDS,
Colonel, Commanding.

Maj. GEORGE CLENDENIN, JR.,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

HDQRS. THIRD BRIG., FIRST DIV., SIXTH ARMY CORPS,
March 26, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with circular of this date from division headquarters, I have the honor to forward the following numerical report of casualties in this command in the engagement of the 25th:

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Missing. | | Aggregate. |
|------------------------------------|-----------|------|-----------|------|-----------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| 2d Rhode Island Volunteers..... | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| 5th Wisconsin Volunteers..... | | 1 | | 5 | | | 6 |
| 37th Massachusetts Volunteers..... | | | 1 | 2 | | | 3 |
| 49th Pennsylvania Volunteers..... | | | | 4 | | 3 | 7 |
| 82d Pennsylvania Volunteers..... | | | 1 | 4 | | | 5 |
| 119th Pennsylvania Volunteers..... | | | | | | | |
| Total..... | | 1 | 2 | 10 | | 3 | 27 |

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. EDWARDS,
Colonel, Commanding.

Maj. GEORGE CLENDENIN, JR.,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 119.

Report of Col. James M. Warner, First Vermont Heavy Artillery, commanding First Brigade, Second Division, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. FIRST BRIG., SECOND DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
March 29, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of my command on the 25th instant:

In the morning were distributed along the breast-works from Fort Wadsworth to Fort Tracy; at 2 p. m. were massed at Fort Fisher. An hour later two regiments, the Ninety-third Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers and the Sixty-second New York Veteran Volunteers, were sent to the assistance of the Third Brigade to the right and front of the fort, but in a few moments were driven back in disorder; the remaining two regiments were at once moved to their assistance. At 5 p. m. was directed by General Getty to carry the enemy's skirmish pits in our front. The line was formed in the following order from left to right: One hundred and second Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, First Maine Veteran Volunteers, Ninety-third Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, and about fifty of the One hundred and twenty-second New York Volunteers. The behavior of the troops was admirable. The pits and a crest about 300 yards beyond was carried, capturing many prisoners.

The following-named commissioned officers of the regiments displayed great personal gallantry in leading their respective commands: Bvt. Col. John G. Parr, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Bvt. Col. James Patchell, One hundred and second Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers; Lieut. Col. D. C. Keller, Ninety-third Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers (who was severely wounded), of the First Brigade, and Lieut. Col. S. C. Fletcher, First Maine Veteran Volunteers, and Maj. A. H. Clapp, One hundred and twenty-second New York Volunteers, of the Third Brigade. The Sixty-second New York Veteran Volunteers became detached from the brigade and did not participate in the charge. Capt. Edward A. Todd, acting assistant adjutant-general; Capt. W. L. Pettit, acting assistant inspector-general; Lieuts. H. J. Nichols and B. F. Krieger, acting aides-de-camp, and Lieut. Hugh Mellwain, pioneer officer, rendered excellent service.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. M. WARNER,

Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, Commanding Brigade.

Bvt. Col. CHARLES MUNDEE.

No. 120.

Report of Lieut. Col. John G. Parr, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS 139TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
March 25, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with orders I have the honor to forward the following report of the operations of the One hundred and thirty-ninth:

About daylight of the 25th I received orders to pack up and be ready to move at a moment's notice. Soon after another order came to fall in and move off, which was done, the regiment moving right in front in the direction of Fort Stedman, when we then moved by the left flank until we reached Fort Keene, where we were halted and remained until 2 p. m., when the brigade moved to the left of Fort Fisher, where we halted, my regiment being on the right and the One hundred and second Pennsylvania Volunteers on my left. At 3 p. m., according to orders, I followed the One hundred and second, and marched left in front, passing through the line of works, and advanced by the flank about 300 yards, and formed a line of battle connecting left with the One hundred and second, where we remained until 4 p. m., when we moved 500 or 600 yards to the right by the right flank, and again halted, resting my left near the white house, opposite Fort Fisher, where we soon after charged the enemy's picket-works, carrying them. My right connected with the First Maine Veteran Volunteers. The line, after a short rest, advanced to the crest of the hill; here halted a short time, engaging the enemy, and after a short rest advanced and drove the enemy into the main works, afterward falling back to the crest of the hill, and then threw up works. About 12 o'clock at night my command was marched back to camp, leaving pickets to cover the front of my right and over it, driving the enemy into their main works. There being no connection on the right or left, the regiment was compelled to fall back to this side of the hill, where they halted, and after a short rest threw up works, and remained in that position until ordered back to camp, where the regiment arrived between 12 and 1 o'clock that night; the regiment being in command of Lieut. Col. John G. Parr until near dark, when he was wounded and left the field and I then took command.*

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN G. PARR,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. E. A. TODD,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 121.

Report of Lieut. Col. Amasa S. Tracy, Second Vermont Infantry, Second Brigade, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND VERMONT VOLUNTEERS,

March 28, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report the following as the operations and moves of the Second Vermont Volunteers in the attack made on the enemy's line, on the 25th instant:

The brigade was massed in three lines. The Second Vermont Regiment was posted on the right of the third line. My instructions from Bvt. Maj. Gen. L. A. Grant were that the brigade was to support General Shaffer's [Keifer's] brigade, of the Third Division, which was to make the charge on the enemy's line. My orders from General Grant were to wait until the second line of the brigade left the pits in front and then to move forward, keeping about the same distance in their rear. The idea that I got from General Grant's order to me was that we were not the charging column, but the supporting column. But when the advance was ordered I saw no troops making the charge in that part of the line in front of the Jones house but the Second Division, Sixth Army Corps. The Second Vermont Regiment charged in and captured the enemy's line in front of the Jones house, supported immediately by the Third Brigade, Second Division. Seeing the enemy running in all directions to get out of our way, I ordered the Second Vermont Regiment to charge and take the Jones house, which was gallantly done. I should state here that one battalion of the Eleventh [First] Vermont Heavy Artillery joined my regiment (the Second Vermont Volunteers) and charged gallantly with it to the house. Finding that my regiment and the battalion of the Eleventh [First] Vermont Heavy Artillery were the only troops that had advanced beyond the works and that we could do no good by remaining at the house, I ordered my regiment back to the earth-works we had captured, keeping skirmish-

*So recorded in regimental letter-book, but Lieutenant-Colonel Parr signed the report. Maj. James McGregor appears to have been the next in command.

ers out near the house. Afterward, finding that the enemy's sharpshooters were using the house for a protection, I sent men out with orders to burn it, which was immediately done.

Many prisoners came in through our lines as we were advancing, but having no men to spare to take charge of them, and knowing them to be going where there were plenty men to take charge of them, I felt no inclination to stop my men for that purpose.

I cannot close without reporting the conduct of both officers and men of the Second Vermont Regiment as being gallant, brave, and daring; in short, such as their previous history has been during the war. I cannot say too much in their praise.

The loss of the regiment was 2 men killed and 8 wounded.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. S. TRACY,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Second Vermont Volunteers.

Capt. M. BARBER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Brigade.

No. 122.

Report of Lieut. Col. Horace W. Floyd, Third Vermont Infantry, commanding Third and Fourth Vermont Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. THIRD AND FOURTH VERMONT VOLUNTEERS,

March 28, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report the following as the part taken by my command during the engagement of the 25th instant:

In connection with the other regiments in the brigade my command was formed in line of battle in front of the breast-works and between Ports Welch and Fisher, as a support to the Second Brigade, Third Division, Sixth Corps, who were then in our front and in the works used by our pickets. My orders were as follows: That a signal for a movement was to be given and that the troops in our front would then move on the enemy's works, and I was to move forward and occupy the works vacated by them. The signal being given I ordered my command forward, and upon reaching the works where I was to halt I found the troops had not left, and, therefore, instead of halting I passed over them and reached the enemy's works in advance of any of the attacking party, capturing all the enemy's pickets in my front. I was well supported by the Eleventh Vermont, who reached the works nearly as soon as did my command. The troops that we passed came up soon after we had taken the line. I was relieved about dark by a regiment from the Third Division, and my command taken a short distance to the rear, where I remained as a support until 11 p. m., when I was ordered to camp.

The casualties were few in both regiments. The officers and men behaved admirably.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. W. FLOYD,

Commanding Third and Fourth Vermont Volunteers.

Capt. M. BARBER,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 123.

Report of Lieut. Col. Ronald A. Kennedy, Fifth Vermont Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH VERMONT VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,
March 27, 1865.

I have the honor to report the following as the part taken by the Fifth Regiment Vermont Veteran Volunteers on the 25th instant:

As the brigade was massed before the advance commenced the Fifth formed the left of the third line. The first advance was to the work occupied by the first line; the second was to the crest, out the left of the small work in which were the mortars. After lying here until 5 p. m. we were ordered to move to the front and right of the house situated on the old picket-line to await further orders. In obedience to further orders the regiment returned to camp at 11 p. m.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. A. KENNEDY,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Comdg. Fifth Vermont Veteran Volunteers.

Capt. M. BARBER,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 124.

Report of Lieut. Col. Sumner H. Lincoln, Sixth Vermont Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS SIXTH VERMONT VOLUNTEERS,
March 28, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with circular from headquarters Vermont brigade, I have the honor to make the following report of the part performed by the Sixth Vermont Volunteers on the 25th instant:

The regiment, after being under arms for several hours, moved from the rear of the works in our immediate front, passing through the works at the left of Fort Fisher. After advancing by the flank about 100 yards I halted in a ravine and in rear of the Third and Fourth Regiments. I moved forward from this point on a double-quick, being at the left and on line with the Third and Fourth Regiments. We advanced with a good line 400 yards, and halted in rear of a line of earth-works. I received orders not to advance farther, and remained in that position until 5 p. m., when I was ordered to the right and front of the Boswell house, where I remained until ordered to camp. The regiment was under fire for at least five hours, yet we lost but one man wounded. Officers and men behaved with their usual gallantry.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. H. LINCOLN,

Lieutenant-Colonel Sixth Vermont Volunteers.

Capt. M. BARBER,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 125.

*Report of Lieut. Col. Charles Hunsdon, First Vermont Heavy Artillery,
of operations March 25.*

HEADQUARTERS FIRST VERMONT ARTILLERY,
March 28, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the First Vermont Artillery in the engagement of March 25:

The brigade was massed a little to the left and front of Fort Fisher, the Third, Fourth, and Sixth Regiments in the front line. The Fifth Regiment was next in order, when I put my command in the column, but was moved out, leaving my regiment second, the second battalion in front, which, when the charge began, was moved by the left flank to uncover the first battalion. The regiment then moved forward to occupy the position of the Third, Fourth, and Sixth, as ordered. I was unable to halt the first battalion. The second battalion was ordered forward, and moved directly on the enemy's out-works, which was carried in good style. The first battalion became detached, and in connection with the Second Vermont charged over the works on the right of the brigade line and carried the crest by the house (now burned). The colors of the Second Vermont were planted just at the left end of the house; those of the first battalion on its right, both regiments occupying this position at the same time. Being under a galling fire of artillery and infantry, unsupported on the right and left (being the only troops that advanced thus far), Lieutenant-Colonel Tracy, the senior officer present, ordered the line to fall back to the works, which was done in good order and without loss, skirmishers being left in the advance pits commanding the house, and remained until the brigade was withdrawn from the line.

In conclusion, I cannot speak too highly of both officers and men of the regiment, who, with hardly an exception, performed their duty nobly.

Very respectfully submitted.

CHARLES HUNSDON,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding First Vermont Artillery.

Capt. M. BARBER,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 126.

Report of Lieut. Col. George B. Damon, Tenth Vermont Infantry, First Brigade, Third Division, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS TENTH VERMONT VOLUNTEERS,
April 1, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report that at about 2 p. m. on the 25th of March ultimo, by direction of Brigadier-General Seymour, commanding the division, I proceeded to the picket-line of the division in front of Forts Fisher and Welch, and relieved temporarily the division officer of the day, and assumed command of the picket-line for the purpose of making an attack upon the pickets of the enemy. Our picket-line was composed of about 160 men of the Fourteenth New Jersey on the right and 230 of the Tenth Vermont on the left, the whole line being nearly one mile in length, with open ground on the right half, while the left portion of the line was immediately in rear of a narrow belt of woods. The picket-line of the enemy was strongly intrenched behind earth-works and at an average distance of 300 yards. The One hundred and twenty-second and One hundred and tenth Regiments of Ohio Volunteers were also placed under my command as a supporting column, and were formed 100 yards in rear of the right center of the picket-line. At 3 o'clock the order for advance was given, when the whole line moved forward at a double-quick, the two Ohio regiments above-named moving at the same time. At several points the position of the enemy was reached, but they delivered so severe a musketry fire from their breast-works, their forts, a few hundred yards in rear, opening on us at the same time with artillery, that we were finally compelled to retire, which we did in good order, to the original line. Preparations were then made for a second charge. The right portion of the picket-line was strengthened by the One hundred and twenty-second and One hundred and tenth Ohio Regiments and the Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania, Sixth Maryland, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery, and One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Regiments were formed in rear as a supporting column, the whole under the immediate direction of Brevet Brigadier-General Keifer. On this charge I took command of the left portion of the picket-line, composed of 230 men of my own regiment (the Tenth Vermont). At about 4 p. m., at a given signal, the whole line, together with the supporting column, advanced and carried the intrenched works of the enemy, capturing nearly the entire picket force on our front, and held their intrenched line.

On this second charge my regiment captured 160 prisoners, among whom were several officers. The casualties in the Tenth Vermont were 2 enlisted men killed and 4 wounded. I have no information as to the casualties which occurred in the other regiments engaged in the attack.

At about sunset on the same afternoon, by direction of General Seymour, I proceeded to the extreme left of the picket-line of the division with a section of the Third New York Independent Battery, under charge of Lieut. George P. Fitzgerald, and 150 men of the Fifth Vermont, under command of Major Cole, of that regiment, for the purpose of dislodging a body of the enemy's sharpshooters, who were in and about a house situated on the rebel picket-line and a little to the left of the rifle-pits captured by us, from which position they were enabled to annoy our men by an enfilading fire. This section of artillery was placed in position on an open piece of ground at about 600 yards from the house above-named, and opened fire with both solid shot and shell, riddling the house and driving everything from it. Immediately on the left of this house, however, in the woods, was a heavy force of the enemy, then severely engaged with the Second Corps. A brigade of the Second Corps was in line of battle on the open ground where this section of artillery was posted, the commanding officer of which declined to move his troops to occupy the house, upon my application, stating that if they moved they would probably be attacked by a superior force from the left flank and be compelled to fall back. Under these circumstances I deemed it imprudent, without further advice, to attempt to take and hold the position with the small force under my command. Major Cole and Lieutenant Fitzgerald were therefore directed to report back to their commands.

Although subjected to both musketry fire and artillery, which opened from the enemy's main line, Lieutenant Fitzgerald behaved most gallantly, and worked his guns in the most admirable manner.

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE B. DAMON,

Lieutenant-Colonel Tenth Vermont Volunteers.

Bvt. Maj. A. J. SMITH,

Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Third Division, Sixth Army Corps.

No. 127.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. Warren Keifer, One hundred and tenth Ohio Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations March 25.

HEADQRS. SECOND BRIG., THIRD DIV., SIXTH ARMY CORPS,
Camp at Burkeville, Va., April 16, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to transmit the following report of the part taken by this brigade on the 25th of March, 1865, in the charge upon and capture of the enemy's intrenched picket-line near Forts Fisher and Welch, in front of Petersburg, Va.:

This brigade, save the One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, occupied the line of works including Forts Fisher, Welch, and Gregg, and was situated about three-quarters of a mile from the enemy's fortifications. The enemy's picket-line was strongly intrenched and manned by an unusually large number of men. About 1 p. m. of the 25th ultimo I received an order from Brig. Gen. T. Seymour, commanding division, to send two regiments to support our picket-line in an attack upon the picket-line of the enemy. I accordingly ordered the One hundred and tenth and One hundred and twenty-second Ohio Regiments, commanded respectively by Bvt. Col. O. H. Binkley and Lieut. Col. C. M. Cornyn, to move outside the works for the purpose ordered. Colonel Binkley was directed to take command of both regiments. The picket of our division was composed of troops from the Tenth Vermont and Fourteenth New Jersey Regiments, of the First Brigade. Lieutenant-Colonel Damon, Tenth Vermont Volunteers, had been charged with the movement of the picket. The attack was made, but the greater portion of the pickets failed to advance. The two Ohio regiments moved forward, but being unsupported on either flank they halted before reaching the enemy's line, and subsequently retired to our own intrenched line. Both regiments met with considerable loss. Orders were then received by me to take charge of the troops and make the desired capture. I at once moved out the Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Regiment, one battalion Ninth New York Heavy Artillery, and portions of the Sixth Maryland and One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Regiments, and under a severe fire from the enemy pushed them forward to our intrenched line, preparatory to making the charge.

About 3 p. m., at a given signal, the troops charged, and without halting to fire passed over the enemy's lines, capturing over 200 prisoners. In the last charge the picket-line from the Tenth Vermont went forward in good style.

Col. B. F. Smith, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio, Bvt. Col. O. H. Binkley, One hundred and tenth Ohio, Lieut. Cols. C. M. Cornyn, One hundred and twenty-second Ohio, and James W. Snyder, Ninth

New York Heavy Artillery, and Maj. C. K. Prentiss, Sixth Maryland, led their men with great gallantry. Bvt. Lieut. Col. Aaron Spangler, One hundred and tenth Ohio Volunteers, received a severe wound in the leg while gallantly urging the men forward in the last charge. Lieutenant-Colonel Damon, Tenth Vermont, did his duty nobly. Capt. Simon Dickerhoof, One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania, who was division officer of the day at that time, also showed great coolness and gallantry.

Notwithstanding a heavy artillery fire from the enemy's guns was concentrated upon the troops the captured line was held. It subsequently proved to be of great benefit to the corps by enabling troops to be formed behind it for an assault upon the enemy's main works.

Copies of regimental reports are herewith transmitted.

A summary of casualties is hereto appended.

I am, major, your obedient and humble servant,

J. WARREN KEIFER,

Brevet Brigadier-General.

Bvt. Maj. O. V. TRACY,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Third Division, Sixth Army Corps.

Numerical list of casualties in Second Brigade, Third Division, Sixth Army Corps, March 25, 1865.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Missing. | | Total. | | Aggregate. |
|-------------------------------------|-----------|------|-----------|------|-----------|------|-----------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| 110th Ohio Volunteers | | 4 | 1 | 16 | | | 1 | 20 | 21 |
| 122d Ohio Volunteers | | 1 | | 23 | | | | 24 | 24 |
| 126th Ohio Volunteers | | 1 | | 4 | | | | 5 | 5 |
| 67th Pennsylvania Volunteers | | 2 | | 11 | | 2 | | 15 | 15 |
| 138th Pennsylvania Volunteers | | | | | | | | | |
| 6th Maryland Volunteers | | 1 | | 2 | | | | 3 | 3 |
| 9th New York Heavy Artillery | | | | 35 | | | | 35 | 35 |
| Total | | 9 | 1 | 91 | | 2 | 1 | 102 | 103 |

No. 128.

Report of Lieut. Col. Joseph C. Hill, Sixth Maryland Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. SIXTH REGIMENT MARYLAND VOLUNTEERS,

April 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In the absence of Maj. C. K. Prentiss, who was at that time in command of the regiment, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the command on the 25th ultimo:

On the morning of the 25th the command was aroused by heavy firing on the right of our line, held by the Ninth Corps. The command was immediately formed and moved into the works, Companies A, G, I, and K being detached to garrison Fort Gregg, under the immediate command of Capt. John J. Bradshaw. We remained in our works under arms until about 2 p. m., when the command (less the fort garrison) fled out of the works formerly occupied by our picket-line and formed line of battle. The line thus formed consisted of the One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Volunteers, Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, and the Sixth Maryland Volunteers. The signal to move forward was the waving of the brigade flag from the parapets of Fort Fisher. At the given signal the line moved forward, and, with a shout of victory, we entered and occupied the enemy's works, Color-Sergt. Robert Spence, Company B, being the first man in the works, and planted our starry banner thereon, shortly after which he was wounded in the neck by a bullet from the enemy, but I am happy to say is doing well at present and is in a fair way to recover.

Great praise is due Maj. C. K. Prentiss for distinguished bravery on this occasion, he being one among the first officers to enter the enemy's works.

In this engagement we lost in killed one man (First Sergt. Michael Hallorn, Company E, a brave and meritorious soldier). We lost in wounded four enlisted men.

I most respectfully call your attention to the following-named officers and soldiers who distinguished themselves for bravery on that occasion: Maj. C. K. Prentiss, First Lieut. Samuel W. Angel, First Lieut. Frederick K. Bryan, for being the first officers in the enemy's works. Color-Sergt. Robert Spence, Color-Corpl. William J. Brown, for planting the first colors on the enemy's works. Sergt. John E. Buffington, Company C; First Sergt. Whitfield Stansbury, Company C; Corpl. Jonas Frock, Company C, for dashing ahead of the line over the works and demanding the surrender of a number of rebels, and bringing them in as prisoners of war. Sergt. Maj. Frederick Boltze, for encouraging and rallying the men. Private Elisha L. Kirk, Company B, for capturing and bringing in a number of prisoners. Corpl. Christopher C. McCullough, Company B; Private Marion Gillespie, Company B; Corpl. Amos Davis, Company H; Private George Damuth, Company D; Private Cyrus P. Willhide, Company D, for volunteering to advance and occupy rebel sharpshooters' pits in our front, thereby preventing them from leaving their main line of works and forming a skirmish line in our front until after dark.

In conclusion, allow me to say that the Sixth Regiment Maryland Volunteers on that occasion acquitted herself with honor to her command, honor to her State and to her country at large.

I have the honor to be, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. HILL,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Comdg. Sixth Regiment Maryland Volunteers.

Capt. W. L. SHAW,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Brigade.

No. 129.

Report of Lieut. Col. James W. Snyder, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS NINTH NEW YORK ARTILLERY,

April 16, 1865.

I have the honor to report the following to be the part taken by the Ninth New York Artillery in the assault upon the enemy's picket-line in front of Petersburg, March 25, 1865:

Two battalions of the regiment were sent into Fort Fisher to repel any attack in case we should be driven back to our main works. The other battalion was formed in line in rear of our picket-line. We advanced in good order, under a heavy fire of musketry, to our picket-line, where we halted for about thirty minutes, when at a given signal we charged across a deep marsh or swamp. The battalion occupying the extreme left of the line, being some [what] farther from the enemy's line than the other portions of the line, did not reach it as soon as the other parts, but we were not far behind, capturing the rebel pickets in our front.

Sergt. Cornelius Flannery, Company I, particularly distinguished himself in the assault by his bravery; Capts. Chauncey Fish and Henry J. Rhodes (the latter having been wounded, but would not leave the field) deserve great credit for their gallantry, and for their exertions in urging the men forward to the assault.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAS. W. SNYDER,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. W. L. SHAW,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 130.

Report of Bvt. Col. Otho H. Binkley, One hundred and tenth Ohio Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS 110TH OHIO VOLUNTEERS,

April 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by the One hundred and tenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry in the attack upon the enemy's picket-line, March 25, 1865:

On the 25th, at about 1 p. m., the picket-line in front of the Second Brigade, under the direction of Lieutenant-Colonel Damon, of the Tenth Vermont Volunteers, received orders to attack and carry the rebel picket-line in front. The One hundred and tenth and One hundred and twenty-second Ohio Regiments, under my command, were sent out as a support, with instructions that if the picket-line failed to take that of the enemy the two regiments should advance and take it. When the order was given for the picket-line to advance, only a portion of it went forward, and the line was not taken. I then ordered the two regiments forward on the double-quick with bayonets fixed, and would have carried the enemy's line, which was strongly fortified, but when we had gotten within about 150 yards of the works the shortness of our line exposed us to a severe flank fire, and we were compelled to fall back a few rods to a line of rifle-pits. Other troops of the brigade were then sent out by General Keifer and formed on our right and left, making the line much longer, which had the effect to draw the fire from our flanks. Another charge was then made under a destructive fire, and the enemy's lines taken, with nearly all their pickets, most of whom threw down their arms and surrendered. The One hundred and tenth Regiment in the assault had 4 enlisted men killed and 16 wounded.

Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Spangler was severely wounded through the thigh.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. H. BINKLEY,

Brevet Colonel 110th Ohio Volunteers, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. WILLIAM L. SHAW,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., 2d Brig., 3d Div., Sixth Army Corps.

No. 131.

Report of Lieut. Col. Charles M. Cornyn, One hundred and twenty-second Ohio Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS 122D OHIO VOLUNTEERS,
April 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that on the 25th of March last I received orders to have my regiment fall in and march out in rear of the One hundred and tenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, commanded by Colonel Binkley, and form line on their right, in rear of the reserve picket-post of the Third Division, Sixth Army Corps, which was immediately in front of the camps of the Second Brigade of that division, and within gunshot of the enemy's picket-line. Arriving there with my regiment in heavy marching order, I learned that these regiments were to charge the enemy's picket-lines. I had my men unsling knapsacks and pile them on the field and prepare for the charge, with bayonets fixed. The ground over which we had to charge was marshy, and covered with brush, which impeded much the rapidity of the advance. Receiving the order from Colonel Binkley to forward, march, a triumphant shout went up from the whole line, and all started on the double-quick for the enemy's works, from behind which heavy volleys of musketry were poured into the line as it advanced. Arriving at a point over half way between our and the enemy's picket-line, a check was given to the advance by the increased fire from the enemy, and the opening of their artillery, and an immediate fall-back took place. Many soldiers, securing themselves as well as possible behind stumps and other obstructions, remained in their advanced positions rather than expose themselves to the enemy's fire in endeavoring to get to the rear. Being reorganized after the fall-back, we were re-enforced by the One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, Ninth New York, Sixth Maryland, and Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania; formed for the second charge, which was to commence the advance at the waving of the Second Brigade flag from the reserve post. At the given signal all started with a yell, fully determined this time to go through, and nothing but the natural obstructions could or did impede our advance, and I take pleasure in saying that the colors of the One hundred and twenty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry were the second planted on the enemy's works; this, considering the ground over which we charged, is creditable to the color bearer of this regiment (Sergt. Peter Mast).

A list of casualties has already been forwarded.*

The officers and men of the regiment did their parts nobly, and maintained their character as good soldiers of the Second Brigade, Third Division, Sixth Army Corps.

Respectfully, yours,

C. M. CORNYN,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Comdg. 122d Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

[Capt. WILLIAM L. SHAW,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.]

* Shows 1 man killed and 23 men wounded.

No. 132.

Report of Lieut. Col. Thomas W. McKinnie, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS 126TH OHIO VOLUNTEERS,

April 17, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have respectfully to forward the following report of the part taken by my command in the assault of the enemy's picket-line on the 25th ultimo:

At daylight on the morning of the 25th ultimo the regiment was placed under arms in the trenches and remained thus until 12 m. The regiment, except two officers and 100 men left to garrison Fort Welch, was ordered through the works and passed to the reserve picket-line post, where it halted. About 1 p. m. orders were received to move out to the picket-line and take position on the left of the Sixth Maryland Volunteers, which was to precede this regiment in gaining this position. This was accomplished by moving by the flank to within 100 yards of the picket-line, coming to a front, and moving directly forward under a vigorous fire from the enemy's picket-line. After remaining in this position about half an hour, the assault, upon the signal being given, was made with great promptness. The regiment leaped over our intrenched picket-line and rushed upon the rebel line under a heavy line of musketry, capturing almost all of the enemy's pickets in our front. Our loss in this engagement was one enlisted man killed by one of our own shells and four enlisted men wounded. The behavior of the officers and men on this occasion could not have been better.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. W. MCKINNIE,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. WILLIAM L. SHAW,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 133.

Report of Maj. William G. Williams, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Infantry, commanding Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQRS. SIXTY-SEVENTH REGT. PENNSYLVANIA VOLS.,

April 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to make the following statement of the part in which the Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers was engaged on the 25th ultimo:

The regiment formed the line of battle about twenty-five yards in rear of the Sixth Maryland and One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Volunteers, who formed the front line of battle. The regiment was ordered to charge the enemy's picket-line at the same time as the preceding regiments. It being the first time that the greater part of the regiment had ever been under fire, they were somewhat confused for a moment, as the enemy had a very strong picket-line and my regiment had to advance under a severe fire of musketry from the enemy.

Sergt. William A. Rager, of Company E, who carried the national colors, made himself conspicuous in this engagement; the flag-staff was half shot off close to his left hand and twenty-two balls passed through the colors, but the sergeant planted his flag on the light works which the enemy had thrown up quite as soon as color-sergeants of the regiments preceding him.

Out of 511 in this engagement the regiment lost 2 killed and 11 wounded.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. G. WILLIAMS,

Major 126th Ohio Vols., Comdg. 67th Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Capt. W. L. SHAW,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., 2d Brig., 3d Div., 6th Army Corps.

No. 134.

Reports of Maj. Gen. John G. Parke, U. S. Army, commanding Ninth Army Corps, of operations February 5-7 and March 25.

HEADQUARTERS NINTH ARMY CORPS,
February 14, 1865.

COLONEL: In compliance with instructions from headquarters Army of the Potomac, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this corps during the movement of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

At 1 o'clock on the morning of the 5th I received the circular order from headquarters of the army, directing me to hold my command "in readiness to move at short notice, anticipating that the movement to be ordered will consist of the withdrawal of all the troops, except the minimum number necessary to maintain the picket-line and the garrison of the works."

At this time our front extended from the Appomattox to Battery 24, and was held by the First and Second Divisions, with the Third Division in reserve. All the preparations were at once made for the movement. At 1.45 p. m. of the 5th I received an order to send General Hartranft's division (the Third) down the Vaughan road to report to Major-General Humphreys at Hatcher's Run. General Hartranft moved his division as rapidly as possible and reported to Major-General Humphreys at 8 p. m. General Hartranft's report is forwarded herewith. In compliance with instructions Colonel Brainerd, commanding Engineer Brigade, at City Point, reported to me with his command during the evening of the 5th, and was posted as a reserve in the vicinity of the Avery house. On the following day this brigade was moved to the left and directed to report to Major-General Getty, commanding Sixth Corps.

The Third Division, General Hartranft commanding, returned during the night of the 10th and took up their old position. On the following morning the divisions holding the front lines were extended to the left as far as Fort Howard, and are now holding the line from the Appomattox to that point.

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. G. PARKE,

Major-General, Commanding.

Col. GEORGE D. RUGGLES,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the Potomac.

HEADQUARTERS NINTH ARMY CORPS,

March 25, 1865.

GENERAL: The enemy attacked my front this morning at about 4.30, with three divisions, under command of General Gordon. By a sudden rush they seized the line held by the Third Brigade, First Division, at the foot of the hill to the right of Fort Stedman, wheeled, and overpowering the garrison, took possession of the fort. They established themselves on the hill, turning our guns upon us. Our troops on either flank stood firm. Soon after a determined attack was made on Fort Haskell, held by part of McLaughlen's brigade, Willcox's division, and was repulsed with great loss to the enemy. The First Brigade, of Hartranft's division, held in reserve, was brought up, and a check given to any farther advance. One or two attempts to retake the hill were made, and were only temporarily successful until the arrival of the Second Brigade, when a charge was made by that brigade, aided by the troops of the First Division on either flank, and the enemy were driven out of the fort with the loss of a number of prisoners, estimated at about 1,600; 2 battle-flags have also been brought in. The enemy also lost heavily in killed outside of our lines. The whole line was immediately reoccupied, and the guns retaken uninjured.

I regret to add that General McLaughlen was captured in Fort Stedman. Our loss was otherwise not heavy.

Great praise is due to General Hartranft for the skill and gallantry displayed in handling his division, which behaved with great spirit in this its first engagement.

JNO. G. PARKE,
Major-General.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. A. S. WHEB,
Chief of Staff.

HEADQUARTERS NINTH ARMY CORPS,

April 20, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my command in the action of March 25 ultimo:

The line held by this corps extended from the Appomattox on the right, with pickets stretching some three miles down the river, to Fort Howard on the left, a distance of about seven miles. The line was occupied by the First Division, Bvt. Maj. Gen. O. B. Willcox commanding, extending from the Appomattox to Fort Meikel, and the Second Division, Bvt. Maj. Gen. R. B. Potter commanding, extending from Fort Meikel to Fort Howard. The Third Division, Brig. Gen. J. F. Hartranft commanding, was held in reserve, its right regiment being posted near the Dunn House Battery, and its left regiment between Forts Hays and Howard. The intrenchments held by Willcox's division and the First Brigade of Potter's, were very nearly as placed when the positions were originally gained by our troops, under fire, and in so close proximity to the enemy that the work was necessarily very defective. This was especially the case with Fort Stedman, where our line crossed the Prince George Court-House road. This is a small work without bastions, with Battery No. 10 immediately adjoining, the battery open in the rear, and the ground in rear of the fort nearly as high as its parapet. The opposing lines are here about 150 yards apart, the picket-lines about fifty yards. This portion of the line was held by the Third Brigade, First Division, Bvt. Brig. Gen. N. B. McLaughlen commanding.

About 4.30 o'clock on the morning of March 25 last, the enemy assaulted this front with Gordon's corps, re-enforced by Bushrod Johnson's division. At 4 a. m. the picket-line had been visited by the captain of the picket, who found the men on the alert and discovered no signs of movement by the enemy. Taking advantage of the order allowing deserters to bring their arms with them, the enemy sent forward squads of pretended deserters, who, by this ruse, gained possession of several of the picket-posts. They were closely followed by a strong storming party of picked men; this, by three heavy columns. The picket-line was overpowered after one discharge of their pieces. The trench guard, though stoutly resisting, was unable to withstand the rush of numbers, and the main line was broken between Batteries 9 and 10, near No. 10. The enemy turned to the right and left hand, the right column soon gaining Battery 10, which is open in the rear, thus acquiring great advantage for an assault on Fort Stedman.

The garrison of Stedman, consisting of a battalion of the Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, under Major Randall, made a spirited resistance, but being attacked in front, flank, and rear, was overpowered and most of it captured. The artillery in the fort, consisting of four light 12's, discharged a dozen rounds of canister before being taken. These guns, as well as those in Battery 10, were at once turned upon us. The enemy then pushed gradually along the lines toward Fort Haskell, driving out the troops holding Batteries 11 and 12, neither of which are inclosed works. It was still quite dark, which circumstance greatly augmented the difficulty of formation to check the progress of the enemy, it being almost impossible to distinguish between friend and foe, and made the use of artillery upon them impracticable at any distance. At the first alarm General McLaughlen sent members of his staff to the various positions on his front, and himself proceeded to Fort Haskell, thence along the line to Stedman. He found that our troops had been driven from Battery 11. He directed Mortar Battery 12 to open on it, and sent for the Fifty-ninth Massachusetts, and on its arrival recaptured Battery 11 by a bayonet charge. He then proceeded to Fort Stedman and was there taken prisoner.

As soon as it became evident at my headquarters that the enemy were attacking, I dispatched aides-de-camp to communicate with Generals Willcox and McLaughlen, ordered General Hartranft to concentrate his right brigade and re-enforce General Willcox, and ordered General Tidball, chief of artillery, to place his reserve batteries in position on the hills in rear of the point attacked. On receiving a report from General Willcox and from members of my own staff of the state of affairs, I ordered up General Hartranft's other brigade, informed General Willcox that he would be re-enforced by the Third Division, and directed him to at once reoccupy the works taken. General Hartranft concentrated his division with commendable promptitude, his left regiment having to move a distance of five miles, he in the meantime promptly and gallantly attacking with a regiment of his right brigade, the Two hundredth Pennsylvania, assisted by detachments from McLaughlen's and Ely's brigades, of Willcox's division, checking the enemy's skirmishers, who were advancing toward Meade's Station, and driving them back to the line of works.

The column of the enemy which turned to the left hand after entering our line, proceeded along the trenches in the direction of Battery No. 9, taking the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts in flank and rear, and driving them from the trenches. The left of the Second Michigan, the left regiment of Ely's brigade, of Willecox's division, was also somewhat broken, but the regiment promptly rallied, and fought the enemy over the traverses so stoutly that time was gained to bring up re-enforcements from the right of the brigade, and form a strong line perpendicular to the intrenchments, with right resting near Battery 9. This line of troops, assisted by the artillery from No. 9, No. 5, and McGilvery, repulsed with loss a heavy assault on Battery 9, and stopped all farther advance of the enemy in that direction. The picket-line was held up to a point to the left of Battery 9 throughout the engagement.

The rebel column which moved from Fort Stedman toward Fort Haskell met no better success. It gained temporary possession of Mortar Batteries 11 and 12, but the garrisons of those works, the Twenty-ninth Massachusetts and One hundredth Pennsylvania, quickly rallied on the left, and formed in conjunction with troops withdrawn from his left by Colonel Harriman, commanding First Brigade, Willecox's division, a line perpendicular to the intrenchments, connecting on their right with Hartranft's troops and with left resting near Fort Haskell, checking all farther progress of the enemy, and slowly driving him back. He made several desperate assaults on Fort Haskell, but was bloodily repulsed.

At 7.30 a. m. the position of affairs was this: We had regained Batteries 11 and 12, and had drawn a cordon of troops around Fort Stedman and Battery 10, forcing the masses of the enemy back into those works where they were exposed to, and suffered greatly from, a concentrated fire from all the artillery in position bearing on those points and the reserve batteries on the hill in rear. This cordon was composed of Hartranft's division, with regiments from McLaughlen's and Ely's brigades on either flank.

General Hartranft, to whom I had confided the task of recapturing the fort, made his dispositions with great coolness and skill, and at about 7.45 a. m. advanced his whole line. His troops, the vast majority of them new men, for the first time under fire, charged with great spirit and resolution, the veterans on the flanks behaving with their accustomed gallantry, and carried the fort with comparatively small loss. The cross infantry and artillery fire upon the space between the opposing lines deterred many of the enemy from attempting to escape, and caused severe loss among those who made the trial. Nineteen hundred and forty-nine prisoners, including seventy-one commissioned officers, nine stand of colors, and many small-arms, fell into our hands. The whole line taken from us was at once reoccupied, and all damage repaired during the following night. We lost no guns or colors.

I reported the state of affairs to army headquarters, by telegraphic dispatches to Brevet Major-General Webb, chief of staff, at 5.30, 5.40, 5.45, and 6.05 a. m., but received no reply until the following, at 6.10, from Colonel Barstow, assistant adjutant-general:

General Meade is not here and the command devolves on you.

S. F. BARSTOW.

This was the first intimation I had of General Meade's absence and that I was in command of the whole line.

It was reported to me that telegraphic communication with City Point was interrupted, and I at once dispatched a courier thither to announce the state of affairs to Lieutenant-General Grant and Major-General Meade. At 6.20 I ordered down the Provisional Brigade from army headquarters, directed General Warren to move his command in my direction, and General Wright to move a division to the threatened point. I would state that I had previously received prompt and cordial tenders of aid, both of infantry and field artillery, from the commanders of the several corps.

I soon after received the following dispatches from Generals Humphreys and Wright:

I ordered out reconnaissances some time ago. Shall I drive in the enemy's pickets all along my line, and if I find his works slightly held, attack him?

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Major-General.

As the enemy must have massed on right of our line, they must have left their own line weak. How would it do for us to attack along the whole length of our line?

H. G. WRIGHT,
Major-General.

While fully appreciating the earnest and hearty support, and the desire to take advantage of an opportunity evinced by these dispatches, I did not deem it advisable, under the peculiar circumstances under which I was in temporary command of the army, to take the responsibility of ordering these officers in, at least until the state of affairs in Willecox's front should be more fully developed. The line was reoccupied by us not long after, and about that time telegraphic communication was re-established with City Point, when dispatches and orders were received from the major-general commanding. On receipt of my orders of 6.20 a. m. General Wright ordered down the division of General Wheaton, who moved with promptitude, but about the time he arrived at my headquarters, and while his and General Wright's staff officers were examining the position he was to occupy, the line was retaken by General Hartranft, and I had no occasion to use the troops of the Sixth Corps. But I take great pleasure in acknowledging the alacrity and willingness displayed by General Wheaton and his command.

Among the many officers of my command who distinguished themselves by their behavior in this action, I must particularly mention General Hartranft, to whom too much credit cannot be given for the skill in handling his division and gallantry in leading it displayed by him; and General Tidball, chief of artillery, for his promptitude and good judgment in bringing up and placing his batteries, and for the exceedingly effective and gallant service done by them and the artillery in position.

My own staff did me efficient service throughout the action, and I would honorably mention for activity and gallantry Bvt. Col. C. G. Loring, assistant inspector-general; Bvt. Col. J. L. Van Buren, aide-de-camp; Bvt. Maj. D. A. Pell, aide-de-camp; Bvt. Maj. J. B. Parke, aide-de-camp; Capt. R. H. I. Goddard, aide-de-camp; Capt. James S. Casey, commissary of musters, and Capt. John C. Youngman, assistant adjutant-general. Colonel Loring, Colonel Van Buren, Captain Goddard, and Captain Youngman are mentioned by General Hartranft for services to him on the field.

I have the honor to submit herewith the reports of my subordinate commanders, and beg to call attention to the recommendations therein contained for good conduct and gallantry, and I desire to call particular attention to the report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. N. B. McLaughlen.

A tabulated list of casualties is hereto appended.

I have the honor to be, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. G. PARKE,
Major-General, Commanding.

* Col. GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the Potomac.

Tabular statement of casualties.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Missing. | | Total. | | Aggregate. |
|---------------------------------|-----------|------|-----------|------|-----------|------|-----------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| First Division..... | 1 | 37 | 18 | 143 | 17 | 432 | 36 | 612 | 618 |
| Second Division..... | | | | | | | | | |
| Third Division..... | 2 | 18 | 14 | 224 | | | 16 | 242 | 258 |
| Artillery Brigade (proper)..... | | 3 | 1 | 3 | 2 | 12 | 3 | 17 | 20 |
| Batteries on the line..... | 12 | 8 | 4 | 17 | | 60 | 6 | 85 | 91 |
| Total ^a | 5 | 65 | 37 | 387 | 19 | 504 | 61 | 950 | 1,017 |

^a Not engaged.

No. 135.

Report of Asst. Surg. Samuel Adams, U. S. Army, Medical Inspector, of operations March 1-31.

HEADQUARTERS NINTH ARMY CORPS,
Before Petersburg, Va., March 31, 1865.

COLONEL: The following medical inspector's report for March is respectfully submitted:

The only thing of importance which has transpired since my last report has been the piercing of our lines at Fort Stedman and Batteries Nos. 10 and 11 on the morning of the 25th instant.

At 4.30 o'clock on the morning of the 25th instant the enemy made an assault on the lines at Fort Stedman in three columns; one column swept down to the left toward Battery No. 9, one to the right toward Fort Haskell, while a third moved forward directly toward Fort Stedman. The enemy had been coming in for several nights, bringing their guns and equipments with them; on this occasion they came in squads, as deserters to our pickets, and by this ruse the picket-line at this point was enveloped and captured before the alarm could be given to the main line. The pickets were active and on the alert, and had been visited by the officer of the picket, Captain Burch, Third Maryland Veteran Volunteers, at 4 a. m. There was no neglect or want of vigilance on the part of the pickets of this division. The attack was made on the Second and Third Brigades of the First Division, Major-General Willcox commanding. The alarm was soon conveyed to the main line, and the troops were ready and in line to meet the assault promptly. The enemy swept over the parapet and overpowered the garrison of Battery 10, killing and capturing the cannoneers at their guns; they then pushed forward to Fort Stedman, capturing its guns and the garrison, composed of one battalion of the Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery. After breaking through the lines they came into the camps of the Fifty-seventh and Twenty-ninth Massachusetts and the One hundredth Pennsylvania Regiments, driving them from their quarters, and pushed forward their line of skirmishers to the road and hills in rear of Fort Stedman and nearly to Meade's Station. The Fifty-seventh Massachusetts fell back and reformed, acting as skirmishers. General Willcox ordered out the Seventeenth Michigan and the Two hundredth and Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania to oppose the advance of the enemy toward Meade's Station, and the First Brigade of the Third Division (General Hartranft's) was ordered down from the left of the line at a double-quick.

^a But see revised table, p. 70.

General Hartranft, with three regiments, now made an attack to check the farther advance of the enemy, but was obliged to fall back and act on the defensive, the enemy being in too great numbers. The Two hundredth Pennsylvania in this attack lost 100 men.

The enemy now moved up along the works and captured Battery No. 11, and turned the guns of this, as of the other forts, upon our troops. The attention of our artillery was mainly directed to Fort Stedman, the guns from Forts Haskell and McGilvery pouring in a very destructive fire. Batteries were now posted on the hills near Meade's Station, and Fort Friend and the Dunn House Battery opened upon the advancing rebels and the captured forts; about thirty guns were now playing on the captured works. The First Brigade, Third Division, now came up, and General Parke sent a dispatch to General Hartranft to "retake the forts." The division formed in line of battle with the Seventeenth Michigan and Fifty-seventh Massachusetts, and the order to assault was given, the assault to be made in fifteen minutes, the moving forward of the Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania to be the signal for the advance. The Two hundred and eleventh was pushed forward to attract the attention of the enemy, while the rest of the line advanced under cover. The enemy showed signs of wavering on the advance of this line, and by the vigor of the attack they were driven from the forts with heavy loss, many battle-flags, small-arms, and prisoners falling into our hands.

The force of the enemy consisted of three divisions of infantry, under command of Major-General Gordon. Of this force 1,949 were captured, and about 200 killed; 9 battle-flags were taken, and great numbers of small-arms. In the two brigades, First Division, of this corps, 36 men were killed and 648 wounded or captured; in the Third Division 258 were killed, wounded, and missing. The wounded were promptly brought in, the stretcher-bearers and ambulances being constantly with the advancing troops. The great majority of the rebel wounded fell into our hands, and the wounds were all very severe in character. An unusually large number of shell wounds of the thigh and legs, demanding amputation, were seen.

As the Second Division of the corps was not engaged the rebel wounded were all sent to the field hospital of this division, and were as promptly and as kindly cared for as our men. Unusual facilities were offered for caring for the wounded, as the scene of action was so near the corps field hospital, and the hospitals themselves in most efficient and thorough working order. All of the severe cases and the capital operations, about eighty-three in number, were retained at the hospital, and when the corps moved on the 3d of April they were transferred to the First Division, as this division remained behind to garrison the city and the field hospital remained in its old location. In this way I am satisfied many lives were saved. Many of the cases of penetrating and perforating wounds of the chest and abdomen and compound fractures of the thigh and amputation, which would have died under transportation, were progressing most favorably.

During the month the health of the corps has been most excellent and the supply of fresh vegetables entirely sufficient.

SAMUEL ADAMS,

Asst. Surgeon, U. S. Army, Medical Inspector, Ninth Army Corps.

Col. T. A. McPARRLIN,

Surgeon and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel U. S. Army,

Colonel and Medical Director, Army of the Potomac.

21 R R—VOL XLVI, PT I

No. 136.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Orlando B. Willcox, U. S. Army, commanding First Division, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, NINTH ARMY CORPS,
April 2, 1865.

COLONEL: At 4.15 o'clock on the morning of the 25th ultimo the enemy attacked the intrenchments held by the Third Brigade of this division. The brigade picket officer, Captain Burch, Third Maryland, reports that he visited the picket-line at 4 o'clock of that a. m. and saw that the men were on the alert. After visiting the line he returned to his headquarters in front of Fort Stedman and Battery No. 11. He states that in a few minutes after his return a man on the lookout gave notice that the enemy were approaching. At the same time the men on the post fired their pieces. One column moved toward the right of Battery No. 10, a second column moved toward a point between Fort Stedman and Battery No. 11, a third column moved direct toward Stedman. These columns were preceded by a strong storming party, which broke through the pickets, clubbing their muskets, and made openings in the abatis. The trench guards made sufficient resistance to arouse the garrisons of the inclosed works in the immediate neighborhood, but the column which struck to the right of Battery No. 10 quickly succeeded in breaking through and effecting an entrance into that battery, which is entirely open in the rear. This success gave them a great advantage over Fort Stedman, as the ground just in rear of Battery No. 10 is on a level with the parapet of the fort. The fort had also a comparatively small line of infantry parapet; particularly was this the case in front, which was cut up with embrasures for artillery. The garrison of the fort consisted of a detachment of the Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, under Major Randall, and made quite a spirited resistance, but were finally overpowered and most of them captured.

The commanding officer of the brigade, Bvt. Brig. Gen. N. B. McLaughlen, had reached Battery No. 11, from his headquarters before this, and gave some directions about the disposition of the troops on the left flank. The guns, and even the mortars, in both Stedman and Battery No. 11, were used against the enemy. Detachments of the First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, at the mortars, behaved very handsomely. General McLaughlen was captured near the gorge of the fort, but whether after the enemy had got in, or while they were attacking, is unknown. Captain Swords, ordnance officer on my staff, and division staff officer of the day, also reached Fort Stedman from these headquarters, before it was fully in the enemy's possession, and was captured at the fort.

The right column, with the aid of troops from Stedman, now succeeded in gaining Battery No. 11. Their left column turned down the works to their left toward Battery No. 9, taking the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts in the trenches in flank and rear, capturing a part of them. The remainder retired to the rear, reassembled, and afterward did good work as skirmishers, with General Hartranft's troops. The Second Michigan fought the enemy on this flank from their bomb-proofs and traverses in the most spirited manner, until they were drawn in by order of their brigade commander, Bvt. Col. Ralph Ely, to Battery No. 9, which, though small, is an inclosed work.

In pursuance with my orders Colonel Ely deployed, perpendicular to and to the rear of his intrenchments, a portion of the First Michigan

Sharpshooters as skirmishers, promptly taking them from the right of our line for this purpose. I also directed him to press the enemy on his left as much as possible. Finding themselves opposed in this direction the enemy halted for more of their troops to come up, and the ground vacated by the Second Michigan remained unoccupied by either party. The enemy's skirmishers now came down the hill directly to the rear of Stedman, and moved toward my headquarters at the Friend house, the Dunn House Battery, and in the direction of Meade's Station, and this, for a time, rendered my communication with the Third Brigade long and circuitous. Meantime, I had ordered out the Seventeenth Michigan Engineer Regiment, at my headquarters, and sent word to the commanding officers of the Two hundredth and Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania—encamped between Meade's Station and Dunn House Battery—to move, respectively, one to the Friend house, the other in front of the Dunn House Battery. These regiments promptly appeared.

Brigadier-General Hartranft, commanding the Third Division, now came up in person, and I requested him to move his available force direct upon the fort. He promptly and gallantly took command of the two regiments already out, without waiting for the rest of his command. I ordered the Seventeenth Michigan to deploy as skirmishers on his right. This regiment, with only 100 men in its ranks, under command of Major Mathews, moved forward at the same time with General Hartranft's line, capturing most of the enemy's skirmishers in their front, about twenty-five in number, and inclining to the right, connected with the skirmishers of Ely's brigade.

While Hartranft was operating in rear of Stedman the enemy's force, which had moved down toward Battery 9 and halted, was re-enforced by Ransom's brigade, and opened an attack upon that battery. This attack was handsomely repulsed by my skirmishers and troops of the Second Brigade in Battery No. 9, assisted by the artillery, particularly one piece of Roemer's battery, under Major Roemer himself. The enemy attempted to retreat back to his own intrenchments, when they were charged by detachments of the Second Michigan, who captured some prisoners. Troops of the Twentieth and Second Michigan also threw themselves into the picket-line of the Second Brigade, and poured such a fire on the flanks of the retreating enemy that over 300 threw down their arms and surrendered themselves on the spot. On our left the enemy proceeded through the trenches, driving before them the Twenty-ninth Massachusetts, a small regiment, which made the best resistance it could, over its traverses and works, being attacked in front, flank, and rear. From Battery No. 11 they proceeded toward Battery No. 12 in the same manner, killing, wounding, and capturing a part of the One hundredth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers. In this attack Colonel Pentecost, commanding One hundredth Pennsylvania, was mortally wounded. A part of this regiment was deployed as skirmishers in the rear, and a part went into Fort Haskell. Brevet Colonel Robinson took a part of the Third Maryland from a portion of his line on the left of Haskell and deployed it on the left of the skirmish line of the One hundredth Pennsylvania. Soon afterward Colonel Robinson, by my direction, assumed command of the Third Brigade.

I would here state that last winter, when it was thought that the enemy were mining toward Stedman, I gave directions to the brigade commanders that in the event of the line being broken at Stedman or any other point, they should immediately take out troops where they could best be spared from their respective fronts and attack the flanks of the enemy, and by no means to abandon their works. This order was handsomely carried out by the brigade and regimental commanders on this occasion, and led to the most beneficial results.

In pursuance with this order, Colonel Harriman, commanding First Brigade of this division, and posted on the left of the Third Brigade, ordered up the One hundred and ninth New York and Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers to report to General McLaughlen, but, as General McLaughlen could not be found, these two regiments were formed in line in rear of the skirmishers already mentioned and intrenched themselves to resist the large force moving down the rear of the line toward Haskell. The enemy was now confronted on this flank by the troops in Fort Haskell and the skirmishers of the One hundredth Pennsylvania and Third Maryland. The enemy made three advances on Haskell, all of which were gloriously repulsed. Meantime several ineffectual attempts were made by General Hartranft with a portion of his division to regain Fort Stedman by an advance on the rear of that work, but very soon after the repulse of the enemy at Fort Haskell the Second Brigade, of Hartranft's division, came up and formed on his left, the left of this brigade stretching toward Haskell. On the appearance of this new line the enemy, already repulsed on both flanks and considerably demoralized by the fire of our well-served artillery, were seen breaking away in small detachments from Stedman back to their own lines. This was quickly perceived by our troops on all sides. Major Maxwell, One hundredth Pennsylvania, with the skirmishers of his regiment, under Captains Johnson and Book, and those of the Third Maryland, under Captain Carter, immediately started along the trenches toward Stedman, capturing a large number of prisoners in the bomb-proofs from Battery No. 12 to Battery No. 10. The first Union colors on the recaptured fort were planted there by Sergeant Oliver, One hundredth Pennsylvania, who captured a stand of rebel colors, at the same point and at the same time, with his own hands.

Hartranft's line advanced rapidly, enveloping the rear of the works. The Seventeenth Michigan, on the extreme right, dashed forward and gained the trenches lately occupied by the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts, but now held by the enemy, capturing prisoners on that side. The retreat of the enemy was soon cut off by the troops of this division gaining the rear of the main body along the parapet of the works, and a large number of prisoners and some colors were captured by the troops of both divisions. One thousand and five prisoners, besides some of the wounded, fell into the hands of my own command, also seven stand of the enemy's colors, together with one of our own flag-staffs recaptured.

It was found on regaining our works that the enemy, while they held possession of them, were not able to carry off or effect any damage on our artillery, which they temporarily held and partially used against Battery No. 9 and Fort Haskell. They carried one Coehorn mortar over the parapet, but it was regained, and not the least damage was inflicted on any of the guns or gun carriages. No colors or guns were lost by us.

The following are the names of the captors of enemy's colors in this division: Capt. John L. Johnson, Company D, One hundredth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers; Capt. Joseph F. Carter,* Third Maryland Battalion Veteran Volunteers; Sergt. Maj. C. H. Plukham, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers; Color-Sergt. Charles Oliver,* Company M, One hundredth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers; Private Joseph B. Chambers,* Company F, One hundredth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers; Private Patrick McCran, Company C, Third Maryland Battalion Veteran Volunteers; Private James K. Brady, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery. Corpl. M. D. Dewire, Company A, One hundredth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, captured a rebel flag-staff and recaptured one of our colors.

* Awarded a Medal of Honor.

The following is a tabular statement of casualties, the nominal list having already been forwarded:

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Missing. | | Total. | | Aggregate. |
|-------------------------------|-----------|------|-----------|------|-----------|------|-----------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| First Brigade a | | | | | | | | | |
| Second Brigade..... | | 4 | 3 | 23 | | 19 | 3 | 46 | 49 |
| Third Brigade..... | 1 | 32 | 15 | 120 | 17 | 413 | 33 | 565 | 508 |
| 17th Michigan Volunteers..... | | 1 | | | | | | 1 | 1 |
| Total*..... | 1 | 37 | 18 | 143 | 17 | 432 | 36 | 612 | 618 |

a Not engaged.

I also forward herewith the reports of the commanders of the Second and Third Brigades, and respectfully call attention to the recommendations for gallantry therein contained.

Of my own staff, all of whom were active throughout the engagement, I would honorably mention Capt. L. O. Brackett, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, for gallantry in assisting in the charge of the Third Division, and Bvt. Maj. William V. Richards, U. S. Volunteers, carrying orders and gaining information under heavy fire.

I am, very respectfully,

O. B. WILLCOX,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

Lieut. Col. P. M. LYDIA,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Ninth Army Corps.

APRIL 8, 1865.

N. B.—I also append the report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. N. B. McLaughlen, which, as seen from the date, was received subsequent to the writing of the above report.

O. B. WILLCOX,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

No. 137.

Report of Bvt. Col. Ralph Bly, Eighth Michigan Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations March 25.

HQRS. SECOND BRIG., FIRST DIV., NINTH ARMY CORPS,

March 27, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of my command in the action of the 25th instant:

I first learned that an attack had been made by an officer of the Second Michigan informing me about 4 a. m. that the enemy had entered our main line of works between the Second and Third Brigades and had wheeled round and attacked the left of the Second Michigan. I immediately visited the line, and gave such orders as, in the darkness and under the uncertainties of the situation, I deemed practicable. I at once sent orders to Major Schwenk, whose regiment (the Fiftieth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers) was in camp about two miles down the river, to send up all his effective men. Being unable, on account of the darkness, to determine the relative positions of our own men and those of the enemy only by the flashing of the guns, I ordered fifty men of the First Michigan Sharpshooters to be deployed as skirmishers and advance toward Fort Stedman. This company advanced in good style, and skirmished to a point in the field in rear of the Second Michigan. The attack on the Second Michigan had been made on their left by a heavy force of the enemy coming down the line of the breast-work and the old wagon road just at the rear, thus having an enfilading and rear fire on that regiment. So suddenly had this been done that no line was formed, and the left companies were driven in upon the right, and some of the men took refuge in Battery No. 9. Captain Boughton, however, quickly formed a line in rear of the left traverse, extending across the old wagon road, and though left with only a small portion of the regiment, checked the enemy in a splendid manner, who, instead of forcing their way, or by any means getting possession of any part of my line, were held there. As the light increased and the position of the enemy became more clearly defined, the fire of the musketry and artillery was more effective. They were cut off and subsequently captured.

* But see revised table, p. 70.

In an early part of the engagement I sent orders to Lieutenant Bangs, commanding artillery in Battery No. 5, who had been replying to the enemy's batteries on the north side of the river, to direct his fire on Fort Stedman. He obeyed, and, with both guns and mortars, did excellent execution. Major Roemer, commanding the artillery in Fort McGilvery, kept up from the first a rapid and effective fire. I should not neglect mentioning that the gallant major, while aiming a gun, was struck by a piece of shell, knocked down, and severely injured, but continued in active command until the action was over. The artillery in Battery No. 9 did all that could have been asked. Upon the arrival of the Fiftieth Pennsylvania I ordered them to take a position on the right of the Seventeenth Michigan, which had moved up and occupied a line of rifle-pits in rear of the line assumed by the disposition of my men and all keeping up a brisk fire. The enemy were completely baffled, and, under the terrible fire of the artillery, were soon forced to yield their hold on the road and began to retreat. To escape the galling fire of the Second and Twentieth Michigan and part of the Sixtieth Ohio, kept up from the first, 300 or 400 of the enemy took refuge in bomb-proofs and behind traverses in the line, and were unable to escape. No portion of my line was removed, except as above mentioned, and no part of the picket-line was abandoned except in front of the Second Michigan, and that was reoccupied at an early part of the action and materially assisted in preventing the escape of the prisoners.

In view of the suddenness of the attack and its complete success at first, too much praise cannot be given the different regiments of the brigade for the coolness and bravery with which they did their duty. Throughout the action the entire line sustained a very heavy fire from the enemy's batteries, but all damages done to the works were repaired during the day after the fight.

Prisoners were captured to the number of 316, rank and file, and 17 officers. The losses of the brigade foot up as follows: Second Michigan, 1 killed, 8 wounded, 19 missing; Twentieth Michigan, 9 wounded; Sixtieth Ohio, 1 killed, 6 wounded; Forty-sixth New York, 2 killed, 3 wounded; total, 49.*

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RALPH ELY,

Brevet Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Bvt. Maj. WILLIAM V. RICHARDS,

Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., First Division. Ninth Army Corps.

No. 138.

Report of Capt. Ira L. Evans, First Michigan Sharpshooters, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST MICHIGAN SHARPshootERS,

March 27, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of the proceedings of my regiment during the engagement of March 25, 1865:

About daylight Companies I and H, under command of Capt. James S. De Land, were detailed as skirmishers, with orders to deploy on the old City Point Railroad, advance and meet the enemy, and hold them in check if possible. This was carried out as per orders. The enemy was checked and forced to retire. These two companies remained on the front line, following up the enemy until they were driven from the works that they had captured early in the morning. Captain De Land states that his command captured 4 commissioned officers and 50 enlisted men.

I have the honor to mention Adjt. Ed. J. Buckbee as behaving with great gallantry and aiding materially in checking the advance of the enemy. The other companies of the regiment remained in the works.

Very respectfully,

IRA L. EVANS,

Captain, Commanding First Michigan Sharpshooters.

Bvt. Maj. C. A. LOUNSBERRY,

Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Second Brig., First Div., 9th Corps.

No. 139.

Report of Capt. John C. Boughton, Second Michigan Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. SECOND REGIMENT MICHIGAN VET. VOL. INFTRY.,

Before Petersburg, Va., March 27, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with orders, I have the honor to make the following report concerning the late attack on our lines:

On the morning of the 25th instant, between 4 and 5 o'clock, the regiment was alarmed by messengers sent in from picket by Lieutenant Hardy, who was in command of the line. When I got out, which was 4.30, most of the regiment was under arms in the trench; went to the left and met Lieutenant Hardy coming in from picket. In reply to inquiries, he said the enemy was crossing the line to our left without opposition, and that they would soon be on us. During this time there was some musketry firing near Fort Stedman, but not much, and it was too dark to see well. Before Lieutenant Hardy had passed two men came running from the left, telling that their regiment was all captured, and that the rebels were coming in our rear. I ordered them to be arrested, and stopped their talking. A few minutes later a crowd of men came running down the trench. Supposing they were of one of our regiments, and running from the enemy, I stepped out and ordered them to halt, saying that it was useless to run away, but was answered, carelessly, "It's of no use now; it's all over; you might as well throw down your guns." At the same time one of them placed his hand on my shoulder, saying, "Come with me." I instantly perceived they were rebels, and answered, "In a minute." Stepping hastily backward, I ordered the men to fire, which they obeyed immediately with good effect. We then fell back behind the first flanker, all except a few who had surrendered and were marched away immediately.

* But see revised table, p. 70

Very soon after they had advanced down the old road in our rear, and opened a fire on us, which obliged us to abandon the two traverses on our left; the companies who had occupied them passed up the line and took shelter in Battery No. 9. I sent a party from the right down the old road in our rear, which checked the enemy's advance on it, and immediately afterward sent Lieutenant Perrine with a company across the old road and to our left and rear. At the same time the regiment reoccupied the traverses which had been abandoned. It was not quite daylight then, but soon after we could see our own troops coming up from the rear, and the enemy retreating to their own works. I then called for volunteers, and when about twenty or twenty-five had responded, I charged down the line with them to the foot of Spring Hill, and cut off the retreat of and captured something over 300 prisoners (I guess at the number, as I did not count them). Lieutenant Perrine, Captain Lang, Lieutenant Hardy, Lieutenant Holston, and Lieutenant Rogers rendered most valuable assistance in this movement. Twenty minutes before 7 o'clock we reoccupied the picket-line.

Our loss was 2 killed, 7 wounded, and 15 taken prisoners. Among the wounded were Lieut. S. M. Daken and Adjt. T. R. Fish.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN C. BOUGHTON,
Captain, Commanding Regiment.

Brevet Major LOUNSBERRY,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 140.

Report of Capt. Albert A. Day, Twentieth Michigan Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. TWENTIETH MICHIGAN VOLS., BATTERY No. 9,
Before Petersburg, Va., March 27, 1865.

MAJOR: With regard to the part sustained by this regiment in the recent action of March 25, 1865, on this front, I would respectfully report as follows:

At 4 a. m. March 25, my alarm guard having notified me of rapid firing in front of Fort Stedman, I caused the command to be turned out under arms. The firing soon being discontinued I returned the men to quarters, with instructions to keep their accouterments on and to remain awake and on the alert. At 4.30 a. m. the firing commenced with renewed vigor and rapidity and the men were again turned out. Nothing of marked importance occurred at this time on my immediate front. At 5 a. m. the fort on my left (Stedman) was carried by the enemy by assault, the artillery captured in the works and turned on this battery, and the enemy thrown rapidly down the road in rear of our lines in such dispositions as threatened the left and rear of this work. I immediately moved my two right consolidated companies behind the left and the Second Michigan Volunteers, a part of which regiment had been driven inside of this battery, behind the rear face of this work, leaving the other four consolidated companies in a position to defend the front and right, which were at the same time threatened by two lines of the enemy perfectly distinguishable, but not as yet out of cover of their works.

My officers report to me that these lines were about to be charged upon just before the final repulse of the enemy on their right, but being instantly met by a well-directed volley from this battery, their officers appeared unable to get the men over their works; meantime, it having grown sufficiently light to disclose the enemy in heavy mass on the slope of a hill to the right of Fort Stedman, and also in the road in rear of same, I immediately caused the men, about 150 in number, to open a rapid musketry fire on those of their troops who occupied these positions; I have reason to believe that this firing was very effective, being at easy long range, well directed, and its object being a body of men in heavy mass, occupying a side hill, the face of which was presented to this battery. This firing was continued throughout the engagement. At 7.30 a. m., the enemy being completely broken and retreating rapidly in disorder, I threw a part of my regiment into the skirmish line on the left of this battery, in order to check them as they attempted to cross the main line on their retreat. Three hundred and fifteen men and their officers were thus captured and forwarded to brigade headquarters under guard. A large number of small-arms were also captured and have this day been turned over to the proper ordnance officer. It having been reported to the general commanding that Battery No. 9 was captured, several shots were fired from Battery Dunn, taking effect in the quarters of my second consolidated company. Fortunately no lives were lost through this error, and upon the colors being promptly placed in a conspicuous place this firing from the rear ceased. Nine men belonging to this regiment were wounded during the engagement.

I have only to add that Batteries C and I, Fifth United States, commanded by Lieutenant Huysman, and a section of Company K, First Connecticut Artillery, commanded by Lieutenant Drown, deserve much credit for the part sustained by their men in the defense of this fort. The officers and men of this command acted throughout with perfect coolness and regularity.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALBERT A. DAY,

Captain, Commanding Twentieth Michigan Volunteer Infantry.

Bvt. Maj. C. A. LOUNSBERRY,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 141.

Report of Lieut. Col. Adolph Becker, Forty-sixth New York Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. FORTY-SIXTH NEW YORK VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,
March 29, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report that on the morning of the 25th instant, when the enemy made his strong and sudden assault on Fort Stedman, the sentries of the Forty-sixth New York Veteran Volunteers announced, at about 4.15 a. m., the enemy's attack, and that immediately afterward the whole regiment, which is as garrison in Fort Mansfield and Fort McGilvery, was under arms ready for action. Notwithstanding the heavy fire directed on these forts, our loss was only 2 enlisted men killed and 3 wounded.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
ADOLPH BECKER,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Bvt. Maj. C. A. LOUNSBERRY,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 142.

Report of Lieut. Col. Martin P. Avery, Sixtieth Ohio Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. SIXTIETH REGIMENT OHIO VOLUNTEER INFANTRY,
Before Petersburg, Va., March 29, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by my command in the action of the 25th instant:

We were aroused by the rapid and continued firing at 4.15 a. m. My men were immediately formed in the trenches, where they remained during the action. The left of my command, consisting of Companies B and C, commanded by Captain Merkel, kept up a continual flank fire on the enemy as they advanced and retreated from their works. My company commanders are deserving of great praise for the promptness with which they got their men in line ready for action.

My loss consisted in 1 killed and 6 wounded.

Respectfully submitted.

M. P. AVERY,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Bvt. Maj. C. A. LOUNSBERRY,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 143.

Report of Maj. Samuel K. Schwenk, Fiftieth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. FIFTIETH PENNSYLVANIA VET. VOL. INFANTRY,
March 29, 1865.

MAJOR: Pursuant to instructions to forward a report of the operations of this regiment in the action of Saturday, the 25th instant, I have the honor to report that I received orders at 4.30 a. m. to send all the men with arms, except the pickets, to brigade headquarters, and immediately sent ninety men, the whole number in camp with arms, in charge of Capt. Charles E. Brown, Company C, and First Lieut. Wilbur H. Wilcox, Company D, who reported at Second Brigade headquarters at 4.50 a. m. and were assigned a position in an old fort beyond brigade headquarters, and soon afterward occupied old rifle-pits, constructed about 400 yards southeast of Fort McGilvery and running at right angles with the main line, where they at once commenced firing upon the flank of the enemy's advancing line and kept up a brisk fire until the enemy was repulsed and our entire line reoccupied.

The casualties were two men very slightly wounded, and Captain Brown reports that all the men behaved very well and fired with great accuracy and effect.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAML. K. SCHWENK,
Major, Commanding Regiment.

Bvt. Maj. C. A. LOUNSBERRY,
Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., 2d Brig., 1st Div., 9th Army Corps.

No. 144.

*Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Napoleon B. McLaughlen, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations
March 25.*

PAROLE CAMP,
Annapolis, Md., April 4, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report the part taken by me in the fight at Fort Stedman March 25, until captured, which occurred just before daylight.

On hearing the noise of the attack that morning I awoke my staff and dispatched them to various parts of the line to get the troops under arms, and proceeded myself to Fort Haskell, garrisoned by a battalion of the Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, whom I found on the alert and ready to resist an attack. I then turned down the line to the right, passing the One hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, who were already in their works, and Battery 12, finding everything right, and reached the mortar battery No. 11, in which were no guns, and which was occupied by the Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers. Here I found Major Richardson, of that regiment, who told me that the battery was in the enemy's hands, and that his command had just been driven from it. I at once sent orders to the Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers, the only regiment of my brigade not in the line of works, to report to me at double-quick, and to Battery 12 to turn their mortars on Battery 11, which was done, three shots being fired. On the arrival of the Fifty-ninth I put them into the work with fixed bayonets and recaptured it at once. Supposing that I had restored the only brer' in the line, I crossed the parapet into Fort Stedman on the right, and meeting some men coming over the curtains, whom in the darkness supposed to be a part of the picket, I established them inside the works giving directions with regard to position and firing, all of which were instantly obeyed. In a few minutes I saw a man crossing the parapet whose uniform in the dawning light I recognized to be the enemy's, and

I halted him, asking his regiment. This called attention to myself, and the next moment I was surrounded by the rebels, whom I had supposed to be my men, and sent to the rear, where I found General Gordon, to whom I delivered my sword, and was sent by him to Petersburg. While standing by General Gordon four brigades moved forward toward our works, their commanders reporting to him. While there Captain Swords, of the First Division staff, was brought up, having been captured in Fort Stedman, where he had been directed in search of me, and also Lieutenant Sturgis, of my staff, whom I had sent to the left and ordered to report to me at Fort Stedman.

From Petersburg I was sent by rail the same day to the Libby Prison at Richmond, Va., and remained there until the afternoon of April 2, when I, with the other officers confined there, was paroled and sent to this place via Fortress Monroe, where we arrived this morning. There were 16 officers of my brigade captured besides myself, and about 480 enlisted men, all of whom are paroled. I have not the slightest fault to find with any of the troops of my command. All were vigilant and on the alert, both officers and men, and all was done that lay within the bounds of possibility. The enemy, aware of the recent order allowing deserters to bring in their arms, approached my picket-line under that disguise, in small squads, and thus surprised the pickets, capturing them without any alarm being given. I would say, further, that I have personal knowledge that there were three divisions massed to break my brigade line, those of Johnson and Gordon making the attack, and the third being held in reserve, with cavalry and batteries in support.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

N. B. McLAUGHLIN,

Bvt. Brig. Gen., U. S. V., Comdg. 3d Brig., 1st Div., 9th Army Corps.

Bvt. Maj. WILLIAM V. RICHARDS,

A. A. A. G., First Div., 9th Army Corps, before Petersburg, Va.

No. 145.

Report of Bvt. Col. Gilbert P. Robinson, Third Maryland Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations March 25.

HQRS. THIRD BRIG., FIRST DIV., NINTH ARMY CORPS,

March 28, 1865.

SIR: About 3.30 a. m. March 25, the enemy advanced in several columns upon the cluster of artillery positions known as Fort Stedman, Batteries 10, 11, and 12. The garrisons of these portions of the line were alarmed by the officers and men of the picket and trench guard, and were immediately in line prepared for attack. The enemy's skirmishers, advancing with clubbed muskets and with their bayonets, broke the picket-line in front of Fort Stedman and advanced to the works. The Fourteenth New York Artillery and the Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers, the garrisons of Stedman, 10, and 11, were ordered to the lines, sending one aide to the Fifty-seventh order them into line, another to the left of the bridge they were on the alert and prepared for action, and the third to the left of the bridge.

Shortly after the general left a messenger from Battery 11, closely followed by one from Fort Stedman, communicated the facts of the case to brigade headquarters, and the Fifty-ninth Massachusetts were directed to attack at Battery 11 with vigor and carry it at the point of the bayonet if captured, and re-enforce the works if not. The Fifty-seventh was directed to advance similarly on Fort Stedman. After about an hour's desperate fighting, in which the works were carried back and forth several times, the troops were compelled to retire, part in the direction of Fort Haskell, and part toward the railroad. The One hundredth Pennsylvania had meantime been deployed at right angle with their line of works, covered with a line of skirmishers, but being unable to stem the torrent, divided, three companies going to the old line of works in the rear of their camp and the remainder to Fort Haskell. A skirmish line of the Third Maryland Battalion had meantime been thrown out well supported, and upon this portions of the brigade were rallied, and this line prevented the result the enemy evidently had in view, of taking Fort Haskell in reverse. The Fifty-seventh Massachusetts had meantime been forced back to the ridge near Battery Dunn, but there made head against the enemy. Before 6 o'clock the Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania, which had been sent to our assistance from the Third Division, was put in near brigade headquarters and advanced to the old line of works in rear of the camp of the One hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and shortly after other re-enforcements came from the direction of Meade's Station. The Fifty-seventh Massachusetts, deployed as skirmishers, advanced, covering this line, and by a succession of brilliant skirmish charges recovered the slope on which their camp had stood and the crest above it overlooking Fort Stedman. At this time (about 8.30 a. m.) it was noticed that the frequent slight advantages we had been gaining since the artillery positions were carried had discouraged the enemy, and that even a dash of a skirmish line would break a partially formed line of battle, and it was resolved to make a determined effort to recover the works. At this time I received notice from General Hartranft that he was advancing and would carry the works in fifteen minutes, but catching sight of the approaching line, seeing the demoralized condition of the enemy, and fearful that a large amount of prisoners might be lost by longer delay, it was determined to dash on the enemy at once, and the troops collected at the left, consisting of the largest part of the Third Maryland Battalion, the One hundredth Pennsylvania, fragments of the Twenty-ninth and Fifty-ninth Massachusetts, the Fort Haskell battalion of the Fourteenth New York Artillery, and what was left of the Fort Stedman battalion, charged up the line and along the works, carrying the trenches and batteries as far as Fort Stedman, into which almost immediately, from a direction about perpendicular to the line of our charge, came a portion of the Third Division. By 9 a. m. the line of works was in our possession again, with all its artillery.

From the time of the first assault until the close, the artillery at Fort Haskell was plying with vigor, and was very effective, and the well-directed infantry fire and the noble courage of the men, in and around the fort, baffled every attempt to assault it. Battery 12 (First Connecticut Heavy Artillery) kept up an effective fire during the early part of the engagement, and the gun detachments kept well at the front after being driven out, and went up in the charge which gave us the line anew, at once reoccupying the battery and serving the mortars.

Maj. George M. Randall, commanding at Fort Stedman, mentions with praise the conduct of the artillery officers and men at the fort (Nineteenth New York Battery and First Connecticut Heavy Artillery), and a section of the Fourteenth Massachusetts Battery, for their bravery and coolness, and universal praise is given to the artillerists at Fort Haskell (Third New Jersey Battery).

The service will mourn the loss of Lieut. Col. J. H. Pentecost, One hundredth Pennsylvania, whose cool, good conduct first checked the current of overwhelming disaster, and of Capt. James Doherty, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts, commissioned and acting as major of that regiment, whose determined courage and excellent disposition greatly delayed the advance of the enemy toward the railroad. Both of these officers (since dead) should be brevetted for their gallantry this day.

I have the honor to mention the following officers and enlisted men for praise for deeds set against their names, and to reiterate the eulogiums of their regimental commanders:

Third Maryland Battalion Veteran Volunteers.—Capt. Joseph P. Carter, capturing colors of the Fifty-first Virginia Infantry and gallantry on the skirmish line and in the first assault.

Second Lieut. John Nape, for gallantry in forming the skirmish line when he was severely wounded.

Corpls. Edward Mitchell and John H. Locker, of Company D, capturing and carrying off eighty rebels, including nine officers.

Sergt. Michael Denahey, Company C; Corpl. William H. Erdman, Private William Brooks, Company D, and Private Andrew J. Smith, Company B, for capture of numerous prisoners and being the foremost in entering Fort Stedman. The last-mentioned (Smith) deserves special praise for attempting to wrest a rebel color from a rebel, but, being a mere boy, was unable.

Private Patrick McCran, Company C, for capturing the colors of the reported Twelfth Georgia Battalion.

Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery.—Maj. George M. Randall, for great gallantry at all times in the engagement; escaping when taken prisoner.

Cpts. Charles H. Houghton, Joseph P. Cleary, George Brennan, and Homer Foote, and Lieut. Charles A. O'Brien, for constant and unwearied exertion throughout the action.

Private James K. Brady, Company H, for capturing colors.

Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers.—Capt. John M. Deane, commanding the regiment after the capture of Major Richardson, and Lieut. H. C. Joslyn, captured (Lieutenant Joslyn while on picket) and escaped through the ranks of the enemy in an audacious dash, exposed to every danger; worked a gun in Fort Haskell during the latter part of the engagement, only leaving it to charge back to Battery 11.

First Lieut. Nathaniel Burgess, mortally wounded in a hand-to-hand conflict in the battery.

First Lieut. D. P. Senley, acting adjutant, captured and escaped; acting as aide in the last part of the engagement and exercising cool and bold judgment.

Color-Sergt. Conrad Homan (already recommended for a medal of honor), for saving the colors when surrounded and ordered to surrender.

Color-Corpl. Nelson Cook (already recommended for medal of honor), killed in defense of colors.

Private T. M. O'Brien, Company B, who, by his skill as wrestler, overset into a rifle-pit the rebel guard who was conducting him to the rear, and secured thereby the escape of Captain Pizer and five men.

Private Edward Carney, Company G, who, with a gunsnot wound in his head, and beaten severely with butts of muskets, still "didn't see" surrender and fought his way out.

Sergt. William H. Howe, Company K, and Private Levi B. Gaylord, Company A (the latter previously recommended for medal of honor), for working barbettes guns in Fort Haskell, side by side with Captain Deane and Lieutenant Joslyn, after all but two of the artillery detachment had been killed or wounded.

Private Charles L. Nightingale, Company H (sentinel), alarmed the camp and killed a man who invaded his beat.

The following men, killed in the defense of the battery, deserve notice: First Sergt. C. F. Harlow, Company C, fought three of the enemy at once; Privates William Klinkler, Company E, and George E. Snow, Company G; Private Preserved Westgate, Company F, who fought the enemy with a club till mortally wounded.

Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers.—Sergt. Maj. C. H. Pinkham, captured battle-flag of Fifty-seventh North Carolina and saved his own colors by seizing them from the staff while the enemy were in the camp.

First Sergt. George Adams, Company G, wounded for fifteenth time.

First Sergt. Charles S. Chase, Company H, general good conduct, and Sergt. John O'Donnell, Company A.

Sergt. William F. Oakes, Company K (acting officer), for saving Captain Doherty when wounded, and First Sergt. William Magner, Company B.

Sergt. R. Wesley Williams, Company I (wounded), general bravery, and Corpl. F. S. Cheney, Company C, killed.

Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers.—First Sergts. Coburn S. Smith and John H. Kelley, Company D, for general gallantry, and the latter for assisting in working a piece of artillery in Fort Haskell.

Private Joshua W. Carr, Company H, was steadily brave, and won the admiration of his officers.

One hundredth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers.—Maj. N. J. Maxwell, commanding after the fall of Lieutenant-Colonel Pentecost, displayed distinguished gallantry.

Capt. John L. Johnson captured the colors of the Fifth Virginia Infantry.

Color-Sergt. Charles Oliver, Company M, captured the colors of the Thirty-first Georgia Infantry and planted the regimental colors on Fort Stedman while still occupied by the enemy.

Private Joseph B. Chambers, Company F, captured colors of the First Virginia Infantry.

Corpl. M. D. Dewire, Company A, captured rebel staff and part of flag and recaptured national camp color staff.

In addition to these Privates John Brown and Joseph Becket, Company C, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, detailed men in the subsistence department, deserve praise for the gallant manner in which they resisted the advance of the enemy, using the guns of the captured rebels, and fighting on the skirmish line, Brown being painfully wounded, and Becket capturing six prisoners.

General McLaughlen was captured about 4.30 a. m., but I was not notified of the fact till about 6 a. m., when I assumed command of the brigade.

Nominal lists of casualties have already been forwarded.* The staff—Maj. F. B. Mirick, brigade inspector; Capt. T. W. Clarke, acting assistant adjutant-general; Lieut. John D. Anderson, pioneer officer, and Lieut. Matthew Stewart, acting aide-de-camp—behaved creditably; Lieut. Thomas Sturgis, aide-de-camp, was captured with the general.

* Embodied in table, p. 70.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GILBERT P. ROBINSON,

Brevet Colonel, U. S. Volunteers.

Maj. WILLIAM V. RICHARDS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, First Division.

No. 146.

Report of Capt. Joseph F. Carter, Third Maryland Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQRS. THIRD MARYLAND BATTALION VET. VOL. INFTRY.,

Before Petersburg, Va., March 27, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report that this command was put under arms at about 4 a. m. March 25, in consequence of unusual firing heard in the direction of Fort Stedman; Brevet Colonel Robinson (at that time in command of the battalion) ordered me to learn the cause of the alarm. I ascertained that the enemy had succeeded in breaking our lines and capturing Fort Stedman, also Batteries Nos. 11 and 12, and portions of the Twenty-ninth and Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers and Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery. Finding the enemy advancing in the rear of our works, we threw out a line of skirmishers, having the rest of the command ready for their support. After the enemy had driven the One hundredth Pennsylvania from their camp, our skirmish line checked their farther advance, in conjunction with a portion of the One hundredth Pennsylvania, who had rallied at our skirmish line. We succeeded in holding the enemy until he gradually fell back into a narrow ravine on the left of Battery No. 12, when our skirmishers charged and drove the enemy out of the camp of the One hundredth Pennsylvania. We then occupied the left of the line of breast-works, and when the enemy commenced to retreat we charged along our works and were the first to re-enter Fort Stedman and Batteries Nos. 11 and 12, capturing some 200 prisoners. Corpls. Edward Mitchell and John H. Locker took off as many as eighty rebels, including nine commissioned officers.

We captured two stand of colors: one belonging to the Fifty-first Virginia Infantry, captured by Capt. Joseph F. Carter; the other belonging to the Twenty-seventh Georgia Infantry (erroneously reported as the Twelfth Alabama Battalion), captured by Private Patrick McCran, of Company C, Third Maryland Battalion Veteran Volunteer Infantry.

I take pleasure in commending the bravery of the following enlisted men of the battalion: Sergt. Michael Denahey, Company C; Corpls. Edward Mitchell, John H. Locker, and William H. Erdman, and Private William Brooks, Company D, and Private Andrew J. Smith, Company B, for gallantry and conspicuous conduct during the engagement, and assisting in the capture of prisoners, and being among the first to enter Fort Stedman. The last-mentioned, Private Andrew J. Smith, Company B, deserves great credit for endeavoring to take a flag pole, but, being a mere youth, his strength was not sufficient to bring it from the hands of the color bearer.

I would also mention the gallantry of Second Lieut. John Nape, of Company B, in forming the skirmish line, during which he was disabled by a severe gunshot wound in the face.

The anxiety manifested by the troops of this command to participate in the fight was highly creditable, the officers being taxed to their utmost to prevent the support from joining the skirmish line.

We lost—in killed 1 enlisted man; wounded, 1 commissioned officer and 5 enlisted men; missing, 5 enlisted men.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOSEPH F. CARTER,

Captain, Comdg. Third Maryland Battalion Vet. Vol. Infantry.

Capt. T. W. CLARKE,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Brigade.

No. 147.

Report of Capt. John F. Burch, Third Maryland Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD MARYLAND VOLUNTEERS,

March 28, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report as captain of the picket, March 25, 1865.

At 4 a. m. I visited the picket-line and saw that the men were up. On visiting the line I did not notice anything unusual on the enemy's lines. After visiting the right of the picket-line I returned to the left of that portion of the line in front of Fort Stedman and Battery 11, where the captain of the picket makes his headquarters. I had not returned but a few minutes when the man on lookout gave notice that the enemy were approaching. At that moment the men on the post fired their pieces. At the same time I ran around the bomb-proof, which concealed the right of the line from my view. I had not proceeded far when I noticed the enemy had crossed the picket-line and making for Fort Stedman. They demanded me to surrender, and fired a few shots at me. I ran down to the left of the line. On coming near the bomb-proof I found they were crossing over and making in the direction of Battery 11. I then made for camp through a covered-way, which came out near right of the Twenty-ninth Massachusetts. I passed down the left of the line of works in order to alarm the camps. I crossed over the works again, opposite the Third Maryland, and went down on the picket-line in front of that portion of the works where the men on that portion of the picket-line remained firm during the engagement. The portion of the line attacked by the enemy was so near to that of the enemy, and they moved with such rapidity, many of the pickets did not have a chance to reload their pieces. There were several of the men wounded, and a number taken prisoners.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN F. BURCH,

Captain, Third Maryland Volunteers.

Capt. T. W. CLARKE,

Acty. Asst. Adj. Gen., Third Brig., First Div., 9th Army Corps.

22 R R—VOL. XLVI, PT. I

Report of Capt. John M. Deane, Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Infantry, of operations March 25.

HQRS. TWENTY-NINTH MASSACHUSETTS VETERAN VOLS.,
Near Petersburg, Va., March 27, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with circular received, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this command in the action of March 25, 1865:

The alarm was first given by the trench guard, just as the enemy were entering Fort Stedman. Before our men had time to man the works the enemy entered our camp at the north front. They fired no shots, but used the butts of their muskets. The three companies on that front were captured, and the enemy then advanced to the west front, where they were met by Companies B, C, E, and H, and a desperate encounter ensued, in which most of our men were taken prisoners. The regiment now rallied at that part of the line between Batteries 11 and 12, and repulsed the enemy as they advanced, and drove them from our camp. As our prisoners were being taken to the rear they found the pickets in our immediate front still occupying their pits. Four officers and many of our men who at one time were prisoners broke from their guards and escaped. Soon after daylight the enemy swept around our rear from Fort Stedman, when the regiment retired to Fort Haskell, where it remained during the remainder of the engagement.

There were many instances of individual gallantry. Lieut. Nathaniel Burgess, Company B, fought gallantly at the west front, refused to surrender, and fell mortally wounded. Lieut. H. C. Joslyn, Company G, was captured on the picket-line, broke from his guard and rejoined his regiment, passing through a column of the enemy marching along the works; he afterward fought with distinguished gallantry at Fort Haskell, aiding in the working of a piece of artillery. Color-Sergt. Conrad Homan was ordered to surrender with his colors, but refused so to do, and escaped. Private T. M. O'Brien, Company B, while being taken to the rear with other prisoners, at a given signal tripped one of the guards, threw him into a ditch, and, with Capt. Pizer and several men, made his escape. First Sergt. C. F. Harlow, Company C, refused to surrender when summoned to by three of the enemy, and was killed. Private W. Klinkler, Company E, placed himself at the entrance of a bomb-proof, refused all demands for a surrender, and fell fighting gallantly. Private Preserved Westgate, Company F, fought the enemy with a club until mortally wounded. Color-Corpl. Nelson Cook, Company G, fell fighting with distinguished gallantry. Private George E. Snow, Company G, a sentinel, fell fighting at his post. Private Edward Carney, Company G, was seized by the throat and ordered to surrender; he replied, "I don't see it;" received several severe blows upon the back with a musket and a slight gunshot wound in the head; he freed himself from the enemy and escaped. Private Charles L. Nightingale, Company H, a sentinel, remained at his post and shot one of the enemy who demanded his surrender. Sergt. William H. Howe, Company K, and Private Levi B. Gaylord, Company A, fought with distinguished gallantry at Fort Haskell, aiding in the working of a piece of artillery mounted on barbette after all but two of the battery-men belonging to the piece had been killed or wounded.

Following are the casualties in this command during the day: 9
ed men killed, 2 officers and 4 enlisted men wounded, 3 officers
7 enlisted men missing.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN M. DEANE,

Captain, Commanding Regiment.

Pt. T. W. CLARKE,

Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Third Brig., First Div., 9th Army Corps.

No. 149.

*rt of Lieut. Col. Julius M. Tucker, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts
Infantry, of operations March 25.*

CAMP OF FIFTY-SEVENTH MASSACHUSETTS VOL. INFTRY,
Before Petersburg, Va., March 27, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the tions of my command in the engagement with the enemy on the the sound of unusually heavy musketry the command formed of battle near its camp about 4 a. m. Escaped pickets reported enemy in heavy force in possession of the line of works in our front, Companies G and K were deployed forward as skirmishers, the ment advancing to the attack, the enemy advancing simultaneously in the darkness effecting the capture of a portion of right wing of ish line. Information having been received of the lodgment made the enemy in Fort Stedman, the skirmishers were withdrawn, and egiment moved to the rear of the fort, with intention of attempt-ts recapture by assault, but the appearance of the enemy on both s forced a retirement, which was conducted in good order. The y's advance was checked by the regiment in four positions successively taken up while in line of retreat, but from all of which it was relled to retire by repeated demonstrations on its flanks. The crest looking the plain now presented the best possible defensive position and the battery at its summit, the possession of which was evily the enemy's object, and which would have given him an incalculable advantage, was entirely without support. The regiment accord-

- took up position in its rear; subsequently was deployed as skirmers to cover advance of portion of Third Division, Ninth Army s, and moved forward, the enemy's skirmishers precipitately with-ing. Successive charges were made to recover the camp of the ment, the third of which was rewarded by most complete success, enemy fleeing in helpless disorganization or surrendering as pris-
-s of war.

e numerical and nominal casualty lists have already been for-
-ed you, but the irreparable loss to the regiment and the service in leath of Capt. James Doherty, acting field officer, and under whose mediate supervision the operations of the regiment were mainly con-
-ed, deserves more particular mention in this report. By most pious bravery invariably displayed, by the complete subordina-
-of his every regard for his personal safety in action to his efforts secure victory, by his remarkable executive ability and tactical
- he had long since achieved a reputation as a most reliable, bril-
- and invaluable officer, and in consideration of the pre-eminent display of these qualities on the 25th, and of the large contribution to the gratifying result made by his efforts, I earnestly recommend that promotion by brevet or otherwise be awarded his name.

First. Lieut. Albert M. Murdock, killed with the colors of the regiment in his hand, which he had grasped to lead a charge, deserves especial mention for gallantry.

To every officer of the command present in the action I know that honorable mention for distinguished services is due; but as they as a unit co-operated in the execution of the movements resulting so successfully, so to them collectively do I confess my obligations.

The following enlisted men were observed as conducting themselves bravely and performing specific acts of gallantry, enumerated below, viz:

Sergt. Maj. Charles H. Pinkham—captured battle-flag of Fifty-seventh North Carolina (rebel); saved colors of his regiment from capture, seizing them from a tent after the enemy had entered the regimental camp.

First Sergt. George Adams, Company G—conspicuous bravery on skirmish line, receiving his fifteenth wound, continuing with regiment after being wounded.

First Sergt. Charles S. Chase, Company H, acting color-sergeant—general good conduct.

Sergt. John O'Donnell, Company A—rallying and encouraging his men; has participated in every engagement with his company and regiment since its entry into service.

Sergt. William F. Oakes, Company K (missing in action, and acting lieutenant)—gallantry while in command of portion of skirmish line; carried Captain Doherty to rear; resisted attempt of enemy to kill him (Doherty) after being taken prisoner.

First Sergt. William Magner, Company B—general bravery.

Sergt. R. Wesley Williams, Company I (wounded)—general bravery.
Corpl. Frederick S. Cheney, Company C (killed), color corporal—general bravery.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. M. TUCKER,

Lieut. Col. Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Vol. Inftry., Comdg. Regiment.

Capt. THOMAS W. CLARKE,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Third Brig., First Div., 9th Army Corps.

No. 150.

Report of Maj. Ezra P. Gould, Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. FIFTY-NINTH MASSACHUSETTS VOLUNTEERS,

Before Petersburg, March 27, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this regiment in the engagement of March 25, 1865:

The regiment was, on its first arrival at the front, ordered to occupy and hold Battery 11, which it did until the lines on either side were deserted or occupied by the enemy, and the rebels' line of battle, completely outflanking my position, was within a very short distance, when I gave the order "by the right flank, over the works, to Fort Haskell," which most of the men complied with and arrived safely in the fort. This position, being the only tenable and defensible part of the brigade line, was occupied by nearly all the regimental commanders with their commands, and from there we opened fire on Fort Stedman with musketry and artillery, so heavy as to compel the enemy to leave the fort three several times; but finding that it was not occupied again by our troops they returned each time, till finally we were re-enforced by the Third Division and the enemy were driven from our works.

Of the men in this command, while all to my personal knowledge behaved nobly, First Sergt. Coburn S. Smith, Company D, and Sergt. John I. Kelley, Company D, made themselves specially conspicuous by the rapid and effective fire that they kept up from an exposed situation, the latter helping the batterymen work one of their guns, the most exposed and dangerous work done in the fort, a good part of the time; and Private Joshua W. Carr, Company H, though performing no special act of valor, won my admiration and that of the other officers by his steady bravery.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EZRA P. GOULD,
Major, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. T. W. CLARKE,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Brigade.

No. 151.

Report of Maj. George M. Randall, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, of operations March 25.

HQRS. FOURTEENTH NEW YORK HEAVY ARTILLERY,
Fort Stedman, in front of Petersburg, Va., March 27, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report in relation to the attack made on Fort Stedman and Battery No. 10 on the morning of the 25th instant:

At 3 a. m. the officers of my command were informed by a sergeant of the picket that the enemy were advancing on our works in my immediate front. I at once ordered my command to the works. On reaching them I found that some few men of the enemy were on the works to the right of Battery No. 10, who made a most desperate attempt to gain possession. My command opened fire, and succeeded in foiling their attempt. The enemy were re-enforced, and made another desperate attempt. A few had gained our works, but these were captured and sent to the rear. I ordered my men to use their bayonets and the butts of their muskets, which they did most gallantly, fighting hand to hand with the enemy. The next attack was made on Fort Stedman, and notwithstanding the darkness of the night and the suddenness of the attack, succeeded in checking them at these points. The third attack, the enemy met with better success, they having flanked us on our right and left, and charging us at daybreak with overwhelming force, made it necessary for my men to retreat, which they did, toward the first battalion of my regiment, now at Fort Haskell.

The officers of Forts Stedman and Haskell behaved most gallantly during the engagement. I would take occasion to mention the names of Captains Houghton, Cleary, Brennan, Foote, and Lieut. Charles A. O'Brien, for their valuable services rendered during the engagement.

One stand of colors was captured by Private James K. Brady, H Company, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery.

At the commencement of the attack I immediately sent orderlies to the Twenty-ninth and Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Regiments, also to brigade and division headquarters, asking for immediate support, stating that it would be impossible for me to hold the works unless re-enforced immediately.

Too much credit cannot be given to the officers and men of the Third New Jersey Light Artillery for their noble conduct. The First Connecticut Heavy Artillery fought hand to hand with the enemy while protecting their mortars, and then remained with them until the last moment; also the Nineteenth New York (Captain Rogers) Battery, and one section of the Fourteenth Massachusetts Battery.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. M. RANDALL,

Major Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, Comdg. Regt.

Bvt. Col. G. P. ROBINSON,

Commanding Third Brig., First Div., Ninth Army Corps.

No. 152.

Report of Maj. Norman J. Maxwell, One hundredth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.

HQRS. ONE HUNDREDTH PENNSYLVANIA VET. VOLS.,

March 27, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this regiment on the 25th instant:

Immediately upon ascertaining that the enemy were in possession of Fort Stedman, Colonel Pentecost ordered a skirmish line to be thrown from the mortar battery immediately [on] our right (Battery 11) across the field to our (then) right. This line, supported by one company, succeeded for a few minutes in stopping the enemy's advance, but being pressed by a heavy line of battle were compelled to retire. Perceiving that it was useless to attempt to hold our line of works, three companies were ordered to occupy a part of the old works immediately in our rear, and the remainder of the regiment directed to rally in Fort Haskell. While superintending the movement to Fort Haskell Colonel Pentecost was mortally wounded. When the rebels occupied our camp the part of the regiment in the fort and the detached companies opened fire upon them, and, in common with the other troops, succeeded in driving them out. The line was almost immediately reoccupied, and with the men at my command I pressed on to Fort Stedman.

Color-Sergt. Charles Oliver planted his colors on Fort Stedman while it was still occupied by a portion of the enemy. The following is a list of colors captured, with the names of their captors: Colors Fifth Virginia Infantry, captured by Capt. John L. Johnson, Company D; colors First Virginia Infantry, captured by Private Joseph B. Chambers, Company F; colors Thirty-first Georgia Infantry, captured by Color-Sergt. Charles Oliver, Company M; rebel staff and part of color and national camp color staff, captured by Corpl. M. D. Dewire, Company A.

A large number of prisoners were captured by the regiment, but I have no means of knowing how many.

All the officers and men who came under my notice behaved so well that I cannot mention particular instances of bravery.

Full details of casualties have already been forwarded.*

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

N. J. MAXWELL,
Major, Commanding Regiment.

Captain CLARKE,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 153.

Report of Maj. Thomas Mathews, Seventeenth Michigan Infantry (Engineers), of operations March 25.

HDQRS. SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT MICHIGAN INFANTRY,
Before Petersburg, Va., March 27, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this regiment during the engagement of Saturday, the 25th instant:

That portion of the regiment in camp (about 100 men) was under arms and reported at division headquarters at 5 a. m. About 5.30 o'clock, as soon as daylight revealed the position of the enemy's advance, I was ordered by General Willeox to deploy the regiment and oppose his skirmishers, then advanced nearly to the creek, in front of the Dunn House Battery. At this moment one of the regiments of the Third Division advanced on the double-quick and formed on the bank of the creek in front of the battery. I deployed the Seventeenth on the right of this regiment, covering the space between it and the Petersburg and City Point Railroad, and advanced on the double-quick to an old line of works extending across the plain nearly at right angles with the railroad. As we advanced the skirmishers of the enemy threw down their arms and gave themselves up. The enemy being in strong force in the road between Batteries 9 and 10, we were compelled to halt in the works above mentioned, where we engaged him at easy range. When the enemy finally gave way my line advanced with the line on its left and reoccupied the works taken early in the morning, at about 8 a. m. Here we captured a number of prisoners. The entire number captured by the regiment is between fifty and sixty.

The regiment suffered a loss of but one man killed—Private Wellington Hendrickson, of Company G. This small loss is owing chiefly to the regiment having been deployed to cover so long a line.

The officers and men under my command behaved with admirable coolness during the entire engagement.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. MATHEWS,
Major, Commanding Regiment.

Bvt. Maj. WILLIAM V. RICHARDS,
Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., First Division, Ninth Army Corps.

* Embodied in table, p. 70.

No. 154.

Reports of Bvt. Maj. Gen. John F. Hartranft, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division, of operations February 5-10 and March 25.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, NINTH ARMY CORPS,
February 13, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by my command in the late movement on the left, in the vicinity of Hatcher's Run:

In obedience to orders received near 3 p. m., 5th instant, I moved my command as soon as possible, the whole division being on the march in light order by 4 p. m. At 8 p. m. I reported to Major-General Humphreys, commanding Second Army Corps, some two miles down the Vaughan Road from Fort Siebert, with my command in good order, having made the march very rapidly, and, as I believe, without a straggler. General Humphreys placed me in position on his immediate right, with orders to entrench myself during the night; my right rested a few rods in front of the Claypole house, the left on a wide, impenetrable swamp which covered the right of the Second Corps, the general direction of my line being nearly north and south. At daylight on the 6th instant the command had a good line of works 1,000 yards in length, joined on the right by a line constructed by the First Division, Sixth Army Corps. Near 10 a. m. I received orders from General Humphreys to send out a regiment on a reconnaissance, with instructions to move by way of the Smith and Hawks houses, and ascertain, if possible, the position and force of the enemy outside of their main works with the view of attacking him in force if found. I ordered out the Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel McCall commanding, under charge of Captain Watts, one of my staff officers, who was well acquainted with the various roads in the vicinity as well as the position of the enemy's main line. This officer soon reported that there was no enemy in my front outside of their works, except the usual pickets, who occupied their customary pits, when, in obedience to orders from General Humphreys, the party were ordered to return to the division. At 2 p. m. I received orders to at once relieve General Wheaton's division of the Sixth Corps from the line on my right, and hold the extended works from my present left to the vicinity of Fort Cummings. By placing my reserve regiments on the line, I still had a reasonably strong one. Large details were immediately sent out to slash the timber in front.

February 7, the slashing was continued with all the available axes. At 1 p. m. I received orders to hold 1,500 men in readiness to move promptly to the support of Major-General Warren, Fifth Corps, in the event of its being absolutely necessary. I ordered Colonel Diven, commanding First Brigade, to call in all details and hold his brigade ready to move promptly in answer to such a call, the axes in his possession being transferred to the Second Brigade, which sent out an additional detail to keep them occupied.

February 8, 9, and 10 were occupied in opening and building roads. At 7 p. m., 10th instant, I received orders from General Humphreys, relieving my command from duty with the Second Army Corps. The command moved at 8 o'clock, reaching camp between 11 and 12 o'clock the same night.

Although the command did not become engaged with the enemy, yet they performed all labors and marches with the utmost promptness, each and all seeming willing and anxious to do what was required of them.

I have the honor to be, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. F. HARTRANFT,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Lieut. Col. P. M. LYDIG,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Ninth Army Corps.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, NINTH ARMY CORPS,
April 14, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by my command in the repulse of the enemy at Fort Stedman on the morning of the 25th of March ultimo:

Immediately upon hearing the alarm on the right of the line, which was about 4.30 a. m., Captain Dalien, of my staff, who was on duty as staff officer of the day, was sent from my headquarters, which were at the Avery house, to Colonel Harriman and Brigadier-General McLaughlen, commanding brigades in the First Division, and ascertain the cause of the alarm; at the same time orders were sent to my brigade commanders, and their commands were under arms ready for any emergency. The position of my division, which consists of two brigades, was as follows: One regiment, the Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, near the Dunn House Battery; the Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, at Meade's Station; the Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the right of the Avery house; the Two hundred and fifth and Two hundred and seventh Regiments Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the army line railroad, near Fort Prescott, and the Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, near the railroad, about half-way between Forts Alex. Hays and Howard. At 5.10 a. m. Captain Dalien returned to headquarters with a dispatch from General McLaughlen's headquarters, and of which the following is a copy:

HEADQUARTERS THIRD BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, NINTH ARMY CORPS,
March 25, 1865.

GENERAL: The enemy have attacked our lines and carried a portion of its works (from Battery 11 and Stedman to the right). They are now moving towards the Appomattox. General on the lines.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CLARKE,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

A few moments afterward I received dispatch from Major-General Parke, of which the following is a copy:

HEADQUARTERS NINTH ARMY CORPS,
March 25, 1865—5.15 a. m.

GENERAL: The general commanding directs that you move the brigade at Meade's Station to re-enforce General Willcox, in order to recapture a battery reported to be taken by the enemy on his front and near Fort Stedman.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. L. VAN BUREN,
Brevet Colonel and Aide-de-Camp.

I immediately started in person to the right, and at the same time ordered the Two hundred and eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers to report to General McLaughlen. I then went to communicate with Major-General Willcox, commanding First Division, whose headquarters were at the Friend house. I found the Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers moving toward General Willcox's headquarters, and the Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers had already moved out of camp and had halted with the right resting near the Dunn House Battery. This was done by the order of Major-General Willcox, the regiment having had directions to obey the orders of General Willcox in case of an attack, to avoid delay, the distance to my headquarters being so great, owing to the length of the line covered by my command. I asked General Willcox to send one of his staff to direct the Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and he designated Captain Brackett, aide-de-camp, to perform this duty, who led the regiment by the flank down the road to the left of the Friend house. It was now sufficiently light to see the enemy's skirmishers advancing from the rear and our right of Fort Stedman toward the ravine and covering the main road leading from Stedman to the Ninth Corps hospitals. Seeing this movement of the enemy's skirmishers, and finding a small party of men from the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers in front of the Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, under command of a captain, engaging them, and from whom I ascertained that this detachment had been driven from its camp and that all that was left of the regiment had been rallied at that point, I ordered his detachment to move forward to its old camp, and I immediately advanced the Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers to the camp of the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts, in rear of Stedman, without sustaining any very serious damage. The enemy's line of skirmishers was broken, but he was in force in the left end of the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts camp, on the road running in rear of Stedman and in a line of works running about parallel with our line. I sent Major Shorckley, of my staff, to bring up the Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers to form a connection on the right of the Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and I immediately attacked with the Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, but finding the enemy too strong and my right suffering very much from a heavy fire from Stedman and the troops in the road, the regiment was forced to retire to an old line of works about forty yards in rear of and to the right of the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts camp. The enemy seeing this regiment retire, I feared that he would take advantage of it and attack me, and I therefore attacked a second time and gained quite a good position. I held this position for about twenty minutes, losing very heavily (the loss in this regiment being about 100 at this point), when the line wavered and fell back to and was rallied on the old line of works from which it had advanced the second time. Here the Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers formed a connection on the right of the Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and with the aid of the fire from Battery 9, which had opened, and the Twentieth Michigan, which garrisoned this battery, and the Second and Seventeenth Michigan, of the First Division, which covered the ground between the right of the Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers and Battery 9, I had a strong line, which I determined could be held and check any farther advance in this direction, and I therefore ordered the troops to act on the defensive.

I saw that I could accomplish nothing more with the force I had engaged, and having fully satisfied myself that this advance was not a feint on the part of the enemy, but a serious and determined attack, I dispatched an orderly to bring up my Second Brigade, and I went to confer with General Willcox in regard to the situation. On my way to General Willcox's headquarters I saw Colonel Loring, of General Parke's staff, through whom I received an order to place my Second Brigade in position on the hill in rear of Stedman, and covering Meade's Station. I requested him to communicate with General Willcox, and I proceeded to join my Second Brigade. Two regiments of the Second Brigade, the Two hundred and fifth and Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, had already been moved to the right as far as the Avery house, on the double-quick, by Major Bertollette, assistant adjutant-general (who received the order to do so through Colonel Van Buren, aide-de-camp on General Parke's staff), and were by him conducted through the ravine on the right of the Avery house to a point on the right of General McLaughlen's headquarters and in the rear of Fort Stedman under cover. I then went to General McLaughlen's headquarters and found the Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers in a good position on the right of his headquarters, left resting near Fort Haskell and facing northward. Several small detachments of the Third Brigade, First Division, mostly from the One hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, numbering, perhaps, 200 men, were formed on the left of the Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers and between it and Fort Haskell. I also found that the reserves of the First Brigade, First Division, had formed a line on the right of and at right angles with the main line held by that brigade. The Two hundred and fifth and Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers were a short distance to the right of the Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and the distance from the left of the Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers to the right of the Second Brigade was probably about 300 yards, which distance was not covered by any troops.

I saw that any farther advance on the part of the enemy was impossible under the concentrated infantry fire from the Two hundredth and Two hundred and ninth Regiments Pennsylvania Volunteers and Batteries 9 and McGillvery on the right, and the Two hundred and fifth, Two hundred and seventh, and Two hundred and eighth Regiments Pennsylvania Volunteers and Fort Haskell on the left, and from the field artillery in position on the hills in rear of Stedman, the fire of which was concentrated on the fort, and covering the open space in rear. This position being so favorable, I did not move the Two hundred and fifth and Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, of the Second Brigade, in position on the hills covering Meade's Station, as ordered through Colonel Loring, but ordered the Two hundred and eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers (which had not yet arrived on the ground on account of the great distance from its camp on the left to this point) to take this position. It was now about 7.30 a. m., when I received an order from General Parke, through one of his staff, to retake the line. My plan of attack was as follows: Orders were sent out that an assault would be made by my whole division in fifteen minutes, and that the signal for the assault would be the advance of the Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers from the hill in the rear toward Stedman. Captain Hodgkins was directed to advance with the Second Brigade under Colonel Mathews, Major Bertollette with the Two hundredth and Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers on the right, and as soon as the Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers could be put into position it was advanced toward Stedman, under the direction of Captain Watts, aide-de-camp, in full view of the enemy. This was done for the purpose of attracting the attention and fire of the enemy, and cover the movement of the balance of the division which was to carry the works. This ruse was a complete success. The enemy, seeing the advance of this regiment, numbering about 600 muskets, in such handsome manner, commenced to waver, when the balance of the division charged with a will, in the most gallant style, and in a moment Stedman, Batteries 11 and 12, and the entire line which had been lost, was recaptured with a large number of prisoners, battle-flags, and small-arms. After the troops had commenced moving to make this assault, I received orders not to make it until a division of the Sixth Army Corps, which was on its way to support me, had arrived, but I saw that the enemy had already commenced to waver, and that success was certain. I, therefore, allowed the lines to charge; besides this, it was doubtful whether I could have communicated with the regiments on the flanks in time to countermand the movement.

From the reports of my subordinate commanders as well as from my own observation, at least 1,500 of the prisoners, and all the battle-flags captured, were taken by and passed to the rear through the lines of my division, but were afterward collected by other troops, while but about 770 prisoners and one battle-flag were credited to my command. The officers and men were so eager to regain the lost ground, and regimental commanders so desirous to maintain their several organizations, which had been somewhat broken after charging through the bomb-proofs and old works around the forts, that little or no attention was paid to the trophies of this brilliant victory.

The officers and men of my division, composed entirely of new troops, deserve great credit for their promptness in moving forward to the point of attack, to which in a great measure is owing the success of the day, and for their gallant conduct throughout the action.

The Two hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel McCall commanding, deserves particular mention. This regiment was put to the severest test, and behaved with the greatest firmness and steadiness. The regiment made two stubborn attacks on the enemy, and when compelled to retire it fell back in good order.

Among the many officers of this command who did their duty I cannot refrain from noticing especially the conduct of Col. J. A. Mathews, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, commanding Second Brigade, for the promptness in which he moved his command to the scene of action, and for his gallantry in the final assault.

Col. C. W. Diven, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, commanding First Brigade, who went early to General McLaughlin's headquarters, for the disposition made by him of the Two hundred and eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and other troops near Haskell, which checked the farther advance of the enemy toward the left.

Lieut. Col. W. H. H. McCall, commanding Two hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, for his coolness and bravery, and for the skill displayed by him in handling his regiment.

Lieut. Col. George W. Frederick and Maj. John L. Richey, Two hundred and ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, who behaved with great gallantry in advancing their regiment and in the final assault.

Lieut. Col. M. T. Heintzelman and Capt. T. W. Hoffman, Two hundred and eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, for their promptness in moving their regiment forward, holding the positions they had gained, and for the efficiency of their regiment in the recapture of Batteries 11 and 12.

Col. R. C. Cox, commanding Two hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Maj. B. M. Morrow, commanding Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Capt. W. A. Coulter, commanding Two hundredth and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, for promptness and gallantry in the final assault.

Capt. F. A. Hoffman, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, for his gallantry in attempting to capture a rebel flag, in the act of which he was shot through the hand and knocked down with a musket by the enemy.

Among the enlisted men who distinguished themselves and deserve particular mention are: Private Levi A. Smith, Company E, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Private John J. Levi, Company H, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Sergeants Elbridge Stiles and Edward J. Humphreys, Company C, color bearers, Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Private George Dull, Company F, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The following-named enlisted men are reported as having captured colors: Private James Decker, Company D, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Corpl. John Fulton, Company B, Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers; Private Charles H. Keinert, Company F, Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers. Recommendations will be made for medals for these men.

Brevet Brigadier-General Tidball, commanding Artillery Brigade, Ninth Army Corps, was on the ground directing the movements and fire of the artillery.

Col. Charles G. Loring, Bvt. Col. J. L. Van Buren, Captain Goddard, and Capt. John C. Youngman, of General Parke's staff, and Capt. L. C. Brackett, aide-de-camp to Major-General Willcox, were with me on the field during the action and rendered me valuable services in carrying dispatches.

I cannot speak too highly of the members of my staff—Bvt. Maj. John D. Bertolotto, assistant adjutant-general; Bvt. Maj. George Shorkley (captain Fifty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers), division inspector (who was wounded in the thigh); Capt. William H. Hodgkins, Thirty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, assistant commissary of musters; Capt. Richard A. Watts, Seventeenth Michigan Volunteers, aide-de-camp; Capt. Prosper Dalien, Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers (who was wounded in the breast); Lieut. Reuben R. Webbert, acting ordnance officer, and Capt. Martin G. Hale, provost-marshal—for the prompt, efficient, and most valuable services rendered during the action.

A tabular statement of casualties is hereto appended, together with copies of the reports of brigade commanders and regimental commanders of the First Brigade, to which attention is respectfully invited.

A nominal list of casualties has already been furnished.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. F. HARTRANFT,
Brevet Major-General.

Lieut. Col. P. M. LYDIG,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Ninth Army Corps.

Tabular statement.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Total. | | Aggregate. |
|------------------------------------|-----------|------|-----------|------|-----------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| Division staff..... | | | 2 | | 2 | | 2 |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| 200th Pennsylvania Volunteers..... | | 9 | 6 | 167 | 6 | 116 | 122 |
| 208th Pennsylvania Volunteers..... | 1 | 3 | 2 | 35 | 3 | 38 | 41 |
| 209th Pennsylvania Volunteers..... | 1 | 4 | 2 | 48 | 3 | 52 | 55 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| 205th Pennsylvania Volunteers..... | | | 1 | 9 | 1 | 9 | 10 |
| 207th Pennsylvania Volunteers..... | | 1 | 1 | 15 | 1 | 10 | 17 |
| 211th Pennsylvania Volunteers..... | | 1 | | 10 | | 11 | 11 |
| Total..... | 2 | 18 | 14 | 224 | 10 | 242 | 258 |

No. 155.

Report of Col. Charles W. Diven, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding First Brigade, of operations March 25.

HQRS. FIRST BRIG., THIRD DIV., NINTH ARMY CORPS,
March 30, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by my brigade in the operations of the 25th instant, near Fort Stedman:

The Two hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieut. Col. W. H. H. McCall commanding, and the Two hundred and ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieut. Col. George W. Frederick commanding, were engaged on the right of the line, under the personal direction of the general commanding the division, and I respectfully refer to the reports of these regiments, giving detailed accounts of the movements of each. At about 5 a. m. the Two hundred and eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Heintzelman commanding, was moved into position on the right of General McLaughlin's headquarters, left resting within about 100 yards of Fort Haskell, facing northward. There were a number of squads from the Third Brigade, First Division, numbering some 200 in all, under command of several captains and lieutenants, which I placed on the left of the Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and which acted under my orders. The Two hundred and eighth Regiment, upon arriving on the ground, discovered the enemy, and immediately fired two or three well-directed volleys on him, causing him to fall back in some confusion to the cover of a ravine. The regiment then advanced and drove him out of the ravine to the cover of Battery No. 12 and the lines of works connecting it with Fort Stedman, capturing about 100 prisoners. In this position it remained until about 7.30 a. m., when orders were received, through an orderly from your headquarters, that General Hartranft would charge in fifteen minutes, and before the order could be sent to Lieutenant-Colonel Heintzelman the other troops of the division moved forward in the charge. Colonel Heintzelman seeing this, also moved forward in handsome style, retaking Battery No. 12, and the main line on the right of it, capturing — battle-flags, about — prisoners, and — small-arms.

While this charge was made I was wounded by the explosion of a shell, after which the command of the brigade devolved upon Lieut. Col. W. H. H. McCall, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, the senior officer present.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. W. DIVEN,

Colonel Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Comdg. Brigade.

Maj. JOHN D. BERTOLETTE,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., Third Division, Ninth Army Corps.

No. 156.

Report of Lieut. Col. William H. H. McCall, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. 200TH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

March 26, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by my regiment in the operations at Fort Stedman on the 25th instant:

Upon hearing the firing on the line in front at dawn of day I immediately formed my regiment and held it under arms awaiting orders, and in a few minutes I received an order from General Willcox, through one of his staff, to report at the Friend house (General Willcox's headquarters) with my regiment, but upon arriving within about half way from my camp to his headquarters I saw a number of men retreating from the front, when I immediately halted my regiment and moved it forward a short distance, with my right resting near the Dunn House Battery, and attempted to drive back the men who had retired from the front. A few moments after this General Hartranft appeared on the ground in person, and ordered my regiment forward, at the same time advancing with it to the camp of the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, driving back the enemy's skirmishers, who had advanced beyond the camp, and at the same time charging the enemy, but finding him too strong and suffering terribly from this fire my men were driven back to an old line of works a few rods in rear and right of the camp of the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, where my regiment was reformed. Another attack was ordered by General Hartranft; and my regiment moved forward handsomely and gained a position quite near the enemy. This position was held fifteen or twenty minutes, with a large loss, when the regiment again retired to the cover of the old line, where a connection was formed with the Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers on the right. Here the left wing of my regiment inflicted severe injury on the enemy by its fire, and prevented any farther advance.

General Hartranft now directed me to hold this position, which I did, against any farther advance of the enemy. I remained in this position some time, when Major Bertolette, assistant adjutant-general, of General Hartranft's staff, who had been rendering valuable assistance all the time, informed me that an assault would soon be made by the division to retake the works, and that my regiment, with the Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, would conform to the movement of the Second Brigade, which was several hundred yards to my left, and that the signal for the assault would be the advance of the Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers from the high ground in rear of Stedman and the regiments on my right. I immediately prepared my command for the movement, and when the advance of the Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers and the troops on my left was made, Major Bertolette ordered the charge, which was made instantaneously, the men moving forward in the most gallant style, charging the right corner of Stedman and the main line of works leading from it. My regiment alone captured at least 350 prisoners and a like number of small-arms, but my men were so eager to regain the fort and works that they paid but little attention to the prisoners, telling them to pass to the rear, where they were picked up by troops of the First Division, and claimed by that division, when they were really captured by and passed to the rear through my command.

The officers and men of my command all behaved with the greatest daring and bravery. Capt. F. A. Hoffman seized the colors in the hand of a rebel color bearer, but was shot through the hand and knocked down with a musket, retaining a piece of the flag, which he tore from the standard.

Private Levi A. Smith, Company E, deserves particular mention. After the color bearer had been shot down I grasped the colors and called for some one to take them, when this boy sprang forward and asked me to permit him to carry the flag, which he did throughout the action.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. H. H. McCALL,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Lieut. C. L. BUFFINGTON,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., First Brig., Third Div., 9th Army Corps.

No. 157.

Report of Lieut. Col. Mish T. Heintzelman, Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS, 208TH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

March 27, 1865.

SIR: In obedience to circular from headquarters Third Division, Ninth Army Corps, dated March 26, 1865, I have the honor to offer the following report relative to the part taken and captures made by my regiment in the engagement near Fort Stedman on the 25th instant:

When my regiment reached the headquarters of the Third Brigade, First Division, Ninth Army Corps, the enemy had advanced a short distance across the first line of rifle-pits in rear of the main line of our breast-works and still maintained a good line, continuing to advance. On our approach, at the corner of the woods near the top of the hill, the enemy perceived my regiment for the first time, and immediately opened a heavy fire on it. We returned the fire, and merely held our own ground for probably a half hour, during which time I awaited further orders. In the meantime the enemy commenced falling back behind the main line of breast-works, sheltering themselves from our fire and continuing to fire upon my regiment. No orders having been received yet I ordered the regiment to charge on the enemy, which I did but the word "forward," and the men were off on a double-charge. The enemy began to give way, and in a short time his whole line was under a full and most disorderly retreat. The regiment quickly followed and took possession of the main line, a part entering Battery No. 12 and capturing in the fort alone 100 prisoners, including a colonel, adjutant, and several line officers. On the balance of the line we captured 250 prisoners, making in all 350 prisoners captured by my regiment. In the meantime the color bearer of the One hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers entered Battery 12, and took possession of several stand of colors (rebel), which justly belonged to my regiment.

A large number of enlisted men belonging to the First Division, representing themselves to be provost guards especially detailed for the purpose of escorting prisoners to the rear, followed immediately in our rear, picking up large numbers of prisoners taken by my regiment, thereby claiming a credit of prisoners for the First Division.

Previous to our advancing, the entire line formerly occupied by the One hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers and Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, including Batteries Nos. 11 and 12, was entirely deserted from Fort Stedman to Fort Haskell. The camps were filled with rebels, who were crowded in so thickly as to render it impossible to deploy my command. My regiment occupied our main line of breast-works from ten to twenty minutes before the order reached me to advance.

There were gathered up by officers belonging to the First Division in the several batteries at least 500 stand of small-arms belonging to the Third Division.

Respectfully submitted.

M. T. HEINTZELMAN,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding 208th Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Lieut. CHARLES L. BUFFINGTON,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 158.

Report of Lieut. Col. George W. Frederick, Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS 209TH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

March 28, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In compliance with circular from headquarters Third Division, dated March 27, 1865, I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by my regiment in the action of the 25th instant:

About — o'clock I was requested by an aide of General Willeox to form my regiment and move it to a point near the signal station, a short distance in rear of the Dunn House Battery. I was then conducted by the same aide to the front and right of the Dunn House Battery. I had scarcely got my regiment into position when the same aide informed me that it was General Hartranft's order that I should immediately, with the Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, charge the hill in my front, which was then held by the enemy. I at once gave the order to charge, and the regiment moved forward, under a very heavy fire of musketry and artillery, gaining a line of works running across the open field over which we were advancing. Halting for a moment, we again advanced, gaining a ditch near the hill occupied by the enemy. Here we were shelled from both front and rear. It was here also that the gallant Lieut. Hugh Jones, commanding Company C, fell, pierced through the heart by a musket-ball. We remained in the ditch for some time, when, noticing the enemy retreating, we poured into them a murderous fire, which was continued until I saw the Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, which was on my left, preparing, as I supposed, to move forward. I immediately ordered my regiment forward, and forward we went, not an officer or man halting or faltering until our advance line was gained and our colors planted on the works, and I am satisfied that they were the first colors planted on the works.

My officers and men all did their duty so well that it would seem invidious to make any distinction; yet I feel it my duty to make honorable mention of Sergeants Stiles and Humphreys, color bearers, who were always to be seen in advance.

A considerable number of prisoners were sent to the rear, estimated at 350.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. W. FREDERICK,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

[Lieutenant BUFFINGTON,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.]

No. 159.

Report of Col. Joseph A. Mathews, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIG., THIRD DIV., 9TH ARMY CORPS,
March 25, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to state the following with regard to the movements of my command during the engagement of this a. m.:

At — a. m. I was instructed by Lieutenant Webbert, of General Hartranft's staff, that the general desired me to report, with my command, at division headquarters without a moment's delay. I immediately dispatched a staff officer to bring down the Two hundred and eleventh Regiment (which is encamped some two miles from my headquarters), and with the remaining two regiments of my brigade reported promptly at the point mentioned. From thence I was conducted by yourself to the ravine, situated about two-thirds of a mile in front of your headquarters. I there halted my command about one hour, awaiting orders. Through Captain Hodgkins, of General Hartranft's staff, I was notified to prepare for a charge against Fort Stedman, and further notified that when the Two hundred and eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, of my brigade, then under the general's own supervision, made its appearance on the brow of the hill in my rear, I was to charge with the Two hundred and fifth and Two hundred and seventh against the fort. This was done. I ordered Colonel Cox, with his (Two hundred and seventh) regiment, to charge the west corner of the fort, at the same time charging the remaining two regiments (the Two hundred and eleventh had by this time come up) directly against the rear of the fort.

In this charge my men behaved most handsomely. The Two hundred and seventh Regiment (Colonel Cox) did their share of the work most effectually, completely cutting off the enemy's line of retreat, while the Two hundred and fifth and Two hundred and eleventh entered the fort and aided the Two hundred and seventh in capturing all the enemy who had remained inside.

In this charge I was aided very much by Captain Hodgkins, of General Hartranft's staff, who assisted me in keeping my line formed and hurrying my men across the plain in rear of the fort. My brigade at once advanced to the front of the fort, and by a brisk fire drove the enemy inside their works. My entire loss was but 42—3 of whom were killed and 39 wounded; no commissioned officers killed and but one wounded. It is impossible for me to state the exact number of prisoners captured by my command, but as near as I can judge their number amounted to 850. My command also captured between 300 and 400 stand of small-arms, which were left by or taken from the enemy in Fort Stedman.

One enlisted man from each of my regiments claims to have captured a battle-flag, but two state that they were taken from them by some field officers with whom they were not acquainted. The third is hereby sent to you, with the statement of the man who captured it. Their statements are substantiated by their several company and regimental commanders.

No further orders for an advance having been received, my command occupied the fort until evening, when two of the regiments were relieved by General Hartranft's order, and sent to camp. One regiment was left behind to garrison the fort.

It would be invidious in me to distinguish between the many who discharged their whole duty, but I cannot refrain from speaking in the highest terms of praise of my entire staff, as well as the commanding officers of each of the regiments composing my brigade. Major Morrow, of Two hundred and fifth, refers to the conduct of Privates John J. Levi and George Dull, of his regiment, to which I invite the attention of the commanding general.

All of which I have the honor respectfully to submit.

I have the honor to be, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. MATHEWS,

Colonel 205th Pennsylvania Volunteers, Comdg. Brigade.

Maj. JOHN D. BERTOLETTE,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Division, Ninth Army Corps.

No. 160.

Report of Bt. Brig. Gen. John C. Tidball, Fourth New York Heavy Artillery, commanding Artillery Brigade, of operations March 25.

HDQRS. ARTILLERY BRIGADE, NINTH ARMY CORPS,
March 27, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor of making the following report of the part taken by the artillery in the operations of the 25th instant:

About 4 a. m. of that day the enemy in large force rushed upon Fort Stedman and Battery No. 10 immediately adjoining it, from their line, which at this point is but about 150 yards from the fort. The artillery of Fort Stedman consisted of four light 12-pounder guns of the Nineteenth New York Battery; that in Battery No. 10, of two 3-inch rifles of the Fourteenth Massachusetts Battery, and four 8-inch and three Cohorn mortars, manned by Company K of the First Connecticut Artillery. Owing to the darkness and the extremely short distance over which the enemy had to pass after overcoming our picket-line, but one discharge from each of the rifle guns in Battery No. 10 could be fired before the enemy, forcing their way over the breast-work, surrounded and killed, captured, and drove off the cannoneers. The mortars were not fired, but fell in like manner into the hands of the enemy. Captain Twiss, commanding these mortars, immediately collected the remainder of his men, and with their muskets, fighting from bomb-proof to bomb-proof, assisted in retarding the enemy's progress. In the meantime each of the four pieces in Fort Stedman were fired, discharging the canister with which they were kept loaded at night, and it is reported were afterward fired about a dozen times. An attempt was made to wheel one of the guns around to the flank overlooking Battery No. 10, but before this could be done the enemy had entered the fort and overpowered the cannoneers at their guns. Soon after gaining possession of Fort Stedman and Battery No. 10 the enemy advanced in strong force along the inside of our works toward Battery No. 12, in which were two 8-inch and four Cohorn mortars, in charge of Company L, of the First Connecticut Artillery, commanded by Lieutenant Lewis. Immediately upon the first alarm in the direction of Fort Stedman, these mortars were fired and continued firing upon the advancing enemy until the fire of the latter from the rear became so hot as to make it impossible to retain possession of the place, whereupon Lieutenant Lewis led his men to Fort Haskell, where, with their muskets, they did good service in assisting to repel assaults of the enemy upon that work.

In Fort Haskell were four light 12-pounders, under Brevet Major Woerner, of the Third New Jersey Battery, and four Cohorns, belonging to Company L, First Connecticut Artillery. The artillerymen in this fort could not distinguish the character of the advancing body, who in the darkness appeared to them as a body of our own men retiring from Fort Stedman, until they were within about 100 yards, where, taking cover behind huts and bomb-proofs, they opened a sharp fire, which was immediately replied to by all the pieces that could be brought to bear in this direction. A line of our troops, advancing at the same time, partly cut off this body of the enemy, when a large number of them surrendered, the remainder of them escaping. Shortly afterward a line of the enemy was formed near Fort Stedman, which advanced but a short distance toward Fort Haskell, when it was broken and forced to retire. Brevet Major Woerner directing three of his guns along our breast-work, kept the enemy from again advancing in that direction, and also poured a most injurious fire into the enemy, who were in and around Fort Stedman. While these things were transpiring upon the left of Fort Stedman a large body of the enemy swept in like manner down along our works upon the right toward Battery No. 9. The artillery in this battery consisted of two light 12-pounders, belonging to Batteries C and I, Fifth U. S. Artillery, under Brevet Captain Stone, and three Cohorn mortars, served by Company K, First Connecticut Artillery. The garrisons of Battery No. 9 being aroused by the firing at Fort Stedman were at once at their posts, and when the advancing enemy were distinguishable, which was at the distance of about 500 yards, fire was opened upon them so hotly as to check and cause them to seek shelter in a depression of the ground, where they were held under fire of canister until almost 7 o'clock, when an officer, escaping from this position to Battery No. 9, informed Captain Stone that if he would not fire upon them there were between 200 and 300 of the enemy who would come in. This arrangement was promptly effected. No other advance appears to have been made upon this battery.

Captain Jones, of the Eleventh Massachusetts Battery, occupying Fort Friend, with six 3-inch rifle pieces, promptly manned his guns upon the first alarm, and about half an hour afterward was enabled, by the dawning of day, to distinguish the before-mentioned body of the enemy moving from Fort Stedman toward Fort Haskell. He immediately opened fire upon them; at the same time he discovered a line of skirmishers advancing toward the hill upon which his fort is situated, and as the line of skirmishers arrived at the ravine in front of the fort, discharged canister into them, which had the effect of checking their advance until the regiment of Pennsylvania troops, encamped near the fort, formed, advanced, and drove back the line. From this commanding position Captain Jones continued to direct a most destructive fire into and around Fort Stedman upon any body of the enemy which made its appearance. Upon the first alarm two sections of light 12-pounders, one of Battery G, First New York Artillery, under Captain McClellan, and the other of the Nineteenth New York Battery, under Lieutenant Losee, being in park near Meade's Station, were at once hitched up, and taking position on the crest of the hill in front of the station opened fire upon the enemy's skirmish line, which by this time had advanced to the ravine between this hill and Fort Stedman. Soon this line of skirmishers fell back to a line nearer to Fort Stedman. The two sections above mentioned were, by my directions, placed farther to the front for the advantage of shorter range. While taking up this position the enemy opened upon them from two of the pieces of Fort Stedman, which by this time they had run out to the rear. Their fire, however, was inaccurate and straggling and did no injury, and was soon silenced by the fire of artillery concentrated upon that point.

As soon as the haze of the morning cleared away sufficiently to enable the artillery to direct their fire with accuracy, all the pieces (in addition to those before mentioned), from Battery No. 4 around to Fort Morton, that could be brought to bear upon Fort Stedman, opened, and concentrating a fire of about thirty pieces upon and around the fort, soon made the place untenable. The cross-fire from Fort Haskell and Battery No. 9 upon the open ground between Fort Stedman and the enemy's line of works tore through the masses of the enemy as they retired and made the passage so hazardous as to deter many from attempting it, and several hundred of the enemy were thus cut off and with but little resistance fell into the hands of the infantry, which at this time (about 7.30 a. m.) advanced in line and reoccupied the fort and line. Upon the first information of the capture of Fort Stedman, I dispatched a request to Brevet Brigadier-General Wainwright, commanding artillery, Fifth Corps, to send me such batteries as he had available, which he did with great promptness, four batteries arriving just at the moment of the reoccupation of our works, and therefore unable to participate in the repulse of the enemy.

During the whole occurrence the enemy kept up a most vigorous fire of artillery along his whole line, which was replied to by all our batteries from the Appomattox to the Jerusalem plank road. The enemy temporarily disabled two of the guns in Fort Stedman by pounding the vents; otherwise no damage was sustained by the pieces while in their possession; they did not succeed in carrying any of them off. As far as I could see and have learned, the artillery upon the whole line was most skillfully and judiciously managed by the respective officers in charge of it. This was particularly so in regard to Captain Jones, Eleventh Massachusetts, from Fort Friend; Captain and Brevet Major Woerner, Third New Jersey Battery, from Fort Haskell; and First Lieutenant and Brevet Captain Stone, Fifth U. S. Artillery, from Battery No. 9. Captain and Brevet Major Roemer, Thirty-fourth New York Battery, in Fort McGilvery, and Lieutenant Bangs, First Connecticut Artillery, in Battery No. 5, disregarding a concentrated fire from other parts of the enemy's lines, turned their guns upon the enemy in and about Fort Stedman.

Appended is a report from Major Miller, First Pennsylvania Artillery, of what he saw and heard while a prisoner in Fort Stedman. His zeal and energy led to his capture. The tact which he displayed in preventing himself from being sent within the enemy's lines, and the influence and management which he gained and exercised over his captors, resulting in his leading into our lines several hundred of them, gives him just claims for admiration and praise.

All of the battery commanders speak in the highest praise of the bravery and willingness of their officers and men.

Accompanying this is a list of the killed, wounded, and missing of this brigade.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. C. TIDBALL,
Brevet Brigadier-General.

Bvt. Lieut. Col. P. M. LUDIG,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Inclosure.]

Casualties.

| | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Missing. | |
|------------------------------------|-----------|------|-----------|------|-----------|------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. |
| 1st Connecticut Heavy Artillery: | | | | | | |
| Battery No. 5 | | 1 | | | | |
| Battery No. 10 | 1 | 4 | 1 | 2 | | 36 |
| Battery No. 12 | | 1 | | 5 | | 13 |
| 14th Massachusetts Battery | 1 | | | 2 | | 11 |
| C and I, 5th U. S. Artillery | | | | 2 | | |
| 8th New York Artillery | | 1 | 1 | 1 | | |
| 3d New Jersey Battery | | 1 | 2 | 5 | | |
| 19th New York Battery | | 1 | | | 2 | 12 |
| 34th New York Battery | | 1 | 1 | 3 | | |
| Total | 2 | 10 | 5 | 20 | 2 | 72 |

No. 161.

Report of Maj. Theodore Miller, First Pennsylvania Light Artillery, Inspector of Artillery, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS ARTILLERY BRIGADE, NINTH CORPS,
March 25, 1865.

AL: It being reported this morning, at about 4.30, that the ' attacked and captured Fort Stedman, I rode out toward that point, in accordance with instructions received from you, to ascertain the state of affairs and report the facts to you. Riding rapidly toward the artillery camps near Meade's Station, I found the sections and caissons of Woerner's Third New Jersey, McClellan's Battery G, First New York, and Rogers' Nineteenth New York Battery, all harnessed and ready for any service. It was about 5 o'clock at this time, and not full daylight. The musketry had become quite sharp and seemed to be close to Forts Haskell, Stedman, and Battery No. 9. I directed the above-named guns to take position on the hill commanding the road leading to Stedman, and not succeeding in gaining satisfactory information of the exact whereabouts of the enemy, but seeing a party of about fifty or sixty infantry (as I supposed, of our troops) coming out of our bomb-proofs on the other side of the ravine leading to Fort McGilvery, advancing rather disorderly toward the spot where I had placed the guns, I at once rode in that direction, intending to order them back and hold the ground, but at arriving there I found them to be rebels, and myself and the orderly were at once made prisoners; the horses and my private property were seized, and a guard ordered to conduct us to the rear. It was full daylight by this time, and the firing, both of infantry and artillery, had increased. I saw a large force of rebels crossing rapidly our breast-works and form in line of battle near Battery No. 10. After a short examination by the provost-marshal and commanding officer, the guard was ordered to take me into their old lines, but the batteries from Haskell and Battery No. 9 were sweeping the field between the two lines so effectually that I had but little trouble in persuading my guards not to venture across it until their fire should somewhat slacken, and to go under shelter in a bomb-proof; here I remained for some three or four hours. The engagement was now of the severest kind; the artillery from Battery No. 9, Fort Friend, on the hill in front of Stedman, and Fort Haskell, had opened furiously, and their fire was most accurate and destructive. Rebel officers came and reported the effect to be terrible, and stated that their lines could not be held at any point. The enemy had used, in the meantime, some of our guns and mortars left in Stedman and Battery No. 10.

The wounded were brought in in great numbers; I noticed among them a large proportion of officers. The number of stragglers and skulkers was astonishingly large, and I saw several instances where the authority of the officers who urged them on was set at defiance.

At about 8 o'clock the confusion increased and became general; all order seemed to be at an end; the musketry sounded closer and closer; and officers ordered, threatened, and begged their men to fall back to their old lines in vain, for their only way lay across the field so effectually commanded by our artillery, and of those few who did venture to go many were killed and wounded. I had before this succeeded in persuading my captors to remain and assist me to escape, and seeing our troops charging triumphantly into the fort, I started with my guards in a keen run toward our lines, calling on all the rebels around and near me to fall in and follow me, and I am happy to report that I succeeded in bringing about 250 or 300 of the enemy in this manner into our lines.

I had observed throughout the whole of the engagement the lack of all true and proper spirit on the part of the rank and file of the enemy; they seemed to have no confidence, and evidently felt that the affair would prove disastrous to them in the end.

I beg leave to add that Private James Holbrook, Company D, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, who was my orderly, behaved in the most praiseworthy manner, and I respectfully recommend him to your favorable notice.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THEO. MILLER,
Major First Pennsylvania Light Artillery,
Inspector of Artillery, Ninth Corps.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. JOHN C. TIDBALL,
Chief of Artillery, Ninth Corps.

No. 162.

Report of Capt. Adelbert B. Twitchell, Seventh Battery Maine Light Artillery, of operations March 25.

SEVENTH MAINE BATTERY,
Fort Sedgwick, Va., March 26, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In answer to circular of the above date I have the honor to report that the usual quiet prevailed in the front of Fort Sedgwick up to 7.30 a. m. of the 25th instant. About that hour the enemy opened with one 3-inch gun from the small field-work to the front and left of Fort Sedgwick, throwing an occasional shot at the infantry, cavalry, and artillery passing along the road in rear of Fort Davis. About 8.30 o'clock one gun opened from Fort Sedgwick, firing three shots; the first went over the rebel works, the second shot struck the parapet, and the third struck in the embrasure from which the enemy's gun was firing. No shots were fired from the rebel line afterward.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. B. TWITCHELL,
Captain, Commanding Battery.

Lieut. GEORGE W. BOOTH,
Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Artillery Brigade, Ninth Army Corps.

No. 163.

Report of Capt. Edward J. Jones, Eleventh Battery Massachusetts Light Artillery, of operations March 25.

ELEVENTH MASSACHUSETTS LIGHT BATTERY,
Fort Friend, Va., March 25 [26], 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to report the following services of my command yesterday morning during the attack of the enemy on the line in the vicinity of Fort Stedman, viz:

At about 4 o'clock my attention was attracted to what appeared to be a cheer or yell peculiar to the enemy, accompanied by a slight musketry fire proceeding from near Fort Stedman. No information of what was being done at Fort Stedman was received for a half hour after the first alarm, and at this hour it was not sufficiently light to distinguish friend from foe, but as the day broke the enemy were discovered moving from Fort Stedman toward Fort Haskell, and I immediately opened fire on them, and at the same moment they advanced their skirmish line rapidly toward the height upon which this work is situated, and as this line arrived on the ravine, about 500 yards in our front, we directed on them a quick fire of canister which at once checked the advance. The enemy could now be distinctly seen, covering the entire vicinity of Fort Stedman and the camp of the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Regiment of Infantry. Up to this hour (now 4.30 or 4.45 o'clock) no organized regiment or company of our troops could be seen. The Pennsylvania infantry, encamped on the hill near my battery, now commenced to form, and in a few moments deployed as skirmishers and moved down the slope toward the enemy, who at this time commenced to retire from the bank of the ravine toward Fort Stedman. Two sections of light 12's now went into position on the left of my line, and the enemy opened on those guns with light 12's from Fort Stedman; my whole fire was now directed on Fort Stedman and the rifle-pits and bomb-proofs in the camp of the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Infantry, which the enemy occupied with light troops; and discovering the enemy in force near Fort Haskell I ordered my right section to fire upon them rapidly with case-shot, and we had the satisfaction, in a few moments, to see them leave that locality and retire toward Fort Stedman, from which they were soon driven, and at about 7.30 o'clock the firing ceased. The amount of ammunition expended was about 450 rounds.

I have the pleasure to report no casualties.

I have the honor to be, lieutenant, your obedient servant,

EDWARD J. JONES,

Captain, Eleventh Massachusetts Light Battery.

Lieut. GEORGE W. BOOTH,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Artillery Brigade, Ninth Army Corps.

No. 164.

Report of Capt. Edward W. Rogers, Nineteenth Battery New York Light Artillery, of operations March 25.

NINETEENTH NEW YORK BATTERY,

Before Petersburg, Va., March 26, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of the Nineteenth New York Battery during the engagement on the 25th instant:

The left and center sections of the battery were in Fort Stedman, while the right section was in camp near Meade's Station. The enemy advanced against our works at about 4.30 a. m. No alarm was given by the pickets; so far as I can ascertain the pickets did not fire a shot. The first intimation my men in Fort Stedman had of the approach of the enemy was the rush and the cheer with which they carried Battery No. 10. The guard on my pieces immediately discharged the guns, which were kept loaded with canister. These were the first shots of any kind that were fired in that vicinity; not a musket had been discharged. Some ten or twelve rounds were fired from my four guns. By that time the force of the enemy that had taken Battery No. 10 had advanced against Fort Stedman from that direction, and rushed into the fort without opposition, as my guns were all in embrasures pointing to the front (an effort to get one of the guns to an embrasure bearing on Battery No. 10 was unsuccessful for lack of time), and there was nothing to oppose them. As the enemy came into the fort Lieutenant Long (the officer in command of the four guns), seeing that any further attempts at resistance were useless, ordered the men to take care of themselves. The enemy at this time were on three sides of the fort, as well as in it. Lieutenants Long and Moore and twelve enlisted men were captured, and one man was killed. Two of the men captured were known to be wounded. The remainder of the cannoneers (sixteen in number) escaped. Three of the gunners escaped and brought with them their breech sights, which prevented the enemy from using the guns efficiently when they were turned against us.

As soon as the alarm reached camp the horses were harnessed and hitched. The right section, Lieutenant Losee in command, went into position and opened fire on Fort Stedman, now in possession of the enemy. Soon General Tidball arrived, and ordered Lieutenant Losee to place his section in some old work on the brow of the hill and on the right of the road leading to Fort Stedman, a position which commanded Fort Stedman and most of that portion of our line now occupied by the enemy. The enemy had by this time turned against us the guns captured in Fort Stedman, and the fire of Lieutenant Losee's section was directed at the fort until it was silenced. He then directed his fire at different bodies of the enemy's infantry until the engagement was over. This section expended 184 rounds of ammunition, with good effect. As soon as Fort Stedman was retaken detachments were sent to man the guns which had been recaptured. The enemy had spiked one of the guns and temporarily disabled another.

The battery lost 1 private killed, and 2 commissioned officers and 12 enlisted men missing. These were all lost in Fort Stedman.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. W. ROGERS,

Captain, Commanding Nineteenth New York Battery.

Lieut. GEORGE W. BOOTH,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Artillery Brigade, Ninth Army Corps.

No. 165.

Report of Capt. John B. Eaton, Twenty-seventh Battery New York Light Artillery, of operations March 25.

TWENTY-SEVENTH NEW YORK BATTERY,

March 26, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In accordance with circular just received, I have the honor to state that the part taken by my battery in the operations of yesterday was briefly as follows:

I was awakened by firing about daybreak, and gave orders to have the section of my battery in park harnessed, which was done some time before I received verbal orders to harness the whole battery and send the section to report to Colonel Harriman at Meade's Station. I at once ordered the remaining teams harnessed, and sent forward the section to Meade's Station, in command of my first-sergeant, Scott. After proceeding to headquarters and finding that the section was intended to report to Colonel Harriman, I repaired to the scene of action in advance of my section (then advancing at a trot), reported to General Tidball on the field, and placed the guns in position under his direction immediately upon their arrival. My fire was directed upon Fort Stedman, then in possession of the enemy, but an assault was made by our troops almost at the moment of my going into battery, and I had but time to fire a few rounds of solid shot before the work was retaken. My guns remained on the ground until ordered back to camp by General Tidball; they reached camp about 10 a. m.

I have pleasure in reporting no casualties.

Respectfully,

JNO. B. EATON,

Captain, Commanding Twenty-seventh New York.

Lieut. GEORGE W. BOOTH,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 166.

Report of Bt. Maj. Jacob Roemer, Thirty-fourth Battery New York Light Artillery, of operations March 25.

HQRS. THIRTY-FOURTH NEW YORK INDEPT. BATTERY,
Fort McGilvery, before Petersburg, Va., March 26, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report, in compliance with circular dated headquarters Artillery Brigade, Ninth Army Corps, March 26, 1865, the operations of the Thirty-fourth New York Independent Battery in company with the Forty-sixth New York Volunteer Infantry, my support, in Fort McGilvery, March 25, 1865:

This command had relieved Captain Jones' four pieces of 3-inch rifle ordnance guns with four pieces of the same kind at 8 p. m. on the 24th of March. Pieces in position and everything ready for the night. I gave orders to the sergeant in charge of the guard to instruct his guard to be watchful and report any unusual picket-firing at once to me. I had now time to examine the works about the fort, so that we would have no difficulty if any attack should be made on the fort during the night; ammunition prepared for any emergency. At 3.30 a. m. March 25, Sergeant Rossbach called me and reported that there was unusual picket-firing in the direction of Fort Stedman. I immediately got up and satisfied myself that it was unusual. Ordered cannoneers to their posts. At 4 a. m. I was satisfied that an attack was made in the vicinity of Fort Stedman or near to our left of the line. I made all due inquiry to ascertain the facts of the nature of the attack and who were the attacking party. Colonel Ely, commanding First [Second] Brigade, First Division, Ninth Army Corps, said that he thought that the enemy had attacked Fort Stedman. It was now near 5 a. m. I discovered that muskets were fired from our picket-line toward our main line. At the same time we also discovered that two shots of artillery were fired from Fort Stedman to the rear of our line, and could just discover that men were irregularly running to and from the enemy's line to our line. I immediately opened fire on them with two pieces, then with three pieces, and made preparations to bring the fourth piece in position by opening a port hole on the left of the fort where the other three pieces were engaged. I thought after I had fired some 100 rounds that the enemy's progress was stopped, as we saw them for a short time falling back, but it was not long before I could see them returning and attacking with double the strength in numbers, and had gained the road in rear of Fort Stedman and were trying to flank Battery No. 9, as this road affords an excellent shelter for that purpose. To check this movement of the enemy I run one gun on the barbette in rear of the fort, and by some eight or ten splendid shots turned the enemy's flank and they retreated, when the other three pieces pressed their column across the field. Now, after 6 p. m., only about sixty rounds of ammunition on hand, I sent to train, and also for 200 rounds from my caissons if the train should fail to come up in time. My ammunition came up just in time to make good effect on the retreating column of the enemy.

The men have behaved beyond my expectations, and especially the detachment on the barbette gun, as they were exposed to the most severe flank and rear fire of the enemy. Their conduct is worthy to be recommended to the general commanding. I did not hesitate in placing this piece on the barbette, knowing full well that this point was the enemy's vital spot in the line, and that they would also turn all the guns on me, some twelve in number. At my fourth shot fired from this gun I was struck and one of my men killed, the gunner taking charge after me. He was soon struck, and then Private Michael Fogarty took charge of the gun with two men; he worked it with great success. I have the honor to give the names of men who merit the general's attention: Sergt. Valentine Rossbach, Sergt. James C. Cornell, Privates Michael Fogarty and John Keene.

Fired 370 rounds.

Casualties: John B. Bauer, private, killed; Brevet Major Roemer, Sergeant Rossbach, and Corpls. William J. Rierson and D. Smith, wounded.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

JACOB ROEMER,

Bvt. Maj., Comdy. Thirty-fourth New York Independent Battery.

Lieut. GEORGE W. BOOTH,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

P. S.—Nothing worthy of note transpired in Battery No. 5, with our section there; they fired sixty rounds, mostly on the enemy's forts.

No. 167.

Report of Capt. John R. Cooper, Eighth New York Heavy Artillery, commanding Battery No. 15, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS BATTERY NO. 15,

March 26, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to report that about 4 o'clock yesterday morning I was startled with the first report of the artillery, and immediately had my men at their guns ready for action, and the detachment of the Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery posted along the works with their muskets loaded, prepared for any emergency. In a few moments I discovered the flash of musketry proceeded from our rear line, at or near Fort Stedman, which led me to the conclusion that our pickets had been captured at that point. One of the Fourteenth Artillery men went from here to Fort Stedman, and immediately returned with the information that the fort was captured and the enemy g around in our rear. About this time the 8-inch columbiad, a ^{attery}, and the five mortars to the left of the Baxter road, the two latter on this battery and Fort Morton; also, the ^{ery} on Cemetery Hill. I replied with all six of my mortars, and Fort Morton with four mortars and one 4½-inch gun, and in a short time the mortar battery and rifled battery were silenced. This battery expended fifty-eight shells. One of the enemy's shells struck the rear of one of our bomb-proofs and went through and burst inside, killing Private Samuel Bowman, Company B, Eighth New York Artillery, and wounding Percy Scofield, Fourteenth New York Artillery, in the head, and William Wood, Company G, Eighth New York Artillery, in head, slightly, they all being in the bomb-proof at the time. I also received a slight wound on the head and shoulder from the same shell while standing outside the bomb-proof.

Respectfully, yours,

J. R. COOPER,

Captain, Eighth New York Artillery, Commanding Battery.

Lieut. G. W. BOOTH,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 168.

Report of Capt. Samuel H. Rhoads, Battery D, Pennsylvania Light Artillery, of operations March 25.

HEADQUARTERS BATTERY D, PENNSYLVANIA VOL. ARTILLERY,

March 26, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of my command yesterday, March 25:

In the morning, at about 4.30 o'clock, I was awakened by my corporal of the guard with information that there was fighting on our right. About the same time or earlier, Lieutenant Sailor, commanding guns in Fort Meikel, was awakened, and he immediately had his cannoneers stand to their guns in anticipation. The force manning the other guns of the battery were ready about the same time. After daylight I received orders from Major Ricketts to harness and hitch and pack up, which I did as expeditiously as possible. During the morning the enemy opened twice from a battery, containing several 10-pounder rifles. Lieutenant Sailor fired six rounds at this battery, four of the shells exploding in their embrasure, and apparently causing their firing to cease both times. Toward evening this battery opened again and fired a few shots, to which Lieutenant Sailor replied once. About 10 a. m., or after the firing ceased, I unhitched and unharnessed.

I am, Lieutenant, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL H. RHOADS,

Captain, Comdg. Battery D, Pennsylvania Volunteer Artillery.

Lieut. GEORGE W. BOOTH,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 169.

Report of Btl. Brig. Gen. J. Irvin Gregg, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, commanding Second Cavalry Division, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, CAVALRY CORPS,

February 13, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to report that, in pursuance of instructions received from the major-general commanding, this command moved from its camps at 3 a. m. on the 5th instant, and proceeded, via Reams' Station and the Malone and military roads, to Dinwiddie Court-House. The vedettes of the enemy were encountered a short distance this side of the Rowanty Creek, and driven rapidly in, and the position of the reserve on the opposite side of the creek carried by the Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry. This command without delay proceeded to Dinwiddie Court-House, by the military and Vaughan roads, keeping on the south side of Great Cat-tail Creek, no opposition being met with, the enemy having retired in the direction of Stony Creek, from Malone's Bridge. The road north and south from Dinwiddie was scouted to Gravelly Run, and beyond Butterwood Creek, by the Eighth and Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and some wagons and prisoners captured. A force was also sent out on the Stony Creek Station, or Flat Foot, road, from the Second Pennsylvania Cavalry, which met a small force of the enemy.

The detachment sent to communicate with General Warren being unable to effect a junction on the Vaughan road, the command returned to Rowanty Creek at 10 p. m. and bivouacked. At 11 p. m. received an order to report to Major-General Warren, and the command moved at 1 a. m. the 6th instant, by military and stage roads, and reported to Major-General Warren on the Vaughan road, near where it crosses Gravelly Run, before daylight, and covered his movement to Hatcher's Run. The enemy followed closely and attacked in some force, but were repulsed by the First Brigade, Brigadier-General Davies commanding.

The enemy seeming to be disposed to press his attack, the First and Third Brigades were dismounted and took position across the Vaughan road, near the Keys house, and held him in check. The Second Brigade was held in reserve, mounted, and at 2 p. m. an order was received from Major-General Warren directing that a force of cavalry should be sent to push the enemy across Gravelly Run. The Second Brigade was ordered to perform this duty, and in endeavoring to accomplish it brought on the general [engagement], which closed the day; the enemy, however, were too strongly and advantageously posted in the woods and behind rifle-pits to be dislodged by the cavalry. Subsequently, with the First and Second Brigades, dismounted, he was driven from his position and a mounted force sent to Gravelly Run bridge.

The command bivouacked on the field of battle during the night of the 6th and 7th, and by order of the major-general commanding two brigades (the First and Third) were moved across Hatcher's Run and placed in position, on the Halifax road, covering the approaches from Reams' Station and Monk's Neck bridge.

The conduct of the officers and men of this command was highly creditable; many acts of individual heroism and gallantry were observed, which will be noted in a separate report.

The country has to regret the loss of several valuable officers: Captain Sneyd, Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, killed, charging at the head of his squadron; Capt. J. Harper, Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry, killed, leading his squadron. Brig. Gen. H. B. Davies, commanding First Brigade, was wounded; also, Col. H. H. Janeway, First New Jersey; Lieutenant-Colonel Beaumont, First New Jersey; Lieut. Col. F. L. Tremain, Tenth New York (since died); Capt. H. H. Wilson, First Lieut. George W. Brooks, Second Lieut. R. R. Pealer, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry; Capt. R. B. Cause, First Lieut. Frederick Schaul, First Lieut. J. Dalziel, First New Jersey Cavalry, wounded.

Having been in command of but one of the brigades composing the cavalry division during the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant, this report is necessarily imperfect.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. IRVIN GREGG,

Brevet Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Comdg. Second Division.

Col. GEORGE D. RUGGLES,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the Potomac.

Report of casualties in Second Cavalry Division, Army of the Potomac, in the engagements of the 5th, 6th, and 7th of February, 1865, near Hatcher's Run.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Missing. | | Total. | | Aggregate. |
|----------------------|-----------|-------|-----------|-------|-----------|-------|-----------|-------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| First Brigade | | 3 | 7 | 20 | | | 7 | 23 | 30 |
| Second Brigade | 2 | 9 | 4 | 48 | | 7 | 6 | 64 | 70 |
| Third Brigade | | | | 14 | | 4 | | 18 | 18 |
| Artillery | | | | | | | | | |
| Total | 2 | 12 | 11 | 82 | | 11 | 13 | 105 | 118 |

J. IRVIN GREGG,

Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding.

No. 170.

Report of Col. Michael Kerwin, Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, Commanding Second Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

HQRS. SECOND BRIGADE, SECOND CAVALRY DIVISION,
February 15, 1865.

I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of this brigade during the late movement of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

The brigade moved out on the morning of the 5th on the advance of the Second Cavalry Division; proceeded to Reams' Station, Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry in advance, where, finding no enemy, we took up the line of march down the Halifax road as far as the Malone road, on which we moved in the direction of Dinwiddie Court House. Struck the enemy's pickets one mile from the Rowanty; forced them in rapidly on their reserve, which occupied a line of earth-works on the opposite side of the creek. The Thirteenth Pennsylvania was then dismounted and deployed on both sides of the road, with orders to advance and drive the enemy from his position, which it did. The Second Pennsylvania was then ordered up, and the bridge being repaired (the enemy having taken up the planks) charged across directly upon the enemy, who were now making for their horses. scattering them in every direction and capturing 1 officer and 15 men. The brigade then moved on to Dinwiddie Court-House, which place it reached early in the day, finding but few of the enemy there. A train of army wagons numbering 25, with 100 mules, together with 1 rebel colonel and 3 other officers (one of them having in his possession a rebel mail), were captured. After a short rest the brigade retraced its steps and arrived at the Rowanty in the evening, where it went into camp.

At 2 a. m. on the morning of the 6th marched in the direction of the Vaughan road, which we reached about daylight at a point four miles west of Hatcher's Run. Reached the stream, massed the brigade, and the men fed their horses and breakfasted. About this time the enemy attacked our infantry line west of the Vaughan road, when the brigade was dismounted and formed in line of battle on the left of the infantry. Remained in this position for some hours, when, the enemy not attacking at this point, the brigade was mounted and moved out on the Vaughan road to near Gravelly Run, where a position was taken up south of the road, again on the left of the infantry. Soon an attack was made by the enemy in force along the whole line. The Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry was then dismounted and ordered to charge the enemy's right, assisted by the Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, which they did in a most gallant manner, driving the enemy out of his works, capturing 66 men and 1 stand of colors, the latter by Sergeant Caldwell, Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry. The Fourth and Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry, on the right, were ordered to charge at the same time, mounted, which they did very handsomely, driving the enemy into his works. In this charge Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. I. Gregg, who up to this time commanded the brigade, was wounded slightly in the leg, which compelled him to leave the field, when the command devolved upon me. The enemy were being forced back on the right, and the brigade remained in the position gained until late in the afternoon, when a force of the enemy advanced across Gravelly Run. The Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry was ordered to attack and force them back, which was done in a very spirited manner, the enemy using two guns which were in position on the opposite side of the run. The brigade soon after massed and remained on the field during the night.

At daylight on the morning of the 7th the enemy again attacked, when the brigade took up its position of the day previous across the Vaughan road. The enemy made no advance on this part of the line, and the brigade occupied the position during the day without being generally engaged; slight skirmishing, at intervals, only being kept up.

The following is a list of casualties: Killed, 1 officer and 8 men; wounded, 4 officers and 42 men; missing, 5 men; total, 5 officers, 55 men; aggregate, 60.*

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. KERWIN,

Colonel Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, Comdg. Brigade.

Bvt. Maj. H. C. WEIR,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Cavalry Division.

* But see revised table, p. 468.

No. 171.

Report of Col. Samuel B. Young, Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQUARTERS FOURTH PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY,
February 16, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my command in the engagements of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

The regiment, on the 5th, on reaching Rowanty Creek, remained on picket, while the remainder of the division proceeded to and returned from Dinwiddie Court-House. During that date had no engagement with the enemy.

At 5 a. m. of the 6th, left Rowanty Creek; at 8.30 a. m., one mile beyond which, formed into line, remaining until near 4 p. m., when ordered back toward the run. On reaching the skirmish line ordered to charge down the road, where it was said a North Carolina brigade of infantry was formed. Having no support and having to charge by sections of eight, the enemy opened a most deadly fire upon the regiment, causing it to fall back, which was done in an orderly manner, and reformed and charged again across an open field, with the same result, and even a third charge was made, but each charge found the enemy too strong to be dislodged.

On the 7th drove the enemy across Gravelly Run and into their works, when they opened upon us with artillery. The regiment then fell back across the run, where it remained until dark, when it was withdrawn.

No prisoners were captured from the enemy, or property of any kind.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. B. M. YOUNG,
Colonel, Commanding.

Lieut. D. C. SWANK,
Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Second Brigade, Second Cavalry Division.

No. 172.

Report of Lieut. Col. William A. Corrie, Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQUARTERS EIGHTH PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY,
February 16, 1865.

Report of operations of the Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry from February 5 to 7, inclusive:

February 5, command moved at 3 a. m., taking the plank road to Gary's Church; thence to Reams' Station, reaching that place at daylight; thence to Rowanty Creek, when the regiment was ordered on the advance. Moved on to Dinwiddie Court-House, the first battalion charging through, capturing nine wagons and ten prisoners; moved back to Rowanty Creek and bivouacked for the night.

February 6, moved at 1 a. m., taking the old stage road to near the Quaker road, where we rejoined the infantry and moved back across Gravelly Run. The enemy advanced on us in force; the brigade of Fifth Corps broke, and the Fourth Regiment, and first battalion of Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry charged the enemy; the Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry breaking, we were compelled to fall back a short distance, and formed in the field. Dismounted and charged the enemy, driving them back; the infantry, rallying, advanced and drove them to their breast-works.

February 7, standing to horse all day. Received orders to move to Yellow House and picket.

W. A. CORRIE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

No. 173.

Report of Lieut. Col. John K. Robison, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQUARTERS SIXTEENTH PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY,
February 15, 1865.

Report of operations of the Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry during the engagements of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant, showing number of prisoners captured, also number of wagons and team animals:

February 5, 1865, the command marched with brigade at 3 a. m. to Dinwiddie Court-House, via Reams' Station, crossing Hatcher's Run at Malone's Bridge; met with very slight resistance; from Court-House the regiment was ordered on reconnaissance on Boydton plank road toward Petersburg. Captain McDowell's squadron, Companies B and A in advance, went some five miles towards Petersburg; captured 10 or 12 wagons and 1 ambulance (from 46 to 50 mules included); made prisoners of 3 commissioned officers and 10 or 12 enlisted men (D. O. Clark, adjutant of Twenty-fourth North Carolina Infantry included); without firing a shot we returned to the Court-House. The command then marched to near Malone's Bridge (Hatcher's Run), and bivouacked at about 11 p. m., the Second Brigade forming rear of column and Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry forming rear of brigade, Captain Oliphant's squadron, Companies H and G, acting as rear guard, who were followed closely by ten or twelve rebels, who fired occasionally into the rear guard, doing no injury, but capturing two men of G Company.

February 6, 1865, took up line of march at 2 a. m., and by a circuitous route struck the Vaughan road near Gravelly Branch at day-dawn; formed and cooked coffee; 8 a. m. marched with division one mile and a half toward Petersburg, where the whole division bivouacked; 10 a. m. firing commenced; at 2 p. m. our regiment ordered to make a dismounted charge against infantry holding a group of houses; the charge was made with complete success, both men and officers going in with more than usual coolness and bravery, making prisoners of at least 30 rebels. A flag-bearer was shot by one of our men, but the Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, being mounted, in our rear, charged through our line and gained possession of his flag. Not being sufficiently supported, we were obliged to fall back and take position on right of the original established line; in this charge of our regiment there were 2 men killed and 3 officers and 14 men wounded. A second charge was made, the rebels retreating and finally withdrawing entirely from our front. At dusk we were relieved by infantry and bivouacked.

February 7, 1865, extremely disagreeable; raining and sleeting. Regiment in line, mounted, from morn till night. Nothing to be seen in our front except a few Confederate cavalry pickets. Relieved at dusk and bivouacked.

J. K. ROBISON,
Lieut. Col. Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, Camdg. Regiment,

No. 174.

Report of Col. Oliver B. Knowles, Twenty-first Pennsylvania Cavalry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

HQRS. THIRD BRIG., SECOND DIV., CAVALRY CORPS,
February 15, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with instructions from headquarters Second Cavalry Division, I have the honor to make the following report of operations of this brigade in the engagements of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

The brigade (with the exception of the Sixth Ohio Cavalry, who were ordered to report to General Warren at 6 a. m., 5th instant) left its present camp at 3 a. m., 5th instant; marched, via Gary's Church and Reams' Station, to Dinwiddie Court-House, where we remained about one hour; then returned to the Rowanty, where we bivouacked.

At 1 a. m., 6th instant, orders were received to march, when in company with the division the brigade marched, via Monk's Neck bridge, to the Vaughan road and joined the infantry near Hatcher's Run, where the brigade was formed on the west side of the run. Here the Sixth Ohio Cavalry, which accompanied the infantry on the advance, rejoined the brigade, participated in the engagement on the 6th instant, with but slight loss. The Twenty-first Pennsylvania Cavalry was ordered to report half to General Crawford and half to a staff officer of General Meade.

At 1 p. m., 7th instant, the brigade returned to Weldon railroad, where it remained during the night, and on the morning of 8th instant returned to camp.

I have the honor to mention the following-named enlisted men as having displayed marked bravery on the advance to Hatcher's Run while with the infantry: Sergt. Michael Eck, Company L, Sixth Ohio Cavalry; Corpl. Harley B. Scribner, Company L, Sixth Ohio Cavalry; Private William W. Porter, Company L, Sixth Ohio Cavalry; Corpl. W. Emerson Dunlap, Company K, Sixth Ohio Cavalry.

Respectfully submitted.

O. B. KNOWLES,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Bvt. Maj. H. C. WEIR,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Cavalry Division.

No. 175.

Report of Col. Andrew W. Evans, First Maryland Cavalry, commanding Third Brigade, Cavalry Division, Army of the James, of operations January 30.

HQRS. THIRD BRIG., CAVALRY DIV., ARMY OF THE JAMES,
January 31, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that I proceeded, in compliance with instructions of the 29th, with 35 officers and 806 men of this command, at daylight yesterday, by Charles City Cross-Roads, to Long Bridge, on the Chickahominy. I found that stream very high and not fordable. There are two sloughs at that point, with about ten feet of water in each, and although a few men were successfully ferried across, I judged it extremely dangerous to attempt a passage by swimming a large body of horses. I then sent a battalion of [First] New York Mounted Rifles, under Major Hamilton, to Bottom's Bridge, with instructions to send a scouting party of an officer and ten men as far as Baltimore Cross-Roads. An attempt was made to send a similar party to the same point by Long Bridge, but it was found impracticable. I was under the impression that by the river road Bottom's Bridge could be reached in four miles, but Major Hamilton was obliged to make a considerable detour to cross White Oak Swamp. At the bridge (so called) over this he surprised a small picket of the enemy's cavalry and captured three men, one of whom was wounded before he would surrender. At Bottom's Bridge a picket of about a dozen men was found, but by a mistake our advanced guard charged to the bridge, where horses were seen, capturing one man there, and the remainder of the enemy's party, who were on a neighboring hill, managed to make their escape. Two men, however, came in and delivered themselves up as deserters. The scouting party sent across the river, under Captain Purdy, New York Mounted Rifles, proceeded to within three-quarters of a mile to Baltimore Cross-Roads. They were obliged to swim the river. They captured five men, who acknowledged themselves to be soldiers on furlough, but Captain Purdy was only able to mount one of them, and being in a hurry to recross the swamp before dark, he was obliged to leave the other four behind. Major Hamilton, with his command, rejoined the main body at the junction of the Long Bridge road with the road to Haxall's Landing and Shirley, a position to which I removed at dark. The entire command then returned by the same road to camp, meeting no one whatever until reaching our picket.

I believe I am justified in asserting, from the report of scouts and detached parties, from personal observation, and from information from other sources, that no force whatever of the enemy has moved eastward upon the peninsula for a long time past except very small scouting parties. Captain Purdy reports meeting and conversing with a citizen from Barhamsville, whom he knew personally, who confirmed this statement, and added that a party of seventy-five men, of Company E, New York Mounted Rifles, had been up at that village on last Thursday from Williamsburg. It is hardly necessary to mention, although I was not informed of it when I started out, that no bridges are now standing over the Chickahominy. The river is now high, banked full, and nowhere fordable for twenty-five miles above Long Bridge and below to its mouth. The stream is somewhat rapid, and there is much ice in the swamp. At Long Bridge the river was evidently falling, but Captain Purdy reported a rise at Bottom's Bridge, between the two lines of his crossing. The bottom of the ford at Long Bridge is not very bad. White Oak Swamp Bridge is a corduroy road, which has been broken up and partly swept away, but the crossing is good. Bottom's Bridge can be repaired in a short time.

I am much indebted to Colonel Sumner for his advice and assistance.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. W. EVANS,

Colonel First Maryland Cavalry, Commanding Brigade.

ASSISTANT ADJUTANT-GENERAL,

Headquarters Cavalry Division.

No. 176.

Reports of Col. Maj. Peter S. Michie, U. S. Army, Chief Engineer, Department of Virginia, of operations February 4-March 18.

HQERS. DEPT. OF VIRGINIA, CHIEF ENGINEER'S OFFICE,

February 13, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report of engineering operations in the Army of the James for the week ending February 11, 1865:

At Fort Burnham, casemates have been constructed, the parapet strengthened, the trench widened, and chevaux-de-frise, wire entanglements, &c., added to the obstructions. On the flanks of the fort works have been commenced for two guns each, that on the right in embrasure, and on the left en barbette. The parapet of Battery No. 1 has been strengthened, embrasures repaired, platforms made good, and traverses thrown up. In Fort Brady one of the 100-pounders has been mounted in its new position and the work in strengthening the fort generally proceeded with. The new battery below Fort Brady is sufficiently advanced to receive one of the 100-pounders; its magazine is nearly completed. The gateway and draw-bridge of Redoubt Southard is progressing favorably. The proposed work between Redoubts Southard and Brooks has been staked out, and will be at once proceeded with. Some small repairs to other parts of the line have been done by parties furnished by the regiments manning such portions of the works. I have the honor to report also that the detachment of the company of pontoniers who have been on duty at the saw-mills have been replaced by infantry, and the whole company are at work repairing and putting in order the pontoon trains of this army. In this connection, it will be proper to call attention to the fact that the material used in the construction of the pontoon and chess wagons has been of the poorest kind. The oak used for poles and reaches is old and in some cases was dead wood and broke clean across, showing a fracture indicating very little strength. Almost all the wagons show great shrinkage in the parts that are joined together, some joints opening as much as three-quarters of an inch. Owing to these defects, each wagon is carefully examined and repaired, so that it is better able to do good service than when new.

I cannot speak too highly of this company (Company I, Third Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, formerly Thirteenth Company Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, unattached), commanded by Captain Pickering. It is composed of men enlisted from Springfield Armory, many of whom are the best kind of mechanics. They have kept the pontoon trains of this army up to the best standard, so that after their long-continued service our trains are now, or soon will be, as fit for service as if they were entirely new, and this without additional expense to the Government. Owing to the facilities we have here at present I have the honor to propose that we furnish the Engineer Department at Washington with such oak lumber, of the best quality, cut to any size, that may be required. There are a great many white-oak trees here which might as well be used for this purpose as not. This will only cost the Government transportation, and will save the $70 or $80 a thousand feet, which is about the price at present, buying from the market.

I also transmit herewith a suggestion of Captain Lyon, assistant engineer, in the improvements of a part of the pontoon wagon. It is the substitution of a roller for the sharp-edged stanchion on the rear sides of the wagon. At present it is difficult to load the boat from the rear by pushing it forward, because the stanchions will cut into the sides of the boat and resist its advance unless the boat is exactly straight. Two rollers would assist its loading very much. The present stanchion might be hammered down and a cast-iron roller slipped on it as an axle and confined by a common nut.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

PETER S. MICHIE,

Brevet Major, U. S. Army, Chief Engineer, Dept. of Virginia.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,

Chief Engineer, U. S. Army.

HDQRS. DEPT. OF VIRGINIA, CHIEF ENGINEER'S OFFICE,
February 21, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report of engineering operations in the Army of the James for the week ending February 18, 1865:

At Fort Burnham two casemates have been finished and two are in course of construction. One magazine between casemates is completed. The thickening of parapet and deepening of trench is being proceeded with, and a parapet on gorge line is being constructed. The chevaux-de-frise and entanglements are also finished. The batteries on the flanks of the fort are completed and ready for guns. The Coehorn mortars are in position and the magazine for them is ready for use. The parapet between Fort Burnham and Battery No. 1 is being repaired. The magazine in Battery No. 3 is nearly completed and the abatis made good. The magazine at Battery No. 5 is in course of construction. The work upon Fort Brady consisted in thickening the front parapet, strengthening the magazine, connecting the latter and the bomb-proof, and laying the platform of one of the 100-pounders. There are two 100-pounders now in position behind the thickened parapet. The sunken battery below Fort Brady is ready for two 100-pounders and one 30-pounder, and is nearly completed. The work between the Redoubts Brooks and Southard is progressing favorably. The gateway and draw-bridge at Redoubt Southard is nearly completed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

PETER S. MICHIE,

Brevet Major, U. S. Army, Chief Engineer, Dept. of Virginia.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,

Chief Engineer Combined Armies.

HDQRS. DEPT. OF VIRGINIA, CHIEF ENGINEER'S OFFICE,
February 27, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report of engineering operations in the Army of the James for the week ending February 25, 1865:

In the Twenty-fifth Army Corps.—At Fort Burnham the third casemate is completed, the thickening of parapet, widening of trench, and construction of parapet on gorge line is being continued. In Batteries Nos. 1, 3, and 4, magazines have been constructed and are nearly completed. In Battery No. 2 the magazine is finished. At Fort Brady the thickening of the parapet and magazine covering is nearly finished. Sunken battery below Fort Brady requires but a few hours' work to complete it. Repairs of abatis, &c., has been made on the line generally.

In the Twenty-fourth Corps.—The lunette and infantry parapets between Redoubts Southard and Brooks have been proceeded with and are nearly completed.

On the Bermuda front.—Battery Sawyer: The parapet has been strengthened and the ditch drained. New battery near Battery Sawyer: The covering of magazine and bomb-proof is finished. Battery Spofford: A covered drain has been made and the revetment repaired. Redoubt Drake: The revetment and platform have been repaired. Battery Marshall: The terre-plein has been graded and the parapet on the left flank raised; three magazines in rear of the ten-gun battery have been drained, revetted, and re-covered. The parapet and banquettes between Batteries Pruyn and Anderson are being raised. Battery Pruyn: The parapet has been strengthened, embrasures repaired, and platforms laid. Redoubt Dutton: The embrasures have been repaired and platforms are being laid.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

PETER S. MICHIE,

Brevet Major, U. S. Army, Chief Engineer.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,

Chief Engineer Combined Armies in Virginia.

HEADQRS. DEPT. OF VIRGINIA, CHIEF ENGINEER'S OFFICE,

March 9, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report of engineering operations for the week ending March 4, 1865:

The work done, in consequence of unfavorable weather, has been of little importance, consisting chiefly of (in the Twenty-fifth Corps) continuing the construction of casemates in Fort Burnham, completing magazines in the redoubts along the line to Fort Brady, and repairs to rifle-pits and abatis. On the Bermuda front: Repairing platforms, and draining in Battery Sawyer; strengthening the bomb-proof and magazine in Battery Parsons; repairing embrasure and laying platforms in Redoubt Drake; thickening and revetting parapet and forming banquettes between Batteries Anderson and Pruyn; repairing embrasure and laying platform in Battery Pruyn, and some small repairs in Redoubt Dutton.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

PETER S. MICHIE,

Brevet Major, U. S. Army, Chief Engineer Dept. of Virginia.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,

Chief Engineer Combined Armies in Virginia.

DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA, CHIEF ENGINEER'S OFFICE,

March 14, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report for the week ending March 11, 1865:

In the Twenty-fifth Corps.—At Fort Burnham the scarp revetting damaged by the recent heavy rains has been repaired and the trench drained; the magazines on the line, seven in number, are all completed and ready for use; general repairs to rifle-pits and abatis have been done on the whole line. At Fort Brady a portion of the bank in front of the embrasures (about 1,500 yards, cubic) has been removed and the work on magazine and platforms has been proceeded with.

On the Bermuda front.—The repairs on Redoubt Dutton are completed; palisades for the gorge of Battery Marshall have been cut and the magazine in that battery rebuilt; the new battery near Battery Parsons is progressing rapidly.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

PETER S. MICHIE,

Brevet Major, U. S. Army, Chief Engineer Army of the James.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,

Chief Engineer Combined Armies in Virginia.

DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA, ENGINEER'S OFFICE,
March 23, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report of engineering operations for the week ending March 18, 1865:

In the Twenty-fifth Corps.—At Fort Burnham four casemates are completed, and the scarp revetment in front of casemates is nearly rebuilt; the repairs to rifle pits and abatis from the right to Battery No. 5 is completed. At Fort Brady the work to the bank in front of embrasures is finished and the magazine has been drained. Sunken water battery: The fraise around this battery is completed and the bomb-proof has been strengthened.

On the Bermuda front.—Labor has been expended principally on the new 100-pounder batteries near Batteries Spofford and Parsons, and they are nearly completed. Repairs have been made at Batteries Sawyer, Abbott, Parsons, and Drake, and a stockade is being put up in rear of Battery Marshall.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

PETER S. MICHIE,

Brevet Major, U. S. Army, Chief Engineer.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,

Chief Engineer Combined Armies of Virginia.

No. 177.

Reports of Lieut. William R. King, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, Acting Chief Engineer, of operations January 1-31.

HDQRS. DEPT. OF VIRGINIA AND NORTH CAROLINA,
CHIEF ENGINEER'S OFFICE,
January 10, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report of engineering operations in the Army of the James for the week ending January 7, 1865:

The corduroy road leading from the Twenty-fourth Army Corps line to Deep Bottom is completed, and the road from the department headquarters is finished to Kingsland road, a distance of 2,666 yards. Some delay has been experienced in the construction of these roads, in consequence of the bad state of the roads over which the timber for them had to be transported. On the Bermuda Hundred front the new interior line from Battery Anderson, on the right, to Battery England, on the left, is completed, excepting the abutts, which, owing to the scarcity of transportation, is not yet finished. Repairs were made in Battery England, the old revetting of rails being taken down and replaced by new piles. Battery Anderson was repaired and the parapet raised two feet. The infantry parapets from Battery England to Batteries Pruyn and Walker are being repaired. On Sunday, January 1, at 3.50 p. m., the mines at Dutch Gap were fired. The result of the explosion was the removal of the mass of earth forming the bulkhead of the canal, but owing to the high banks a large amount of debris (probably 2,500 yards) was left in the canal and in the river above. The highest point of this obstruction was in the river just outside of the canal, where a semi-circular ridge was formed nearly six feet above low-water mark. Professor Maillefert has been endeavoring to make a channel by blasting, using small charges (100 or 200 pounds), and he has succeeded in getting quite a current through the canal, but it is not probable that a depth of water sufficient for even the light-draught monitors can be obtained without considerable dredging. The work of building a permanent bridge across the James near Varina was commenced on Thursday, January 5.

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your servant,
W. R. KING,

First Lieutenant of Engineers, Acting Chief Engineer Department of Virginia and North Carolina.

Brig. Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,
Chief Engineer Combined Armies of Virginia.

HQRS. DEPT. OF VIRGINIA AND NORTH CAROLINA,
CHIEF ENGINEER'S OFFICE,
January 18, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report of engineering operations for the week ending January 14:

It having been observed that the enemy was engaged in throwing up small detached works in front of Fort Burnham, I examined the same from our picket-line and found them to be small splinter-proof huts, evidently designed for the twofold purpose of keeping their pickets warm and affording cover for sharpshooters. This idea was confirmed by the report of deserters, who stated that sharpshooting would be commenced by the enemy as soon as these works were completed. I therefore directed Captain Parsons, First New York Volunteer Engineers, chief engineer Twenty-fifth Army Corps, to strengthen our picket-line by connecting the detached rifle-pits and providing loop-holes for our own sharpshooters. The work has been completed, and Captain Parsons has also done considerable work in repairing and extending corduroy roads.

The work in the Twenty-fourth Corps consisted chiefly in repairing roads. The recent freshets and rainy weather have retarded considerably the work on the permanent bridge across the James. This work is now progressing favorably. Lieutenant Trenor has completed the new line on the Bermuda front. Prof continued his blasting operations at Dutch Gap, and has succeeded in getting a channel two feet deep at low tide. This during the recent freshets was ten feet deep in the shoalest place.

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. R. KING,

First Lieutenant of Engineers, Acting Chief Engineer Department of Virginia and North Carolina.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,
Chief Engineer Combined Armies of Virginia.

HDQRS. DEPT. OF VIRGINIA, CHIEF ENGINEER'S OFFICE,
January 25, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report of engineering operations in the Army of the James for the week ending January 21, 1865:

The corduroy road to the Twenty-fifth Corps has been proceeded with, and a new road from the "Flying" hospital (a distance of 300 yards) has been completed. Repairs have also been made where necessary. Work has been done in strengthening the parapet, making good the revetment, draining, &c., on the line between Fort Burnham and Battery No. 5. Two magazines in Fort Burnham have been re-covered and one lined. Repairs have also been made to Redoubts Brooks, Wilken, and Southard. The rifle-pits in advance of Fort Burnham are completed. The permanent bridge across the James has been proceeded with; but for delays in consequence of unfavorable weather it would have been finished. Repairs are still in progress on the Bermuda Hundred front.

Very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

W. R. KING,

First Lieut. of Engineers, Acty. Chief Engineer Dept. of Virginia.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,
Chief Engineer Combined Armies of Virginia.

HDQRS. DEPT. OF VIRGINIA, CHIEF ENGINEER'S OFFICE,
February 19, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report of engineering operations in the Army of the James for the period of January 22 to January 31, 1865:

On the line of the Twenty-fourth Corps the work consisted in strengthening the parapet of Redoubts Brooks, Southard, and Wilken, building magazine in the last-mentioned work, laying platforms, repairing revetment, and arranging loop-holes on breast-work between Redoubts Southard and Brooks. The loop-holes referred to were made of boards, as shown by the inclosed drawings,* and were substituted for sand-bag loop-holes for the following considerations: First. They present a smaller target for the enemy's sharpshooters, and at the same time give a larger field of fire. This consideration renders them especially adapted to locations where the lines are very close, or where, from the nature of the ground, the enemy's sharpshooters can find cover near our works, and will, I think, more than balance the disad-vantage arising from splinters. (In cases where there is a heavy artillery fire they may be easily removed.) Second. Their cost is less than one-twentieth that of sand-bags. While sand-bag loop-holes require three and should have five bags, at 50 cents, these cost less than 10 cents per loop-hole. One saw-mill can cut boards for 600 or 700 in one day, and the only additional cost is for a few nails.

* See Plate LXVII, Sketch 6 of the Atlas.

On the Twenty-fifth Corps front the revetment of the breast-work between Forts Burnham and Brady has been repaired and improved, and the magazine in Fort Burnham lined with boards and covered with an additional depth of earth. As the enemy's artillery in front of this portion of the line consists almost entirely of mortars, some protection other than the ordinary parapet seemed necessary to cover the garrison. During the recent demonstration by the rebel rams the enemy opened twelve or fourteen Coehorn and 8-inch and 10-inch mortars on the fort, and drove the garrison to their bomb-proofs, silencing the artillery. To obviate this difficulty in future, casemates of the plan indicated by the accompanying drawings* have been commenced. One is nearly completed and materials for several others prepared. The damage done to Fort Brady during the recent bombardment has been repaired, and a small sunken battery has been built below the fort on the opposite side of the ravine. The parapet of this work has been made thirty feet thick, in order to withstand the heavy rifle projectiles of the enemy, which have been found to penetrate upwards of sixteen feet in solid earth. It is proposed to mount a 100-pounder Parrott gun on a Dahlgren carriage, or a 30-pounder on a siege carriage, in this work, so that it may be shifted from one embrasure to another.

On the Bermuda front the following repairs and additions have been made: Battery Pruyn—embrasures repaired, parapet raised one foot, and magazine revetted and drained; Redoubt Dutton—embrasures repaired, magazine and breast-height revetment rebuilt; Battery Marshall—unimportant repairs; Battery Anderson—new revetment for embrasures, magazine repaired, and left flank raised, and a new embrasure cut to sweep the ditch of the new line on the left; Battery Drake—repairs to revetment and embrasures; Battery Spofford (water battery)—altered to mount two 100-pounder Parrott guns; both are in position. Battery Sawyer—the magazine and the covered way leading to the battery have been repaired, and the embrasure for the 100-pounder altered to obtain a wider range. A new sunken battery has been constructed about 150 yards to the left of Battery Sawyer, to mount a 100-pounder Parrott gun to command front reach and a portion of the river below. The pile bridge has been completed and the pontoon bridge removed. Drawings† showing the construction of the bridge and draw are forwarded with this report. This work was superintended in detail by Captain Lyon, Fourth Rhode Island Volunteers, assistant engineer, who deserves great praise for the rapid and workmanlike manner in which it was executed. The bridge is 1,350 feet long, twenty-one feet wide, and about nine feet above low water. The bays are fifteen feet wide, and each supported by three piles. As the water in the channel is about twenty-five feet deep, some of the piles were cut fifty feet long; the greater number being thirty and forty feet long. Owing to the hardness of the river bed it was found impossible to drive piles more than eight or ten feet, and it was also found unnecessary to drive them farther, as they will break off instead of pulling out.

* See Plate LXXVIII, Sketch 8 of the Atlas.

† See Plate LXXVI, Sketch 6 of the Atlas.

In order to form ice-breakers and prevent a lateral motion of the bridge, an inclined brace was placed above each row of piles, the larger end being spiked to the cap and the other end chained to a pile fifty or sixty feet above the bridge, the pile being sawed nearly through before driving, and so arranged as to break off just above the chain. Near the draw similar braces were placed on the lower side also to give additional strength. The roadway is constructed in the ordinary manner, with caps, stringers, and three-inch plank. The draw was constructed of three wood lighters, which were all that could be obtained at the time. The bays being very wide, light trusses were used to prevent sagging. The ends of the draw are connected with the bridge by aprons, which allow for rise and fall of tide. These are entirely lifted from the bridge by ropes and levers when the draw is to be opened, and the latter is maneuvered by means of a small chain which passes over a windlass on the draw, and when the draw is open sags down to allow vessels to pass over it. It may be proper to state that the entire cost of this bridge to the Government was about $750, the labor, including sawing of plank and hewing of timber, having been performed by enlisted men. But for the delays caused by freshets and the non-arrival of boats for the draw, the bridge would have been completed within fifteen days from the time it was commenced.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. R. KING,

*First Lieut., U. S. Engineers, Actg. Chief Engineer Dept. of Virginia.
(During the month of January, 1865.)*

Maj. Gen. J. G. BARNARD,
Chief Engineer Combined Armies.

No. 178.

Medals of Honor awarded for distinguished services under Resolution of Congress, No. 43, approved July 12, 1862, and section 6 of Act of Congress, approved March 3, 1863.

| Name. | Rank and organization. | Date. | Awarded for— |
|-------------------------|--|-----------------|--|
| Caldwell, Daniel | Sergeant, Company H, 13th Pennsylvania Cavalry. | 1865. Feb. 6 | Capture of flag at Hatcher's Run, Va. |
| Carter, Joseph F. | Captain 3d Maryland Infantry.. | Mar. 25 | Distinguished gallantry in action at Fort Stedman, Va. |
| Chambers, Joseph B. ... | Private, Company F, 100th Pennsylvania Infantry. | Mar. 25 | Capture of colors of 1st Virginia Infantry at Petersburg, Va. |
| Coey, James | Major 147th New York Infantry. | Feb. 6 | Distinguished bravery in the battle of Hatcher's Run, Va. |
| McDonald, George B. ... | Private, Company L, 1st Connecticut Heavy Artillery. | Mar. 25 | Capture of flag at Fort Stedman, near Petersburg, Va. |
| Murphy, James T. | Private, Company L, 1st Connecticut Heavy Artillery. | Mar. 25 | Gallantry in action before Petersburg, Va. |
| Oliver, Charles | Sergeant, Company M, 100th Pennsylvania Infantry. | Mar. 25 | Capture of flag of 31st Georgia Infantry at Petersburg, Va. |
| Sands, William | First Sergeant, Company G, 88th Pennsylvania Infantry. | Feb. 6, 7 | Distinguished gallantry at the battle of Dabney's Mill, Va. |
| Spillane, Timothy | Private, Company C, 16th Pennsylvania Cavalry. | Feb. 5-7 | Gallantry in action at Hatcher's Run, Va. |
| Tompkins, George W. ... | Corporal, Company B, 124th New York Infantry. | Mar. 25 | Capture of flag of 59th Alabama near Watkins' house, Petersburg, Va. |
| Woollee, John M. | Private, Company D, 8th Pennsylvania Cavalry. | Feb. 6 | Distinguished gallantry in action at Hatcher's Run, Va. | previous days and nights. I regret to be obliged to state that under these circumstances, heightened by assaults and fire of the enemy, some of the men had been without meat for three days, and all were suffering from reduced rations and scant clothing, exposed to battle, cold, hail, and sleet. I have directed Colonel Cole, chief commissary, who reports that he has not a pound of meat at his disposal, to visit Richmond and see if nothing can be done. If some change is not made and the commissary department reorganized, I apprehend dire results. The physical strength of the men, if their courage survives, must fail under this treatment. Our cavalry has to be dispersed for want of forage. Fitz Lee's and Lomax's divisions are scattered because supplies cannot be transported where their services are required. I had to bring William H. F. Lee's division forty miles Sunday night to get him in position. Taking these facts in connection with the paucity of our numbers, you must not be surprised if calamity befalls us. According to reports of prisoners we were opposed on Hatcher's Run by the Second and Fifth Corps, part of the Ninth, one division of the Sixth, and Gregg's division (three brigades) of cavalry. It was also reported that the Twenty-third Corps (Schofield's) reached City Point the 5th, and that it was present; but this is not confirmed by other reports. At last accounts it was stated to be on the Potomac, delayed by ice. A scout near Alexandria reports it is to march on Gordonsville, General Baker on Kinston. I think it more probable it will join Grant here.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

R. E. LEE,
General.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.

[First indorsement.]

Respectfully sent to the President for perusal.
Please return it.

JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE,
Secretary of War.

[Second indorsement.]

This is too sad to be patiently considered, and cannot have occurred without criminal neglect or gross incapacity. Let supplies be had by purchase, or borrowing or other possible mode.

J. D.

HEADQUARTERS,
March 25, 1865.

At daylight this morning General Gordon assaulted and carried enemy's works at Hare's Hill, captured 9 pieces of artillery, 8 mortars, between 500 and 600 prisoners, among them one brigadier-general and number of officers of lower grade. Enemy's lines were swept away for distance of 400 or 500 yards to right and left, and two efforts made to recover captured works were handsomely repulsed; but it was found that the inclosed works in rear, commanding enemy's main line, could only be taken at great sacrifice, and troops were withdrawn to original position. It being impracticable to bring off captured guns, owing to nature of ground, they were disabled and left. Our loss reported is not heavy. Among wounded is Brigadier-General Terry, flesh wound, and Brig. Gen. Phil. Cook, in arm. All the troops engaged, including two brigades under Brigadier-General Ransom, behaved most handsomely. The conduct of the sharpshooters of Gordon's corps, who led assault, deserves the highest commendation. This afternoon there was skirmishing on the right between the picket-lines, with varied success. At dark enemy held considerable portion of the line furthest in advance of our main works.

R. E. LEE.

Hon. J. C. BRECKINRIDGE,
Secretary of War.

HEADQUARTERS,
March 28, 1865. (Received 4 p. m.)

General Gordon informs me that in his report of the action at Hare's Hill, on the 25th instant, he omitted to mention that Col. H. P. Jones, commanding the artillery on that portion of the line, was at the front superintending in person the operations of the artillery, and that a select body of officers and men, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Stribling, carried the enemy's breast-works with the sharpshooters of the corps, and immediately turned upon the enemy the captured guns.

R. E. LEE.

Hon. JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE,
Secretary of War.

No. 180.

Abstract from returns of the Army of Northern Virginia, commanded by General Robert E. Lee, C. S. Army.

JANUARY 10, 1865.

| Command. | Present for duty. | | Aggregate present. | Aggregate present and absent. |
|---|-------------------|--------|--------------------|-------------------------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | | |
| First Army Corps (Longstreet): | | | | |
| Staff | 11 | | 11 | 18 |
| Pickett's division | 308 | 4,701 | 5,008 | 5,294 |
| Field's division | 433 | 4,503 | 4,936 | 11,601 |
| Kershaw's division a | 295 | 8,140 | 8,435 | 9,277 |
| Total First Army Corps | 1,047 | 12,413 | 13,480 | 30,250 |
| Second Army Corps (Gordon): | | | | |
| Rodes' division | 240 | 3,077 | 3,317 | 12,447 |
| Early's division | 163 | 2,411 | 2,574 | 8,104 |
| Gordon's division | 195 | 2,681 | 2,876 | 13,002 |
| Total Second Army Corps | 598 | 8,172 | 8,767 | 31,243 |
| Third Army Corps (A. P. Hill): | | | | |
| Staff | 18 | | 18 | 20 |
| Mahone's division | 354 | 4,500 | 4,854 | 12,076 |
| Heth's division | 386 | 4,827 | 5,213 | 12,704 |
| Wilcox's division | 402 | 5,827 | 6,229 | 11,855 |
| Total Third Army Corps | 1,160 | 15,150 | 16,224 | 47,255 |
| Anderson's corps: Johnson's division b | 401 | 6,008 | 6,409 | 12,081 |

a Conner's brigade transferred to South Carolina.

b Hoke's division transferred to North Carolina.

Abstract from returns of the Army of Northern Virginia, &c.—Continued.

JANUARY 10, 1865—Continued.

| Command. | Present for duty. | | Aggregate present. | Aggregate present and absent. |
|---|-------------------|--------|--------------------|-------------------------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | | |
| Cavalry Corps (Hampton): | | | | |
| Staff..... | 12 | | 12 | 16 |
| Butler's division a | 147 | 2,183 | 3,060 | 7,761 |
| W. H. F. Lee's division b | 161 | 3,190 | 4,016 | 6,018 |
| Horse Artillery c | 3 | 104 | 114 | 145 |
| Total Cavalry Corps d | 323 | 5,477 | 7,208 | 14,510 |
| Early's command (Early): | | | | |
| Staff..... | 16 | | 16 | 20 |
| Wharton's division e | 132 | 1,914 | 2,461 | 6,771 |
| Long's artillery..... | 54 | 950 | 1,214 | 2,447 |
| Total Early's command..... | 202 | 2,864 | 3,691 | 9,238 |
| Artillery Reserve, &c. (Pendleton): | | | | |
| Staff..... | 8 | 9 | 17 | 17 |
| First Corps artillery..... | 62 | 2,165 | 2,403 | 3,271 |
| Third Corps artillery..... | 114 | 2,003 | 2,350 | 3,377 |
| Anderson's corps artillery..... | 68 | 943 | 1,170 | 1,665 |
| Total Artillery Reserve, &c..... | 252 | 5,120 | 6,060 | 8,330 |
| Richmond and Danville Railroad defenses (Walker)..... | 118 | 1,472 | 1,822 | 3,331 |
| Provost guard (Bridgford)..... | 22 | 219 | 366 | 380 |
| Grand total..... | 4,213 | 57,636 | 74,468 | 150,554 |

a 955 dismounted men.
b 762 dismounted men.
c 42 dismounted men.

d 1,759 dismounted men.
e Cavalry of Valley District not reported.

JANUARY 26-31, 1865.

[From inspection reports.]

| Command. | Present for duty. | | Aggregate present. | Aggregate present and absent. | Present effective for the field. | |
|------------------------------|-------------------|--------|--------------------|-------------------------------|----------------------------------|--------|
| | Officers. | Men. | | | Officers. | Men. |
| First Army Corps: | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | 14 | | 14 | 10 | | |
| Pickett's division*..... | 516 | 4,572 | 3,109 | 9,239 | 284 | 4,572 |
| Field's division†..... | 370 | 4,403 | 5,692 | 11,504 | 322 | 4,247 |
| Kershaw's division‡..... | 288 | 3,100 | 4,201 | 9,232 | 283 | 3,237 |
| Total First Army Corps..... | 988 | 12,081 | 16,106 | 29,984 | 889 | 12,086 |
| Second Army Corps: | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | 8 | | 8 | 9 | 7 | |
| Early's division*..... | 152 | 2,304 | 3,154 | 8,002 | 130 | 2,231 |
| Rodes' division†..... | 217 | 2,046 | 4,343 | 12,201 | 185 | 2,611 |
| Gordon's division‡..... | 200 | 2,525 | 3,455 | 13,420 | 216 | 2,479 |
| Total Second Army Corps..... | 577 | 7,775 | 10,960 | 33,818 | 538 | 7,611 |

* Inspected January 28-30; only 4,330 guns reported in Pickett's division.

† Inspected January 27-31; includes Corse's brigade attached; only 3,080 guns reported in the division.

‡ Inspected January 27-29.

Abstract from returns of the Army of Northern Virginia, &c.—Continued.

JANUARY 26-31, 1865.—Continued.

| Command. | Present for duty. | | Aggregate present. | Aggregate present and absent. | Present effective for the field. | |
|--|-------------------|--------|--------------------|-------------------------------|----------------------------------|--------|
| | Officers. | Men. | | | Officers. | Men. |
| Third Army Corps: | | | | | | |
| Headquarters*..... | 17 | 107 | 145 | 248 | 8 | 107 |
| Heth's division†..... | 369 | 4,347 | 5,553 | 11,898 | 331 | 4,946 |
| Malone's division‡..... | | | | | | |
| Wilcox's division§..... | 377 | 5,013 | 5,910 | 10,091 | 350 | 5,517 |
| Total Third Army Corps..... | 763 | 10,067 | 12,614 | 23,110 | 689 | 10,600 |
| Johnson's division, Anderson's corps¶..... | 468 | 6,226 | 7,502 | 12,230 | 455 | 6,350 |
| W. H. P. Lee's cavalry division¶..... | 226 | 3,043 | 5,088 | 8,885 | 204 | 3,020 |
| Valley District¶..... | 147 | 1,843 | 2,524 | 10,714 | 139 | 1,775 |
| Grand total ..... | 3,160 | 41,925 | 51,881 | 118,751 | 2,614 | 40,828 |

JANUARY 31, 1865.

| Command. | Present for duty. | | Effective total present. | Aggregate present. | Aggregate present and absent. | Pieces of artillery. |
|---|-------------------|--------|--------------------------|--------------------|-------------------------------|----------------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | | | | |
| First Army Corps (Longstreet): | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | 14 | | | 14 | 10 | |
| Pickett's division..... | 328 | 4,684 | 4,684 | 9,365 | 9,519 | |
| Field's division..... | 367 | 4,418 | 4,418 | 5,721 | 11,000 | |
| Kershaw's division..... | 280 | 3,006 | 3,006 | 4,176 | 9,221 | |
| Total First Army Corps..... | 995 | 12,168 | 12,168 | 19,275 | 30,850 | |
| Second Army Corps (Gordon): | | | | | | |
| Rodes' division..... | 200 | 2,914 | 2,914 | 4,344 | 12,280 | |
| Early's division..... | 153 | 2,319 | 2,319 | 3,177 | 8,090 | |
| Gordon's division..... | 197 | 2,520 | 2,520 | 3,470 | 10,570 | |
| Total Second Army Corps..... | 550 | 7,753 | 7,753 | 10,991 | 30,940 | |
| Third Army Corps (A. P. Hill): | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | 18 | | | 18 | 20 | |
| Heth's division..... | 330 | 4,300 | 4,310 | 5,470 | 11,254 | |
| Wilcox's division..... | 410 | 5,840 | 5,840 | 7,204 | 11,631 | |
| Mahone's division..... | 380 | 4,051 | 4,416 | 6,141 | 12,800 | |
| Total Third Army Corps..... | 1,153 | 14,803 | 14,805 | 18,893 | 30,005 | |
| Anderson's corps: Johnson's division..... | 467 | 6,248 | 6,248 | 7,043 | 12,621 | |
| Cavalry Corps: W. H. P. Lee's division..... | 234 | 4,057 | 4,057 | 5,269 | 8,169 | |

^a Hoke's division in North Carolina.

* Inspected January 31.

† Inspected January 27-30.

‡ No report.

§ Inspected January 26-30.

¶ Inspected January 26-31.

¶ Inspected January 28-31.

 The artillery and Fitz Lee's cavalry not accounted for.

Abstract from returns of the Army of Northern Virginia, &c.—Continued.

JANUARY 31, 1865—Continued.

| Command. | Present for duty. | | Effective total present. | Aggregate present. | Aggregate present and absent. | Pieces of artillery. |
|---|-------------------|--------|--------------------------|--------------------|-------------------------------|----------------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | | | | |
| Valley District (Early): | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | 18 | | | 18 | 22 | |
| Wharton's division..... | 81 | 1,112 | 1,112 | 1,681 | 4,680 | |
| Artillery..... | 53 | 775 | 775 | 1,012 | 2,570 | 32 |
| Total Valley District a | 155 | 1,887 | 1,887 | 2,611 | 7,284 | 32 |
| Artillery Reserve, &c. (Pendleton): | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | 8 | 8 | 8 | 10 | 10 | |
| First Corps artillery..... | 81 | 2,104 | 2,104 | 2,419 | 8,254 | |
| Third Corps artillery..... | 100 | 1,873 | 1,873 | 2,245 | 3,340 | |
| Anderson's artillery..... | 56 | 800 | 890 | 1,128 | 1,637 | |
| Total Artillery Reserve, &c..... | 245 | 4,891 | 4,881 | 5,802 | 8,253 | |
| Defences Richmond and Danville Railroad (Walker)... | 115 | 1,438 | 1,438 | 1,880 | 3,300 | |
| Provost guard (Bridgford)..... | 21 | 100 | 100 | 302 | 374 | |
| Grand total..... | 3,944 | 53,443 | 53,445 | 60,050 | 141,013 | 32 |

a Cavalry not reported.

FEBRUARY 10, 1865.

| Command. | Present for duty. | | Aggregate present. | Aggregate present and absent. | Aggregate present last return. | In hands of enemy. | |
|--------------------------------|-------------------|--------|--------------------|-------------------------------|--------------------------------|--------------------|---------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | | | | Officers. | Enlisted men. |
| First Army Corps (Longstreet): | | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | 14 | | 14 | 18 | 14 | | |
| Pickett's division..... | 330 | 4,773 | 6,520 | 9,487 | 9,005 | 115 | 600 |
| Field's division..... | 367 | 4,453 | 5,797 | 11,509 | 5,721 | 73 | 1,312 |
| Kershaw's division..... | 258 | 3,683 | 4,178 | 9,211 | 4,175 | 100 | 1,535 |
| Gary's cavalry brigade..... | 60 | 1,112 | 1,564 | 3,595 | 1,764 | 20 | 335 |
| Total First Army Corps..... | 1,035 | 13,421 | 18,093 | 33,874 | 18,029 | 308 | 3,048 |
| Second Army Corps (Gordon): | | | | | | | |
| Rodes' division..... | 208 | 2,020 | 4,445 | 12,232 | 4,944 | 181 | 3,642 |
| Gordon's division..... | 170 | 2,281 | 3,372 | 13,513 | 3,470 | 357 | 4,137 |
| Early's division..... | 140 | 2,151 | 2,901 | 8,027 | 3,177 | 166 | 2,282 |
| Total Second Army Corps..... | 527 | 7,361 | 10,808 | 33,772 | 10,001 | 704 | 10,061 |
| Third Army Corps (A. P. Hill): | | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | 18 | | 18 | 20 | 18 | | |
| Mahone's division..... | 317 | 3,800 | 5,480 | 12,431 | 5,913 | 117 | 1,867 |
| Hoth's division..... | 231 | 4,100 | 5,543 | 11,060 | 5,647 | 204 | 2,352 |
| Wilcox's division..... | 350 | 5,445 | 6,822 | 11,550 | 6,800 | 93 | 1,774 |
| Total Third Army Corps..... | 1,016 | 13,525 | 17,872 | 35,067 | 18,438 | 414 | 5,033 |
| Early's command: | | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | 18 | | 18 | 20 | 18 | 2 | |
| Wharton's division..... | 82 | 1,076 | 1,528 | 6,924 | 1,581 | 104 | 1,549 |
| Long's artillery..... | 27 | 300 | 400 | 940 | 402 | 8 | 60 |
| Total Early's command..... | 127 | 1,406 | 2,015 | 7,884 | 2,001 | 109 | 1,648 |

Abstract from returns of the Army of Northern Virginia, &c.—Continued.

FEBRUARY 10, 1865—Continued.

| Command. | Present for duty. | | Aggregate present. | Aggregate present and absent. | Aggregate present last return. | In hands of enemy. | |
|--|-------------------|--------|--------------------|-------------------------------|--------------------------------|--------------------|---------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | | | | Officers. | Enlisted men. |
| Anderson's corps: Johnson's division | 466 | 6,527 | 7,874 | 12,778 | | | 1,140 |
| Defenses Richmond and Danville Railroad (Walker) | 100 | 1,417 | 1,775 | 3,365 | | | |
| W. H. F. Lee's cavalry division | 156 | 2,604 | 3,508 | 6,570 | 3,782 | 37 | 430 |
| Independent Signal Corps (Milligan) | 7 | 153 | 165 | 210 | 238 | | 12 |
| Provost guard (Bridgford) | 20 | 188 | 361 | 378 | 303 | | |
| Grand total | 3,463 | 46,722 | 62,411 | 104,827 | 53,872 | 1,672 | 23,250 |

FEBRUARY 20, 1865.

| Command. | Present for duty. | | Aggregate present. | Aggregate present and absent. |
|--|-------------------|--------|--------------------|-------------------------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | | |
| General headquarters | 12 | | 12 | 12 |
| First Army Corps (Longstreet): | | | | |
| Staff | 14 | | 14 | 18 |
| Pickett's division | 335 | 4,701 | 6,557 | 9,442 |
| Feld's division | 374 | 4,430 | 5,732 | 11,608 |
| Kershaw's division | 240 | 2,067 | 4,121 | 9,170 |
| Total First Army Corps | 663 | 12,164 | 16,424 | 30,147 |
| Second Army Corps (Gordon): | | | | |
| Gordon's division | 175 | 2,360 | 3,334 | 13,520 |
| Rodes' division | 211 | 3,022 | 4,500 | 12,170 |
| Early's division | 152 | 2,292 | 3,100 | 8,010 |
| Total Second Army Corps | 538 | 7,674 | 11,120 | 33,706 |
| Third Army Corps (A. P. Hill): | | | | |
| Staff | 20 | | 20 | 20 |
| Mahone's division | 290 | 3,880 | 5,638 | 12,854 |
| Heth's division | 334 | 4,324 | 5,602 | 11,852 |
| Wilcox's division | 343 | 5,383 | 6,700 | 11,411 |
| Total Third Army Corps | 967 | 14,587 | 17,860 | 40,137 |
| Anderson's corps: Johnson's division | 475 | 6,505 | 7,816 | 12,642 |
| Early's command: | | | | |
| Staff | 10 | | 10 | 20 |
| Wharton's division | 81 | 1,112 | 1,584 | 6,765 |
| Lomax's cavalry division | 174 | 1,383 | 1,790 | 7,160 |
| Long's artillery | 62 | 308 | 467 | 1,433 |
| Total Early's command | 360 | 2,803 | 3,847 | 15,397 |
| Cavalry Corps: | | | | |
| W. H. F. Lee's division | 210 | 3,005 | 5,148 | 9,200 |
| Fitz Lee's division | 120 | 1,825 | 2,490 | 9,446 |
| Total cavalry | 330 | 5,700 | 7,647 | 18,746 |

Abstract from returns of the Army of Northern Virginia, &c.—Continued.

FEBRUARY 20, 1865—Continued.

| Command. | Present for duty. | | Aggregate present. | Aggregate present and absent. |
|---|-------------------|--------|--------------------|-------------------------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | | |
| Artillery (Pendleton): | | | | |
| Staff..... | 8 | 8 | 16 | 16 |
| First Corps..... | 83 | 2,089 | 2,368 | 3,202 |
| Third Corps..... | 110 | 1,862 | 2,237 | 3,344 |
| Anderson's corps..... | 72 | 1,106 | 1,402 | 2,752 |
| Total artillery..... | 273 | 5,155 | 6,113 | 9,374 |
| Defenses Richmond and Danville Railroad (Walker)..... | 114 | 1,414 | 1,749 | 3,269 |
| Unattached commands..... | 42 | 504 | 690 | 1,042 |
| Grand total..... | 4,046 | 55,575 | 73,340 | 100,411 |

FEBRUARY 24—MARCH 1, 1865.

[From inspection reports.]

| Command. | Present for duty. | | Aggregate present. | Aggregate present and absent. | Present effective for the field. | |
|-----------------------------------|-------------------|--------|--------------------|-------------------------------|----------------------------------|--------|
| | Officers. | Men. | | | Officers. | Men. |
| FIRST ARMY CORPS. | | | | | | |
| Staff*..... | 13 | | 13 | 16 | | |
| Pickett's division*..... | 424 | 5,007 | 8,073 | 11,745 | 388 | 6,151 |
| Field's division: | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | 12 | | 12 | 16 | | |
| Anderson's brigade..... | 77 | 1,010 | 1,242 | 2,017 | 60 | 1,003 |
| Bennings's brigade..... | 61 | 709 | 849 | 1,787 | 61 | 642 |
| Bratton's brigade..... | 60 | 1,435 | 1,762 | 2,873 | 60 | 1,435 |
| Law's brigade..... | 70 | 788 | 1,052 | 2,530 | 73 | 782 |
| Texas Brigade..... | 40 | 480 | 733 | 1,594 | 30 | 435 |
| Total Field's division..... | 368 | 4,431 | 5,050 | 11,420 | 341 | 4,207 |
| Kershaw's division: | | | | | | |
| Staff*..... | 13 | | 13 | 17 | | |
| Bryan's brigade*..... | 50 | 605 | 824 | 2,047 | 30 | 579 |
| Humphreys' brigade..... | 33 | 416 | 508 | 1,690 | 30 | 463 |
| Wofford's brigade..... | 50 | 740 | 1,012 | 3,017 | 50 | 740 |
| Total Kershaw's division..... | 165 | 1,767 | 2,447 | 6,771 | 137 | 1,788 |
| Grand total First Army Corps..... | 960 | 12,105 | 16,183 | 29,958 | 866 | 12,236 |
| SECOND ARMY CORPS. | | | | | | |
| Early's division: | | | | | | |
| Staff*..... | 10 | 1 | 11 | 14 | 10 | 1 |
| Johnston's brigade..... | 47 | 652 | 645 | 2,490 | 55 | 859 |
| Lewis' brigade..... | 45 | 860 | 1,156 | 3,628 | 45 | 860 |
| Pegram's brigade..... | 40 | 605 | 880 | 2,332 | 47 | 665 |
| Total Early's division..... | 148 | 2,178 | 3,601 | 7,879 | 167 | 2,385 |

* Inspected February 28.

† Inspected February 27.

‡ Inspected February 24.

§ Inspected February 25.

Abstract from returns of the Army of Northern Virginia, &c.—Continued.

FEBRUARY 24-MARCH 1, 1865—Continued.

| Command. | Present for duty. | | Aggregate present. | Aggregate present and absent. | Present effective for the field. | |
|--|-------------------|--------|--------------------|-------------------------------|----------------------------------|--------|
| | Officers. | Men. | | | Officers. | Men. |
| SECOND ARMY CORPS—continued. | | | | | | |
| Gordon's division: | | | | | | |
| Staff*..... | 16 | | 10 | 17 | | |
| Evans' brigade*..... | 61 | 1,407 | 1,328 | 3,882 | 50 | 1,013 |
| Terry's brigade*..... | 79 | 894 | 1,263 | 6,297 | 79 | 894 |
| York's brigade*..... | 19 | 382 | 596 | 3,032 | 19 | 382 |
| Total Gordon's division..... | 175 | 2,283 | 3,203 | 13,228 | 154 | 2,289 |
| Rodes' division: | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | 9 | 2 | 11 | 10 | | |
| Battle's brigade†..... | 49 | 822 | 1,056 | 2,964 | 48 | 777 |
| Cook's brigade§..... | 47 | 500 | 702 | 2,200 | 40 | 500 |
| Cox's brigade§..... | 50 | 715 | 1,135 | 3,681 | 45 | 715 |
| Crimes' brigade§..... | 54 | 1,008 | 1,366 | 3,200 | 71 | 1,204 |
| Total Rodes' division..... | 209 | 3,047 | 4,270 | 12,124 | 204 | 3,286 |
| Grand total Second Army Corps..... | 532 | 7,508 | 10,474 | 23,225 | 515 | 7,990 |
| THIRD ARMY CORPS. | | | | | | |
| Heth's division: | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | 10 | | 10 | 17 | | |
| Cooke's brigade§..... | 108 | 1,448 | 1,800 | 3,017 | 104 | 1,448 |
| Davis' brigade*..... | 67 | 502 | 735 | 2,005 | 67 | 601 |
| McComb's brigade†..... | 103 | 805 | 1,185 | 2,822 | 87 | 800 |
| MacRae's brigade*..... | 58 | 1,200 | 1,500 | 3,631 | 55 | 1,110 |
| Total Heth's division..... | 346 | 4,084 | 5,245 | 11,392 | 313 | 4,088 |
| Mahone's division: | | | | | | |
| Blugan's brigade§..... | 57 | 517 | 1,030 | 2,775 | 49 | 517 |
| Forney's brigade*..... | 50 | 995 | 1,230 | 2,911 | 58 | 1,030 |
| Harris' brigade†..... | 49 | 501 | 891 | 1,760 | 38 | 507 |
| Sorrel's brigade†..... | 60 | 980 | 1,320 | 2,780 | 60 | 980 |
| Welsiger's brigade†..... | 68 | 771 | 1,005 | 2,473 | 60 | 757 |
| Total Mahone's division..... | 284 | 3,773 | 5,413 | 12,711 | 265 | 3,809 |
| Wilcox's division: | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | 19 | 2 | 15 | 20 | | |
| Lane's brigade†..... | 68 | 1,064 | 1,584 | 3,407 | 70 | 1,062 |
| McIlwain's brigade†..... | 92 | 1,368 | 1,704 | 2,930 | 91 | 1,313 |
| Senles' brigade†..... | 80 | 1,430 | 1,785 | 2,810 | 87 | 1,573 |
| Thomas' brigade | 78 | 958 | 1,160 | 2,062 | 75 | 943 |
| Total Wilcox's division..... | 340 | 4,882 | 6,107 | 11,220 | 323 | 4,921 |
| Grand total Third Army Corps..... | 970 | 12,739 | 16,705 | 35,332 | 901 | 12,818 |
| Johnson's division (Anderson's corps): | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | 12 | | 12 | 14 | | |
| ElHott's [Wallace's] brigade*..... | 120 | 1,840 | 2,130 | 3,060 | 123 | 1,891 |
| Gracie's brigade†..... | 107 | 1,066 | 1,431 | 2,521 | 103 | 1,105 |
| Ransom's brigade†..... | 143 | 2,113 | 2,405 | 3,573 | 143 | 1,853 |
| Wise's brigade | 104 | 1,269 | 1,005 | 2,368 | 110 | 1,428 |
| Total Johnson's division..... | 405 | 6,318 | 7,592 | 12,142 | 485 | 6,277 |
| Grand total of Infantry..... | 2,957 | 38,730 | 51,014 | 100,657 | 2,707 | 39,291 |

* Inspected February 27.

† Inspected February 28.

‡ Inspected February 26.

§ Inspected February 25.

|| Inspected March 1.

Abstract from returns of the Army of Northern Virginia, &c.—Continued.

FEBRUARY 24-MARCH 1, 1865—Continued.

| Command. | Present for duty. | | Aggregate present. | Aggregate present and absent. | Present effective for the field. | |
|--|-------------------|--------|--------------------|-------------------------------|----------------------------------|--------|
| | Officers. | Men. | | | Officers. | Men. |
| CAVALRY. | | | | | | |
| Lee's (Fitz) division: | | | | | | |
| Staff*..... | 0 | | 0 | 0 | | |
| Gary's brigade†..... | 63 | 1,021 | 1,530 | 3,580 | 54 | 1,047 |
| Payne's brigade†..... | 31 | 472 | 582 | 2,147 | 25 | 472 |
| Wickham's brigade†..... | 33 | 304 | 407 | 3,564 | 33 | 304 |
| Total Lee's (Fitz) division..... | 133 | 1,887 | 2,624 | 9,800 | 112 | 1,003 |
| Lee's (W. H. F.) division: | | | | | | |
| Staff*..... | 7 | | 7 | 12 | | |
| Barringer's brigade†..... | 85 | 1,703 | 2,062 | 3,057 | 78 | 1,208 |
| Dearing's brigade†..... | 58 | 838 | 1,188 | 2,522 | 48 | 560 |
| Total Lee's (W. H. F.) division..... | 150 | 2,541 | 3,257 | 6,101 | 126 | 1,868 |
| Grand total of cavalry..... | 283 | 4,428 | 5,881 | 15,401 | 238 | 3,701 |
| Grand total Army of Northern Virginia§.... | 3,240 | 43,158 | 50,895 | 110,148 | 3,005 | 43,052 |

No. 181.

Reports of Maj. Gen. John B. Gordon, C. S. Army, commanding Second Army Corps, of operations February 6 and March 25.

HDQRS. SECOND CORPS, ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA,

February 9, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following brief report of the fighting on the west side of Hatcher's Run on the 6th instant:

On the morning of that day Pegram's division moved out from camp to reconnoiter, one brigade moving near the run and the others further to the right and along the Vaughan road. In these positions the brigades were vigorously attacked by both cavalry and infantry in heavy force. They were pressed slowly back, bravely resisting the enemy's advance. Gordon's division, Brigadier-General Evans commanding, sent forward in support, formed on Pegram's left, charged and drove the enemy before it, but was finally forced by superior numbers to retire. It was readily reformed near the enemy's lines, and again advanced with spirit, while Pegram charged on the right. The enemy was again driven back, but General Pegram, who was riding immediately with his troops, being killed, and Colonel Hoffman, commanding brigade, severely wounded, a portion of the line was thrown into confusion. The battle had been obstinately contested for several hours, when Mahone's division arrived and was placed in position to fill a gap between Evans and Pegram. The whole line now advanced to the attack and drove the enemy in confusion to his works along the bank of the creek.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. B. GORDON,

*Major-General, Commanding.*Col. W. H. TAYLOR, A. A. G., Army of Northern Virginia.

March 1.
February 27.

† Inspected February 28.
§ The artillery not accounted for.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS,
February 11, 1865.

I respectfully forward a report from General Gordon of the operations of the infantry west of Hatcher's Run on the 6th instant, which is more full than my dispatch of that date.

R. B. LEE,
General.

HDQRS. SECOND CORPS, ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA,
March 27, 1865.

I desire to bring to the attention of the commanding general the admirable conduct of Col. H. P. Jones, commanding artillery on my line, and the officers and men of his command, during the action at Hare's Hill, on the morning of the 25th instant. Colonel Jones remained at the front, personally superintending the management of the artillery, and a select body of officers and men, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Stribling, charged the enemy's breast-works with the sharpshooters of this corps, and at once turned upon the enemy the captured guns.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. B. GORDON,
Major-General, Commanding.

Col. W. H. TAYLOR,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of Northern Virginia.

No. 182.

Report of Col. William R. Peck, Louisiana Brigade, of operations February 5-7.

HEADQUARTERS YORK'S COMMAND,
February 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report the following as the operations of my command on the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant:

In pursuance of orders from division headquarters I proceeded, on the morning of the 5th of February, to Burgess' Mill, and thence to the line of works in front of General Cook's quarters. Having marched about a mile to the left along the works, we were ordered, about 4 p. m., to move across the works, following Terry's brigade. We formed line after marching about a mile to the front, Evans' brigade being on our right and Terry on our left. Being ordered to conform our movements to those of General Terry, we advanced in line to our batteries, threw forward our sharpshooters, commanded by Lieut. R. B. Smith, Second Louisiana Regiment, and rested a short time while our batteries fired. The fire of the batteries having ceased we advanced through the field and woods until we reached General Heth's line, being exposed in the woods to some fire of musketry. At General Heth's line we halted, in accordance with the movements on our left, and rectified the line. Darkness having come on, after some firing with little result, we were ordered to retire, which the command did in good order, and, in accordance with instructions, I marched the command back to their quarters.

In obedience to orders, at sunrise on the morning of the 6th, I marched the command to Burgess' house, and was ordered back about 11 o'clock, leaving 150 men on picket. Orders reaching me at 1 p. m. to move at once by the nearest route to Armstrong's Mill, the command proceeded immediately to Burgess' house, and thence as rapidly as possible to our picket-line south of Hatcher's Run. Here we were led to the support of General Pegram by General Gordon's orders, and formed line in the woods, with General Terry's brigade on our left. My command was much reduced by this time by the heavy picket detail still on duty, and I was forced, with the mere handful left, to conform my movements entirely to those of the larger commands on my right and left. Advancing twice to the edge of the woods, and driving the enemy from the sawdust pile in the field, we were each time forced to retire by the wavering and falling back of the line on our left. We fell back each time in good order. The third time we advanced, a portion of Pegram's division having come up on our right, we drove the enemy again steadily before us until we reached the field and sawdust pile. After holding this point for a short time the troops on my right and left gave way and I fell back with them, reforming quickly in the woods. Many of my men had by this time been killed and wounded, and the command was short of ammunition, but I deployed them in the interval between Pegram's left and Terry's right, and having fired away the last round we had, on the arrival of Mahone's division on our line I retired a short distance and supplied myself with ammunition. The fight was by this time over, and in accordance with General Evans' order I marched to the pines near our line and bivouacked for the night. On the morning of the 7th we were placed in line by General Evans, prepared to support the division on our right in case of an attack. During the afternoon we proceeded to the right of the Brown house and formed as a support of Major Owen's artillery. At dark we were sent back to quarters.

I cannot close my report without paying a just tribute to the memory of Lieut. John S. Dea, of the Eighth Louisiana Regiment, who fell at our most advanced position during the fight of the 6th. He was at the time acting as adjutant of the division corps of sharpshooters, and displayed all the conspicuous gallantry for which he was noted. In him the service has lost a brave soldier and a good officer. I was greatly assisted in the operations of my command by the officers of my staff, and by Adjutant Key, of the Ninth Louisiana, who offered his services on the occasion.

I append the following list of casualties in my command: Killed, 1 officer, 5 men; wounded, 17 men.

Very respectfully,

W. R. PECK,
Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. D. C. CODY,
Assistant Adjutant and Inspector General.

JANUARY 2, 1865.—Scout from Benvard's Mills to South Quay, Va.

Report of Capt. George F. Dern, Third New York Cavalry.

HDQRS. DETACHMENT THIRD NEW YORK CAVALRY,
Benvard's Mills, Va., January 3, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report that in obedience to your order I started from here at 3 o'clock on the morning of the 2d instant, with Companies A, B, C, H, and L (about 100 men), and one section of artill-lery, Lieutenant Ladd commanding, and reached the Blackwater, at South Quay, at about 9 a. m. From all the information I could obtain from the citizens I was satisfied that the enemy were aware of our movement and on Saturday night had sent for re-enforcements, expecting a raid from Bower's Hill. I met a family of refugees near the Blackwater, who came down from Weldon, and questioned them separately, and ascertained that two companies of infantry were about a mile back, on the Murfree's Depot road; also, one company of cavalry. I dismounted three companies, ordered them to move cautiously to the ferry, and seize the boat, but found the boat had been secured on the opposite side. I shelled the opposite shore vigorously, which had a tendency to cause the enemy to develop his strength, and deeming it imprudent to attempt a crossing with my small force, I returned at 10 o'clock last night; no casualties.

I captured at the ferry 3 bales of cotton, 3 horses, and 1 cart.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. F. DERN,

Captain, Commanding Detachment Third New York Cavalry.

Col. GEORGE W. LEWIS,

Commanding Third New York Cavalry.

JANUARY 3-17, 1865.—Expedition to and capture of Fort Fisher, N. C., and its dependencies.

SUMMARY OF THE PRINCIPAL EVENTS.

- Jan. 4-5, 1865.—The expedition embarks at Bermuda Landing, Va.
 8, 1865.—Naval fleet under Rear-Admiral David D. Porter, and transport fleet containing expeditionary forces, arrive at rendezvous off Beaufort, N. C.
 12, 1865.—Expedition, convoyed by fleet of Rear-Admiral David D. Porter, sails from rendezvous off Beaufort, N. C., for Fort Fisher.
 12-13, 1865.—Expedition arrives at Federal Point, N. C.
 13, 1865.—Bombardment of Fort Fisher by naval fleet.
 Landing of expeditionary forces.
 Skirmish near Fort Fisher, N. C.
 13-15, 1865.—Combined military and naval operations against Fort Fisher, N. C.
 15, 1865.—Assault and capture of Fort Fisher, N. C.
 16, 1865.—Explosion of powder magazine at Fort Fisher, N. C.
 16-17, 1865.—Fort Caswell blown up and defensive works at Smithville and Reeves' Point, N. C., abandoned by Confederate forces.

REPORTS, ETC.*

- No. 1.—Maj. Gen. Alfred H. Terry, U. S. Army, commanding U. S. Forces.
 No. 2.—Organization of the U. S. Forces at Fort Fisher, N. C., January 13-15.
 No. 3.—Casualties in the U. S. Forces at Fort Fisher, N. C., January 15.
 No. 4.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Cyrus B. Comstock, Aide-de-Camp to Lieutenant-General Grant.
 No. 5.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Joseph C. Abbott, Seventh New Hampshire Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, of operations January 15.

* For Union naval reports see Annual Report of the Secretary of the Navy, December 4, 1865; and for report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Henry L. Abbot, chief of artillery, see p. 165.

- No. 6.—Col. Alfred P. Rockwell, Sixth Connecticut Infantry, of operations January 15.
- No. 7.—Capt. John Thompson, Seventh Connecticut Infantry, of operations January 15.
- No. 8.—Capt. William S. Marble, Seventh Connecticut Infantry, of operations January 15.
- No. 9.—Capt. William H. Triekey, Third New Hampshire Infantry, of operations January 15.
- No. 10.—Lieut. Col. Augustus W. Rollins, Seventh New Hampshire Infantry.
- No. 11.—Brig. Gen. Adelbert Ames, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division.
- No. 12.—Col. Rufus Daggett, One hundred and seventeenth New York Infantry, commanding First Brigade, of operations January 13-15.
- No. 13.—Maj. Oliver P. Harding, Two hundred and third Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations January 15.
- No. 14.—Capt. Heber B. Essington, Two hundred and third Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations January 15.
- No. 15.—Lieut. Col. Nathan J. Johnson, One hundred and fifteenth New York Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations January 15.
- No. 16.—Maj. Ezra L. Walrath, One hundred and fifteenth New York Infantry, of operations January 15.
- No. 17.—Lieut. Col. James A. Colvin, One hundred and sixty-ninth New York Infantry, of operations January 15.
- No. 18.—Brig. Gen. Charles J. Paine, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division, Twenty-fifth Army Corps, of operations January 13-19.
- No. 19.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Albert M. Blackman, Twenty-seventh U. S. Colored Troops, Third Brigade, of operations January 15.
- No. 20.—Proceedings of a Court of Inquiry constituted to examine into the cause of the explosion of the powder magazine.
- No. 21.—Medals of Honor awarded for distinguished services under Resolution of Congress, No. 43, approved July 12, 1862, and section 6 of Act of Congress, approved March 3, 1863.
- No. 22.—General Braxton Bragg, C. S. Army, commanding Department of North Carolina, of operations January 13-15.
- No. 23.—Lieut. Col. George T. Gordon, C. S. Army, Assistant Inspector-General, of operations January 13-15.
- No. 24.—Maj. William J. Saunders, C. S. Army, Chief of Artillery, of operations January 13-15.
- No. 25.—Maj. Gen. William H. C. Whiting, C. S. Army, of operations January 15.
- No. 26.—Brig. Gen. Alfred H. Colquitt, C. S. Army, commanding brigade.

No. 1.

Reports of Maj. Gen. Alfred H. Terry, U. S. Army, commanding U. S. Forces.

HEADQUARTERS U. S. FORCES,
On Federal Point, N. C., January 25, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following detailed report of the operations which resulted in the capture of Fort Fisher, and the occupation of Fort Caswell and the other works at the mouth of the Cape Fear River:

On the 2d instant I received from the lieutenant-general in person orders to take command of the troops destined for the movement. They were 3,800 picked men from the Second Division of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps, under Brig. Gen. (now brevet major-general) Adelbert

Ames; the same number from the Third Division of the Twenty-fifth Army Corps, under command of Brig. Gen. Charles J. Paine; 1,400 men from the Second Brigade of the First Division of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps, under Col. (now brevet brigadier-general) J. O. Abbott, Seventh New Hampshire Volunteers; the Sixteenth New York Independent Battery, with four 3-inch guns, and Light Battery E, Third U. S. Artillery, with six light 12-pounder guns. I was instructed to move them from their positions in the lines on the north side of the James River to Bermuda Landing in time to commence their embarkation on transport vessels at sunrise on the 4th instant. In obedience to these orders the movement commenced at noon of the 3d instant. The troops arrived at the landing at sunset, and there bivouacked for the night. The transports did not arrive as soon as they were expected. The first of them made its appearance late in the afternoon of the 4th. One of them, the Atlantic, was of too heavy draught to come up the James. Curtis' brigade, of Ames' division, was, therefore, placed on river steamboats and sent down the river to be transferred to her.

The embarkation of the remainder of the force commenced at sunset of the 4th, and was completed at noon of the 5th instant. Each vessel, as soon as it was loaded, was sent to Fort Monroe, and at 9 p. m. of the 5th the whole fleet was collected in Hampton Roads. The troops were all in heavy marching order, with four days' rations, from the morning of the 4th, in their haversacks, and forty rounds of ammunition in their boxes. No horses, wagons, or ambulances were taken; the caissons of the artillery were left behind, but, in addition to the ammunition in the limber chests, 150 rounds per gun in packing boxes were embarked. I went down the river personally with the lieutenant-general, and on the way received from him additional instructions and the information that orders had been given for the embarkation of a siege train, to consist of twenty 30-pounder Parrott guns, four 100-pounder Parrotts, and twenty Coehorn mortars, with a detail of artillerymen and a company of engineers, so that in case siege operations should become necessary the men and material for it might be at hand. These troops, under the command of Bvt. Brig. Gen. H. T. Abbot, were to follow me to Beaufort, N. C., and await orders. It was not until this time that I was informed that Fort Fisher was the point against which we were to operate.

During the evening of the 5th orders were given for the transports to proceed to sea at 4 o'clock the next morning, and accompanying these orders were sealed letters to be opened when off Cape Henry, directing them to rendezvous, in case of separation from the flag-ship, at a point twenty-five miles off Beaufort, N. C. The vessels sailed at the appointed hour.

During the 6th instant a severe storm arose, which so much impeded our progress that it was not until the morning of the 8th that my own vessel arrived at the rendezvous; all the others, excepting the flag-ship of General Paine, were still behind. Leaving Brigadier-General Paine to assemble the other vessels as they should arrive, I went into Beaufort Harbor to communicate with Rear-Admiral Porter, commanding the North Atlantic Blockading Squadron, with whose fleet the forces under my command were destined to co-operate.

During the 8th nearly all of the vessels arrived at the rendezvous; some of them required repairs to their hulls damaged by the gale; some repairs to their machinery; others needed coal or water. These vessels were brought into the harbor or to the outer anchorage where their wants were supplied; all the others remained, until the final sailing of the expedition, from twenty to twenty-five miles off the land. The weather continued so unfavorable as to afford no prospect that we would be able to make a landing on the open beach of Federal Point until Wednesday, the 11th. On that day Admiral Porter proposed to start, but at high water there was still so much surf on the bar that the iron-clads and other vessels of heavy draught could not be gotten over it; our departure was, therefore, delayed till the next day.

On the morning tide of the 12th the vessels in the harbor passed out, and the whole fleet of naval vessels and transports got under way for this place. As we were leaving, the vessels containing General Abbot's command came in sight; orders were sent to them to follow us. We did not arrive off Federal Point until nearly night-fall, consequently, and in accordance with the decision of the admiral, the disembarkation of the troops was not commenced until the next morning. Our subsequent experience fully justified the delay; it would have been extremely difficult to land the men at night.

At 4 a. m. of the 13th the inshore division of naval vessels stood in close to the beach to cover the landing; the transports followed them, and took positions as nearly as possible in a line parallel to and about 200 yards outside of them. The iron-clads moved down to within range of the fort and opened fire upon it; another division was placed to the northward of the landing-place, so as to protect our men from any attack from the direction of Masonborough Inlet. At 8 o'clock nearly 200 boats, besides steam tugs, were sent from the navy to the transports, and the disembarkation of men, provisions, tools, and ammunition simultaneously commenced.

At 3 p. m. nearly 8,000 men, with three days' rations in their haversacks and forty rounds of ammunition in their boxes, six days' supply of hard bread in bulk, 300,000 additional rounds of small-arm ammunition, and a sufficient number of intrenching tools, had been safely landed. The surf on the beach was still quite high, notwithstanding that the weather had become very pleasant, and owing to it some of the men had their rations and ammunition ruined by water. With this exception, no accident of any kind occurred.

As soon as the troops had commenced landing pickets were thrown out. They immediately encountered outposts of the enemy, and shots were exchanged with them, but no serious engagement occurred. A few prisoners were taken, from whom I learned that Hoke's rebel division, which it was supposed had been sent farther south, was still here, and that it was his outposts which we were meeting.

The first object which I had in view after landing was to throw a strong defensive line across the peninsula, from the Cape Fear River to the sea, facing Wilmington, so as to protect our rear from attack while we should be engaged in operating against Fisher. Our maps indicated that a good position for such a line would be found a short distance above the head of Myrtle Sound, which is a long, shallow piece of water separated from the ocean by a sand spit of about 100 yards in width, and communicates with it by Masonborough Inlet. It was supposed that the right flank of a line at that point would be protected by the sound, and being above its head that we should by it control the beach as far up as the inlet, and thus in case of need be able to land supplies in quiet water there. Our landing place was selected with reference to this idea. An examination made after we landed showed that the sound for a long distance above its head was so shallow as to offer no obstacle to the passage of troops at low tide, and as the farther down the peninsula we should go the shorter would be our line across it it was determined to take up a position where the maps showed a large pond, occupying nearly one-third of the width of the peninsula, at about three miles from the fort. Shortly before 5 o'clock, leaving Abbott's brigade to cover our stores, the troops were put in motion for the last-named point. On arriving at it, the "pond" was found to be a sand flat, sometimes covered with water, giving no assistance to the defense of a line established behind it. Nevertheless, it was determined to get a line across at this place, and Paine's division, followed by two of Ames' brigades, made their way through. The night was very dark, much of the ground was a marsh and ill adapted to the construction of works, and the distance was found to be too great to be properly defended by the troops which could be spared from the direct attack upon the fort. It was not until 9 p. m. that Paine succeeded in reaching the river. The ground still nearer the fort was then reconnoitered, and found to be much better adapted to our purposes. Accordingly, the troops were withdrawn from their last position and established on a line about two miles from the works.

They reached this final position at 2 a. m. of the 14th instant. Tools were immediately brought up and intrenchments were commenced; at 8 o'clock a good breast-work, reaching from the river to the sea and partially covered by abatis had been constructed and was in a defensible condition. It was much improved afterward, but from this time our foothold on the peninsula was secured. Early in the morning of the 14th the landing of the artillery was commenced, and by sunset all the light guns were gotten on shore. During the following night they were placed on the line, most of them near the river, where the enemy, in case he should attack us, would be least exposed to the fire of the gun-boats. Curtis' brigade of Ames' division was moved down toward Fisher during the morning, and at noon his skirmishers, after capturing on their way a small steamer which had come down the river with shells and forage for the garrison of the fort, reached a small unfinished outwork in front of the west end of the land front of the work.

General Curtis, Lieutenant-Colonel (now brevet brigadier-general) Comstock, the chief engineer of the expedition, and myself, under the protection of the fire of the fleet, made a careful reconnoissance of the work, getting within 600 yards of it. The report of General Comstock, which, with its accompanying map, is appended hereto,* gives a full description of it and its condition at that time.

As the result of this reconnoissance, and in view of the extreme difficulty which might be expected in landing supplies and the material for a siege on the open and often tempestuous beach, it was decided to attempt an assault the next day, provided that in the meantime the fire of the navy should so far destroy the palisades as to make one practicable. This decision was communicated to Admiral Porter, who at once placed a division of his vessels in a position to accomplish this last-named object. It was arranged in consultation with him that a heavy bombardment from all the vessels should commence early in the morning and continue up to the moment of the assault, and that even then it should not cease, but should be diverted from the points of attack to other parts of the work. It was decided that the assault should be made at 3 p. m., that the army should attack on the western half of the land face, and that a column of sailors and marines should assault at the northeast bastion. The fire of the navy continued during the night.

*See p. 405.

At 8 a. m. of the 15th all of the vessels, except a division left to aid in the defense of our northern line, moved into position, and a fire, magnificent alike for its power and accuracy, was opened. Ames' division had been selected for the assault. Paine was placed in command of the defensive line, having with him Abbott's brigade in addition to his own division. Ames' First Brigade (Curtis') was already at the outwork above mentioned, and in trenches close around it. His other two brigades, Pennypacker's and Bell's, were moved at noon to within supporting distance of him. At 2 o'clock preparations for the assault were commenced. Sixty sharpshooters from the Thirteenth Indiana Volunteers, armed with the Spencer repeating carbine, and forty others, volunteers from Curtis' brigade, the whole under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Zent, of the Thirteenth Indiana, were thrown forward at a run to within 175 yards of the work. They were provided with shovels and soon dug pits for shelter and commenced firing at the parapet. As soon as this movement commenced the parapet of the fort was manned, and the enemy's fire, both of musketry and artillery, opened.

As soon as the sharpshooters were in position, Curtis' brigade was moved forward by regiment at the double-quick into line at about 475 yards from the work; the men there laid down; this was accomplished under a sharp fire of musketry and artillery, from which, however, they soon sheltered themselves by digging shallow trenches. When Curtis moved from the outwork Pennypacker was brought up to it, and Bell was brought into line 200 yards in his rear. Finding that a good cover for Curtis' men could be found on the reserve slope of a crest fifty yards in the rear of the sharpshooters, they were again moved forward, one regiment at a time, and again covered themselves in trenches. Pennypacker followed Curtis and occupied the ground vacated by him, and Bell was brought up to the outwork. It had been proposed to blow up and cut down the palisades. Bags of powder with fuses attached had been prepared and a party of volunteer axmen organized, but the fire of the navy had been so effective during the preceding night and morning that it was thought unnecessary to use the powder. The axmen, however, were sent in with the leading brigade, and did good service by making openings in portions of the palisading, which the fire of the navy had not been able to reach.

At 3.25 p. m. all the preparations were completed, the order to move forward was given to Ames, and a concerted signal was made to Admiral Porter to change the direction of his fire. Curtis' brigade at once sprung from their trenches and dashed forward in line; its left was exposed to a severe enfilading fire and it obliques to the right so as to envelop the left of the land front. The ground over which it moved was marshy and difficult, but it soon reached the palisades, passed through them, and effected a lodgment on the parapet. At the same time the column of sailors and marines, under Fleet Capt. K. R. Breese, advanced up the beach in the most gallant manner and attacked the northeastern bastion, but, exposed to a murderous fire, they were unable to get up the parapet. After a severe struggle and a heavy loss of valuable officers and men it became apparent that nothing could be effected at that point, and they were withdrawn.

When Curtis moved forward Ames directed Pennypacker to move up to the rear of the sharpshooters, and brought Bell up to Pennypacker's last position, and as soon as Curtis got a foothold on the parapet sent Pennypacker in to his support. He advanced, overlapping Curtis' right, and drove the enemy from the heavy palisading which extended from the west end of the land face to the river, capturing a considerable number of prisoners; then pushing forward to their left, the two brigades together drove the enemy from about one-quarter of the land face. Ames then brought up Bell's brigade and moved it between the work and the river. On this side there was no regular parapet, but there was abundance of cover afforded to the enemy by cavities from which sand had been taken for the parapet, the ruins of barracks and storehouses, the large magazine, and by traverses behind which they stubbornly resisted our advance. Hand-to-hand fighting of the most desperate character ensued, the huge traverses of the land face being used successively by the enemy as breast-works, over the tops of which the contending parties fired in each others' faces. Nine of these were carried, one after the other, by our men.

When Bell's brigade was ordered into action I foresaw that more troops would probably be needed, and sent an order for Abbott's brigade to move down from the north line, at the same time requesting Captain Breese to replace them with his sailors and marines. I also directed General Paine to send me one of the strongest regiments of his own division; these troops arrived at dusk and reported to General Ames. At 6 o'clock Abbott's brigade went into the fort, the regiment from Paine's division, the Twenty-seventh U. S. Colored Troops, Bvt. Brig. Gen. A. M. Blackman commanding, was brought up to the rear of the work, where it remained under fire for some time and was then withdrawn. Until 6 o'clock the fire of the navy continued upon that portion of the work not occupied by us. After that time it was directed on the beach, to prevent the coming up of re-enforcements which it was thought might possibly be thrown over from the right bank of the river to Battery Buchanan. The fighting for the traverses continued till nearly 9 o'clock, two more of them being carried; then a portion of Abbott's brigade drove the enemy from their last remaining strongholds, and the occupation of the work was completed. The same brigade, with General Blackman's regiment, were immediately pushed down the point to Battery Buchanan, whither many of the garrison had fled. On reaching the battery all of the enemy who had not been previously captured were made prisoners; among them were Major-General Whiting, and Colonel Lamb, the commandant of the fort.

At about 4 o'clock in the afternoon Hoke advanced against our north line, apparently with the design of attacking it, but if such was his intention he abandoned it after a skirmish with our pickets. During the day Bvt. Brig. Gen. H. L. Abbot, chief of artillery, was busily engaged in landing artillery and ammunition, so that if the assault failed siege operations might at once be commenced. Consequent to the fall of Fisher the enemy, during the night of the 16th and 17th, blew up Fort Caswell, and abandoned both it and their very extensive works on Smith's Island, at Smithville and Reeves' Point, thus placing in our hands all the works erected to defend the mouth of the Cape Fear River.

In all the works were found 169 pieces of artillery, nearly all of which are heavy, over 2,000 stand of small-arms, considerable quantities of commissary stores, and full supplies of ammunition. Our prisoners numbered 112 commissioned officers and 1,971 enlisted men.

I have no words to do justice to the behavior of both officers and men on this occasion; all that men could do, they did. Better soldiers never fought. Of General Ames I have already spoken in a letter recommending his promotion. He commanded all the troops engaged, and was constantly under fire. His great coolness, good judgment, and skill were never more conspicuous than in this assault. Brigadier-

General Curtis,* and Colonels Pennypacker,* Bell, and Abbott, the brigade commanders, led them with the utmost gallantry. Curtis was wounded after fighting in the front rank, rifle in hand; Pennypacker, while carrying the standard of one of his regiments, the first man in a charge over a traverse; Bell was mortally wounded near the palisades.

Brigadier-General Paine deserves high praise for the zeal and energy displayed by him in constructing our defensive line, a work absolutely essential to our success.

Brevet Brigadier-General Blackman deserves mention for the prompt manner in which he brought his regiment up to the work, and afterward followed up the retreating enemy.

To Bvt. Brig. Gen. C. B. Comstock, aide-de-camp on the staff of the lieutenant-general, I am under the deepest obligations. At every step of our progress I received from him the most valuable assistance. For the final success of our part of the operations the country is more indebted to him than to me.

Col. George S. Dodge, chief quartermaster of the Army of the James, accompanied me as chief quartermaster of the force under my command. His able and energetic performance of his multifarious duties was all that could be wished for, and reflects the highest honor upon him.

Surg. Norman S. Barnes, U. S. Volunteers, medical director, and Surg. A. J. H. Buzzell, Third New Hampshire Volunteers, medical inspector of the expedition, discharged their laborious duties on the field and in the hospital in a manner most creditable to their ability and humanity. I desire to express my high appreciation of the services of these officers.

I shall have the honor to submit a supplemental report in reference to those subordinate officers and enlisted men who distinguished themselves on this occasion.

I should signally fail to do my duty were I to omit to speak in terms of the highest admiration of the part borne by the navy in our operations. In all ranks, from Admiral Porter to his seamen, there was the utmost desire not only to do their proper work, but to facilitate in every possible manner the operations of the land forces. To him and to the untiring efforts of his officers and men we are indebted that our men, stores, tools, and ammunition were safely and expeditiously landed, and that our wounded and prisoners were embarked for transportation to the North; to the great accuracy and power of their fire it is owing that we had not to confront a formidable artillery in the assault, and that we were able, with but little loss, to push forward the men, preparatory to it, to a point nearly as favorably for it, as the one they would have occupied had siege operations been undertaken and the work systematically approached. The assault of the sailors and marines, although it failed, undoubtedly contributed somewhat to our success, and certainly nothing could surpass the perfect skill with which the fleet was handled by its commander. Every request which I made to Admiral Porter was most cheerfully complied with, and the utmost harmony has existed between us from the outset to the present time.

I forward herewith General Ames' report.†

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALFRED H. TERRY,
Major-General.

Brig. Gen. JOHN A. RAWLINS, Chief of Staff, City Point, Va.

* Awarded a Medal of Honor.

† See p. 415.

HEADQUARTERS U. S. FORCES,
Fort Fisher, N. C., January 20, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to report that on the morning of the 16th instant the enemy blew up Fort Caswell and Fort Campbell, and abandoned both them and their works on Smith's Island, at Smithville and on Reeves' Point. All these works were taken possession of by the navy. In them were found between 70 and 80 heavy guns, nearly all of which are serviceable, a great number of small-arms, and a large quantity of commissary and ordnance stores. Admiral Porter's vessels occupy the river as far up as Reeves' Point. I regret to report that shortly after sunrise on the 16th instant, the day following the assault, the magazine of reserve ammunition in the fort exploded, killing and wounding about 130 men. The cause of this explosion has not yet been ascertained. General Ames had caused guards to be placed over the magazines, and had taken precautions to prevent accidents. A board of officers has been appointed to investigate and report upon the matter. Our loss in the assault is less than I at first feared. It is 12 officers and 107 enlisted men killed, and 45 officers and 495 enlisted men wounded. I shall forward the nominal list of casualties by the next steamer. The number of prisoners captured in the works is greater than I at first reported. We have 96 officers and 1,164 enlisted men unhurt, and 8 officers and 278 enlisted men wounded.

In obedience to verbal instructions from the Honorable Secretary of War, the captured officers have been and will be sent to Washington, D. C., the unwounded men to Point Lookout, Md., and the wounded men to Beaufort, N. C., Fort Monroe, and New York. Our own wounded will all be embarked to-day. The number of guns found in Fisher and the other works on Federal Point is 84. Day before yesterday (the 18th) a reconnaissance in force was made toward Wilmington for the purpose of discovering the enemy's position, and, if possible, his strength; but as it was not made with sufficient vigor to accomplish the object, it was renewed yesterday. The enemy's position was then fully ascertained, and 54 prisoners, including 2 officers, were captured. Our own loss was between 20 and 30. The position is from a mile and a half to two miles in front of our own defensive line toward Wilmington, and extends from Sugar Loaf Hill, on the Cape Fear River, in an easterly direction to a point a little west of Myrtle Sound. From that point it is refused, and stretches up nearly parallel to the sound toward Masonborough. How far their line extends toward Masonborough was not determined. It is a strong rifle-pit, at least partially covered by abatis, with some emplacements for guns.

The prisoners whom I have examined, some of whom speak with entire freedom (and, as I think, truthfully), tell me that Hoke's whole division and a brigade of North Carolina Senior Reserves are in our front. They also inform me that there is a line of works mounting heavy guns about three miles this side of Wilmington, and still another line around the city itself. On the right bank of the river, opposite the outer line, is Fort Anderson, mounting eleven guns. Admiral Porter is working up the river, dragging for and removing torpedoes. He will soon be in a position to attack Anderson, and then to give assistance to an attack upon this side of the river.

My force of infantry for duty is about 7,500 men, deducting garrisons for the works already taken. I could move against the enemy with about 6,000, a number which I think would be insufficient for the attack of successive lines of works such as I have reason to believe are in front of me manned by the troops now in them. I shall, therefore, before moving, await the arrival of the additional troops for which I applied in my dispatch of the 13th instant, or the orders of the lieutenant-general. I respectfully request that orders may be given for sending to me the caissons, wagons, and horses of the batteries (E, Third U. S. Artillery, and the Sixteenth New York Independent Battery) now here, and a detachment of at least fifty cavalry, for duty as orderlies and couriers.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
 ALFRED H. TERRY,
Major-General.

Brig. Gen. J. A. RAWLINS,
Chief of Staff.

ADDENDA.

STEAMER S. R. SPAULDING,
Off Fort Fisher, January 16, 1865.

Major-General TERRY,
Commanding, &c. :

The Secretary of War, in the name of the President, congratulates you and the gallant officers and soldiers of your command, and tenders you thanks for the valor and skill displayed in your part of the great achievement in the operations against Fort Fisher and in its assault and capture. The combined operations of the squadron under command of Rear-Admiral Porter and your forces deserve and will receive the thanks of the nation, and will be held in admiration throughout the world as a proof of the naval and military prowess of the United States.

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

GENERAL ORDERS, }
 No. 10. }

WAR DEPARTMENT,
 ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 26, 1865.

The following resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives is published for the information of all concerned:

Public resolution, No. 6.—A resolution to present the thanks of Congress to Bvt. Maj. Gen. Alfred H. Terry, and the officers and men under his command.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the thanks of Congress are hereby presented to Bvt. Maj. Gen. Alfred H. Terry, and to the officers and men under his command, for the unsurpassed gallantry and skill exhibited by them in the attack upon Fort Fisher, and the brilliant and decisive victory by which that important work has been captured from the rebel forces and placed in the possession and under the authority of the United States; and for their long and faithful services and unwavering devotion to the cause of the country in the midst of the greatest difficulties and dangers.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, requested to communicate this resolution to General Terry, and through him to the officers and soldiers under his command.

Approved January 24, 1865.

By order of the Secretary of War:

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Abstract from return of the expeditionary forces, Bvt. Maj. Gen. Alfred H. Terry, U. S. Army, commanding, for January 10, 1865.

| Command. | Present for duty. | | Aggregate present. | Aggregate present and absent. | Pieces of artillery. |
|--|-------------------|-------|--------------------|-------------------------------|----------------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | | | |
| General headquarters | 12 | 12 | 24 | 24 | |
| Second Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps (Ames)..... | 192 | 3,787 | 4,243 | 10,540 | |
| Third Division, Twenty-fifth Army Corps (Paine)..... | 160 | 3,149 | 3,083 | 9,480 | |
| Second Brigade, First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps (Abbott)..... | 65 | 1,385 | 1,494 | 3,565 | |
| 16th New York Independent Battery (Lee) | 3 | 42 | 45 | 122 | 4 |
| Light Company E, Third U. S. Artillery (Myrick)..... | 4 | 55 | 61 | 135 | 6 |
| Detachment Signal Corps (Buardaleo)..... | 4 | 27 | 31 | 31 | |
| Ambulance Corps (Bradley) | | | 51 | 51 | |
| Total..... | 440 | 8,457 | 9,632 | 23,054 | 10 |

No. 2.

Organization of the U. S. Forces, commanded by Maj. Gen. Alfred H. Terry, at Fort Fisher, N. C., January 13-15, 1865.

TWENTY-FOURTH ARMY CORPS.

SECOND DIVISION.

Brig. Gen. ADELBERT AMES.

First Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. N. MARTIN CURTIS.*
Maj. EZRA L. WALRATH.

3d New York:

Capt. James H. Reeves.*
Lieut. Edwin A. Behan.*
112th New York, Col. John F. Smith.*
117th New York, Lieut. Col. Francis X. Meyer.*
142d New York, Lieut. Col. Albert M. Barney.

Second Brigade.

Col. GALUSHA PENNYPACKER.*
Maj. OLIVER P. HARDING.

47th New York, Capt. Joseph M. McDonald.
48th New York:

Lieut. Col. William B. Coan.*
Maj. Nere A. Elfwing.

76th Pennsylvania:

Col. John S. Littell.*
Maj. Charles Knorr.

97th Pennsylvania, Lieut. John Wainwright.*
203d Pennsylvania:

Col. John W. Moore.†
Lieut. Col. Jonas W. Lyman.†
Maj. Oliver P. Harding.
Capt. Heber B. Essington.

* Wounded.

† Killed.

Third Brigade.

Col. LOUIS BELL.*
Col. ALONZO ALDEN.

13th Indiana, Lieut. Col. Samuel M. Zent.
4th New Hampshire, Capt. John H. Roberts.
115th New York, Lieut. Col. Nathan J. Johnson.†
169th New York:
Col. Alonzo Alden.
Lieut. Col. James A. Colvin.

Second Brigade, First Division.‡

Col. JOSEPH C. ABBOTT.

6th Connecticut, Col. Alfred P. Rockwell.
7th Connecticut:
Capt. John Thompson.†
Capt. William S. Marble.
3d New Hampshire, Capt. William H. Trickey.
7th New Hampshire, Lieut. Col. Augustus W. Rollins.
16th New York Heavy Artillery (detachment), Maj. Frederick W. Prince.

TWENTY-FIFTH ARMY CORPS.

THIRD DIVISION.

Brig. Gen. CHARLES J. PAINE.

Second Brigade.

Col. JOHN W. AMES.

4th U. S. Colored Troops, Lieut. Col. George Rogers.
6th U. S. Colored Troops, Maj. Augustus S. Boernstein.
30th U. S. Colored Troops, Lieut. Col. Hiram A. Oakman.
39th U. S. Colored Troops, Col. Ozora P. Stearns.

Third Brigade.

Col. ELIAS WRIGHT.

1st U. S. Colored Troops, Lieut. Col. Giles H. Rich.
5th U. S. Colored Troops, Maj. William R. Brazie.
10th U. S. Colored Troops, Lieut. Col. Edward H. Powell.
27th U. S. Colored Troops, Bvt. Brig. Gen. Albert M. Blackman.
37th U. S. Colored Troops, Col. Nathan Goff, jr.

ARTILLERY.

1st Connecticut Heavy, Companies B, G, and L, Capt. William G. Pride.
New York Light, 16th Battery, Capt. Richard H. Lee.
3d United States, Battery E, Lieut. John R. Myrick.

ENGINEERS.

15th New York, Companies A and I, Lieut. Keefe S. O'Keefe.

* Mortally wounded.

† Wounded.

‡ Temporarily attached to Second Division.

No. 3.

Return of casualties in the U. S. Forces engaged in the storming of Fort Fisher, N. C., January 15, 1865.

[Compiled from nominal list of casualties.]

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Missing. | |
|---------------------------|-----------|------|-----------|------|-----------|------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. |
| Twenty-fourth Army Corps: | | | | | | |
| Headquarters' staff..... | | | 1 | | | |
| First Division: | | | | | | |
| Second Brigade: | | | | | | |
| 6th Connecticut..... | | | 1 | 4 | | |
| 7th Connecticut..... | | 1 | 1 | 4 | | |
| 3d New Hampshire..... | | 1 | | 5 | | |
| 7th New Hampshire..... | | 2 | | 8 | | 4 |
| Total..... | | 4 | 2 | 21 | | 4 |
| Second Division: | | | | | | |
| First Brigade: | | | | | | |
| 3d New York..... | | 5 | 2 | 10 | | 2 |
| 112th New York..... | | 10 | 2 | 20 | | |
| 117th New York..... | 1 | 17 | 0 | 62 | | |
| 142d New York..... | 1 | 5 | 5 | 65 | | 3 |
| Total..... | 2 | 37 | 18 | 100 | | 5 |
| Second Brigade: | | | | | | |
| 47th New York..... | | 2 | 1 | 13 | | |
| 48th New York..... | 1 | 2 | 2 | 0 | | |
| 70th Pennsylvania..... | | 2 | 1 | 17 | | 1 |
| 97th Pennsylvania..... | 1 | 3 | 7 | 31 | | |
| 203d Pennsylvania..... | 4 | 36 | 5 | 141 | | 1 |
| Total..... | 0 | 45 | 10 | 211 | | 2 |
| Third Brigade: | | | | | | |
| 18th Indiana..... | | 8 | 1 | 31 | | |
| 4th New Hampshire..... | | | 1 | 17 | | |
| 115th New York..... | 1 | 1 | 1 | 13 | | 1 |
| 100th New York..... | 1 | 5 | 3 | 30 | | 1 |
| Total..... | 2 | 14 | 0 | 91 | | 2 |
| Division staff..... | | | 4 | | | |
| Grand total*..... | 10 | 100 | 47 | 489 | | 13 |

No. 4.

Reports of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Cyrus B. Comstock, Aide-de-Camp to Lieutenant-General Grant.

FORT FISHER, January 16, 1865.

(Via Fortress Monroe, Va.)

After a careful reconnaissance on the 14th, it was decided to risk an assault on Fort Fisher; Paine's division, with Colonel Abbott's brigade, to hold our line, already strong across the peninsula and facing Wilmington, against Hoke, while Ames' division should assault on the front, 400 marines and 1,600 sailors on the east end. After three hours of heavy navy fire the assault was made at 3 p. m. on the 15th. Curtis' brigade led, and, as soon as it got on the west end of the land front, was followed by Pennypacker's and later by Bell's. After desperate fighting, gaining foot by foot, and severe loss, at 5 p. m. we had possession of about half the land front. Abbott's brigade was then taken from the line facing Wilmington and put into Fort Fisher, and on pushing it forward at 10 p. m. it took the rest of the work with but little resistance, the garrison falling back to the extreme point of the peninsula, where they were followed and captured—among others General Whiting and Colonel Lamb, both wounded.

* There was also 1 man killed and 4 men wounded in the Twenty-seventh U. S. Colored Infantry (of the Third Brigade, Third Division, Twenty-fifth Corps) making an aggregate of 664 killed, wounded, and missing. One officer (Captain Reeves) and 4 men of the One hundred and twelfth New York Infantry and 1 man of the One hundred and forty-second New York Infantry, were wounded on January 14.

I think we have quite 1,000 prisoners. I hope our own loss may not exceed 500, but it is impossible to judge in the night. Among the wounded are the commanders of the three leading brigades, General Curtis being wounded, not severely, but Colonels Pennypacker and Bell dangerously. The land front was a formidable one, the parapet in places fifteen or twenty feet high; but the men went at it nobly, under a severe musketry fire. The marines and sailors went up gallantly, but the musketry fire from the east end of the land front was so severe that they did not succeed in entering the work. The navy fire on the work, judging from the holes, must have been terrific. Many of the guns were injured. How many there were on the point I cannot say; perhaps thirty or forty.

C. B. COMSTOCK,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Aide-de-Camp, and Chief of Engineers.

Lieutenant-General GRANT.

HEADQUARTERS U. S. FORCES,
Fort Fisher, N. C., January 27, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of engineer operations in connection with the capture of Fort Fisher, together with a sketch of that work and another of the country in its vicinity:*

Fort Fisher is situated on the peninsula between the Cape Fear River and the Atlantic Ocean, about a mile and a half northeast of Federal Point. For five miles north of Federal Point this peninsula is sandy and low, not rising more than fifteen feet above high tide, the interior abounding in fresh-water swamps, often wooded and almost impassable, while much of the dry land, till one gets within half a mile of Fort Fisher, is covered with wood or low undergrowth, except a strip about 300 yards wide along the seashore. The landing of the troops composing the expedition was effected on the seabeach, about five miles north of Fort Fisher, on January 12 [13], and Paine's division was at once pushed across to the Cape Fear River, with instructions to take up a line to be held against any attack from the direction of Wilmington. This line, on the morning of January 13 [14], was already defensible and was further strengthened during the day, while on the 14th a second line was laid out and begun, under charge of Lieut. T. H. Price, in rear of its left. Pioneer companies were organized in Ames' and Paine's divisions, and as during the 14th the fire of the rebel gun-boat Chickamauga killed and wounded a number of our men, Lieutenant O'Keefe, with his company of the Fifteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Engineers, was directed to build a battery for two 30-pounder Parrotts on the bank of the river to keep her off. On the afternoon of January 14 a reconnaissance was pushed, under direction of the major-general commanding, to within 500 yards of Fort Fisher, a small advanced work being taken possession of. This was at once turned into a defensive line, to be held against any attempt from Fort Fisher. The reconnaissance showed that the palisading in front of the work had been seriously injured by the navy fire. Only nine guns could be seen on the land front where sixteen had been counted on Christmas day. The steady though not rapid fire of the navy prevented the enemy from using either artillery or musketry on the reconnoitering party. It seemed probable that troops could be got up within 200 yards of the work without serious loss, and it was a matter of great doubt whether the necessary ammunition could be supplied by the open beach if regular approaches were determined on.

* See Plate LXXV, Maps 1 and 2 of the Atlas.

It was decided to assault, and the assault was made on the 15th at 3.30 p. m., after three hours of heavy navy fire, by three deployed brigades, following one another at intervals of about 300 yards, and each making its final rush for the west end of the land face from a rough rifle-pit about 300 yards from the work. At the point attacked the palisading was less injured than elsewhere, it being partially hidden, and it was necessary to use axes to cut and timbers to batter it down, in order that troops might pass readily through it. Powder sacks for blowing these palisades down had been prepared, but were not used. After seven hours' fighting, gaining traverse by traverse, the work was won.

Fort Fisher consists of two fronts. The first, or land front, running across the peninsula at this point, about 700 yards wide, is 480 yards in length; while the second, or sea front, runs from the right of the first parallel to the beach to the Mound Battery, a distance of 1,300 yards. The land front is intended to resist any attack from the north; the sea front, to prevent any of our naval vessels from running through New Inlet or landing troops on Federal Point.

(1) Land front.—This front consists of a half bastion on the left, or Cape Fear River, side, connected by a curtain with a bastion on the ocean side. The parapet is twenty-five feet thick, averages twenty feet in height, with traverses rising ten feet above it and running back on their tops, which were from eight to twelve feet in thickness, to a distance of from thirty to forty feet from the interior crest. The traverses on the left half bastion were about twenty-five feet in length on top. The earth for this heavy parapet and the enormous traverses at their inner ends, more than thirty feet in height, was obtained partly from a shallow exterior ditch, but mainly from the interior of the work. Between each pair of traverses there was one or two guns. The traverses on the right of this front were only partially completed. A palisade, which is loop-holed and has a banquette, runs in front of this face, at a distance of about fifty feet in front of the foot of the exterior slope, from the Cape Fear River to the ocean, with a position for a gun between the left of the front and the river, and another between the right of the front and the ocean. Through the middle traverse on the curtain was a bomb-proof postern, whose exterior opening was covered by a small redan for two field pieces to give flank fire along the curtain. The traverses were generally bomb-proofed for magazines. The slopes of the work appear to have been generally revetted with marsh sod, or covered with grass, and to have had an inclination of forty-five degrees or a little less. On those slopes most exposed to fire the revetment or grassing has been entirely destroyed, and the inclination reduced to thirty degrees. The ends of traverses as they rise above the parapet are very ragged; still, all damage done to the earth-work can be readily repaired, its strength being about the same as before the bombardment. The damage done by the navy fire was, first, to the palisades, which were so injured as in most places to be little obstacle to assaulting troops; second, to guns and carriages. There were originally on the front twenty-one guns and three mortars. Of these, three-fourths were rendered unserviceable by injuries to either gun or carriage. The gun in the right bastion, the field pieces in front of the postern, and one or two mortars were used against the assaulting troops. There was a formidable system of torpedoes 200 yards in advance of this front, the torpedoes being about eighty feet apart, and each containing about 100 pounds of powder. They were connected with the fort by three sets of wires. Fortunately the set leading directly to those over which the army moved and the wire leading directly to those over which the navy column moved had been cut by shells, and no torpedo was exploded.

(2) Sea front.—This front consists of a series of batteries, mounting in all twenty-four heavy guns, the different batteries being connected by a strong infantry parapet, so as to form a continuous line. The same system of heavy traverses for the protection of the guns is used as on the land front, and these traverses are also generally bomb-proofed.

Capt. M. Adams, Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers, and First Lieut. T. H. Price, Fourth U. S. Colored Troops, commanding pioneer companies of Ames' and Paine's divisions, and First Lieut. K. S. O'Keefe, commanding company of Fifteenth New York Volunteer Engineers, have, with their commands, been of great service in the construction of batteries and defensive works. First Lieut. A. L. Knowlton, Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers, has rendered valuable assistance in making sketches of Fort Fisher, as also Private Schultze, Fifteenth New York Volunteer Engineers.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. B. COMSTOCK,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Brevet Brigadier-General and Chief Engineer.

Maj. A. TERRY,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

P. S.—It may be added that in thirty bomb-proofs and magazines and their passages there were 14,500 square feet of floor space, not including the main magazine, which was exploded, and whose dimensions are unknown.

C. B. C.

(Copy to General R. Delafield, Chief Engineer, U. S. Army, same date.)

HEADQUARTERS U. S. FORCES,
Fort Fisher, February 2, 1865.

SIR: An examination of some of the guns at Fort Fisher shows that the list of calibers on the plan of Fort Fisher forwarded to the department on the 27th ultimo was carelessly taken.* I inclose a more correct list of calibers, the numbering beginning at the left of the work and running round to the Mound Battery. I think that plan gave five guns on the parapet between the sections C-D and F-E. There should be but four, there being but one 10-inch gun near the 8-inch mortar instead of two. From the list it will be seen that of twenty-one heavy guns and three mortars on the land front six guns and three mortars were serviceable at the capture and of twenty-three guns on the sea front seventeen were serviceable at the same time.

* See Plate LXXV, Map 2 of the Atlas.

Very respectfully,

C. B. COMSTOCK,

Lieutenant-Colonel and Brevet Brigadier-General, Chief Engineer.

General RICHARD DELAFIELD,
Chief Engineer.

[Inclosure.]

Heavy guns in position at Fort Fisher at capture.

| No. | Kind. | Condition of guns. | Condition of carriage. |
|--------------------|-------------------------------------|---------------------|------------------------|
| Land front. | | | |
| 1 | 10-inch columbiad | Unserviceable | Unserviceable. |
| 2 | 9½-inch rifle (old 32) | do | Serviceable. |
| 3 | 8-inch smooth, of 1841 | Serviceable | Unserviceable. |
| 4 | do | Unserviceable | Do. |
| 5 | 8-inch columbiad | Serviceable | Serviceable. |
| 6 | 4½-inch rifled Parrott | do | Do. |
| 7 | 9½-inch smooth-bore (32) | Unserviceable | Do. |
| 8 | 5½-inch smooth-bore (24) | do | Unserviceable. |
| 9 | 9½-inch smooth-bore (32) | do | Do. |
| 10 | 5½-inch Cohorn mortar | Serviceable | Serviceable. |
| 11 | 9½-inch smooth (32) | Unserviceable | Unserviceable. |
| 12 | 5½-inch Cohorn mortar | Serviceable | Serviceable. |
| 13 | 9½-inch smooth (32) | do | Do. |
| 14 | 8-inch smooth (32) | do | Unserviceable. |
| 15 | 9½-inch smooth (32) | do | Serviceable. |
| 16 | do | do | Unserviceable. |
| 17 | do | Unserviceable | Do. |
| 18 | 9½-inch rifle (32) | Serviceable | Do. |
| 19 | 7-inch rifle, Brooke | do | Serviceable. |
| 20 | 9½-inch rifle (32) | do | Unserviceable. |
| 21 | do | Unserviceable | Do. |
| 22 | 10-inch columbiad | do | Do. |
| 23 | 8-inch mortar | Serviceable | Serviceable. |
| 24 | 8-inch smooth-bore | do | Do. |
| Sea front. | | | |
| 25 | 8½-inch rifle, Blakely | Serviceable | Serviceable. |
| 26 | 10-inch columbiad | do | Unserviceable. |
| 27 | 9½-inch rifle (32) | do | Do. |
| 28 | 10-inch columbiad | do | Do. |
| 29 | do | do | Serviceable. |
| 30 | 8-inch columbiad | do | Do. |
| 31 | do | do | Do. |
| 32 | do | do | Do. |
| 33 | do | do | Unserviceable. |
| 34 | do | do | Serviceable. |
| 35 | 7-inch rifle, Brooke | Unserviceable | Unserviceable. |
| 36 | 8-inch columbiad | Serviceable | Serviceable. |
| 37 | 9½-inch rifle (32) | do | Do. |
| 38 | do | do | Do. |
| 39 | 8-inch rifle (150), Armstrong | do | Do. |
| 40 | 10-inch columbiad | do | Do. |
| 41 | do | do | Do. |
| 42 | 7-inch rifle, Brooke | do | Do. |
| 43 | 9½-inch rifle (32) | do | Do. |
| 44 | 10-inch columbiad | do | Do. |
| 45 | do | do | Do. |
| 46 | do | do | Unserviceable. |
| 47 | 9½-inch rifle (32) | do | Serviceable. |

No. 5.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Joseph C. Abbott, Seventh New Hampshire Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, of operations January 15.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIG., FIRST DIV., 24TH ARMY CORPS,
Fisher's Island, N. C., January 17, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by my command in the storming and capture of Fort Fisher on the 15th instant:

On the morning of the latter date I was moved from near the head of Masonborough Inlet, where I had been posted since landing, and put in position on the right of General Paine's line. This position I occupied until 3.30 p. m., when I received orders to move to Fort Fisher. Reaching the fort about dark I reported to General Ames, whose division had already assaulted and carried a portion of the work, and were occupying it. By order of General Ames I first threw the Third New Hampshire Volunteers, Captain Trickey commanding, along that portion of the north face of the work already occupied by his troops, and relieved them; also, by General Ames' order I throw out the Seventh Connecticut Volunteers, Captain Marble commanding, as a picket in rear of the work, the right of the line resting on the Cape Fear River. These dispositions having been made I relieved the right of General Ames' main line with the Sixth Connecticut Volunteers, Colonel Rockwell commanding. During this time the enemy occupied all the eastern and about one-third the northern face of the work. At about 9 o'clock, by order of General Ames, I then proceeded to dislodge the enemy from the remainder of the fort. Captain Trickey, with twenty men of the Third New Hampshire, promptly and speedily took possession of all but one of the remaining mounds on the northern face. I then advanced the Seventh New Hampshire, Lieutenant-Colonel Rollins commanding. They at once and gallantly charged up the slope, enveloping the sea angle of the work, meeting a sharp fire from the enemy, who were stationed behind the parapets and in the rear of the main work. I also advanced the Sixth Connecticut Volunteers immediately after the Seventh New Hampshire Volunteers, and the sea angle of the work was thus fully and strongly occupied. Perceiving this, the enemy at once either evacuated the whole work or surrendered.

The main work having been carried I reformed the Sixth Connecticut and the Seventh New Hampshire Volunteers, and advanced towards Battery Buchanan, situated at what is known as Federal Point. All the batteries facing the sea were found to be evacuated, excepting one, where the enemy at once gave themselves up without resistance. Light-House Battery was also found to be evacuated. Upon reaching Battery Buchanan I was met by the adjutant-general of the general commanding the enemy's forces, who tendered the surrender of the battery, upon which I referred him to General Terry, who would soon arrive. It was found that at this point there were about 1,000 of the enemy, including General Whiting, and more than 60 other officers. General Terry having arrived, received the surrender of the work and the force, and by his order I formed the prisoners in line and marched them first to Fort Fisher, then, by a subsequent order, moved them to the beach near the headquarters of the corps, where they were bivouacked and guarded by the Sixth Connecticut Volunteers. I then returned the remainder of the brigade to their bivouac.

My loss since landing is 2 officers and 23 men wounded, 5 men killed, and 4 men missing.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOSEPH C. ABBOTT,
Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Capt. ADRIAN TERRY,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 6.

Report of Col. Alfred P. Rockwell, Sixth Connecticut Infantry, of operations January 15.

HEADQUARTERS SIXTH CONNECTICUT VOLUNTEERS,
Fort Fisher, N. C., January 17, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit for the information of the colonel commanding the following report of the part taken by my regiment in the capture of Fort Fisher, N. C.:

Late in the afternoon of the 15th instant, in obedience to the orders of Col. J. C. Abbott, Seventh New Hampshire, commanding brigade, I moved my regiment at the right of the brigade from the rear line of works up by the road, passing the headquarters of the general commanding a little after sunset, and entered the fort through the sally port at the extreme left corner of the work, which had been taken by the troops of the Second Division. Here, as ordered, I proceeded to relieve the troops of the Second Division in the new line of trenches, extending from the river on the right to the traverses of the fort. This was our main line of defense at the time. The men were kept busily at work with shovels extending and thickening the breast-work. During all this time my men were much annoyed by the continuous musketry fire from the enemy, from the part of the fort still held by them, and by the occasional bursting in our midst of the shells from the navy. About 9 o'clock I was relieved by other troops from this line of trenches, and, forming my regiment, moved up, as ordered, upon the parapet and by the traverses to the angle at the sea face, in the rear of the Seventh New Hampshire. The enemy's fire had at this time entirely ceased and the fort was captured. I moved my regiment immediately down into the interior of the work, and, leaving behind the prisoners captured in the bomb proofs, formed again in the rear of the fort, upon the left of the Seventh New Hampshire. The two regiments were then advanced by Colonel Abbott, at first by the right flank, passing through in succession the detached batteries along the sea, and then in line of battle down toward Federal Point, nearly to Battery Buchanan, where a halt was ordered. The battery surrendered at once, with all the force, and the prisoners, about 1,000 in number, were marched out of the work. My regiment, with the Seventh New Hampshire, formed the guard to these prisoners, and marched them back through Fort Fisher, collecting others on the way, to the beach about two miles north of the fort, where they bivouacked.

It was then 4 o'clock in the morning (16th instant); my regiment was detailed to guard the camp of prisoners (about 1,800 in number) until about noon, when I was relieved, and marched back to my former position upon the rear line of defense.

I have to call attention to the general good behavior of my officers and men, and to the manner in which they performed the duty assigned to them in the capture of the fort.

I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALFRED P. ROCKWELL,

Colonel Sixth Connecticut Volunteers, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. E. LEWIS MOORE,

Asst. Adj. Gen., Second Brig., First Division, 24th Army Corps.

No. 7.

Report of Capt. John Thompson, Seventh Connecticut Infantry, of operations January 15.

HEADQUARTERS, SEVENTH REGIMENT CONNECTICUT VOLTS.,
Near Fort Fisher, N. C., January 17, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by my command in the attack on Fort Fisher on the night of the 15th instant:

In pursuance of orders received from Col. J. O. Abbott, commanding brigade, the regiment moved from its present position at 4.30 p. m., and, marching toward Fort Fisher, reached the outer line of works at about 5.30 p. m. From this point we advanced under a light fire of artillery and infantry, reaching the fort with a loss of but one man, severely wounded. At this point I received a wound in the left foot, which incapacitated me for further duty, and I transferred the command of the regiment to Capt. William S. Marble.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN THOMPSON,

Captain, Comdg. Seventh Regiment Connecticut Volunteers.

Capt. E. LEWIS MOORE,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Brigade.

No. 8.

Report of Capt. William S. Marble, Seventh Connecticut Infantry, of operations January 15.

HEADQUARTERS, SEVENTH REGIMENT CONNECTICUT VOLUNTEERS,
Near Fort Fisher, N. C., January 17, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to transmit the following report of the part taken by this regiment after I assumed command, which I did immediately upon Captain Thompson being wounded:

Reporting to Colonel Abbott, I received orders to march the regiment into a covered way, leading from near the sally-port toward the center of the fort. Here we were supplied with shovels, and ordered to move forward thirty paces and deploy in a line extending from the eighth traverse to the river, and nearly at right angles with the line of traverses. We were deployed in groups of three, with orders to dig pits for our protection from the fire of the enemy, which at this time was quite annoying. Owing to a lack of shovels many of the men were obliged to lie for some time without cover, and before the work was completed we had suffered a loss of one killed and four wounded from the fire of the fleet, which dropped many shells among us. In consequence of a rise of ground in front of the right wing they were unable to fire, but the left wing engaged the enemy vigorously, driving them from two traverses, which advantage we were unable to follow up, as an advance would have necessitated an extension of our line. From this time we continued our fire, under cover of which an advance was made by other portions of the brigade, who drove the enemy into their bomb-proofs, when, seeing the last traverse cleared, we ceased firing. In accordance with instructions received from Captain Caryl, inspector-general of the brigade, we remained in this position until 2 a. m., when we were ordered to bring up the rear of a column of prisoners. Upon arriving near the headquarters of the brevet major-general commanding, we were dismissed by the brigade commander and marched to the position occupied by the regiment on the previous day.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. S. MARBLE,

Captain, Seventh Regiment Connecticut Volunteers.

Capt. W. LEWIS MOORE,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Brigade.

No. 9.

Report of Capt. William H. Trickey, Third New Hampshire Infantry, of operations January 15.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD NEW HAMPSHIRE VOLUNTEERS,
Near Fort Fisher, N. C., January 18, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In accordance with instructions received from the brevet brigadier-general commanding, I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken in the affair of the 15th instant by the Third New Hampshire Volunteers:

We left our position near General Terry's headquarters, with six officers and about eighty men, at 4.30 p. m. of same date, and proceeded to Fort Fisher, where we arrived soon after dark. I was directed by Colonel Abbott, commanding brigade, to move my regiment to the extreme advance held by the Second Division and open fire upon the enemy; was thus engaged for nearly an hour, having to a great extent silenced the enemy's fire; was then directed by Colonel Abbott to take and hold with twenty men the next traverse in front, the remainder of my command being left in several traverses to keep up the fire upon the enemy. We took the traverse as directed, driving the enemy out. Thinking we could go further, we charged and took the next two, with a like result. After taking the third traverse, having met with considerable resistance, I did not deem it prudent to go farther with so few men, and opened a vigorous fire upon the enemy, who was rallying for the recapture of the traverses; we held the enemy in check until the arrival of the Seventh New Hampshire Volunteers and Sixth Connecticut Volunteers, who charged and took the remainder of the work. I then assembled my command, and, under orders from Colonel Abbott, moved to the inside of the fort and collected the prisoners there; also assisted in collecting others outside of the fort and sending them to the rear. After collecting all of the prisoners in the fort I sent them to the rear, remaining with a small portion of my command until 4 a. m. of the 16th instant, when I was ordered to return to the position near General Terry's headquarters.

Our casualties were as follows: 1 man killed and 5 wounded.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. H. TRICKEE,

Captain Third New Hampshire Volunteers, Comdg. Regiment.

Capt. E. L. MOORE,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., Second Brig., First Div., 24th Army Corps.

No. 10.

Report of Lieut. Col. Augustus W. Rollins, Seventh New Hampshire Infantry.

HEADQRS. SEVENTH NEW HAMPSHIRE VOLUNTEERS,
Before Wilmington, N. C., January 16, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the Seventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers in the recent expedition, the attack on Fort Fisher, and other works near the mouth of Cape Fear River:

Striking camp at Laurel Hill, Va., on the 3d instant at 11 a. m., the regiment, numbering 8 officers and 297 men, marched to Deep Bottom, crossed the pontoon over the James River, and bivouacked about two miles from Bermuda Hundred Landing until 3 a. m. January 5, when it moved to the landing and embarked at 7 a. m., on board propeller General Lyon, sailing at 9 a. m. and arriving off Fortress Monroe at 7 p. m.

At 4 a. m. January 6 sailed with fleet and arrived off Beaufort, N. C., about 7 a. m. on the 8th instant, when orders were received for ship to remain till further orders. Remained there till 9 a. m., the 12th instant, when the General Lyon was ordered to fall into line, preceded by the Prometheus; sailed to within about seven miles of Fort Fisher, arriving about midnight.

At 7 a. m. 13th instant again fell into line and moved toward the shore. At 10 a. m. went from the General Lyon on board gun-boat Nansmond, taken near the shore, landed in small boats about 12 m., and formed line at once with brigade near small battery five miles north of Fort Fisher. Moved a short distance south, formed small rifle-pits, and bivouacked for the night. On the 14th instant the regiment was engaged in moving ammunition and commissary stores toward Fort Fisher; also moved about a mile toward the fort and bivouacked at 11.30 p. m. On the 15th instant, a. m., received orders to move and reached line of works, three miles north of Fort Fisher, previously occupied by the Second Division about 12 m., the left of my regiment connecting with the right of General Paine's division, and the Third New Hampshire Volunteers on my right. Here the regiment lay till 4.30 p. m., when orders were received to fall in. At once moved by the right flank out of the works to Fort Fisher, reaching the sally-port at 5.30 p. m., where the regiment was ordered to halt for further orders. At 6.30 p. m. moved my regiment inside the fort, and was ordered by General Terry to make two traverses, and three if possible—the number not then taken. I moved over the third traverse of the fort, and advanced rapidly inside the stockade until I reached the battery on the northeast angle of the fort, where I formed the right wing of the regiment, leaving the left in support. I then ordered a charge and captured the three remaining traverses; then pushed on by right flank and by so doing cut off the angle of the fort, moved to the right, and by a rapid and determined advance captured the remaining traverses and batteries of the fort proper, with about 350 prisoners, including one field officer and several line officers. Corpl. Erich Peterson, of the color-guard, here captured one officer and a stand of colors, which were taken possession of by Lieut. Col. D. Klein, of the Sixth Connecticut Volunteers. The regiment was again formed and advanced by the right flank down the peninsula to Mound Battery, where line of battle was formed, with Sixth Connecticut on our left, and an advance ordered to Battery Buchanan. When within a mile of the battery I ordered forward a skirmish-line of ten men, armed with Spencer rifles, under command of an officer, which preceded the line of battle about 100 yards. The battery, with its guns and 1,300 prisoners, was surrendered without resistance.

Among the prisoners captured were General Whiting, Colonel Lamb, and their respective staff officers. The prisoners were formed in line, and my regiment as part of the guard, the whole marching from the fort to General Terry's headquarters, where the prisoners were placed under another guard. I then received orders to take my command to camp, where I arrived about 5 a. m. this day.

The conduct of both line officers and men on this occasion was particularly commendable.

Casualties—2 killed, 8 wounded, and 4 missing.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. W. ROLLINS,

Lieutenant-Colonel Seventh New Hampshire Volunteers, Comdg.

Capt. B. LEWIS MOORE,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 11.

Report of Brig. Gen. Adelbert Ames, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division.

HDQRS. SECOND DIVISION, TWENTY-FOURTH ARMY CORPS,
Fort Fisher, N. C., January 16, 1865.

I have the honor to submit the following report of the late movements and operations of this division:

On the night of the 2d the division, which had just returned to its camp from a demonstration against this point, received orders to prepare for a second expedition. It left camp on the 3d, and embarked on ocean transports at Bermuda Hundred between the hours of 7 and 9 p. m. on the 4th instant.

The transport fleet sailed from Fortress Monroe on the morning of the 6th, and the troops disembarked some four miles north of Fort Fisher on the 13th instant.

At 3 p. m. on the 15th we stormed Fort Fisher. Bvt. Brig. Gen. N. M. Curtis' brigade (the First) made a lodgment on the northwest angle of the fort. I immediately ordered up Col. G. Pennypacker's brigade (the Second). The enemy was at once driven from behind the palisading extending from the fort to the river, and about one-third of the work, its northwest angle, occupied by us. I then ordered up Colonel Bell's brigade (the Third), and moved it forward against and in rear of the sea-face of the work, the ground being much obstructed by the ruins of the barracks, lumber, and other rubbish. The enemy, being protected by traverses, and taking advantage of the cover afforded by magazines, &c., checked our advance. Fighting of a most obstinate character continued till after dark, during which time we made considerable advancement on the left and captured about 400 prisoners. About 8 p. m. Colonel Abbott, with his brigade, completed the occupation of the face of the work extending from the ocean to the river. A general advance was now made, and the fort occupied without opposition.

The conduct of the officers and men of this division was most gallant. Aided by the fire of the navy, and an attacking column of sailors and marines along the sea beach, we were able to pass over the open ground in front of the fort through the gaps in the palisading in the ditch made by the naval fire, and finally to carry the work.

Where the name of every officer and man engaged in this desperate conflict should be submitted, I shall at present only be able to give a few of those most conspicuous. It is to be hoped they all may be properly rewarded.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. N. M. Curtis, commanding First Brigade, was prominent throughout the day for his bravery, coolness, and judgment. His services cannot be over-estimated. He fell a short time before dark seriously wounded in the head by a canister-shot.

Col. G. Pennypacker, commanding Second Brigade, was seriously wounded while planting his colors on the third traverse of the work. This officer was surpassed by none, and his absence during the day most deeply felt and seriously regretted.

Col. L. Bell, commanding Third Brigade, was mortally wounded while crossing the bridge in advance of the palisading. He was an able and efficient officer; one not easily replaced.

I here submit the names of the regimental commanders, and in connection with the brigade commanders is the credit due them for the heroic conduct of their men:

Regimental commanders First Brigade: One hundred and forty-second New York Volunteers, Lieut. Col. A. M. Barney; One hundred and seventeenth New York Volunteers, Lieut. Col. F. X. Meyer; One hundred and twelfth New York Volunteers, Col. J. F. Smith; Third New York Volunteers, Lieut. E. A. Behan. Second Brigade: Forty-eighth New York Volunteers, Lieut. Col. W. B. Coan; Seventy-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Col. J. S. Littell; Forty-seventh New York Volunteers, Capt. J. M. McDonald; Two hundred and third Pennsylvania Volunteers, Col. J. W. Moore; Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, First Lieut. J. Wainwright.* Third Brigade: One hundred and sixty-ninth New York Volunteers, Col. Alonzo Alden; Thirteenth Indiana Volunteers, Lieut. Col. S. M. Zent; Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers, Capt. J. H. Roberts; One hundred and fifteenth New York Volunteers, Lieut. Col. N. J. Johnson.

Col. J. W. Moore, Two hundred and third Pennsylvania Volunteers, behaved with the most distinguished gallantry. He was killed while passing the second traverse of the fort, in advance of his regiment, waving his colors. Few equaled, none surpassed this brave officer.

* Awarded a Medal of Honor.

Lieut. Col. S. M. Zent, in command of the Thirteenth Indiana, with his own regiment and a detachment of volunteers from the First Brigade, numbering in all 100 men, deployed within 200 or 300 yards of the fort, and by their fire materially aided our advance.

Maj. J. H. Lawrence, Thirteenth Indiana Volunteers, and Lieut. Col. J. A. Colvin, One hundred and sixty-ninth New York Volunteers, also behaved in the most gallant manner, and rendered efficient service in collecting and organizing the troops which had become separated from their commands in the charge, and in leading them to positions where important advantages were gained. Capt. G. W. Huckins, Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers, and First Lieut. J. Konigs, Seventh U. S. Colored Troops, aides on the staff of Col. L. Bell, commanding Third Brigade, were untiring in their labors, and rendered valuable services in the absence of my staff officers, who had been stricken down in the early part of the engagement.

Privates Abrie Chapin, James Spring, Company G, One hundred and forty-second, and D. O. Hotchkiss, Company A, O. R. Kingsland, Company D, One hundred and twelfth New York Volunteers, volunteered to approach to a point considerably in advance of our skirmish line, which they did do, and by this step valuable information with reference to the ditch was gained. Privates James Cadman (wounded), William Cabe, Company B; George Hoyt, S. R. Porteous, Company C; D. H. Morgan, Edward Petrie, Company E; E. H. Cooper, Company G (wounded); Silas Baker, Company H (missing); George Merrell, William J. McDuff, Company I; Z. C. Neahr*, Bruce Anderson, Company K, One hundred and forty-second New York Volunteers, volunteered to advance with the head of the column and cut down the palisading.

Copies of the reports of the brigade commanders will be forwarded. In them will be found lists of officers and men who particularly distinguished themselves. It is recommended that medals be bestowed upon all enlisted men mentioned.

To my staff officers am I particularly indebted for their zeal and gallantry throughout the day. They were constantly passing to and fro, and exposed to the hottest fire. I would respectfully recommend that they be brevetted for their services: Capt. Charles A. Carleton, assistant adjutant-general; Capt. A. G. Lawrence, acting aide-de-camp; Capt. H. C. Lockwood, aide-de-camp; Capt. R. W. Dawson, acting assistant inspector-general; Capt. J. S. Mathews, provost-marshal; Capt. B. B. Keeler, mustering officer.

Captain Lawrence was the first man through the palisading, and while extending his hand to receive a guidon which he intended to place on the parapet of the work, a shell exploded near him, taking off his left arm and seriously injuring his throat. He was afterward shot in the right arm. For his services on this occasion, as well as those on a former one, I most earnestly urge his promotion. Captain Dawson was disabled by a wound in the left arm. To Captain Lockwood, General Whiting and Colonel Lamb surrendered, with the garrison at Fort Buchanan.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. AMES,

Brigadier-General of Volunteers.

Capt. A. TERRY,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

* Awarded a Medal of Honor.

No. 12.

Report of Col. Rufus Daggett, One hundred and seventeenth New York Infantry, commanding First Brigade, of operations January 13-15.

HDQRS. FIRST BRIG., SECOND DIV., 24TH ARMY CORPS,
Near Fort Fisher, N. C., January 17, 1865.

SIR: In obedience to orders, I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by this brigade in the storming of Fort Fisher:

This brigade, under command of Brevet Brigadier-General Curtis, landed about 9.30 a. m. on the 13th instant, at a point about five miles north of Fort Fisher, and at 3.30 p. m. advanced up the beach and formed in rear of Flag Pond Battery, facing Wilmington, and on the right of General Paine's division, where it remained until about 11 p. m., when, by order of General Terry, it followed General Paine's division to a point some three-quarters of a mile nearer Fort Fisher and intrenched in rear of Half Moon Battery, where it remained until about 3 p. m. the following day. At that hour the brigade was ordered under arms, and proceeded toward Fort Fisher, following the coast for some half a mile and then striking across the point to the river side. When about half way from Half Moon Battery to Pilotsville the brigade was halted, and the One hundred and seventeenth New York Volunteers, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Meyer, was ordered forward as skirmishers, and moved to Pilotsville, where it halted, and vedettes were thrown forward as far as the outwork in front of Fort Fisher. In the meantime the brigade, being exposed to a galling fire from a rebel gun-boat stationed in the river opposite Pilotsville, by which 1 officer and 5 men were wounded, was retired behind the sand hills and moved up by squads under cover of the woods. At sundown the whole command was massed in rear of Pilotsville, and commenced at once to intrench themselves against the fire from the fort and gun-boat, which, although well directed, failed to injure a single man in the command. During the night the One hundred and forty-second New York Volunteers were pushed forward as far as the outwork, and ordered to intrench themselves and dig a rifle-pit from the work toward the coast, and at the same time the skirmishers were advanced to within 150 yards of the sallyport of Fort Fisher. Soon after daylight the enemy opened on the skirmishers with musketry, but without much effect, and did not prevent them from establishing a line of pits completely covering the land face of the fort. The troops lay in this position until about 10 p. m., continually enlarging and advancing the line of pits for the purpose of covering the assaulting column. At that hour the troops were got under arms and advanced to the rear line of pits in the following order: The One hundred and seventeenth New York Volunteers, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Meyer, on the right; Third New York Volunteers, under Lieutenant Behan, joining them on the left; the One hundred and twelfth New York Volunteers, under command of Col. J. F. Smith, on the extreme left, and the One hundred and forty-second New York Volunteers, under Lieut. Col. A. M. Barney, between the Third and One hundred and twelfth New York Volunteers.

At about 3 p. m. (General Curtis having received orders to that effect from General Ames, through Captain Lawrence) the brigade advanced to the charge, obliquing to the right, so as to strike the sally port (that having been deemed the only vulnerable point of the work), and after a desperate struggle the advance of the brigade reached the parapet of the fort and scaled it to the first traverse, where the guidon of the

One hundred and seventeenth New York Volunteers was planted—the first colors on the fort. The first squad of prisoners was taken by the One hundred and seventeenth New York Volunteers, the second by the One hundred and forty-second New York Volunteers. General Curtis was seriously wounded about 4.30 p. m., while gallantly fighting at the head of his command.

The great confusion consequent upon the peculiar character of the assault, and the confined position of the troops on the parapet, render a more particular report of the progress of the brigade after reaching the work impossible. Such portions of the command as could be collected were formed in the fort after the surrender, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Barney, and marched to Pilotsville.

I have to report the loss of many valuable officers, a nominal list of whom is forwarded herewith. In the absence of General Curtis I have left the special mention of officers and men to the regimental commanders under whose immediate command the services were rendered. I forward herewith a list of casualties.*

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. DAGGETT,

Colonel 117th New York Volunteers, Commanding Brigade.

Capt. CHARLES A. CARLETON,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 13.

Report of Maj. Oliver P. Harding, Two hundred and third Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, of operations January 15.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIG., SECOND DIV., 24TH ARMY CORPS,
In the Field, N. C., January 17, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to transmit the following report of the part taken by the Second Brigade, Second Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, composed of the Two hundred and third, Seventy-sixth, and Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, Forty-eighth and Forty-seventh New York Volunteers, in the assault on Fort Fisher the 15th instant:

In compliance with instructions from General Ames, the brigade was formed in line of battle in rear of the First Brigade, the right resting on the Cape Fear River and the left about 300 yards from the sea-beach. The brigade was formed in this position about 2 p. m., and at about 3 p. m. was ordered to assault the fort, which was done in a gallant manner and under a heavy fire of both grape and musketry, and entered the fort through the sallyport near the river. The Two hundred and third Pennsylvania Volunteers, commanded by Col. J. W. Moore, was the first to enter the fort, closely followed by the Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, commanded by First Lieut. John Wainwright. The colors of each of those regiments reached the top of the parapet about the same time, those of the Ninety-seventh borne by Colonel Pennypacker and of the Two hundred and third by Colonel Moore.

* Embodied in table, p. 405.

Colonel Pennypacker was seriously wounded while planting his colors on the third traverse, and Colonel Moore fell dead while passing the second traverse, waving his colors and commanding his men to follow.

After entering the fort the brigade became somewhat broken up; nevertheless both officers and men behaved gallantly until its capture.

Col. J. S. Littell, commanding Seventy-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers, was severely wounded at the head of his regiment while passing over the rise of ground just outside the fort. Maj. Charles Knerr then took command, and led his men during the remainder of the engagement.

Lieut. Col. William B. Coan, commanding Forty-eighth New York Volunteers, was severely wounded while forming his regiment in line just before the assault, and was obliged to be sent to the rear. Maj. Nere A. Elfving then assumed command, and took a prominent part during the engagement.

Capt. J. M. McDonald, commanding Forty-seventh New York Volunteers, and First Lieut. John Wainwright, commanding Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, both commanded their regiments with much coolness.

After the fall of Lieutenant-Colonel Lyman, Two hundred and third Pennsylvania Volunteers, who fell on the sixth traverse, I commanded the regiment until about 5 p. m., when ordered by General Ames to take command of the brigade, which I immediately organized.

The total loss of the brigade was—6 commissioned officers killed and 16 wounded; enlisted men, 45 killed and 215 wounded; total, 280, a nominal list of which has already been forwarded.

Respectfully transmitted.

O. P. HARDING,

Major 203d Pennsylvania Volunteers, Comdg. Brigade.

Capt. C. A. CARLETON,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., Second Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps.

No. 14.

Report of Capt. Heber B. Essington, Two hundred and third Pennsylvania Infantry, of operations January 15.

HDQRS. 203D REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
January 17, 1865.

SIR: In accordance with your directions with respect to making a report of the part taken by the various regiments in the late action, I would respectfully report as follows:

The regiment charged on the right of the Second Brigade, and was the first regiment of the brigade to enter the fort, going in with the First Brigade. After having assisted in capturing the first two mounds, a portion of the regiment went with the First Brigade over the traverses, and the remainder went to the right and stationed themselves behind a bank in the open field south of the fort. The latter portion then charged across the plain, by order of the commanding general, until opposite the seventh or eighth traverse, where they threw up an embankment with their tin plates and shovels, which they held until the fort surrendered, keeping up a steady fire upon the enemy. The first portion which went around the traverses after they had reached the farthest embankment held by our men, charged over the traverse, led by Lieutenant-Colonel Lyman, who fell here, and drove the enemy. Other detached portions of the regiment occupied various positions, but all behaved bravely.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. B. ESSINGTON,

Captain, Commanding Regiment.

Lieut. I. E. SMITH,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Second Brig., Second Div., 24th Army Corps.

No. 15.

Report of Lieut. Col. Nathan J. Johnson, One hundred and fifteenth New York Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, of operations January 15.

HDQRS. THIRD BRIG., SECOND DIV., 24TH ARMY CORPS,

Fort Fisher, N. C., January 19, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that the Third Brigade, Second Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, took the following part in the engagement of the 15th instant:

At about 10.30 a. m. on the 15th instant Col. Louis Bell, commanding brigade, received orders to move his brigade and form the third line of the forces attacking Fort Fisher. The brigade formed that line about 1 p. m. in front of Fort Fisher, and under the command of Col. Alonzo Alden, of the One hundred and sixty-ninth New York Volunteers (Colonel Bell having been ordered by General Ames to remain near him for the purpose of receiving orders), at 2.15 p. m. received orders to advance, which it did in the following order: Left in front, the Thirteenth Indiana Volunteers, One hundred and fifteenth New York Volunteers, Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers, and One hundred and sixty-ninth New York Volunteers forming the line (the Ninth Maine Volunteers, belonging to the brigade, was not with the expedition). The brigade entered the fort about 2.45 p. m., conjointly with a portion of the First Brigade, at the left bastion, a portion moving along the terre-plein and a portion on the ramparts, parapets, and slopes, some of the officers and men in the advance, with officers and men of the other brigades, all vying with each other in the noble emulation of who should be first in the grand achievements of that memorable day. The brigade continued the contest, advancing along the works until they were taken and Fort Fisher passed into Union hands.

The list of casualties has already been forwarded, to which I beg leave to refer.

The brigade was ordered to man the fort, and bivouacked inside the works. Guards were placed over (as was supposed) all the magazines and bomb-proofs containing powder and ordnance stores, but, as it subsequently appeared, one magazine was left unguarded, and about 7 a. m. on the 16th instant it exploded, burying in its débris a large number and wounding others. A list of the casualties has been forwarded, to which I respectfully beg leave to refer.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

N. J. JOHNSON,

Lieutenant-Colonel 115th New York Volunteers, Comdg. Brigade.

Capt. CHARLES A. CARLETON,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Division.

No. 16.

Report of Maj. Ezra L. Walrath, One hundred and fifteenth New York Infantry, of operations January 15.

HEADQUARTERS 115TH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
Fort Fisher, N. C., January 17, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of non-commissioned officers and privates of this regiment who signally distinguished themselves on the 15th instant at the assault and capture of Fort Fisher: Sergt. Peter J. Keck, color bearer, was one of the first to reach the enemy's works and planting the colors on the first traverse, and it seemed as a matter of strife between him and the brave color bearer of the Thirteenth Indiana Volunteers, as they clambered side by side the other traverses and planted their respective flags. Sergeant Keck was wounded in the early part of the engagement, but he remained until the fort was surrendered. He has been complimented on several occasions by commanding officers during the campaigns of Florida, and of the Army of the James, for bravery and good conduct while engaged with the enemy. He has been wounded twice during the war.

Corpl. Alonzo Van Evert, one of the color guard, also distinguished himself for bravery by climbing the works and bringing away the rebel colors that were near one of the guns of the fort.

Corpl. Albon W. Hanner and Private George W. Kennicutt are deserving much praise for responding to the call made by the general commanding the division for volunteers to go into a small building on the north side of the fort and from that point fire upon and silence a howitzer battery placed at the west front of the fort. Corporal Hanner, with five men, remained there until four were killed.

I would further state that the regiment was in command of Lieut. Col. Nathan J. Johnson, who, with one wing of the regiment, passed along the traverses in succession, while Maj. E. L. Walrath, with the other portion, passed through the interior opposite Colonel Johnson's command, until our forces had reached the seventh traverse, when Major Walrath was detailed to take command of the First Brigade (General Curtis being severely wounded).

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. L. WALRATH,
Major, Commanding the Regiment.

Capt. GEORGE W. HUCKINS,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 17.

Report of Lieut. Col. James A. Colvin, One hundred and sixty-ninth New York Infantry, of operations January 15.

HEADQUARTERS 169TH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
Fort Fisher, N. C., January 17, 1865.

The undersigned has the honor to report that upon the opening of the engagement of 15th instant Col. Alonzo Alden was in command of the regiment, but on reaching the enemy's works assumed command of the brigade, Colonel Bell being wounded. The undersigned then took command of the regiment.

It would seem almost invidious to make any special mention of officers and men, when all did their duty with unparalleled gallantry and zeal. The undersigned can bear testimony that every officer led his men, and the men vied with each other to attain the front.

Col. Alonzo Alden was distinguished for his accustomed coolness and bravery.

Maj. J. H. Allen was shot through the arm and leg, but persisted in remaining with the command.

Cpts. Daniel Ferguson, James H. Dunn, Charles D. Merrell, J. H. Warren, and E. W. Church were distinguished for their coolness and gallantry.

Lieuts. J. H. Straight, wounded, Michael Ryan, killed, Michael Russell, wounded, all in command of companies, were the right men in the right places. After the death of Lieutenant Ryan, Lieut. J. B. Foote assumed command of his company and led it gallantly.

Lieut. Eugene Van Santvoord also deserves mention.

Lieut. B. R. Mosher was hit by a spent ball on the 13th instant. He went into action on the 15th, being obliged to use a cane; he hopped into the fight, leading his men.

Other officers distinguished themselves; indeed, all deserve mention. The undersigned has mentioned such as came particularly under his notice.

Accompanying will be found a list* of the enlisted men who distinguished themselves; also a full report of losses in action.†

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. COLVIN,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding 169th New York Volunteers.

Capt. GEORGE W. HUCKINS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 18.

Report of Brig. Gen. Charles J. Paine, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division, Twenty-fifth Army Corps, of operations January 13-19.

HEADQUARTERS NORTH LINE, U. S. FORCES,
Federal Point, N. C., January 20, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In obedience to instructions from expedition headquarters, I have the honor to submit, for the information of the major-general commanding, the following report of the operations of my command since disembarking at this point:

The troops of my command commenced to disembark about 10 a. m. 13th instant, and by 3 p. m. the last of the troops were on the beach. After an inspection of ammunition, and replacing that which was damaged, I moved, pursuant to orders, my command by the flank, with skirmishers in advance and flankers on the right, down the beach to the earth-work known as "Flag Pond Battery." At that point I received orders to strike across the peninsula to the Cape Fear River. The Fifth and Thirty-seventh Regiments of the Third Brigade had the advance, moving through the swamp in line of battle, the Fifth Regiment on the right, the remainder of the division moving across by the flank and close up with the advance. The advance reached Cape Fear River soon after dark without opposition, and a strong line of breast-works was immediately constructed, running from the river on the left in a southeasterly direction to an impenetrable swamp in the direction of "Flag Pond Battery" on the right, and pickets were thrown out, connecting with the picket of Brevet Brigadier-General Curtis' brigade on the right. About 11 o'clock I received orders to withdraw my command and take up a new line, which was accomplished by moving the Second Brigade down the ocean beach and the Third Brigade down the river beach to the point designated, the original picket remaining in its position until the new line was partially completed.

* Not found.

† Embodied in table, p. 405.

On the 14th a small party was sent down the river beach to reconnoiter, and succeeded in capturing a small steamer with a barge in tow, laden with forage and ammunition for Fort Fisher. The prisoners captured were forwarded same day to headquarters. On the 15th, while the assault upon Fort Fisher was in progress, after Colonel Abbott's brigade had moved down from the north line, I received orders to send another regiment, and sent the Twenty-seventh Regiment, Brevet Brigadier-General Blackman commanding. Subsequently, pursuant to orders from headquarters, the remainder of the Third Brigade of this division, Colonel Wright commanding, was withdrawn from this line and ordered to report at Fort Fisher, leaving the Second Brigade and some marines and seamen to hold this line. About the time the assault upon Fort Fisher commenced the enemy advanced a strong skirmish line at the double-quick along my entire front, evidently with a view to carry the picket-line and create a diversion in favor of the garrison of Fisher. He succeeded in driving back two or three posts held by the white troops toward my right, and occupied their pits for a time. The pickets of my division held their ground resolutely. The original line was re-established in the evening. The Third Brigade, with the exception of the Twenty-seventh Regiment, reported back to me about midnight, and was placed in its original position on the line.

On the 16th Brevet Brigadier-General Abbott's brigade resumed its position on my right, relieving the detachment of marines.

January 18 Col. J. W. Ames, with the Fourth, Sixth, and Thirtieth Regiments of his brigade (the Second) and the division sharpshooters, made a reconnaissance in my front toward Wilmington. He drove in the enemy's pickets and obtained a view of the enemy's main line on the left, but did not succeed in developing their line on the right. He returned with the loss of 1 man killed and 1 wounded.

On the 19th Colonel Ames, with his entire brigade and the division sharpshooters, made a second reconnaissance on center and left. Brevet Brigadier-General Abbott, with a portion of his brigade, moved from the right on the beach in search of the enemy's left and rear. He succeeded in developing the entire line of the enemy, and returned with the loss of 1 man killed and 2 officers and 10 men wounded from my division. Brevet Brigadier-General Abbott captured 2 officers and 51 men, and returned with a loss of 2 officers and 9 men wounded and 2 missing.

The enemy's line was found to be quite a strong infantry breast-work, defended from approach by abatis in places; swamps elsewhere, running apparently from Sugar Loaf half a mile to a mile down the river bank; thence easterly toward Myrtle Sound; thence northeast along the sound; well manned; no artillery was discovered. What fortifications there are on Sugar Loaf could not be ascertained.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. J. PAINÉ,

Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Capt. A. TERRY,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 19.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Albert M. Blackman, Twenty-seventh U. S. Colored Troops, Third Brigade, of operations January 15.

HEADQUARTERS,

Federal Point, Fort Buchanan, N. C., January 16, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by my command in the operations of last evening:

I received orders from Brigadier-General Paine about 7 o'clock last evening to proceed to Fort Fisher and report to General Ames. I proceeded as rapidly as possible, but on arriving at the bridge near the fort I found the way obstructed by troops. I ordered the men to lie down, and proceeded in person to General Ames within the fort and reported. From him I received orders to retire beyond the range of sharpshooters, stack arms, and return with my men and proceed to the construction of covered ways to enter the fort. In marching to the rear I met Major-General Terry, who ordered me to proceed to his headquarters, and await further orders. At a quarter before 10 o'clock I received orders to march to the fort. On arriving I was informed that the enemy had evacuated, and was ordered to join in pursuit, which order I promptly obeyed, and on arriving at this place was first to receive the surrender of the enemy.

The losses in my command were 1 enlisted man killed and 4 wounded.

After this fort was taken I was placed in command by Major-General Terry in person.

Very respectfully, &c.,

A. M. BLACKMAN,

Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Capt. G. A. CARLETON,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 20.

Proceedings of a Court of Inquiry constituted to examine into the cause of the explosion of the powder magazine.

SPECIAL ORDERS, }
No. 9. }

HEADQUARTERS U. S. FORCES,
Fort Fisher, N. C., January 20, 1865.

A board of inquiry, to consist of the officers named below, is constituted to examine into the cause of the explosion of the magazine of Fort Fisher on the morning of the 16th instant. The board will meet at these headquarters at 3 p. m. this day, and will render their report as soon as possible, consistently with a full investigation of the circumstances.

Detail for the court: Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. C. Abbott, commanding Second Brigade, First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps; Lieut. Col. A. M. Barney, One hundred and forty-second New York Volunteers; Capt. George F. Towle, Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers, acting assistant inspector-general.

The board will sit without regard to hours.

By order of Maj. Gen. A. H. Terry:

ADRIAN TERRY,

Captain and Assistant Adjutant-General.

FIRST DAY.

HEADQUARTERS U. S. FORCES,
Fort Fisher, N. C., January 21, 1865.

Pursuant to the foregoing order, the court assembled, and, all the members being present, was duly organized.

The prescribed oath was administered to the court by the recorder, and the recorder was sworn by the president.

Lieut. Col. SAMUEL M. ZENT, Thirteenth Indiana Volunteers, being duly sworn, deposed as follows:

I do not know of my own knowledge, but was told by Private Elisha L. Powers, Company C, Thirteenth Indiana Volunteers, that just previous to the explosion men were seen going into the magazine. As soon as the fort was captured I was ordered by Colonel Alden, One hundred and sixty-ninth New York Volunteers, commanding Third Brigade, to guard all the magazines; but this one, being inside, escaped my notice, and had no guard from my regiment.

By the COURT:

Question. Where was your regiment stationed?

Answer. On the north face of the fort, between the parapet and pallade.

Question. Where was the entrance of the magazine at which these men went in?

Answer. I understood there were two entrances; I do not know which the men were seen to enter.

Question. Were you near when the explosion took place?

Answer. I was; I was making the rounds.

Question. Can you form any opinion as to where the explosion commenced?

Answer. I cannot.

Question. Were there several detached magazines?

Answer. There were not; it was one grand explosion.

Question. Did you have any of the magazines guarded?

Answer. I did; all except this one, which I had not yet discovered.

Question. Where were the guarded magazines situated?

Answer. Under the traverses or mounds connected with the bomb-proofs.

Question. How many guards were placed to these magazines?

Answer. Three to each; there were thirty-one entrances.

Question. Did the explosion of the main magazine communicate into any service magazine?

Answer. It did not.

Question. At what hour did the explosion occur?

Answer. About 9 a. m.; possibly later.

Question. Were there fires in the interior of the fort between the magazine and bomb-proof?

Answer. There were not; the fires were outside, south of the magazine.

Question. How near were the fires to the magazine?

Answer. I should judge about 100 yards.

Question. Was there any officer of the guard under you; if so, his name?

Answer. Lieut. Theodore Reifle, Thirteenth Indiana Volunteers, was under me.

Question. In stationing the guard did you receive specific instructions or did you exercise your own judgment?

Answer. I used my own judgment.

Question. State how you proceeded to make the disposition for guard.

Answer. I commenced on the northwest corner and examined each traverse, placing a guard wherever I found an entrance; did not go so far as the mound; placed a guard there next morning.

Question. When stationing your guard was your attention called to this reserve magazine?

Answer. It was not; I was informed after the explosion that the One hundred and sixty-ninth New York Volunteers had placed a guard there.

Question. Was the One hundred and sixty-ninth New York Volunteers stationed there?

Answer. They were very near, just at the base on the south side.

Question. What regiments were stationed there?

Answer. The One hundred and sixty-ninth and One hundred and fifteenth New York and Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers. Those of the Thirteenth Indiana not on guard were outside. The three first named were in the area inside the fort, and between the main and reserve magazines.

By the RECORDER:

Question. Were those men soldiers, sailors, or marines who were seen to enter the magazine?

Answer. They were colored troops.

Lieut. Col. NATHAN J. JOHNSON, One hundred and fifteenth New York Volunteers, commanding Third Brigade, Second Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, being duly sworn, deposed as follows:

At the time of the explosion I was commanding the One hundred and fifteenth New York Volunteers. I was on the parapet when the explosion took place, nearly north and opposite the magazine. I immediately went down toward the scene of the explosion. Before reaching it I came across two wires, one solid copper, the other, I should judge, a submarine wire, composed of seven small ones inclosed in rubber, leading from the magazine toward the Cape Fear River in a northwesterly direction. I cut both for fear of further explosions, and then proceeded to examine the cavity of the exploded magazine. The wires were on the surface of the ground for some distance toward the river, but entered the earth near where I cut them. Am uncertain whether or not they were covered by the earth from the exploded magazine.

By the RECORDER:

Question. Were guards placed on the magazine?

Answer. I know there were on some, but don't know whether there were on this.

By the COURT:

Question. Was the whole brigade inside the inclosure?

Answer. It was, but most of the Thirteenth Indiana were detached previous to entering the fort.

Question. Did those regiments inside have fires?

Answer. They did.

By the RECORDER:

Question. How near were any fires to the magazine?

Answer. Not nearer than four rods.

Question. Were any as near as six rods?

Answer. There were, I should think.

Question. Did you see any persons going in the bomb-proofs with lights?

Answer. I did not.

By the COURT:

Question. Did you examine this magazine?

Answer. I did that evening.

Question. Were there two entrances?

Answer. I saw but one.

Question. Was this one towards the fire?

Answer. It was not; it was on the opposite side of the mound.

Question. When you saw the wire did you suppose this the cause of the explosion?

Answer. I did.

Question. Did any one follow up the wire?

Answer. Some of the engineers, I understood, but am not certain.

Question. Were men at liberty to run around the fort as they pleased?

Answer. So far as I know they were kept out of the bomb-proofs; otherwise they went around the fort at liberty—sailors and marines; some of the marines were intoxicated, and firing off their pistols.

Question. Were measures taken to restore order immediately after the capture of the fort at 10 o'clock?

Answer. Should judge it was 1 o'clock on the morning of the 16th before a guard was posted; should think the guard was posted as soon as possible.

Maj. EZRA L. WALRATH, One hundred and fifteenth New York Volunteers, being duly sworn, deposed as follows:

I saw the explosion; was near the seventh or eighth traverse. Immediately examined the ruins, and picked up the conical end of a torpedo which had burnt powder on the end and had certainly been at some time exploded. I saw a great many marines and sailors about the works, who were passing in and out of the magazines in search of plunder. They would light matches inside and let them burn to see what was in the magazine. Saw some wires running from the Cape Fear River toward the exploded magazine which I cut with my knife. These wires ran into the earth thrown up by the explosion, and were exposed at various places, ten or fifteen feet at a time, running toward the river. The torpedo was found in the ruins of the magazine. A great many of the marines were intoxicated.

By the RECORDER:

Question. How near was the nearest fire to this magazine?

Answer. I should judge about seventy-five feet.

By the COURT:

Question. Had you examined this magazine?

Answer. Only from the outside; saw the entrance, but did not go near it; no guards were on it; saw four or five marines near the entrance, apparently just entering or coming out.

Question. Was it at the main magazine where the matches were lighted?

Answer. I saw none there; it was at one of the south service magazines I saw marines coming out; I asked one how he could see; he replied that he had lighted a match; no guard was on at that magazine.

Question. Did you see any one who was in the magazine to judge about fixed ammunition being there?

Answer. I did not; I judged it was simply a powder magazine from seeing no fragments of shell among the debris.

Capt. JOHN H. ROBERTS, Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers, being duly sworn, deposed as follows:

On the night of the 15th the brigade was inside the fort. Near sunrise the explosion took place. A short time before the explosion took place Lieut. G. F. Quinby, Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers, was near the entrance of the magazine and saw men around with lights. He saw some in the magazine, and one had a candle, apparently searching round, and a few minutes after the explosion took place.

By the RECORDER:

Question. At what distance from the magazine was the nearest fire?

Answer. Should judge about twenty yards.

The court then proceeded to and examined the scene of the explosion, after which it adjourned until 10 a. m. to-morrow, January 22.

SECOND DAY.

HEADQUARTERS U. S. FORCES, Fort Fisher, N. C., January 22, 1865.

At 10 a. m. the court assembled, and all the members being present, came to order.

Capt. GEORGE W. HUCKINS, Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers, acting assistant adjutant-general, Third Brigade, Second Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, being duly sworn, deposed as follows:

I gave orders direct from General Ames to Lieutenant-Colonel Zent, Thirteenth Indiana Volunteers, to place guards on all the bombproofs and magazines to keep any one out.

By the RECORDER:

Question. Did Lieutenant-Colonel Zent report to General Ames for orders, and did he report that the order about guards had been carried out?

Answer. I do not know; but don't think he did.

Question. In giving the order of General Ames did you specify this main magazine as one to be guarded?

Answer. I did not; not knowing at the time of its existence.

Surg. A. J. H. BUZZELL, Third New Hampshire Volunteers, medical inspector of the expedition, being duly sworn, deposed as follows:

On the morning of the 16th I was in the hospital, and Major Hill and General Whiting were present. The explosion was referred to. Major Hill wished me say to General Terry that, it having been reported to him that the explosion was the result of wires intentionally placed at the magazine, that such was not the fact; and also, on his honor as an officer and a gentleman, that no wires connected with the magazine; that the only torpedoes were outside the fort, which fact was communicated to General Terry by General Whiting immediately after the surrender. This was all said to me by Major Hill in presence of General Whiting. He said if there was any connection with the magazine he did not know of it; had there been, he should have been likely to have known of it.

First Lieut. GEORGE F. QUIMBY, Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers, being duly sworn, deposed as follows:

On the night of the 15th instant my regiment was inside the fort. About daylight I was walking around the fort. I came near the magazine, and saw several soldiers standing around the entrance, overhauling some old stuff that had been pulled out. One says, "Have you got all out?" The other replied, "I have—perhaps not; they've got a light in there now" (meaning inside the magazine). I then stepped to the entrance and inquired what it contained. Some one inside said, "Boxes of powder." I then ordered if they had a light to put it out, and cautioned them not to have any more, as it was very careless and dangerous. I then left the fort, and ten or fifteen minutes afterward the explosion took place. This was the main magazine.

By the COURT:

Question. Was there a guard stationed there?

Answer. There was not.

Question. Where was the entrance situated?

Answer. On the side of the magazine next the river.

Question. Did you see any other entrance?

Answer. I did not.

Question. Who were those men, and did they seem to work under orders?

Answer. They were white soldiers, and were not at work under orders.

Second Lieut. THEODORE REIFLE, Thirteenth Indiana Volunteers, being duly sworn, deposed as follows:

I was officer of the guard under Lieutenant-Colonel Zent, and posted the guards over the service magazines inside the fort. Did not see this main magazine, and consequently posted no guard there.

Capt. FREDERICK G. MOSHER, One hundred and fifteenth New York Volunteers, being duly sworn, deposed as follows:

I saw soldiers, sailors, and marines running into bombproofs and service magazines where guards were posted, and the guards made no effort to stop them, so far as I could see. Did not observe whether they had lights. This was on the same morning before the explosion.

The evidence in relation to the subject was here closed.

FINDINGS.

After mature deliberation upon the foregoing evidence the court finds that the following are the main facts, viz:

I. Immediately after the capture of the fort General Ames gave orders to Lieut. Col. Samuel M. Zent, Thirteenth Indiana Volunteers, through Capt. George W. Huckins, Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers, acting assistant adjutant-general, Third Brigade, Second Division, to place guards on all the magazines and bombproofs.

II. Lieutenant-Colonel Zent commenced on the northwest corner of the fort next the river, following the traverses round, and placed guards on thirty-one entrances under the traverses. The main magazine which afterward exploded, being in the rear of the traverses, escaped his notice, and consequently had no guards from his regiment or any other.

III. That soldiers, sailors, and marines were running about with lights in the fort, entering bombproofs with these lights, intoxicated and discharging fire-arms.

IV. That persons were seen with lights searching for plunder in the main magazine some ten or fifteen minutes previous to the explosion.

The court do not attach any importance to the report that a magnetic wire connected this work with some work on the opposite side of the Cape Fear River.

OPINION.

The opinion of the court, therefore, is that the explosion was the result of carelessness on the part of persons to them unknown.

The court then adjourned sine die.

JOSEPH C. ABBOTT,
Brevet Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, President of Court.
GEORGE F. TOWLE,
Captain Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers,
Acting Assistant Inspector-General and Recorder.

No. 21.

Medals of Honor awarded for distinguished services under Resolution of Congress, No. 43, approved July 12, 1862, and section 6 of Act of Congress, approved March 3, 1863.

| Name. | Rank and organization. | Date. | Awarded for— |
|--------------------------|--|------------------|---|
| Curtis, N. Martin | Brevet Brigadier-General. | 1865. Jan. 15 | For distinguished personal bravery in the assault and capture of Fort Fisher, N. C. |
| Neahr, Zachariah C. | Private, Company K, 142d New York Infantry. | Jan. 16 | Having volunteered to cut down the palisading at Fort Fisher, N. C. |
| Pennypacker, Galusha. | Colonel 97th Pennsylvania Infantry. | Jan. 15 | For bravery in the battle of Fort Fisher, N. C. |
| Walnwright, John | First Lieutenant 97th Pennsylvania Infantry. | Jan. 15 | For gallant and meritorious conduct at the storming of Fort Fisher, N. C. |

No. 22.

Report of General Braxton Bragg, U. S. Army, commanding Department of North Carolina, of operations January 13-15.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF NORTH CAROLINA,
Wilmington, N. C., January 20, 1865.

COLONEL: About midnight on the 12th instant information reached me from Fort Fisher that the enemy's fleet was again assembling off New Inlet. The troops were promptly disposed to meet the movement, and orders and instructions were given to the several commanders for their guidance. Major-General Whiting repaired to Fort Fisher, and called to the assistance of that garrison, now 1,200 strong, about 600 men from the adjacent forts. Major-General Hoke, with all the movable force, about 1,000 effectives, including reserves and cavalry, took position on the peninsula north of Fort Fisher to watch the enemy and confront his land force should they disembark in that region.

The bombardment of Fort Fisher was renewed by a portion of the fleet on the morning of the 13th, whilst the transports, under cover of another portion, proceeded to a point some six miles north, and commenced to disembark troops on the sand-spit between the sea and Masonborough Sound. Owing to the intervening swamp and sound, it was impossible for us to attack the enemy at their landing point, even if the heavy metal of the fleet had not securely covered them. Nothing was left but to post our troops to watch their movements, which was judiciously done by Major-General Hoke. A detachment of cavalry was thrown to his right and front, some three miles toward Fort Fisher, by a military causeway leading through the swamp to Battery Anderson, the nearest point accessible to the seabeach. This swamp, which skirts along the sound to its head, near Battery Anderson, there turns nearly due west across the peninsula and terminates in a small stream which conveys its waters into the river through a narrow neck of high land about three miles from the fort. Along this narrow ridge runs the only practicable route to the fort west of the seabeach. Works had been ordered and were under construction, to enable a small force to hold the passage along the seabeach to the fort from the secure landing above, but they had not sufficiently progressed to render them useful. Nor is it believed any ordinary work could have been long held against the enormous weight of metal which could be concentrated on it, short range, the water from this point north being deep close in shore.

On the afternoon of the 13th I joined Major-General Hoke's command at his headquarters near Sugar Loaf, and, after a free conference, fully approved his disposition. The command could not have been divided with any safety, and to have placed it between the enemy and Fort Fisher would have enabled them to seize our intrenched camp, and securely confine our entire force on the southern end of the peninsula, exposed without cover to the fire of the whole fleet, which reached from the sea to the river throughout the whole distance. The troops were ordered to lie upon their arms, and to move promptly and attack, should the enemy attempt to extend his lines toward the fort.

In making a reconnaissance early the next morning, the 14th, toward our right, whilst I was on the left, Major-General Hoke was fired upon by the enemy before reaching the line assigned his cavalry. Upon due investigation, he found a heavy force occupying an intrenched line between us and the fort, entirely across the peninsula from Battery Anderson on the sea to the river. Putting his command in motion, and promptly reporting what had occurred, he was ordered to move upon the enemy, and dislodge him if practicable. The movement had been made by the enemy, under cover of darkness, and the cavalry stationed on our flank for the purpose had failed to give any notice. Passing to the front with the troops, I united in another examination of the enemy's line, and concurring in the opinion already expressed to me, I suspended the order for the attack. The enemy largely exceeded us in numbers, and was well intrenched from sea to river, a distance not exceeding one mile. I do not believe this change of position by the enemy could have been prevented with the enormous fleet to cover his movements, though he might have been retarded, if timely information had been received. But its successful accomplishment was not considered as placing the fort in much danger, if boldly defended by a vigilant garrison, as our communication with it by water at night could not be interrupted unless the fleet forced a passage into the river.

From different sources I had learned with certainty that the enemy had landed neither horses nor artillery, intending to confine himself to the naval bombardment and infantry assault. Telegraphic reports from Major-General Whiting, received at 1.30 p. m. on the 14th instant, during this examination, represented the garrison of the fort in fine condition and spirits. He asked for fresh troops, on account of the exhaustion produced by the necessity for great vigilance at night to prevent surprise. Eleven hundred veteran infantry, under an approved commander, were immediately put in motion for the fort, and the general informed. From an accident to the transportation, the steamer grounding, only 500 of these reached their destination during the night of the 14th. The remainder were, however, close at hand, with orders to land as soon as the enemy's fire would allow. But, as the garrison had been under fire for two days and on duty but one night, not the slightest apprehension was felt. The land front, on which the assault must be made, was just 450 yards in extent, and the garrison now fully 2,300 arms-bearing men, or four to the yard, after manning all the artillery. My only apprehension was in regard to a surprise, and, therefore, as a matter of precaution, instructions were given to keep out pickets to the front, and to look well to the flanks of the work, they being the only points considered at all vulnerable. Its commander was further informed that the troops in the fort would be regularly relieved by fresh details as their physical condition might require.

The work on the land front consisted of a parapet fifteen or twenty feet high, with a broad ditch more or less flooded according to tide, and in front of this a line of sharpened palisades ten or twelve feet high, extending from sea to river, and loop-holed for infantry. To have assaulted the enemy behind his intrenchments, covered by his fleet, with inferior numbers, would have exhausted our means to aid the fort, and thereby not only have insured its ultimate fall, but have opened the country behind it. To make him the assaulting party, considering our means for attack and defense, seemed to me the only policy, and it promised his early and complete discomfiture, as the first change of weather would drive off the fleet and leave him unsupported and cut off from supplies.

In this condition matters continued until the afternoon of the 15th, the naval bombardment being kept up by day. At 1.30 p. m. it was reported that the entire loss up to that time had been 3 killed and 32 wounded. No report had been received of any damage to the fort or its armament. About one hour later a dispatch announced the enemy forming for a land assault, and that most of the guns on the land front were disabled. General Hoke's command was immediately formed for attack, and he moved forward in person with his skirmish line, through the thick undergrowth, close to the enemy's intrenchments, receiving two balls through his coat. A heavy line of battle was formed along their whole front in rear of the intrenchments, which were well manned. About this time the fire of the fleet slackened, and a feeble, desultory fire of musketry was heard for a few minutes at the fort. Soon the fire from the fleet was resumed with great vigor. Knowing we had retained a very large portion of the enemy's land force, and relying on the strength of our works and the large force to defend them, confidence was felt that the assault was successfully repulsed. Some unpleasant rumors and reports from the west of the river were heard about 4.30 p. m., but, with the certainty of being able to re-enforce the garrison that night, all apprehension was dispelled by the following dispatches, received respectively at 7.30 and 10 p. m.:

Fort Fisher, January 15, 1865.

General BRAXTON BRAGG:

The enemy are assaulting us by land and sea. Their infantry outnumber us. Can't you help us? I am slightly wounded.

WHITING,
General.

Fort Fisher, January 15, 1865.

Colonel ANDERSON:

We still hold the fort, but are sorely pressed. Can't you assist us from the outside?

HILL,
Major.

Brigadier-General Colquitt had been ordered to proceed to the fort and enter upon the immediate command, with special instructions. He reached Battery Buchanan in time only to witness the capture of such portions of the garrison as had retreated to that point. The written statements made by him and his staff officers as to what they saw are herewith inclosed, together with reports which I called for from Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon and Major Saunders, two officers of General Whiting's staff, sent out by him at the last moment, and a topographical map of the country.* From all the information to be obtained it would seem that the enemy's assault on the seaboard by his naval forces was handsomely repulsed with great loss to them, but that whilst most of the garrison on duty was thus engaged his army column, preceded by a single regiment, approached along the river and entered the work on that flank almost unopposed; that they were met, after a secure lodgment had been made, by Major-General Whiting and Colonel Lamb with such force as they could collect, and most gallantly, even desperately, resisted, until the superior numbers of the enemy prevailed.

In this severe conflict, in which we were frequently the attacking party, all accounts agree that the courage and devotion of Major-General Whiting and Colonel Lamb were most conspicuous; they both fell pierced by severe wounds, at the head of their men; but the moment the enemy secured the sally-port his superior numbers gave him every advantage.

Without better information than is now possessed, no opinion should be hazarded as to how this misfortune was brought about. During the short and sharp struggle which ensued after the enemy entered the fort, our loss is represented to have been about 600 killed and wounded. The garrison consisted of about 110 commissioned officers and 2,400 or 2,500 men.

The enemy's fleet consisted of some 70 vessels, 5 of which were iron-clads of the heaviest class, and in all carried at least 600 guns.

Upon ascertaining with certainty the fall of Fort Fisher, I directed the evacuation of the forts below it on the other side of the river, which had now become useless.

The withdrawal of the garrison on Smith's Island was barely accomplished before the enemy's gun-boats entered the Cape Fear, through New Inlet, and the force at the other works having been so weakened in re-enforcing Fort Fisher as, under the altered circumstances, to be at the mercy of a few regiments which the enemy might land above Smithville, necessarily retired to Fort Anderson during the 16th and 17th. With the means of transportation by land at command, it was impossible to bring off any part of the armament of the forts, and accordingly the guns were disabled as far as practicable and the magazines blown up.

* See Plate CXXXII, Map No. 1 of the Atlas.

I have the honor to be, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
BRAXTON BRAGG,
General, Commanding.

[Col. W. H. TAYLOR, Assistant Adjutant-General.]

No. 23.

Report of Lieut. Col. George T. Gordon, U. S. Army, Assistant Inspector-General, of operations January 13-15.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD MILITARY DISTRICT,
January 17, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit for the information of the general commanding the following report of the attack on Fort Fisher:

On the morning of the 13th instant, at about 8 o'clock, the enemy opened on the fort with the Ironsides, one double and three single turreted iron-clad monitors, concentrating their whole fire on the land face, keeping up a regular fire till 5 p. m. At this hour three frigates—Colorado, Minnesota, and Wabash, as supposed—came into action and continued a terrific fire until 6 p. m. Colonel Lamb, anticipating an assault, made repeated applications to Major-General Whiting for re-enforcements. The only forces available were those of the navy manning Fort Buchanan, sixty in all, which were willingly furnished by Captain Chapman, U. S. Navy. Six companies were brought from the forts below at 8 p. m., and 150 men, under Maj. James Reilly, arrived at 3 o'clock on the morning of the 14th instant. During this night the gunners and troops of the garrison were manning the palisades, a general attack being anticipated, our guns keeping up a fire, covering the land approach, at intervals during the entire night. Major-General Whiting, accompanied by myself, was also on the works and beach during the greater portion of the night, keeping watch on the enemy's movements.

On the morning of the 14th instant the enemy again opened on the land face, the rest of the fleet (seventy-two in all) forming in two lines of battle; fifteen of these moved into position and joined in the action, keeping up a terrific fire during the whole day and succeeding night, dismantling every gun on the land face, one 8-inch columbiad alone excepted. Our guns replied with great accuracy, but with little effect, the wooden vessels remaining out of range of our shot, making but slight impression on the iron-clads, as far as we could judge. The gunners displayed the greatest gallantry under this most terrific fire. The enemy had also advanced a line of sharpshooters, who had sunk rifle-pits, and annoyed the men serving the guns by keeping up a constant fire. The dismantled guns could not be remounted during the night, nor could the works be repaired, owing to the constant and heavy fire kept up by the enemy's fleet during the entire night. A telegram having been received from the commanding general that Brigadier-General Hagood's brigade had been sent to re-enforce us, was ordered to await their arrival at Fort Buchanan.

About 4.30 on the 15th the first of these regiments (the Twenty-first) arrived, and shortly afterward the Twenty-fifth, under the command of Captains Du Bose and Carson, respectively. The Twenty-first Regiment at once moved up to Fort Fisher; the other was moved to the rear of the Mound Battery for shelter from the enemy's fire, which at this time was awful; it moved up to Fort Fisher later in the day. About fifty-two ships having joined the monitors at 8 o'clock, they concentrated their fire, without any cessation, at intervals, on different portions of the works. During this morning of the day (the 15th) and the preceding night the enemy landed the assaulting column, supposed, and as confirmed by a prisoner, to number 10,000 men. These were formed in three lines across the entire neck of land, covered by a heavy line of skirmishers about 400 yards in front of the main body, and at a distance of about 1,000 yards from the fort. On this force we brought to bear our one available gun and three mortars, which had been mounted during the night, and these repeatedly broke their line and temporarily checked the advance. As the attacking column advanced a part of the fleet moved in single line in succession ahead of the skirmish line, thus enfilading the entire land face of the work, whilst the remainder of the fleet, in their original position, kept up a murderous fire on nearly every part of the whole fort. Under cover of the dense smoke a brigade was moved from the enemy's left along the beach, the tide being low, and succeeded in getting within the palisade line before they were seen, but were instantly repulsed twice and driven from their position with heavy loss. Corresponding with this movement a heavy force of the enemy, under cover of the woods, moved up on our left and got possession of the first gun chamber.

Lieutenant Latham, of Captain Adams' light battery, was stationed with two guns at a point commanding the causeway leading to the palisade line (the palisade line itself having been destroyed by the enemy's fire), with orders to run his guns into position as soon as the fire of the fleet had slackened. What occurred at this period on the left of the line I am unable to state, being myself engaged on the right, and the first intimation I had of the enemy's approach was by seeing their flag planted on the third traverse. As soon as discovered all the available force was led to repulse this attack, by Major-General Whiting in person, but it failed in dislodging the enemy from the position occupied, and at this point I have, with much regret, to state Major-General Whiting was seriously wounded and was carried from the field. Major Hill, chief of the general's staff, had dispatched couriers to Battery Buchanan to bring up the three remaining regiments of Hagood's brigade, who had been ordered to remain there till sent for (the fire from the fleet rendering it almost impossible for any troops to move), when it was discovered that this force had never reached Battery Buchanan (a circumstance much indeed to be regretted). I was then ordered by Major-General Whiting to communicate with the commanding general, which I immediately attempted to do, as he is aware. What occurred, therefore, subsequently to my leaving the field I only know from hearsay; but I consider it my duty to state that I was informed, as I was on the point of leaving, that a flag of truce had been hoisted by the enemy and answered by some officer, who then surrendered himself and 300 men to the enemy, and that a regiment of the enemy had been marched into the gallery of the sally-port. I have also to add that the garrison, though in good heart, was sadly worn out by the hard work they were called upon to perform by day and night, but that a feeling of much disappointment existed that the long-looked-for co-operation from the forces outside, which they expected would have been rendered, failed to assist them in their hour of need.

G. T. GORDON,

Lieutenant-Colonel and Assistant Inspector-General.

Lieutenant-Colonel ANDERSON, Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 24.

Report of Maj. William J. Saunders, U. S. Army, Chief of Artillery, of operations January 13-15.

WILMINGTON, N. C., January 18, 1865.

COLONEL: In obedience to verbal instructions, I have the honor, respectfully, to report that on Friday, the 13th instant, I was ordered by Brigadier-General Hébert to proceed to Fort Fisher, then menaced by a powerful fleet of the enemy. Upon my arrival I reported at once to the post commandant, who requested that I would perform my duties as chief of artillery. The action began at 8 a. m. by the Ironsides and four monitors, one a double turreted and the other three single turreted. Their firing was slow and deliberate and directed upon the land face of the fort, evidently with a view to dismounting our guns and breaking down the palisades in front of the work. Our guns, under my immediate command, replied steadily and with accuracy, but I am unable to state with what effect. In the afternoon several frigates, having formed a second line of battle on our sea face, opened a tremendous bombardment on our works. As soon as the fire of the enemy ceased the troops were taken to the palisade line, upon which I posted (by order of the major-general commanding) six light guns. During the entire night (at intervals of half an hour) I fired from different portions of the land face, as also with my light guns, up the beach, having previously (at dark) opened with all of them upon the woods covering the approach to the fort, to dislodge, if possible, any of the enemy who might seek to throw up works at that point, as also to open the road for the re-enforcements expected from that direction. During the night the Ironsides and monitors occupied their relative positions of the day before, all being quiet in that direction.

On the morning of Saturday, the 14th instant, the enemy again opened from the ironclads, directing their fire as on the day before. A number of sharpshooters had likewise effected a lodgment on the road leading to the fort, and annoyed our gunners at their work. During this day the enemy dismounted all of our guns on the land face, with the exception of one 8-inch columbiad, three 32-pounders (smooth-bores), and one 30-pounder Parrott. These, however, kept a steady fire. During the whole of this night the enemy kept up a steady fire on the fort, rendering it impossible for us to remount the guns, excepting one 10-inch mortar, two 24-pounder Coehorn mortars having been placed in the gun chambers of the land face. The enemy's fire was very effective, killing and wounding many of our men on the palisade line, and still further increasing their already exhausted condition, which, from want of rest and food, was very great.

The troops were withdrawn at daylight and held in readiness to resist the assaulting column, which during the day (Sunday, the 15th instant) were being landed and formed in three lines across the neck of land upon which the works were built, a line of skirmishers being thrown some 400 yards to their front, and at about 1,000 yards from the fort. Meanwhile (from an early hour in the morning) a tremendous fire was kept up from the entire fleet, numbering seventy-two vessels of all classes. From a number of these (I am unable to state how many, but should think a sufficient number to bring 300 guns to bear on the works) a concentrated fire was directed at different portions of the works, which was kept up at intervals of ten and twenty minutes. Its effect was terrible, the works being torn to pieces and every gun on the land face (except one 8-inch columbiad) dismounted. Our mortars, with this gun, however, kept up a steady fire upon the enemy's line of infantry, whilst our sea-face batteries replied with steadiness and coolness to the fire of the fleet, but as I was engaged entirely on the land face, for want of data not now to be had, I am unable to report with what effect. The exhausted condition of our men, now greatly decimated by fifty-six hours of hard fighting, the major-general commanding being unable to relieve them without, in effect, evacuating his works at the mouth of the river, from which he had drawn as heavily (in re-enforcing Colonel Lamb) as he could, rendered it necessary to fire at the fleet seldom and at long intervals. This may in some measure account for their being able to keep up their heavy fire, as none of their ships were withdrawn from action. Under cover of the smoke of this terrific fire the enemy threw forward a column (supposed to be a brigade) from the left of their line along the sea beach (the tide being low), who succeeded in gaining the right of our palisade line before they were discovered. This advance was quickly and gallantly repulsed by our troops with heavy loss. The attack on the flank of the work would now seem to have been only a feint, to be converted into a real attack as circumstances might determine, since a heavier column had approached under cover of the hill and woods on the river side (our left) and succeeded in gaining a foothold on our works.

It was whilst this attack was going on on our sea front that Colonel Lamb (as I was confidently informed) reported to Major-General Whiting the fact of the repulse of the enemy at all points. The enemy, in his hurried retreat, were destroyed in large numbers. Such guns on the sea face as would bear, together with our only remaining gun (an 8-inch columbiad), opened on them with canister at short range. It was while engaged in bringing this last gun to bear on them that I discovered that their assaulting column had gained a position on the left of our works, when I immediately ordered the officer in charge (Lieutenant Swain) to traverse his gun and open on them, the gun having a flanking fire, and at once led in person the troops collected at this point (as the only field officer present) to attack them down the parapet of the work. The fire of the heavy force of sharpshooters on the enemy's right, together with the torn up condition of the work, rendered it necessary to take them down within the work, where I joined Major-General Whiting, who was leading his men in person with the entire disposable force, hurrying on to drive the enemy from his position. I had been previously wounded in the attack on the right; I fell at the foot of the fifth traverse from the left of the work, the enemy having possession of and firing from the third, when I was taken up and carried into a magazine. As soon as I recovered sufficiently I rejoined Major-General Whiting, whom, I was informed, was wounded in the bombproof.

At this juncture Colonel Lamb entered, wounded, and told the general that his men, whom he had endeavored to lead from the works on the sea front to drive the enemy from his lodgment on our left, would not follow him. General Whiting, although wounded, was still directing as far as possible the movements of his small force, when Major Reilly rushed in and reported the astounding fact that an officer, having put his handkerchief on a ramrod whilst he was temporarily in another portion of his command, had surrendered 300 of his men and admitted a regiment of the enemy into the galleries of the sally-port on the land face. The general, who had repeatedly ordered Colonel Graham, with the remainder of Hagood's brigade, whom he supposed at the Mound Battery, directed me to bring him up without delay. I need not add that the troops were not there, and the want of them lost us the fort. On attempting to rejoin the general I found that the enemy, in overwhelming force, covered the land and sea face, and were firing from the parapet of the work, in the bombproof of which I had left the general. I returned to Battery Buchanan and advised the immediate withdrawal of the force at this point, as the enemy had the fort and were then marching on the battery, the troops for whose defense were reduced to the gun detachments in re-enforcing the fort, the guns having been spiked. The bombproof being full of wounded, the commanding officer was unable to blow up the magazine. This command was safely brought off, but, owing to the want of a steamer, numbers of our poor fellows who were retreating before the enemy were left on the beach. I came off with the naval officer commanding Battery Buchanan at 10.40 p. m.

I have the honor to be, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. J. SAUNDERS,
Major and Chief of Artillery.

Col. ARCHER ANDERSON,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 25.

*Reports of Maj. Gen. William H. C. Whiting, U. S. Army, of operations
January 15.*

FORT FISHER, January 18, 1865.

GENERAL: I am sorry to have to inform you, as a prisoner of war, of the taking of Fort Fisher on the night of the 15th instant, after an assault of unprecedented fury, both by sea and land, lasting from Friday morning until Sunday night.

On Thursday night the enemy's fleet was reported off the fort. On Friday morning the fleet opened very heavily. On Friday and Saturday, during the furious bombardment on the fort, the enemy were allowed to land without molestation and to throw up a light line of field-works from Battery Ramseur to the river, thus securing his position from molestation and making the fate of Fort Fisher, under the circumstances, but a question of time.

On Sunday the fire of the fleet reached a pitch of fury to which no language can do justice. It was concentrated on the land front and fort. In a short time nearly every gun was dismounted or disabled, and the garrison suffered severely from the fire. At 3 o'clock the enemy's land force, which had been gradually and slowly advancing, formed into two columns for assault.

The garrison during the fierce bombardment was not able to stand to the parapets, and many of the re-enforcements were obliged to be kept at a great distance from the fort. As the enemy here slackened his fire to allow the assault to take place, the men hastily manned the ramparts and gallantly repulsed the right column of assault. Portion of the troops on the left had also repelled the first rush to the left of the work. The greater portion of the garrison being, however, engaged on the right, and not being [able] to man the entire work, the enemy succeeded in making a lodgment on the left flank, planting two of his regimental flags in the traverses. From this point we could not dislodge him, though we forced him to take down his flag, from the fire from our most distant guns, our own traverses protecting him from such fire. From this [time] it was a succession of fighting from traverse to traverse, and from line to line, until 9 o'clock at night, when we were overpowered and all resistance ceased.

The fall both of the general and the colonel commanding the fort, one about 4 and the other about 4.30 p. m., had a perceptible effect upon the men, and no doubt hastened greatly the result; but we were overpowered, and no skill or gallantry could have saved the place, after he effected a lodgment, except attack in the rear.

The enemy's loss was very heavy, and so, also, our own. Of the latter, as a prisoner, I have not been able to ascertain.

At 9 p. m. the gallant Major Reilly, who had fought the fort after the fall of his superiors, reported the enemy in possession of the sally-port. The brave Captain Van Benthuyzen, of the marines, though himself badly wounded, with a squad of his men picked up the general and colonel and endeavored to make way to Battery Buchanan, followed by Reilly with the remnant of the force. On reaching there it was found to be evacuated; by whose order, or what authority, I know not. No boats were there. The garrison of Fort Fisher had been coolly abandoned to its fate. Nothing was left but to await the approach of the enemy, who took us about 10 p. m. Thus fell Fort Fisher after three days' battle, unparalleled in the history of the war. The fleet surpassed its tremendous effort upon the previous attack.

The fort has fallen in precisely the manner indicated so often by myself, and to which your attention has been so frequently called, and in the presence of the ample force provided by you to meet the contingency. The fleet never attempted to enter until after the land force had done its work, and, of course, unless the supporting force played its part, Fort Fisher must have fallen. Making every allowance for the extraordinary vigor and force of the enemy's assault, and the terrific effect of the fire of the fleet upon the garrison, and the continual and incessant enfilading of the whole point from Battery Buchanan to the fort, thereby preventing to a great extent the movement of my troops, I think that the result might have been avoided, and Fort Fisher still held, if the commanding general had have done his duty. I charge him with this loss; with neglect of duty in this, that he either refused or neglected to carry out every suggestion made to him in official communications by me for the disposition of the troops, and especially that he, failing to appreciate the lesson to be derived from previous attempt of Butler, instead of keeping his troops in the position to attack the enemy on his appearance, he moves them twenty miles from the point of landing in spite of repeated warnings. He might have learned from his failure to interrupt either the landing or the embarking of Butler for two days with his troops, though disgraceful enough, would indicate to the enemy that he would have the same security for any future expedition. The previous failure was due to Fort Fisher alone, and not to any of the supporting troops. I charge him further with making no effort whatever to create a diversion in favor of the beleaguered garrison during the three days' battle, by attacking the enemy, though that was to be expected, since his delay and false disposition allowed the enemy to secure his rear by works, but works of no strength. I desire that a full investigation be had of this matter and these charges which I make; they will be fully borne out by the official records. I have only to add that the commanding general, on learning the approach of the enemy, would give me no orders whatever, and persistently refused from the beginning to allow me to have anything to do with the troops from General Lee's army. I consequently repaired to Fort Fisher as the place where my own sense of duty called me.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. H. C. WHITING,

Major-General (prisoner of war).

General R. E. LEE,

Commanding Armies Confederate States.

HOSPITAL, FORT COLUMBUS, GOVERNOR'S ISLAND,
New York Harbor, February 19, 1865.

The above is an exact copy of the dispatch dictated to Major Hill in the hospital at Fort Fisher (and preserved in his note book) on the 18th of January, 1865, and which I intended to have endeavored to forward at that time by flag of truce, and accordingly made a request of General Terry. On his reply that it would be necessary to refer it to Lieutenant-General Grant, I concluded to postpone the report. I wish to add a few remarks upon the difference between the two attacks, and also give some information which I have acquired. Had the enemy assaulted the work on the first attack, he would have been beaten off with great slaughter. The fire of the fleet on that occasion, though very severe and formidable, was very diffuse and scattered, seemingly more designed to render a naval entrance secure than a land attack, consequently our defense was but slightly damaged. We had nineteen guns bearing on the assault, and above all, the palisade was almost as good as new. Moreover, the fleet, during the first bombardment, hauled off at night, leaving the garrison time for rest, cooking, and refreshment. It is remarkable that during the first bombardment no gun's crew was ever driven from its guns; but on the 13th and 14th of January the fleet stationed itself with the definite object of destroying the land defense by direct and enfilade fire, the latter a feu d'enfillement to knock down the traverses, destroying all guns, and pound the northeast salient into a practicable slope for the assaulting column. By 12 m. Sunday not a gun remained on the land front. The palisade was entirely swept away, the mines in advance, so deeply did the enemy's shot plough, were isolated from the wires and could not be used. Not a man could show his head in that infernal storm, and I could only keep a lookout in the safest position to inform me of the movements of the enemy. Contrary to previous practice, the fleet kept up the fire all night. Cooking was impracticable. The men, in great part, in Fisher at the second attack were not those of the first, and were much more demoralized. The casualties were greater, with but one ration for three days. Such was the condition when the parapets were manned on the enemy's ceasing firing for assault.

As soon as a lodgment was made at Shepherd's battery, on the left, the engineers at once threw up a strong covering work in rear of Fisher, and no effort of ours against overwhelming numbers could dislodge them.

Then was the time for the supporting force, which was idly looking on only three miles off, which could see the columns on the beach, to have made an attack upon the rear of the assaulting columns; at any rate, to have tried to save Fort Fisher, while the garrison had hurled one assaulting column, crippled, back, and were engaged for six hours with 5,000 men vigorously assaulting it.

General Bragg was held in check by two brigades of U. S. Colored Troops, along a line of no impediment whatever. Once at this line by the river bank with his three batteries of artillery, and his whole force steadily advancing, the enemy's fleet could not have fired again without hurting their own men. The enemy had not a single piece of artillery; altogether about 7,000 or 8,000 men. Pushing our batteries to Camp Wyatt and Colonel Lamb's headquarters, and opening heavily on Shepherd's battery, with an advance of our troops, and such of the enemy as could not have escaped in boats must have fallen into our hands; but it was not to be. I went into the fort with the conviction that it was to be sacrificed, for the last I heard General Bragg say was to point out a line to fall back on if Fort Fisher fell. In all his career of failure and defeat from Pensacola out, there has been no such chance missed, and no such stupendous disaster.

Wounded, in the hospital, with mortification at the shameful haste, I heard the blowing up of Fort Oswell before the enemy had dared to enter the harbor.

I demand, in justice to the country, to the army, and to myself, that the course of this officer be investigated. Take his notorious congratulatory Order No. 14 [17*], with its numerous errors, and compare his language with the result. I do not know what he was sent to Wilmington for. I had hoped that I was considered competent. I acquiesced with feelings of great mortification. My proper place was in command of the troops you sent to support the defense; then I should not now be a prisoner, and an effort at least would have been made to save a harbor on which I had expended for two years all the labor and skill I had. I should not have had the mortification of seeing works which our very foes admire, yielding after four days' attack, given up and abandoned without even an attempt to save them.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. H. O. WHITING,

Major-General (prisoner of war).

General R. E. LEE,

Commanding Armies Confederate States.

No. 26.

Report of Brig. Gen. Alfred H. Colquitt, C. S. Army, commanding brigade.

HEADQUARTERS COLQUITT'S BRIGADE,

January 17, 1865.

COLONEL: In reply to your communication, I have the honor to submit the following statement:

In accordance with instructions from the general commanding, I left the landing at Sugar Loaf in a row-boat about 9 p. m. of the 15th instant, with a view to proceed to Fort Fisher and assume command. I was accompanied by Lieutenant Washington, of General Hoke's staff, and Lieutenants Estill and Colquitt, of my own staff. The accounts which had been given from Battery Lamb and other points excited the apprehension that the fort was in possession of the enemy. A dispatch from General Whiting, dated at the fort at 6.30 p. m., dispelled those apprehensions and gave the assurance that the fort was still holding out. I directed the crew of the boat to row directly to Fort Fisher. They represented that it was impossible to land there in consequence of rocks, shallow water, &c. I insisted that they should land there in spite of obstacles, but they urged the impracticability of it, and that it was not fear of the enemy which gave rise to their conclusion. We landed, therefore, 400 or 500 yards from Battery Buchanan, between the battery and Fort Fisher. I was not hailed, and did not see a sentinel or picket. A short distance from the point of landing I found a shanty, with several negroes and one or two white men in it. They reported that Fisher was taken, which, as I distrusted, I required one of them to come out and go with me as guide. I was about starting when an officer, representing himself as Captain Munn, with a dozen or fifteen men, without arms, came up. These I took for a fatigue detail, until the captain informed me that the fort was evacuated; that he had just come from it, and that General Whiting and Colonel Lamb were already at Battery Buchanan. I still doubted whether it could be true, but concluded to go first to Buchanan before trying to enter the fort. As I neared the battery with the boat, I was hailed by a horseman who inquired who we were. I landed, and found about the battery a crowd of men mingling together, without organization and without arms. I did hear some officer calling out for Company E of some regiment. I inquired for General Whiting and Colonel Lamb, and was informed they were there. Meeting an officer, he said he would carry me to Colonel Lamb, who was wounded. I found the colonel prostrate with a wound, which he thought, however, was not severe. In answer to my inquiry whether anything more could be done, he replied that a fresh brigade might then retake the fort. I told him there was no brigade with me, and wished to know of him the condition of the men who had escaped. He said that when he was wounded everything broke up in consternation and was utterly disorganized, and that no further efforts could effect anything with the resources then available. My interview with him lasted but a minute, and as my object was to learn the immediate condition of affairs, I made no inquiries of him respecting the incidents connected with the capture of the fort. As I left him to seek General Whiting, a messenger came running to me from Lieutenants Estill and Colquitt, of my staff, who had been left at the boat, with the information that the enemy was upon us, and that in a minute longer we could not escape. Walking in the direction of the boat, which was lying about fifty yards from the battery toward the enemy, I perceived a line of his troops advancing with two colors flying. They were not more than 100 yards from the battery. The night was bright, with a full moon. I had just time to reach the boat and shove off as the line advanced to the battery, its right flank passing within thirty or forty yards of me. I crossed the river to Battery Lamb, and telegraphed you from that point certain information of the loss of the fort. I reported to you in person at 3 a. m. on the 16th instant.

* See Vol. XLII, Part I, p. 990.

I had no communication, except that alluded to, with Colonel Lamb, with any person known to me, but promiscuous accounts agreed that the fort was entered about two hours before sundown and that fighting continued at intervals until dark, when all firing ceased. I think there were at Battery Buchanan 300 or 400 men, and many of them drunk. The artillerists who manned the battery had, previous to my arrival, spiked the guns and made their escape in small boats. There were no boats left. I regret that I cannot give a more satisfactory account of the circumstances connected with the fall of Fort Fisher, but I had no opportunity of learning more than is here stated, as a few minutes only elapsed between my arrival at the battery and its occupation by the enemy.

I send herewith, as requested, the written statements of Lieutenants Washington, Estill, and Colquitt.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. H. COLQUITT,

Brigadier-General.

Lieut. Col. ARCHER ANDERSON,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

HEADQUARTERS COLQUITT'S BRIGADE,

Sugar Loaf, N. C., January 17, 1865.

Lieut. Col. ARCHER ANDERSON,

Assistant Adjutant-General:

COLONEL: In obedience to your note of this morning I have the honor to make the following statements in regard to my visit to Battery Buchanan with General Colquitt:

We left Sugar Loaf Landing about 8.30 o'clock with the intention of going to Fort Fisher. General Colquitt was very anxious to land immediately at the fort, but owing to some statements of the boatmen was forced to order them to land as near as possible to the fort. Some time before we reached the land all firing in the direction of Fisher had ceased, and the enemy's fleet and land forces seemed engaged in making a grand pyrotechnical display. We landed, as one of the boatmen informed us, about a quarter of a mile from Battery Buchanan in the direction of Fort Fisher. We walked up about fifty yards from the beach to a small hut, which proved to be a blacksmith shop. We called, and a man, who was either a mulatto or a badly smoked white man, made his appearance. I entered the shop and found three or four negroes lying about the forge asleep. The general inquired of the man the route to Fort Fisher. The man replied very unconcernedly that the Yankees were up there. The general told him he must have a guide to Fort Fisher, and inquired the way to Battery Buchanan. While this conversation was progressing a squad of about fifteen men made their appearance, in flight from Fort Fisher or that direction; I took them for stragglers. The general called out to them to know where they were going and where they were from. They replied that they were the last men from the fort; that the Yankees were in possession of it. They spied our boat and started toward it. We succeeded in stopping them, and the general inquired if there was an officer with them. One stepped forward and gave his name as Captain Munn. The general then asked him where General Whiting was. He replied that General Whiting and Colonel Lamb were both wounded and had been carried to Battery Buchanan.

The general ordered him to take charge of those men, and report to Colonel Lamb at Battery Buchanan. These men were without guns, without accouterments, some of them without hats, and all in a very bad state of demoralization. We then debated the question as to going to Battery Buchanan by land or water. Fortunately, the general concluded to keep the boat in sight. In a few minutes we were landed in forty yards of Battery Buchanan. There was a man on horseback on the beach who hailed us before we landed. As soon as I stepped on land I asked this man the news. He said the fort was "gone up," and that the Yankee would be on us in a few minutes; that General Whiting was wounded, and that he was anxious to get him off. The general ordered Lieutenant Estill, ordnance officer, and myself to remain with the boat while he went to see General Whiting. The beach was crowded with a disorganized, demoralized rabble, and it was with the utmost difficulty that we prevented them from taking our boat. I asked of an officer, the coolest man I saw, at what hour the enemy got into the fort. He replied, about two hours by sun. "What in the world have you been doing since?" This he answered by stating that he had been fighting in the fort ever since, until dark, when the garrison commenced leaving, and that he presumed all had left by that time. This consumed about five minutes. The Yankee skirmish line was now within fifty yards of us. They halted and commenced reconnoitering the battery. The Yankee line of battle now came in sight. I sent one of the boatmen for the general, but made up my mind to spend the winter North. The line of battle was now at their skirmishers. The general was now coming. I showed him the Yankees, and all of us jumped into the boat. We pushed off, and just as we made the first stroke of the oars the Yankee line swept by, in twenty yards of us, and entered Battery Buchanan. I saw no organized body of men while I was near the battery, except the enemy. All of our men were in a state of panic and demoralization; no organization, no guns, nothing but confusion and dismay. The only man I saw with a gun was a drunken Irish marine, who cocked it and presented it at me. Suppose the battery engaged so much attention that our boat was overlooked as we rowed off.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, &c.,

HUGH H. COLQUITT,

Lieutenant and Aide-de-Camp.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

HEADQUARTERS COLQUITT'S BRIGADE,

January 17, 1865.

Lieutenant-Colonel ANDERSON, Assistant Adjutant-General:

COLONEL: In compliance with your order I beg leave to make the following statement of what I saw and heard on the night of January 15, at Fort Fisher:

We were landed midway between Battery Buchanan and Fort Fisher about midnight. There was a building at this place, and from the chimney smoke and sparks were flying. Upon going up to it we found it filled with negroes. They informed us that Fort Fisher was captured. General Colquitt refused to credit it, and with some difficulty prevailed upon one of the hands to guide him to the fort. Immediately after starting we were met by a Captain Munn, with a squad of six or eight men unarmed. He told us that the fort was in full possession of the enemy, and that he had just made his escape. We still doubted if the fort was captured, but deemed it prudent to visit Battery Buchanan first, especially as Captain Munn informed us that General Whiting was there. Upon landing at Buchanan we found no one upon the lookout, save one horseman. There were no pickets. Men were wandering about in confusion, unarmed, and disorganized. These at once confirmed the capture of Fisher. The general proceeded forthwith to the battery, leaving myself and Lieutenant Colquitt, in conjunction with the crew, to care for the boat. This was a work of considerable difficulty, and occupied our attention to such a degree that we did not learn as much of the capture of Fisher as we could have desired. I saw but one person who seemed to have his wits about him. He was a captain; his name and regiment I did not learn. He stated that the enemy entered Fisher about two and a half hours before sunset; that from that time until dark fighting continued in the fort; that the enemy continued to pour in troops upon them, and that about dark resistance ceased. I did not learn from him whether any opposition was made to their entrance in the first place. In fact I heard no one mention that fighting occurred anterior to the time of entrance. My conversation with this officer was broken off by the approach of the enemy's skirmishers. They came to within fifty or seventy-five yards of us and halted. After consulting with Lieutenant Colquitt we dispatched one of the crew to notify the general. Before he returned their line of battle also moved up and halted. In the moonlight it was distinctly visible. When the general returned we pointed out to him their position. He at once decided to leave. Just as we were getting aboard they made a rush for the fort. Their right passed us not more than thirty yards distant. As silently as possible we shoved off and made our escape. After getting off we passed a boat of the enemy in the river. Whilst upon the point I saw but one of our men armed. He was a drunken marine, and offered to shoot Lieutenant Colquitt.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

HARRY ESTILL,
Ordnance Officer, Colquitt's Brigade.

[Inclosure No. 3.]

HEADQUARTERS HOKE'S DIVISION,
Sugar Loaf, N. C., January 17, 1865.

COLONEL: In reply to your communication of this morning, requiring a statement of what I saw and heard at Battery Buchanan on the night of the 15th instant, I have the honor to submit the following report:

In obedience to orders from Major-General Hoke I started with General Colquitt about 9 p. m. to bring back to the commanding general such reliable information as to the condition of things at Fort Fisher as General Colquitt might deem it proper to send. We reached the point about 11 p. m.; landed about a quarter of a mile from Battery Buchanan, and proposed walking to Fisher, a distance, as we were informed, of about two miles. We had proceeded about 150 or 200 yards when we were met by a Captain Munn, with fifteen or twenty men, who, in an excited manner, told us that the enemy had full possession of the fort; that it had been evacuated a half hour before by General Whiting, who, with the remains of the garrison, was at Battery Buchanan, and that the enemy were at that time advancing down the peninsula but a short distance in their rear. It not being deemed prudent to go farther, we returned to the boat and rowed up the beach to communicate, if possible, with General Whiting or Colonel Lamb, and learn at least something to verify the report of the fall of Fisher. Landing at the battery, General Colquitt proceeded in search of General Whiting. He found Colonel Lamb lying on a litter at the foot of the parapet, and reported to be seriously wounded in the thigh. He had a few moment's conversation with him, and then turned aside to look for General Whiting, when he was met by one of the crew of our boat, stating that the enemy was advancing in line of battle, and were at that time in 100 yards of the beach, and that if he would escape he must return to the boat immediately. He did so, and we hardly escaped, the attention of the enemy being directed to the large number of men at Buchanan, we escaping their notice. The remnants of the garrison of Fort Fisher were huddled around the battery, without organization. No officer seemed to be in command, nor could any one give any collected account of the bombardment or evacuation. I saw no arms in the hands of the men. They appeared to have given up all idea of making resistance, and there was no possible means of escape. No boat of any character was on the beach except the one in which we came. There was no alternative except capture. From what little I heard I presume that the enemy gained a lodgment by some means in the fort, "about two hours and a half by sun;" that they were fought inside the fort until perhaps 8 or 9 o'clock, when all who were not killed or already captured made their escape to Buchanan. I did not see General Whiting, but he was pointed out to me as one of a number of men sleeping on the ground. Self-preservation prevented our gaining any further information. After leaving the battery we touched at Battery Lamb, when General Colquitt communicated with the commanding general by telegraph. I regret that I can give no more definite account, but the hurry and confusion on our arrival prevented the obtaining of one.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. L. WASHINGTON,
First Lieutenant and Aide-de-Camp.

JANUARY 11, 1865.—Capture of U. S. Forces at Beverly, W. Va.

REPORTS.

No. 1.—Col. Nathan Wilkinson, Sixth West Virginia Infantry, commanding First Brigade, Second Infantry Division, Department of West Virginia.

No. 2.—General Robert E. Lee, C. S. Army.

No. 1.

Report of Col. Nathan Wilkinson, Sixth West Virginia Infantry, commanding First Brigade, Second Infantry Division, Department of West Virginia.

HDQRS. FIRST BRIG., SECOND INFY. DIV., DEPT. OF W. VA.,
Clarksburg, W. Va., January 20, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In obedience to the request of the general commanding the Department of West Virginia, I accompanied Capt. J. L. Botsford and Lieut. Benjamin H. Moore of his staff to assist in investigating and reporting upon the facts connected with the late disaster to the U. S. troops stationed at Beverly, W. Va., January 11, 1865, and under immediate command of Lieut. Col. Robert Youart, Eighth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry. The officers of the commanding general's staff will make their report direct to him, and I herewith submit, for the consideration and information of the general commanding the Second Infantry Division, Department of West Virginia, the following (accompanying this is a diagram of the post of Beverly and country near it*):

The pickets during the day were posted as follows: At Russell's, on the Philippi road, a corporal and three men; at the burnt bridge, on the Staunton pike, four mounted men; at the bridge on Buckhannon road, in town, a corporal and three men, and sentinels at the points numbered on the diagram 2, 3, and 4. At dark the pickets were withdrawn from Russell's and the burnt bridge, and in their stead single sentinels were posted at the point marked No. 1 and blacksmith shop.

*See p. 450.

These night sentinels were respectively about 400 yards from camp, and Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 were about 300 yards from each other, and all were relieved from camp every two hours. The enemy, about 700 mounted men, wearing U. S. greatcoats, under General Rosser, came in from Crab Bottom, by the Staunton and Beverly pike. At the foot of Cheat Mountain they left the pike and took a road leading on the east side of the Valley River to a point marked A on the diagram, and made a détour around the camp and town on an old dirt road, and formed their line of battle in a hollow, marked B on the diagram, and within 450 yards of the camp. The sentinel at the point marked No. 3 on the diagram saw the rebels approaching and challenged them, who comes there? The reply was, "Friends." He moved toward them and was captured. The first intimation our forces had of the presence of the enemy was the rebels forcing the doors of the quarters, demanding a surrender. This was first at the quarters of the Thirty-fourth Ohio Infantry. The surprise was complete; our forces did not have time to rally even one company together. Quite a number of officers of both regiments were examined, and all testified that they had repeatedly called the attention of the commanding officers to the insufficiency of the guard for picket duty. Lieutenant-Colonel Youart himself states that owing to the severity of the weather, the high water in the rivers, and the statements of the citizens "that it was impossible for the enemy to attack at that time of the year," he felt perfectly secure.

After the attack of Major Hall on Beverly, October 29, 1864, a camp guard of 100 men was placed on duty, but was relieved by Major Souders, Eighth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, on account of the cold weather, and his thinking there was no necessity for the guard at this season of the year. Lieutenant-Colonel Youart states that this guard was relieved without his orders.

Major Butters, Thirty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, testified that he notified Lieutenant-Colonel Furney, of the same regiment, that the guard was insufficient, and if they (the forces) were attacked they would be captured. At that time Lieutenant-Colonel Furney was in command at Beverly during the absence of Lieutenant-Colonel Youart at Cumberland, Md. Lieutenant-Colonel Youart returned from Cumberland and resumed command two days before the attack by General Rosser. The testimony was that all the officers of the Thirty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry were quartered in town—not one with the regiment—and it has been unofficially reported to me that on the evening previous to the attack there was a ball in the town, which was largely attended by officers, who remained there until a late hour of the night. From the evidence produced it appears that the whole command was latterly in a loose state of discipline.

In connection with this report, I would respectfully call attention to the fact that the Thirty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry were at Beverly without any official knowledge on my part of their having been sent to that post. My first intimation of their presence at Beverly was from Lieutenant-Colonel Youart, who telegraphed me that they had arrived. Lieutenant-Colonel Furney made no reports to these headquarters, although requested by me to do so. The Thirty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry claims to belong to the command of Brigadier-General Duval, and, I am unofficially informed, reported to him.

The losses of the command were as follows: Eighth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry—killed, 5; wounded, 17; prisoners, 6 officers and 332 men. Thirty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry—killed, 1; wounded, 6; prisoners, 2 officers and 240 men. Total killed, wounded, and missing, 609.

The losses were in horses over 100, including the officers' and quartermaster's horses; in quartermaster stores, very small; in commissary stores, about 10,000 rations complete. In arms and equipments, I estimate the loss of the Thirty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry at 250 arms and 300 equipments, and of the Eighth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry at 300 arms and equipments for about 300 men.

The number of men of the Eighth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry now at Philippi is 381, and of the Thirty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry is 115. Total number of arms of all kinds, 241, and 36 sabers, and nearly 20 rounds of ammunition to the man.

On arrival at Philippi I took immediate measures to have ammunition sent from Clarksburg, and instructed Lieutenant-Colonel Youart to promptly make requisition for arms for his regiment.

Owing to the late disaster, and the fact that many of the men now at Philippi are unarmed, the condition of the troops there is very loose and unsatisfactory.

After a careful examination I can not but come to the conclusion that the disaster was the result of a laxity of discipline, carelessness, and insufficiency of guard.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
N. WILKINSON,

Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Capt. THAYER MELVIN, Asst. Adjt. Gen., Cumberland, Md.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF WEST VIRGINIA,

January 28, 1865.

Respectfully forwarded to headquarters Middle Military Division.

Upon hearing of the surprise and capture of Beverly, I sent two trusty staff officers to examine into and report upon the affair; their report has been forwarded. I herewith forward the report of Colonel Wilkinson, and recommend that Lieut. Col. R. Youart, Eighth Ohio Cavalry, and Lieut. Col. L. Furney, Thirty-fourth Ohio Volunteers, be dismissed the service for disgraceful neglect of their commands, and for permitting themselves to be surprised and the greater portion of their commands captured, in order that worthy officers may fill their places, which they have proved themselves incompetent to hold.

GEORGE CROOK,

Major-General, Commanding.

[Inclosure.]

Report of casualties in the Eighth Ohio Cavalry and Thirty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at Beverly, W. Va., January 11, 1865.

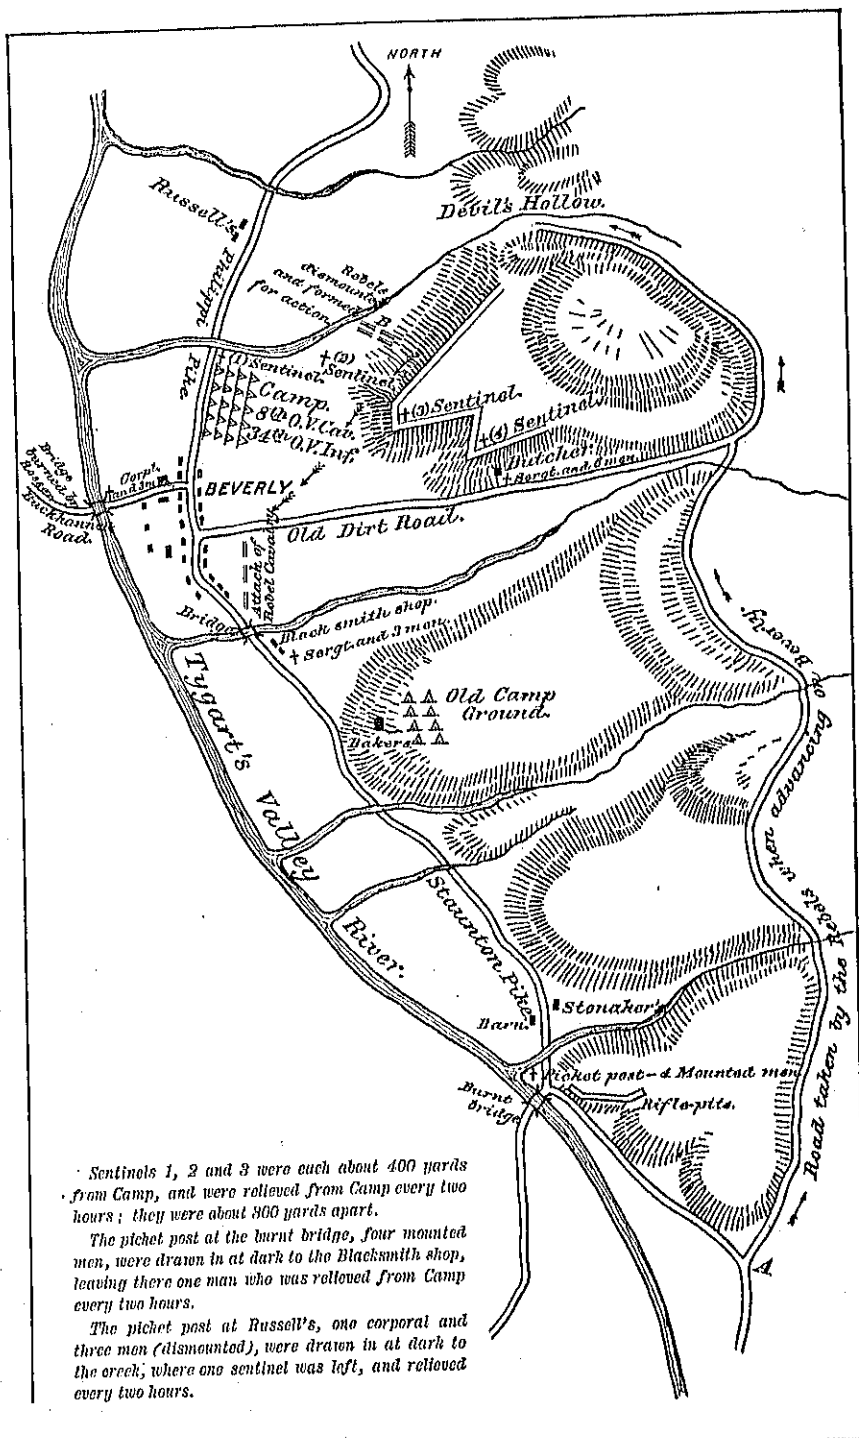

| Regiment. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Prisoners. | |
|-----------------------------------|-----------|------|-----------|------|------------|------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. |
| Eighth Ohio Cavalry | | 5 | 1 | 16 | 0 | 332 |
| Thirty-fourth Ohio Infantry | | 1 | | 0 | 2 | 240 |
| | | 6 | 1 | 22 | 8 | 572 |

R. YOUART,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS POST COMMANDANT, Philippi, W. Va.

29 R R—VOL XLVI, PT I

Sentinels 1, 2 and 3 were each about 400 yards from Camp, and were relieved from Camp every two hours; they were about 800 yards apart.

The picket post at the burnt bridge, four mounted men, were drawn in at dark to the Blacksmith shop, leaving there one man who was relieved from Camp every two hours.

The picket post at Russell's, one corporal and three men (dismounted), were drawn in at dark to the creek, where one sentinel was left, and relieved every two hours.

No. 2.

Report of General Robert E. Lee, C. S. Army.

HEADQUARTERS,
January 15, 1865.

General Early reports that Rosser, at the head of 300 men, surprised and captured the garrison at Beverly, Randolph County, on the 11th instant, killing and wounding a considerable number and taking 580 prisoners. His loss slight.

R. E. LEE.

Hon. J. A. SEDDON.

JANUARY 11-15, 1865.—Scout from New Creek through Greenland Gap to Franklin, W. Va.

Report of Maj. Elias S. Troxel, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry.

HDQRS. TWENTY-SECOND PENNSYLVANIA VOL. CAVALRY,
Camp New Creek, W. Va., January 18, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to submit a report of the recent scout which I commanded.

I left camp with 200 men on the 11th instant, and proceeded, via Greenland Gap, to Petersburg, marching rapidly for the purpose of surprising the enemy which I had reason to believe were in some force at that place. When I arrived there I found about 100 of McNeill's and Woodson's command on the opposite side of the river, and it impassable from recent rains. From Petersburg I moved up the North Fork, the enemy following me as far as practicable on opposite side of river to learn my destination.

Arriving at the mouth of Seneca on the evening of the 13th, and communicating with Captain Boggs, of Home Guards, I at once took measures to guard all the passes to prevent information being conveyed to the enemy of my whereabouts. Captain Boggs reported to me with forty men the same evening, and I determined at once to march to Franklin and attack the enemy, who were reported to have four companies with two pieces of artillery at that place. After a toilsome march across the mountains during the night, I arrived near the place about 5 o'clock in the morning and made the proper dispositions of the troops and charged the town, expecting to find the enemy quartered in the court-house, but to my disappointment found the place evacuated, the enemy having received notice of my coming a few hours previous, and fled to the mountains. After a short stay I retraced my steps toward Seneca, the rebels firing on me at every convenient point and wounding one horse. I reached Seneca the same evening and returned to camp, via Petersburg, from which place I drove McNeill's command, they scattering to the mountains and, eluding pursuit, firing on me from the mountain sides. From Petersburg I returned, via Burlington, without losing any portion of my command.

It is only justice to the officers and men of my command to say that they behaved in the most soldierly manner on the march and in the apparent face of the enemy, and did all they could to make the expedition a success.

I would particularly mention valuable services by Captain Boggs, of Home Guards, and also that I did not deem it advisable to arrest any citizens for the reason that I could not get definite information particularly criminating any one person. Hoping the report will be deemed satisfactory,

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

E. S. TROXEL,

Major Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry, Commanding Scout.

First Lieut. W. L. McMASTERS,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

JANUARY 18, 1865.—Affair near Lovettsville, Va.

Report of Brig. Gen. Thomas C. Devin, U. S. Army, commanding Second Brigade, First Cavalry Division, Middle Military Division.

LOVETTSVILLE, January 30, 1865.

Your dispatch received at midnight of Tuesday, January 17. Colonel White, of Rosser's cavalry, with a force said by citizens to number 220 men, crossed the Short Hill by a mountain path within five miles of Harper's Ferry, and surprised the vedettes of Sixth New York on that road without a shot; charged the reserve, who were all on hand and resisted stoutly, but were forced back on the camp. The men of the Sixth turned out of their huts, formed in their streets, and in three minutes flanked and drove White out of the camp, killing 3 of his men, who were found, and wounding, more or less severely, 11, who were carried off. As soon as the Sixth could obtain permission they saddled and followed White to Purcellville, but could not overtake him.

Two men of the Sixth were killed and five wounded. Lieutenant Carroll was mortally wounded by an officer who had surrendered to him; the fellow got away.

The Sixth lost 8 horses; 11 of White's horses were found wounded on the road by the pursuing party. It was a stormy night, and the tracks showed that the vedettes were surprised by dismounted men. The affair occurred just before my return to camp.

Respectfully,

THOS. C. DEVIN,
Brigadier-General.

Captain HAYDEN,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

JANUARY 19, 1865.—Reconnaissance to Myrtle Sound and Skirmish at Half-Moon Battery, N. C.

REPORTS.*

No. 1.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Joseph C. Abbott, Seventh New Hampshire Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps.

No. 2.—Capt. John Thompson, Seventh Connecticut Infantry.

No. 1.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Joseph C. Abbott, Seventh New Hampshire Infantry, commanding Second Brigade, First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIG., FIRST DIV., 24TH ARMY CORPS,
Before Wilmington, N. C., January 20, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of that portion of the reconnaissance of yesterday, January 19, of which I had charge:

By order of Brigadier-General Paine, at about 11 a. m., with about 250 men of the Seventh New Hampshire Volunteers, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Rollins, and 50 of the Seventh Connecticut Volunteers, under command of Capt. John Thompson, I moved to the head of Myrtle Sound, where I halted, according to orders from General Paine, until the firing of the reconnoitering force on my left was heard. While thus waiting the gun-boat Governor Buckingham, Captain McDearmid, opened fire upon the outpost of the enemy in the rear of the Half-Moon Battery. The fire was very accurate and effective. When the firing was heard on my left I advanced fifty men of the Seventh Connecticut and twenty of the Seventh New Hampshire as skirmishers up in front of the short line of works near the houses in rear of the Half-Moon Battery, and developed a fire of apparently about 100 men. The skirmishers having halted, I sent seventy men of the Seventh New Hampshire, under command of Lieut. Paul Whipple, in on the right flank of the work.

They advanced promptly, enveloped the work, and took 2 officers and 51 men prisoners. I then advanced a skirmish line, under Lieutenant Whipple, beyond the works across an open field to the edge of a swamp in which was a thick and tangled growth of wood and bushes. This swamp is not far from 100 yards in width, and runs parallel with Myrtle Sound. The main line of the enemy is at this point close on the inside of it, but near the head of the sound there is an angle, and thence it runs westerly toward the Cape Fear River. My skirmishers approached within about 100 yards of this main line, but I was unable to develop its fire. The points of the line, however, which could be seen through the wood, and such parts of it as I saw from the top of an old house, appeared to be well manned. No artillery appeared. I remained in the last position mentioned until dark, when I withdrew the skirmishers and returned to camp. My loss in this reconnaissance was 2 officers and 10 men wounded, and 3 men missing. Among the slightly wounded was Captain Trickey, of the Third New Hampshire, who accompanied the reconnaissance, he having before become familiar with the ground.

Lieut. Albert Foster, of the Sixteenth New York Heavy Artillery, one of my staff, was severely wounded in three places while directing, with good judgment and coolness, the flanking party of the Seventh New Hampshire. Lieutenant Whipple, who commanded the flanking party,

* See also Paine's report, p. 424.

and afterward the skirmish line, though a young officer, performed his duties in such a manner as to show that his judgment can be trusted in affairs of that kind.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOSEPH C. ABBOTT,

Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Capt. SOLON A. CARTER, Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 2.

Report of Capt. John Thompson, Seventh Connecticut Infantry.

HDQRS. SEVENTH REGIMENT CONNECTICUT VOLUNTEERS,
Near Fort Fisher, N. C., January 20, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by my command in a reconnaissance made on the 19th of January, 1865:

In obedience to orders received from Brevet Brigadier-General Abbott commanding the brigade, at 11 o'clock a detachment of the regiment (numbering four commissioned officers and thirty-seven enlisted men) moved from its position to the head of Myrtle Sound. From there the regiment advanced as skirmishers to the rear of the Half-Moon Battery, and were fired upon by a party of the enemy, numbering about seventy-five men, strongly intrenched. Here the command was obliged to halt, owing to the severity of the fire from the rebels, until another portion of the brigade was sent in upon the right flank of the work. Seeing it surrounded the command charged upon the enemy, capturing 2 officers and 54 men. After halting here for some time I sent forward, by General Abbott's direction, First Lieut. Willard Austin and twelve men, with orders to draw the fire of the enemy, who were posted behind a strong line of works about one-quarter of a mile in our immediate front. Lieutenant Austin advanced his skirmishers to the edge of a swamp, and within about 100 yards of the rebel works, but although he ascertained their position he was unable to fully develop their fire. While on the skirmish line Lieutenant Austin was slightly wounded in the right shoulder by a shell from one of our gun-boats. Remaining in this position until dark we received orders from General Abbott to withdraw our skirmishers and return to camp, which we reached at 7 p. m.

I take pleasure in commending to your favorable notice Adjt. Albert M. Holden, who performed his duties on this trying occasion with marked ability and courage. Adjutant Holden is a young officer of much promise, and deserves honorable mention for gallant and meritorious conduct in this as well as previous engagements.

Justice to the deserving leads me to also commend the action of First Lieut. Willard Austin, of my command, who performed, with greatest acceptance, a most difficult and dangerous duty, being instructed by General Abbott to advance with a detachment of men considerably beyond our main line, in order to draw the enemy's fire.

I inclose a list of casualties with this report.*

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN THOMPSON,

Captain, Seventh Connecticut Volunteers, Commanding Regiment.
Brig. Gen. H. J. MORSE, Adjutant-General State of Connecticut.

* Nominal list (omitted) shows 1 officer and 3 men wounded and 2 men missing.

FEBRUARY 3, 1865.—Affair near Harper's Ferry, W. Va.

Report of Col. Marcus A. Reno, Twelfth Pennsylvania Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS TWELFTH PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY,
Charlestown, W. Va., February 4, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the party which ran the train off the track on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad crossed at or near Keyes' Ford. I had timely information of their crossing and their whereabouts, and would have succeeded in capturing some of them had my orders been obeyed. About 10 p. m. I sent out two parties under command of Lieutenants Guild and Chase. These parties were about fifty strong. Lieutenant Chase was ordered, with his command, to cover the roads leading to the different fords through Bloomery. Lieutenant Guild was ordered to overtake and head off the party, attack them, and drive them back. After he left camp, instead of following them up, he thought he had better move toward the river, the diametrically opposite direction from his orders. Lieutenant Chase (with good reason) did not expect our own men in that direction, and fired into Lieutenant G.'s command. I regret to say that one man, Private Hoggeland, Company D, was wounded. I have placed Lieutenant Guild in arrest and now report him for immediate dismissal, as he is solely responsible for the miscarriage of my plans. I do not design that he be court-martialed, as that would occupy more time than he is worth. He is entirely unfit for a commission, inasmuch as he takes no pains to improve himself, nor does he study to render himself worthy of his position. He, although never what you could charge as drunkenness, is always full, and when not stupefied with whisky he is with opium. His performance last night is sufficient evidence against him to hang him. The scouting party which brought the information lost one of their number. He was taken prisoner by the rebels, but in returning over the same ground his dead body was found in the road, evidently murdered after capture. Upon receiving Lieutenant Guild's report I immediately dispatched parties to Duffield's and Smithfield, as it was evident to me they had gone in that direction. They report that, after throwing off the train, the enemy separated into small parties and made toward the Shenandoah. They were unable to come up with them. As far as I can learn they numbered about thirty men.

Very respectfully,

M. A. RENO,

Colonel, Commanding Twelfth Pennsylvania Cavalry.

Capt. J. P. ROCKWELL,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Harper's Ferry, Va.

FEBRUARY 4-6, 1865.—Expedition from Winchester, Va., to Moorefield, W. Va.

Report of Lieut. Col. Edward W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry.

CAMP OF FIRST CONNECTICUT CAVALRY,
Near Winchester, Va., February 8, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report that, pursuant to instructions from general commanding corps, I collected my command for special duty, armed with sabers and pistols, and numbering 300, all from the Third Division Cavalry, at headquarters First Brigade, at 6 a. m. the 4th instant, and moved out on the Moorefield pike for our destination. After halting three-quarters of an hour for feed and coffee at Wardensville organized the detachments into a regiment, and having a short drill resumed the march at a rapid gait, striking the enemy's scouts, which Major Young quickly drove off the pike toward Harper's; column moving fast as possible, intending to surprise the enemy's camp by moonlight, but at 12.30 at night, when we had reached a covered point within four miles of Moorefield, the sky clouded up, which induced me to halt for rest and feed until 4 a. m. the 5th instant. In the meantime Major Young, who had been a short distance in my advance, was to send his scouts into town and ascertain the exact location of Gilmer's camp, which I had decided to strike at daylight. On moving out at 4 a. m., Captain Hamilton, Eighth New York Cavalry, reported to me the loss of two men by desertion during the halt; the men being recent recruits from rebel States, I deemed it a more unfortunate event than the next fact which was reported by Major Young, i. e. his scouts had been unable to learn the exact whereabouts of Gilmer or his camp. Reaching the outskirts of Moorefield before light during a heavy snow-squall, I halted to await news from Major Young, who entered town with all of his party in search of information. I here became anxious about the loss of time and moved on, sending word to the major that he should go on down the South Fork till I found the enemy. I left a detachment from the Second Ohio Cavalry to search the town for soldiers, and moved at once across the stream and turned to the left down the South Fork, Major Young taking the advance, when, as it had become light enough, I discovered several of the enemy mounted and rapidly moving across the fields and hills on our right flank, taking the same direction as my column.

On communicating the fact to the scouts a lively race set in, I following with my column in hopes of reaching their camp before the alarm, which it would appear had not before been given. The houses on the banks of the fork were being hastily searched by the scouts, when the large number of horses in the stable next the road to Mr. Randolph's house, three miles from Moorefield, excited much suspicion; and as Major Young asked the colored woman sternly "what soldiers were in the houses?" she at once replied, "Major Gilmer is upstairs." Major Young immediately surrounded the house and seized the major and his cousin Gilmer, late from Baltimore, both in bed. On my learning that our prize had been found I halted column, and prepared to resist the attack of the enemy collecting on the bluff over the house and river and on my right flank and rear. Finding the position untenable, and deeming it impossible to get more of Gilmer's band, from their skillfully selected position, we made haste in getting out, before which Major Gilmer had been brought to me and placed at the head of the column; and as his men were firing into us, he shouted encouragement to them, feeling, as he afterward said, confident of release. On the return march I placed Lieutenant Brown, First Connecticut Cavalry, with thirty-eight men who had been doing good service on the Petersburg road, in the rear, he having fifteen Spencers for that use, with which he successfully checked each dash of the enemy. I took the Romney pike by advice of Major Young, who took the advance and turned over to me, at different points on the route, twelve men captured about houses. The enemy last troubled my column as we were feeding at a point thirty-five miles from Moorefield and eight from Romney. Though night had come on I did not think it wise to halt with prisoners, but resumed the march in passing Hanging Rock Gap, and reached Big Capon bridge after midnight, when we halted for rest until daylight the 6th instant, on the forenoon of which I reached Winchester with prisoners, having ridden near 140 miles in a little over forty-eight hours, over a mountainous country, across swollen streams filled with floating ice, and within the enemy's lines, fully accomplishing the object of the expedition without the loss of a man.

I cannot commend too highly the zeal and hearty co-operation evinced by Major Young, commanding General Sheridan's scouts, who accompanied me. To his personal gallantry is due the successful "bearding of the lion in his den."

To the officers commanding the detachments from the Second Ohio, Eighth New York, First New Hampshire, Twenty-second New York, and First Connecticut Cavalry Regiments, I desire to express my thanks for prompt obedience to orders, and strict attention to the care of their commands, on which I confidently relied in anticipation of a better test than was offered. To Surg. G. A. Hurlbut, First Connecticut Cavalry, who accompanied me with ambulance, attendants, &c., I owe much for valuable assistance rendered outside of his duties. He safely brought in two sick men, and one accidentally wounded, who were unable to ride.

Respectfully submitted.

E. W. WHITAKER,

Lieutenant-Colonel First Connecticut Cavalry, Comdg. Expedition.

Maj. WILLIAM RUSSELL, Jr.,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

FEBRUARY 6-7, 1865.—Scout from Fairfax Court-House to Brentsville, Va.

Report of Lieut. George R. Maguire, Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST SEPARATE BRIGADE,
Fairfax Court-House, Va., February 8, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to report the result of the scout made in the vicinity of Brentsville, Va., on the night of the 6th instant.

Pursuant to orders received from you, 125 men and 2 officers of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry, under the guidance of a Mr. Jacob Kline, of the Jersey Settlement near Brentsville, Va., left camp at Fairfax Court-House at 6 p. m. and proceeded, via Centerville and Manassas, to Brentsville. From Brentsville the column moved in the direction of Cole's Store, distant some fifteen miles from Brentsville. After marching two miles crossed Broad Run and Kettle Run and moved in the direction of the Jersey Settlement; arrived there at 3 a. m.; went into camp and fed and cooked breakfast. At 5 a. m. remounted and moved back toward camp as we supposed, but, owing to the ignorance of the guide (Mr. Kline), we moved off in the direction of Dumfries and arrived within five miles of that place before we were made aware of our error. We retraced our steps and moved toward Broad Run and crossed at Bland's Ford; from thence toward Bull Run, which we crossed at Union Mills. Bull Run River was covered with ice and we experienced great difficulty in crossing. We moved in the direction of Fairfax Station and arrived in camp at the Court-House at 3 p. m.

On the road a number of houses were searched, but nothing resulted from it. No enemy was found, nor were there any traces of any having been there during the last six months. Three colts, the property of Mr. Kline, were brought in, and in my opinion to obtain possession of the said colts was the only object Mr. Kline had in starting the expedition. To Captain Jones and Lieutenant Fowler, both of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry, great praise is due for the manner in which they arranged and carried out the programme submitted by me upon reports based upon Kline's statement.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

GEO. R. MAGUIRE,
Lieutenant and Provost-Marshal.

Col. WILLIAM GAMBLE,
Commanding First Separate Brigade.

FEBRUARY 11, 1865.—Affair at Williamsburg, Va.

Report of Lieut. Ira L. Dudley, Sixteenth New York Heavy Artillery.

HQRS. BATTERY I, SIXTEENTH NEW YORK VOL. ARTY.,
February 11, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to state that our picket-post at Williamsburg was surprised this morning about 3 o'clock by a party of rebel cavalry, numbering from twenty to twenty-five men, who advanced by the Richmond road. The vedette on the Richmond road challenged them, and, receiving no reply, attempted to discharge his carbine, but the cap snapped. He then retreated on the reserve, but was wounded in two places. The enemy then advanced as far as the reserve, evidently with the design of capturing the horses there stationed. I regret to state that they succeeded so far in their object, capturing 4 and killing 1.

The following casualties occurred in the force stationed at the reserve: Private Hall, Company H, Twentieth New York Cavalry; Privates Belden and Dix, Company G, Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry, and Private Libee, Company D, Sixteenth New York Volunteer Artillery, wounded; Private Cowan, Company D, Sixteenth New York Volunteer Artillery, missing; Private Gannon, Company D, Sixteenth New York Volunteer Artillery, killed; 3 horses, Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry, captured; 1 horse, First New York Mounted Rifles, killed, and 1 captured.

I have to state that, as soon as the alarm was brought into camp, Captain Bouvé, Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry, and Lieut. David Earle, First New York Mounted Rifles, lost not a moment in turning out their respective commands.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, your obedient servant,

IRA L. DUDLEY,
First Lieutenant Company I, Officer of the Day.

Maj. JULIUS O. HICKS,
Commanding Post.

[Indorsement.]

The rebel cavalry were dressed in Union uniforms, and deceived our pickets at first by pretending to be our men; they were soon found out, and we opened fire upon them, and there were a number of them wounded, which they carried off with them. I have strengthened the picket-lines, and sent a strong force to re-enforce the reserves. I will render a good account of them if they come again. All is quiet at present.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JULIUS C. HICKS,

Major Sixteenth New York Volunteer Artillery, Comdg. Post.

FEBRUARY 11-15, 1865.—Expedition from Bermuda Hundred to Fearnsville and Smithfield, Va.

Report of Lieut. Col. Franklin A. Stratton, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIGADE, KAUTZ'S CAVALRY DIVISION,
In the Field, Va., February 16, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of the Second Brigade, Cavalry Division, while under your command during the late expedition:

In obedience to your instructions, received through Lieutenant Benson, aide-de-camp, at Bermuda Hundred, I embarked my command at that place on the 11th instant, and proceeded to Fort Powhatan, where I disembarked and went into bivouac for the night.

On the morning of the 12th I left Fort Powhatan for Burwell's Bay, where my instructions directed me to communicate with the gun-boats. My force consisted of 460 officers and men. I arrived at Burwell's Bay at sundown, and failing to find the gun-boats bivouacked for the night. I waited there until 10 o'clock the next morning, and was then about to proceed to the lower point of the bay to search for the expected boats, when I received your orders, through Lieutenant Benson, dated the 12th, directing me to proceed to Fearnsville and thence to Smithfield. I immediately started on the route indicated. At Fearnsville I found no indications of the enemy. There were no pickets on the Blackwater River in that vicinity. I marched thence to Smithfield, where I arrived about an hour after dark. The inhabitants reported to me that you had been there but had left some hours previous. The late hour at which I received your order at Burwell's Bay rendered it impracticable to reach Smithfield sooner than the time mentioned.

On the 14th I marched to near Cabin Point; on the 15th to Fort Powhatan, and thence, in obedience to further instructions received from you, via Point of Rocks, to the camp of the Cavalry Division, where I arrived at midnight, having been five days out.

During the entire expedition nothing was seen of the enemy, excepting a few men who were observed at a distance by the rear guard on two or three occasions. I am satisfied that no body of the enemy had crossed the Blackwater up to the 14th instant. Careful observations of the roads and inquiry among the negroes failed to discover the least evidence of any rebel force, except what is called the signal corps. This consists of about thirty men scattered along the James from Burwell's Bay to Smithfield, for the purpose of watching the river. They were reported to have left early on the morning of the 14th for the right bank of the Blackwater. I was unable to capture any of them. One wagon employed by a rebel commissary in collecting supplies for the rebel army was captured, on the 13th, near Fearnsville. I brought in no prisoners.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
FRANKLIN A. STRATTON,

Lieut. Col. Eleventh Pennsylvania Cav., Comdg. Cav. Expedition.

Brig. Gen. CHARLES K. GRAHAM,
Commanding Naval Brigade.

FEBRUARY 13-17, 1865.—Expedition from Camp Russell (near Winchester) to Edenburg and Little Fort Valley, Va., and skirmishes.

Report of Lieut. Col. George R. Maxwell, First Michigan Cavalry.

HDQRS. FIRST MICHIGAN VETERAN VOLUNTEER CAVALRY,
Camp Russell, Va., February 19, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report that, in compliance with instructions received from cavalry headquarters, I started on the evening of the 13th instant, with 300 men of the First Brigade, First Division; marched to Strasburg, rested an hour and fed my horses; started at about 11.30 p. m., and pushed on to Edenburg, meeting with no opposition until arriving at that place, where the enemy's pickets were encountered; strenuous efforts were made for their capture; none were captured, owing to the horses of my command being too weary to compete with the fresh horses of the enemy. Sent 100 men to destroy an iron furnace in Little Fort Valley. Held Edenburg till 8 a. m. the 16th, with slight skirmishing. At 11 a. m. started to return. As the column got well under way the rear guard was charged by about fifty men of the Twelfth Virginia Cavalry, of McCausland's command, the enemy being repulsed with loss; a constant skirmish was kept up upon my rear guard until we [sic] to Woodstock, when the enemy charged between the rear guard and the column. The rear guard charged through, supported by a part of the column charging back to relieve them. The enemy suffered severely in this encounter, as they could not compete with our superior carbine. I halted my column, sent a part across Tom's Brook, and with 100 men of the First Michigan charged them and drove them back within one mile and a half of Edenburg, then returned to Cedar Creek unmolested save by a few partisans near Strasburg. At Cedar Creek communicated with the party sent to destroy the furnace, and learned they had successfully accomplished their task. The furnace was in almost working order, ore was being taken out, and machinery repaired. This party captured ten men—five soldiers and five detailed men. It appears that the picket-line of the enemy at Edenburg has no effective support nearer than Staunton. Prisoners report that General Rosser is at Luray, organizing cavalry.

In passing over the ground where the enemy attempted to capture my rear guard, it was ascertained they had three men killed and a number wounded. I had one man mortally wounded.

My command arrived in camp at 3 a. m. 17th instant, having carried out successfully the task assigned me.

The results of the expedition may be summed up as follows: The iron furnace in Little Fort Valley entirely destroyed; three of the enemy killed and a number wounded; ten men captured; twenty horses captured; with a loss on my part of one man mortally wounded. The horses captured were taken to cavalry headquarters by the scouts.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. R. MAXWELL,

Lieutenant-Colonel First Michigan Cavalry.

Maj. WILLIAM RUSSELL, Jr.,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Cavalry, Middle Military Division.

FEBRUARY 15-16, 1865.—Scout from Fairfax Court-House to Aldie and Middleburg, Va.

REPORTS.

No. 1.—Col. William Gamble, Eighth Illinois Cavalry, commanding First Separate Brigade, Department of Washington.

No. 2.—Capt. George W. Corbit, Eighth Illinois Cavalry.

No. 1.

Report of Col. William Gamble, Eighth Illinois Cavalry, commanding First Separate Brigade, Department of Washington.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST SEPARATE BRIGADE,
Fairfax Court-House, Va., February 16, 1865—2 p. m.

COLONEL: The squadron of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry sent out on a scout to the vicinity of Aldie last night has just returned. Eleven rebel cavalry, with horses and equipments, were captured and brought in, without the loss of a man or horse on our part. A written report of the scout, by Captain Corbit, the officer in charge, will be forwarded to-morrow.

Respectfully,

W. GAMBLE,

Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Lieut. Col. J. H. TAYLOR,

Chief of Staff, Department of Washington.

No. 2.

Report of Capt. George W. Corbit, Eighth Illinois Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST SEPARATE BRIGADE,
Fairfax Court-House, Va., February 21, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to report that my command captured 8 prisoners, 3 of whom were officers—1 colonel, 1 captain and 1 lieutenant; 10 horses, 7 saddles, 7 revolvers.

I have one man missing. About sixty of the enemy followed me as far as Aldie, my rear guard skirmishing with them from Middleburg to that place.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. W. CORBIT,

Captain Company B, Eighth Illinois Cavalry, Comdg. Scout.

[Col. WILLIAM GAMBLE.]

FEBRUARY 18-19, 1865.—Expedition from Camp Averell (near Winchester) into Loudoun County, Va., and skirmish (18th) at Ashby's Gap.

REPORTS.

No. 1.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. William B. Tibbits, Twenty-first New York Cavalry, commanding Second Cavalry Division, Middle Military Division.

No. 2.—Maj. Thomas Gibson, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, commanding expedition.

No. 3.—Capt. Henry E. Snow, Twenty-first New York Cavalry.

No. 1.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. William B. Tibbits, Twenty-first New York Cavalry, commanding Second Cavalry Division, Middle Military Division.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND CAVALRY DIVISION,
February 20, 1865.

I have the honor to forward report of Maj. Thomas Gibson, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, commanding officer of the expedition that left these headquarters on the evening of the 18th instant.

For your information I would state that my orders to him were to take command of the party (which was to consist of 200 men), to proceed with it as far as Upperville if possible, searching houses and other places on the route for rebels of Mosby's command, to be designated (the houses) by the two deserters from Mosby who would go with him; to commence his retrograde movement by 2 a. m. or 3 a. m. of the 19th instant at the latest; that he was to obey no orders that might be given him by other officers of the party; that Lieut. Stephen H. Draper, Twenty-first New York Cavalry, was ordered by me to command the scouts, and he would see that he received such assistance as he required to properly perform his duty; also that Lieutenant Draper would show him the best ford to cross and roads to take. The number of officers with the party from this division was seven, viz, a major, captain, and two lieutenants from the Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and a captain and two lieutenants from the Twenty-first New York Cavalry. The command before starting was inspected, by my orders, by Capt. James S. Graham, acting assistant inspector-general, First Brigade. He informs me that he discarded about forty men. As to the number of men armed with revolvers he can't inform me. I intended that the men should carry the saber, but Major Bailey and Captain Martindale (who brought the order from your headquarters that the expedition should be made) and Lieutenant Draper informed me that it was very essential that they should not be so armed, as they wanted to move as noiselessly as possible.

A few men have returned since Major Gibson's report was made out, and I think that at least half of those now missing will get in. One party of sixteen, under a sergeant, was moving toward Harper's Ferry, so a private soldier informs me, who states that he left them about daylight this morning. I would respectfully state that in my opinion the affair should be investigated. I also inclose Captain Snow's report.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM B. TIBBITS,
Brevet Brigadier-General.

Maj. WILLIAM RUSSELL, JR.,
Asst. Adjt. Gen., Cavalry Corps, Middle Military Division.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS MIDDLE MILITARY DIVISION,
February 25, 1865.

Respectfully forwarded to Maj. Gen. H. W. Halleck, Chief of Staff, for his information.

There is no doubt that this scout was badly managed by all concerned and is being investigated, but I am of opinion that the larger majority of men reported captured will reach our lines, so many having done so already.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Major-General, U. S. Army, Commanding.

No. 2.

Report of Maj. Thomas Gibson, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, commanding expedition.

HEADQUARTERS FOURTEENTH PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY,
February 20, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report that, agreeable to directions from the brigadier-general commanding, I left the camp at 6 p. m. for the purpose of crossing the Blue Ridge and making arrests and seizures of certain enemies and public property of the enemy, agreeable to information received from two deserters from Mosby's command. I had with me 125 men and three officers of the Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and 100 men of the Twenty-first New York Cavalry, under command of Captain Snow, of the same regiment. There were 150 men detailed from the Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry; six of the number were not furnished in time, twenty were directed to return to camp by the assistant inspector-general of the brigade because of the nonefficiency of their horses. This reduced the number furnished by that regiment to 124 men, and making the total of troops engaged 224 enlisted men.

About 11 p. m. I crossed the Shenandoah River at Shepherd's Ford. The expedition was accompanied by Captain Martindale and Lieutenant Baker, both of the staff of the major-general commanding Cavalry Corps. Captain Martindale was accompanied by six scouts. Lieutenant Draper, of the Twenty-first New York Cavalry, was detailed to accompany the expedition in charge of all the scouts; four enlisted men of the Twenty-first New York Cavalry were detailed as scouts and ordered to report to Lieutenant Draper.

Before starting from camp, having crossed the Shenandoah River, I ordered that when the command had reached Paris that all the scouts accompanying the command, except two, should report to Lieutenant Draper; that Captain Snow, with Twenty-first New York and one of the deserters from Mosby, should move in the direction of Upperville. Agreeable to the instructions of the brigadier-general commanding, I directed that Captain Snow should give due consideration to all information and suggestions tendered by Lieutenant Draper, with regard to roads, &c.; that Lieutenant Draper should be governed to such an extent as he should deem proper by the information received from the deserter who accompanied him; that Lieutenant Draper and Captain Snow, with that portion of the command, should be at Upperville one hour before daybreak of the 19th.

I stated that the Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry would meet them there, and if either regiment should fail to be there at the appointed hour, the one on the ground should await the arrival of the other until half an hour after daybreak. If at half an hour after daybreak either portion of the command present should move across the Shenandoah and camp. Before reaching Paris Captain Martindale expressed himself of the opinion that Piedmont would be the better point to meet at. I accepted Captain Martindale's opinion because I had always understood that he was well informed regarding the geography of the country, while I am not. I sent for Lieutenant Draper, who was near me, in order to communicate my change of the place of rendezvous. I sent for him and directed him to communicate my change of orders to Captain Snow, because the command was obliged to march by file, and Captain Snow, who was the rear, would find it very difficult to pass the column. We were near Paris, and time was precious. I told Lieutenant Draper that he would be held responsible for the communication of my orders. When we reached Paris Captain Snow's column took the proper route; I, with the Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, two scouts, and Captain Martindale and Lieutenant Baker, moved to the right of Paris. I proceeded to search such houses as were pointed out by the deserter from Mosby, who accompanied me, as the homes of Mosby's men and officers and the place used for storage of the enemy's supplies. At the first house I ordered to be searched Lieutenant Jones, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, who I had ordered, with twenty-five men, to search all houses which I thought should be searched, was left with two men. Before he had finished searching I moved the column, presuming Lieutenant Jones would follow the course the regiment had taken. Lieutenant Jones mistook the route taken by the regiment and failed to overtake it. I moved by way of Markham's Station to a point on the road from Upperville to Piedmont, and two miles from the latter point. I arrived at this point at 6.30 a. m. I sent a patrol, consisting of a sergeant and ten men, from the point to Piedmont. I sent a verbal message by the sergeant to Captain Snow to move immediately to my position, it being on the direct road to Winchester, by way of Ashby's Gap. I directed the sergeant to move there and back rapidly. The sergeant having arrived at Piedmont, found that the Twenty-first New York Cavalry was not there, and had not been there. Thinking Captain Snow might have pursued my first instructions to meet me with his command at Upperville, I expected to find that he had remained there until half an hour after daylight, and, consequently, he would not be far ahead of me.

On arriving at Upperville I was astonished to find that Captain Snow left that place at 5 o'clock that morning instead of the later hour I had directed. Small parties of the enemy continually harassed our rear and threatened our front and flanks. On arriving at Paris they made strong demonstrations, and as we passed through that place the command was harassed by musketry from behind a stone wall. The stone wall was on elevated ground protected by natural obstacles from an attack from cavalry and protected perfectly from our fire. I succeeded in marching the command through the town, without sustaining any loss. Up to this time I had captured eighteen of the enemy, including Mosby's quartermaster and one lieutenant of the line, together with about fifty horses.

On arriving at a point on the road from Paris to Berry's Ferry where the road to Shepherd's Ford turns off, it became necessary to march the command by file owing to a narrow passage through the rocks of the path known as the road to Shepherd's Ferry. I halted the command to put everything in the best order lest we should be attacked while in the path.

The following was the disposition of my command at the time: Lieutenant Jones was missing from the night before; Lieutenant Nesmith, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, had been seriously wounded the preceding night; Capt. D. K. Duff, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and myself were the only officers present for duty. I had placed Captain Duff in charge of the rear guard, which consisted of forty men. The advance and main portion of the command consisted of fifty men. The prisoners and led horses, under guard of twenty-five men, were in advance of Captain Duff's portion of the command and in rear of the main body. I made the rear guard so strong in proportion to the size of my command owing to the enemy's repeated and vigorous attacks on it. I was at the head of the column. I turned around in order to observe the condition of the column, and looking to the rear, which had not entered the new direction, I observed several men hold up their hands and make gestures which I supposed were intended to inform me that the rear was attacked. I immediately ordered the command "right into line," ordered the prisoners and led horses to be moved forward quickly into the path and to follow the extreme advance, which I did not recall.

No sooner had I issued these commands than I saw Captain Duff and his party at the rear of the small party who marched in rear of the led horses. Captain Duff's command was coming at a run. I saw rebels among and in rear of his party charging. I ordered the command forward, fired a volley, and ordered a charge, which the men did not complete. Captain Duff in the meantime was trying to rally his men in rear of my line. Before his command had reloaded their pieces I had fired another volley and ordered a second charge. All the prisoners and led horses had not yet entered the path. The charge was met by one from the enemy and the command was broken. The men had no weapons but their carbines, and these were extremely difficult to load and inefficient in the mélée that ensued. I made every effort, as did Captain Duff and Captain Martindale and Lieutenant Baker, of the corps staff, to reform the men, but our efforts were fruitless. The rebels had very few sabers but were well supplied with revolvers, and rode up to our men and shot them down without meeting more resistance than men could make with carbines. There was a small ridge overlooking both parties through which the path led. I rode up the side of this and formed the advance guard, which had returned to aid me. The enemy were amidst the men, and both parties were so mixed up that it was impossible to get the men in line. As fast as men could force their horses into the path, where many of the men were crowded together, they broke for the river. I waited until I was surrounded, and only half a dozen men left around; the balance had retreated toward the river, or were killed, wounded, or captured. Captain Martindale, as he left, said to me "It is useless to attempt to rally the men here; we'll try it farther on." I tried to ride to the front. The prisoners had placed the horses they were on and leading across in the path so as to prevent the escape of the men. Men were crowded into the path by twos and threes where there was really only room for one to ride. Men were being thrown and being crushed as they lay on the ground by others; they were falling from their horses from the enemy's fire in front and rear of me. I rode past about twenty of the men and again tried to rally the men, but all my efforts were fruitless.

I remained at this point until nearly all of our men were past me. I rode ahead of a portion of the command again and begged them to stop, but I could not rally them. My right leg was rendered useless by my horse falling over another, and, as he rose, a man riding fell against me, the whole weight of his animal being precipitated against my leg. A couple of rebels were standing firing at me, and my pistol was unloaded. I turned and passed a number of the men. I again attempted to rally them. I told them that there were only a few following us, and they could be easily taken. My horse had been wounded, and my leg was altogether useless. I waited until the last of our men, mixed up with a large number of escaped, led, and riderless horses, passed me. I was ordered to surrender, two of the enemy in advance endeavoring to beat me off my horse with their pistols. I succeeded in again passing a number of the men and tried to rally them, but it was impossible; they were panic-stricken; one of my own men, as I presented my empty revolver at the head of another, trying to stop him, ran between us and knocked that out of my hand. Again, the rear of the command, now reduced to about twenty-four men and about sixty horses and mules, passed me, and I was unarmed and alone in the rear. I passed several of the men and endeavored to persuade them of the weakness of the enemy, their unloaded pistols, &c., but it was fruitless; commands and persuasions were disregarded.

I suffered terribly from physical pain, and could do little to stop them by physical force. I reached the river; my horse fell several times in it, but at last I got across. Captain Martindale forced most of the men across to halt and form here, and covered the crossing of the few who had reached the river. Captain Martindale, myself, two scouts, and twelve men were over. We awaited to see if more would come, but none came; eight had crossed and arrived at camp before us. I was placed in a sleigh and arrived at camp at 4.30 p. m. this day.

I ascribe the disaster to, first, Captain Snow, commanding Twenty-first New York, failing to go to Piedmont, as ordered through Lieutenant Draper, or to Upperville, as I ordered him personally, and to remain at either of the places until half an hour after daybreak. One of Captain Snow's command, who had been drunk, and was left by the command, confirmed the information I received from negroes and citizens that Captain Snow left Upperville at 5 a. m., instead of half an hour after daybreak; second, to Captain Duff's rear guard being pushed into the rear of the column before I knew he was attacked; third, to the paucity of officers detailed with the command, and the large number of men engaged who were new recruits; fourth, to the men having neither sabers nor revolvers, and consequently being unable to engage in a mélée successfully with an enemy armed with at least two revolvers to the man; also, I did not know of the attack until I observed the rear guard coming in at full flight, mixed up with and pursued by the enemy. I do not think the enemy's force exceeded between sixty and seventy-five men.

Lieutenant Jones and the ten men with him have returned to the camp safely. The loss is—1 officer, Lieutenant Nesmith, wounded; Captain Duff and Lieutenant Baker, corps staff, and 78 men, missing. I returned to camp by way of Berryville.

I forward, inclosed, the report of Captain Snow, which is incorrect as far as it differs from this. I have not yet received the report of Lieutenant Draper. I feel satisfied that I did all I knew how to make the movement a success, and it having failed and proved a disaster I earnestly request to be allowed to appear before a court of inquiry to prove that I am not responsible for the failure. A man has just arrived who hid in a thicket, and says he saw a party of about 600 of the enemy moving toward Shepherd's Ford.

I have omitted, heretofore, to state that a party, under Lieutenant Baker, of corps headquarters, captured the quartermaster's camp of Mosby's command. There was no property but one wagon and one ambulance, two horses and six mules in it. We brought the horses and mules along, but they, with the rest, were lost in the fight.

Trusting, general, that you will grant me a court of inquiry at the earliest practicable moment,

I remain, your obedient servant,

THOS. GIBSON,
Major, Commanding Detachment.

Maj. WILL RUMSEY,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Cavalry Division.

No. 3.

Report of Capt. Henry E. Snow, Twenty-first New York Cavalry.

CAMP TWENTY-FIRST NEW YORK VOLUNTEER CAVALRY,
Camp Averell, Va., February 18 [19], 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report that I was detailed yesterday, the 18th instant, to take command of 100 men of the Twenty-first (Griswold's Light) New York Cavalry, and report to Major Gibson, of the Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, for scout. Left camp at 6 p. m. the 18th instant, crossed the Shenandoah River at Shepherd's Mills Ford. When near Paris, Loudoun County, Va., received orders from Major Gibson to take the road leading to Upperville and search all houses between Paris and Upperville; also give the latter place a thorough searching. While he would take the road leading to the right to Piedmont, I was to remain at Upperville until one hour before daybreak, where he was to join me. If he did not arrive, on no account was I to remain there longer than half an hour before daybreak, but start with my command to camp. Agreeable to instructions I proceeded to Upperville, and gave the houses there a thorough searching and in vicinity, finding three Confederate soldiers, one belonging to Mosby's command and two to the Fourth Virginia Cavalry.

About 3.30 this a. m. I took ten men to search Major Richards' house, one mile from Upperville, leaving Lieutenant Meldrum, Twenty-first New York (Griswold's Light) Cavalry, in command until my return, with strict orders to keep the men in column and be in readiness for any emergency. On my return I found about one-third of the men very much under the influence of liquor, they having found two barrels of liquor during my absence. Started for camp, and arrived at Paris at daylight, returning by the way of Berry's Bridge. Arrived in camp at 10.30 a. m.

Six of my men were left in Loudoun; they were so intoxicated it was impossible to get them along. The horses, arms, and accouterments were brought in by the rear guard.

I have the honor to be, most respectfully,

HENRY E. SNOW,

Captain A Company, Twenty-first N. Y. Vol. Cav., Comdg. Detail.

Major GIBSON,
Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry.

FEBRUARY 18-19, 1865.—Scout in Prince William County, Va.

Report of Col. Charles Albright, Two hundred and second Pennsylvania Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 202D PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
Fairfax Station, Va., February 19, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that yesterday at about 4 p. m. I directed Lieutenant Rucker, of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry, to proceed to certain houses in Prince William County, from the Occoquan Run to Stafford County line, with about 100 men of his command. I directed Lieutenant Rucker to operate until daylight, and then return to camp, which instructions he followed, and returned this p. m. I am happy to say the expedition met with complete success, and reflects great credit upon Lieutenant Rucker for the manner in which he conducted it. The lieutenant was accompanied with Mr. Thomas Smoot, U. S. detective, and Mr. Thomas Davies, as guides. The result of the expedition was the capture of fifteen prisoners of the following names.* The horse captured by the guerrillas last fall from Lieutenant De Laney was retaken; also one U. S. horse, with which Lieutenant Rucker has mounted one of his men. The camp of this gang is burnt, and a quantity of clothing and blankets, which could not be brought along, was destroyed; also some muskets.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. ALBRIGHT,

Colonel 202d Pennsylvania Volunteers, Commanding Post.

Capt. CHARLES I. WICKERSHAM,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Fairfax Court-House, Va.

FEBRUARY 21, 1865.—Raid on Cumberland, Md.REPORTS.

No. 1.—Maj. Gen. Philip H. Sheridan, U. S. Army, commanding Middle Military Division.

No. 2.—Maj. Robert P. Kennedy, Assistant Adjutant-General, U. S. Army.

No. 3.—Lieut. Col. Edward W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, Acting Assistant Inspector-General.

No. 4.—General Robert E. Lee, C. S. Army.

No. 1.

Report of Maj. Gen. Philip H. Sheridan, U. S. Army, commanding Middle Military Division.

WINCHESTER, VA., February 21, 1865—9.45 a. m.

A party of from fifty to sixty rebel cavalry surprised General Crook's pickets at Cumberland at 3 o'clock this morning, entered the city and captured Generals Crook and Kelley, and carried them off. I ordered the cavalry at New Creek to Moorefield, and sent from here to same place, via Wardensville, but have but little hopes of recapture, as the party is going very rapidly. I think the party belongs to McNeill's band.

* Names omitted.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Major-General.

Maj. Gen. H. W. HALLECK, Chief of Staff.

No. 2.

Reports of Maj. Robert P. Kennedy, Assistant Adjutant General, U. S. Army.

CUMBERLAND, MD., February 21, 1865—6 a. m.

The party that surprised and captured the pickets, and carried off Major-Generals Crook and Kelley and others, seem to have been about 100 picked men from Rosser's command. They remained only about ten minutes. Except capturing a few horses they have done no other injury. I have sent all the cavalry I have (about fifty) after them. I have ordered all the cavalry from New Creek after them. I will send a regiment of infantry to New Creek at 7 o'clock, to replace the cavalry sent out from there. Cannot parties be sent out from the Valley to intercept them? The rebels told a story of Rosser's brigade being out of town some miles, on the New Creek road. This I do not credit. I will send any further information.

Respectfully,

ROBT. P. KENNEDY,
Major and Assistant Adjutant-General.

Major-General SHERIDAN, Winchester, Va.

CUMBERLAND, MD., February 21, 1865—6.30 a. m.

Captain Botsford has just returned and reports them to be about sixty in number, and that they are going direct to Romney, via Springfield; they are riding very fast.

ROBT. P. KENNEDY,
Major and Assistant Adjutant-General.

Major-General SHERIDAN, Winchester, Va.

CUMBERLAND, MD., February 21, 1865—7.10 a. m.

Major Troxel left from New Creek for Romney with 150 men. I hope they may be able to head them off. The party undoubtedly went through Springfield and to Romney.

ROBT. P. KENNEDY,
Major and Assistant Adjutant-General.

Major-General SHERIDAN, Winchester, Va.

CUMBERLAND, MD., February 21, 1865.

(Received 9.45 a. m.)

This morning, about 3 o'clock, a party of rebel horsemen came up on the New Creek road, about sixty in number. They captured the picket and quietly rode into town; went directly to the headquarters of Generals Crook and Kelley, sending a couple of men to each place to overpower the headquarters guard, when they went directly to the room of General Crook, and, without disturbing anybody else in the house, ordered him to dress and took him downstairs and placed him upon a horse ready saddled and waiting. The same was done to General Kelley; Captain Melvin, assistant adjutant-general to General Kelley, was also taken. While this was being done, a few of them, without creating any disturbance, opened one or two stores, but they left without waiting to take anything. It was done so quietly that others of us, who were sleeping in adjoining rooms to General Crook, were not disturbed. The alarm was given within ten minutes by a darkey watchman at the hotel, who escaped from them, and within an hour we had a party of fifty cavalry after them. They tore up the telegraph lines, and it required almost an hour to get them in working order. As soon as New Creek could be called, I ordered a force to be sent to Romney, and it started without any unnecessary delay. A second force has gone from New Creek to Moorefield, and a regiment of infantry has gone to New Creek to supply the place of the cavalry. They rode good horses, and left at a very rapid rate, evidently fearful of being overtaken. They did not remain in Cumberland over ten minutes. From all information I am inclined to believe that, instead of Rosser, it is McNeill's company. Most of the men of that company are from this place. I will telegraph you fully any further information.

ROBT. P. KIENNIEDY,

Major and Assistant Adjutant-General.

Major-General SHERIDAN.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF WEST VIRGINIA,

February 23, 1865.

The party sent out from New Creek has returned; they arrived at Moorefield one hour after the rebels had passed through. After passing Moorefield the rebels scattered to the mountains. It being dark, and there being evidences of other forces in the vicinity, they returned the next morning. The force from New Creek met the force sent out from Winchester. The rebel command consisted of seventy men, under Lieutenant McNeill.

Respectfully,

ROBT. P. KIENNIEDY,

Major and Assistant Adjutant-General.

Major-General SHERIDAN,

Winchester, Va.

(Same to General Stevenson, at Harper's Ferry, Va.)

No. 3.

Report of Lieut. Col. Edward W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, Acting Assistant Inspector-General.

HDQRS. THIRD DIV. CAVALRY, MIDDLE MILITARY DIV.,

February 23, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that pursuant to instructions from general commanding division to recapture general officers taken by enemy at Cumberland, Md., early the 21st instant, I moved at 9 a. m. that day, with 340 men, for Moorefield, Va., which point I reached at 1.30 p. m. the 22d instant, and there learned that the enemy, with important prisoners, had crossed the Moorefield and Winchester pike two miles from town at about 1 p. m. the 21st instant, and that a party of Federal cavalry from New Creek were in the town immediately after but had returned. I at once sent an officer to communicate with the latter force—the camp-fires could be seen about five miles out of Moorefield—and then returned to the trail of the enemy, which I carefully examined and found to have been made by about fifty mounted men in crossing my route, apparently in haste, obliquely, and from northwest to southeast, from a wooded path on my right down a steep declivity into woods on my left. Here obtaining conclusive proof that the trail was made at or about 1 p. m. the previous day, giving the enemy over twelve hours in my advance, I decided to not pursue, my horses having been badly jaded in breaking a foot of snow over the mountains, and in consideration of the prospects of not overtaking the enemy till he had reached assistance in the Valley. The citizens stated he had discovered the near approach of the New Creek cavalry. The prospect of rain induced me to return rapidly campward, via the Back Creek road.

The officer whom I sent to communicate with the New Creek cavalry soon rejoined me, with verbal statement from Colonel Greenfield, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry, to the effect that his advance, 400 men, under a major, had seen the enemy with prisoners, between 1 and 2 p. m. the day previous, moving off from the Romney and Moorefield pike, with such an accession to their numbers as to make an attack on them hazardous; therefore he had not attacked them but desired to co-operate with me if I was about to pursue. I had moved out too far to return a reply, and still continued march, with occasional annoyances from bush-whackers in rear, to Cacapon bridge, where bivouacked last night, arriving in camp at noon to-day after much trouble in crossing the rapidly swelling streams.

My loss was none except in horses a few. Four of enemy taken prisoners on route.

I desire to express my thanks to Major McOlong, Third New Jersey Cavalry, and Lieutenant Haswell, General Custer's escort, First Vermont Cavalry, for zealous aid and hearty co-operation in efforts to accomplish the object of the expedition, which I much regret to report a failure.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. W. WHITAKER,

Lieutenant-Colonel First Connecticut Cavalry, Acting Assistant Inspector-General, Third Division Cavalry.

Capt. L. SIEBERT,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 4.

Report of General Robert E. Lee, C. S. Army.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA,
February 24, 1865.

General Early reports that Lieutenant McNeill, with thirty men, on the morning of the 21st entered Cumberland, captured and brought out

Generals Crook and Kelley, the adjutant-general of department, two privates, and the headquarters flag, without firing a gun, though a considerable force is stationed in vicinity. Lieutenant McNeill and party deserve much credit for this bold exploit. Their prisoners will reach Staunton to-day.

R. E. LEE.

Hon. JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE,
Secretary of War.

FEBRUARY 23-24, 1865.—Expedition from Yorktown to West Point, Va.

Report of Capt. William R. Hedges, Sixteenth New York Heavy Artillery, commanding expedition.

HEADQUARTERS EXTERIOR LINE OF DEFENSES,
Fort Magruder, March 1, 1865.

Brigadier-General TURNER,
Chief of Staff:

SIR: The expedition, of which the inclosed is a report from the officer commanding, was ordered by the verbal command of Major-General Ord during his visit to Yorktown. I therefore transmit the report for his information. I have disposed of the prisoners in the manner I considered best for the interest of the Government.

Very respectfully,

B. O. LUDLOW,
Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding Post.

[Inclosure.]

FORT MAGRUDER, VA., February 23, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of the expedition which left Yorktown, Va., on board U. S. gun-boat Mystic, Thursday, February 23, in obedience to orders from Lieut. Col. Thomas Mulcahy, who placed me in command of the same:

My force consisted of forty-five men from Company M, Sixteenth New York Volunteer Artillery, and thirty marines, commanded by Acting Ensign Leonard, of the gun-boat Crusader. The Mystic proceeded up the river immediately after dark, grounding opposite Green Point, distant only ten miles from Yorktown. Captain Wright, her commander, made every effort in his power to get her afloat, but did not succeed until 9 a. m. Friday, the 24th instant (which circumstance so delayed the expedition as to render it impossible for me to fully carry out my instructions as was intended). As soon as she was afloat I proceeded up the river, landing the force just above West Point. Skirmished the woods in the vicinity, and, meeting with no resistance, extended the skirmish line across the neck of land between the rivers, and in this manner entered the town. Prior to my advance, and while preparing to land, I discovered three mounted men escaping through the woods, one of whom I afterward learned to be Colonel Richardson, of General Lee's staff, at home on sixty days' leave of absence. I found at three men in my advance upon and search through the town, two of whom I have every reason to believe are spies, from the fact of their leaving Yorktown the same night of the expedition, running the blockade in a small boat, and undoubtedly informed the enemy of our approach. (The fact of the gun-boat getting aground afforded them ample time to warn Captain Richardson and others of our supposed intentions.)

Before leaving West Point I received information in regard to important movement of the enemy, which I have heretofore communicated. Having accomplished all that could be done here the force crossed the river and burned a store-house and barn, containing at least 15,000 bushels of grain and 1,000 pounds of bacon, the property of Beverly Anderson, a contractor for the so-called Confederate Government. We then embarked and proceeded down the river to Queen's Creek, hoping thus to deceive the enemy in regard to our intended movements for that night. Soon as darkness would hide our movements the vessel moved up the river until nearly opposite the residence of Andrew Richardson, where the wedding was to take place and where I expected to find Capt. Theodore Richardson, the murderer of the oysterman. After considerable difficulty we succeeded in landing (it being dark and rainy), and proceeded five miles to Andrew Richardson's house (skirmishing the woods and arresting two citizens on the way), which I immediately ordered to be surrounded. As soon as this was accomplished I demanded admittance; upon being refused forced my way into the house, making a complete surprise. Shots were, however, fired by the occupants, in returning which I wounded Richardson. Searched thoroughly the premises, and finding nothing more I retraced my way to the landing, arriving there about daybreak; crossed the river and burned the buildings from which the decoy signal was shown and from which the oystermen were fired into; also a barn containing about 8,000 bushels of grain. The force went on board the gun-boat; landed on the opposite shore and eight miles below the last point of embarkation. I here burned the residence of Captain Richardson, consisting of two dwellings, barn, and a store, all his household furniture, and 2,000 bushels of grain, his family having made their escape while the gun-boat was aground.

Having executed my orders as far as possible, I again embarked and returned to Yorktown. Reported to Lieutenant-Colonel Mulcahy, who ordered me to report to brigadier-general commanding post. The persons arrested are—Andrew Richardson (whom I left wounded in charge of surgeon, gun-boat Mystic), Thomas Davis, E. W. Powells, and James Gwin (whom I had at first suspected but I found nothing against), Richard Pippin (who has promised to assist me in apprehending Richardson and other guerrillas), J. W. and Harley Cole (the suspected spies found at West Point). The wedding spoken of is to take place Thursday, March 2, at Tabernacle Church. It is reported that there will be a party of guerrillas attending.

Hoping I may have the opportunity of again attempting the arrest of this noted band of guerrillas, I remain, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. R. HEDGES,

Captain Company M, Sixteenth New York Volunteer Artillery.

Brigadier-General LUDLOW,
Commanding Post.

FEBRUARY 27-MARCH 28, 1865.—Expedition from Winchester to the front of Petersburg, Va.

SUMMARY OF THE PRINCIPAL EVENTS.

- Feb. 27, 1865.—Sheridan's command starts from Winchester.
 Mar. 1, 1865.—Skirmish at Mount Crawford.
 2, 1865.—Occupation of Staunton.
 Affair at Swoope's Depot.
 Engagement at Waynesborough.
 3, 1865.—Occupation of Charlottesville.
 8, 1865.—Skirmish at Duguidsville.
 9, 1865.—Occupation of Columbia.
 11, 1865.—Skirmish at Goochland Court-House.
 13, 1865.—Skirmish near Beaver Dam Station.
 14, 1865.—Skirmish at the South Anna Bridge.
 15, 1865.—Skirmish at Hanover Court-House.
 Skirmish near Ashland.
 26, 1865.—Sheridan's command crosses the James River.

REPORTS, ETC.*

- No. 1.—Maj. Gen. Philip H. Sheridan, U. S. Army, commanding expedition.
 No. 2.—Bvt. Maj. Ocran H. Howard, Signal Officer, U. S. Army.
 No. 3.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt, U. S. Army, commanding Cavalry, Army of the Shenandoah.
 No. 4.—Brig. Gen. Thomas C. Devin, U. S. Army, commanding First Cavalry Division.
 No. 5.—Col. Peter Stagg, First Michigan Cavalry, commanding First Brigade.
 No. 6.—Col. Charles L. Fitzhugh, Sixth New York Cavalry, commanding Second Brigade.
 No. 7.—Brig. Gen. Alfred Gibbs, U. S. Army, commanding Reserve Brigade.
 No. 8.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. George A. Custer, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division.
 No. 9.—Col. Alexander C. M. Pennington, Third New Jersey Cavalry, commanding First Brigade.
 No. 10.—Maj. Hartwell B. Compson, Eighth New York Cavalry, Second Brigade.
 No. 11.—Col. John J. Coppinger, Fifteenth New York Cavalry.
 No. 12.—Medals of Honor awarded for distinguished services under Resolution of Congress, No. 43, approved July 12, 1862, and section 6 of Act of Congress, approved March 3, 1863.
 No. 13.—General Robert E. Lee, C. S. Army.
 No. 14.—Journal of Capt. Jed. Hotchkiss, Topographical Engineer, Second Corps, Army of Northern Virginia (Valley District), of operations January 1-May 8, 1865.

No. 1.

Report of Maj. Gen. Philip H. Sheridan, U. S. Army, commanding expedition.

HEADQUARTERS MILITARY DIVISION OF THE SOUTHWEST,
 New Orleans, La., July 16, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of my command in the campaign from Winchester, in the Shenandoah Valley, to the armies in front of Petersburg, beginning February 27 and ending March 28:

* See also report of Lieutenant-General Grant, p. 48.

The command consisted of the First and Third Divisions of Cavalry of the Army of the Shenandoah, under the immediate command of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt—Bvt. Maj. Gen. George A. Custer, commanding Third Division, and Brig. Gen. T. C. Devin the First. The following was the effective force:

Effective force First and Third Cavalry Divisions, Army of the Shenandoah, February 28, 1865, Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt, Chief of Cavalry.

| | Officers. | Men. | Total. |
|--|-----------|-------|--------|
| First Cavalry Division, Brig. Gen. T. C. Devin commanding | 260 | 4,787 | 5,047 |
| One section Companies C and E, Fourth U. S. Artillery | 2 | 52 | 54 |
| Third Cavalry Division, Bvt. Maj. Gen. G. A. Custer commanding | 240 | 4,600 | 4,840 |
| One section Company M, Second U. S. Artillery | 1 | 45 | 46 |
| Total | 503 | 9,484 | 9,987 |

On the morning of February 27, 1865, we marched from Winchester up the Valley pike, with five days' rations in haversacks, and fifteen days' rations of coffee, sugar, and salt in wagons, thirty pounds of forage on each horse, one wagon for division headquarters, eight ambulances, and our ammunition train; no other wagons, except a pontoon train of eight boats, were permitted to accompany the command.

My orders were to destroy the Virginia Central Railroad, the James River Canal, capture Lynchburg if practicable, and then join Major-General Sherman wherever he might be found in North Carolina, or return to Winchester; but in joining General Sherman I must be governed by the position of affairs after the capture of Lynchburg.

The command was in fine condition, but the weather was very bad, as the spring thaw, with heavy rains, had already come on. The valley and surrounding mountains were covered with snow which was fast disappearing, putting all the streams nearly past fording.

On our first day's march we crossed Cedar Creek, Tumbling Run, and Tom's Brook, and went into camp at Woodstock, having marched thirty miles.

At 6 o'clock on the morning of the 28th instant the march was resumed through Edenburg, across the North Fork of the Shenandoah River, and through New Market, going into camp at Lacey's Spring, nine miles north of Harrisonburg; the crossing of the North Fork of the Shenandoah was by a pontoon bridge.

Small bands of guerrillas hovered on our flanks during the day, but no effort was made to drive them off, and no damage was done by them; distance marched, twenty-nine miles.

The march was resumed at 6 o'clock on the morning of the 29th [March 1], through Harrisonburg and Mount Crawford, and camp pitched on Middle River at Oline's Mills. Guerrillas hovered around us during the march, and at Mount Crawford General Rosser, with 200 or 300 cavalry, attempted to burn the bridge over the Middle Fork of the Shenandoah, but did not succeed; two of Capchart's regiments swam the river above the bridge, charged Rosser and routed him, driving him rapidly to Oline's Mills, the advance pushing almost to Staunton; but few of the enemy were killed, 30 taken prisoners, and 20 ambulances and wagons, with their contents, were captured and destroyed; our loss was 5 men wounded. Oline's Mills are seven miles from Staunton, where the headquarters of General Early were said to be. Not knowing but that he would fight at Staunton, Colonel Stagg's brigade, of General Devin's division, was ordered to destroy the railroad bridge over Christian's Creek, between Staunton and Waynesborough, to prevent his getting re-enforcements by rail, or, in case he would not stand, to prevent him carrying off supplies and ordnance stores; the bridge was burned, but General Early, learning of our approach, made a hasty retreat to Waynesborough, leaving word in Staunton that he intended to fight at that place.

The next morning we entered Staunton. The question then arose in my mind whether I should pursue my course on to Lynchburg, leaving General Early in my rear, or go out and fight him with my cavalry against his infantry and what cavalry he could collect, defeat him, and open a way through Rockfish Gap, and have everything in my own hands for the accomplishment of that portion of my instructions which directed the destruction of the Central Railroad and James River Canal. I decided upon the latter course, and General Custer's division (Third), composed of Colonel Wells', Pennington's, and Capelhart's brigades, was directed to take up the pursuit, followed closely by General Devin's division, composed of General Gibbs' and Colonels Fitzhugh's and Stagg's brigades. The rain had been pouring in torrents for two days, and the roads were bad beyond description; nevertheless, the men pushed boldly on, although horses and men could scarcely be recognized for the mud which covered them.

General Custer found General Early as he had promised, at Waynesborough, in a well chosen position, with two brigades of infantry and some cavalry under General Rosser, the infantry occupying breast-works. Custer, without waiting for the enemy to get up his courage over the delay of a careful reconnoissance, made his dispositions for attack at once, sending three regiments around the left flank of the enemy, which was somewhat exposed by being advanced from, instead of resting upon, the bank of the river in his immediate rear. He, with the other two brigades, partly mounted and partly dismounted, at a given signal boldly attacked and impetuously carried the enemy's works, while the Eighth New York and the First Connecticut Cavalry, which were formed in column of fours, charged over the breast-works, and continued the charge through the little town of Waynesborough, sabering a few men as they went along, and did not stop until they had crossed the South Fork of the Shenandoah River, which was immediately in General Early's rear, where they formed as foragers, and with drawn sabers held the east bank of the stream. The enemy threw down their arms and surrendered, with cheers at the suddenness with which they were captured.

The general officers present at this engagement were Generals Early, Long, Wharton, Lilley, and Rosser, and it has always been a wonder to me how they escaped, unless they hid in obscure places in the houses of the town.

Colonel Capelhart, with his brigade, continued the pursuit of the enemy's train, which was stretched for miles over the mountains, and the other two brigades pushed rapidly after him, with orders to encamp on the east side of the Blue Ridge.

The substantial results of this brilliant fight were 11 pieces of artillery, with horses and caissons complete; about 200 wagons and teams, all loaded with subsistence, camp and garrison equipage, ammunition, and officers' baggage; 17 battle-flags, and 1,600 officers and enlisted men. The results, in a military point of view, were very great, as the crossing of the Blue Ridge, covered with snow as it was, at any other point would have been difficult.

Before leaving Staunton for Waynesborough, I obtained information of a large amount of rebel property at Swoope's Depot, on the Lexington railroad, and sent a party to destroy it, which was done, a list of which property will be attached to this report.

General Custer's division encamped at Brooksville, on the east side of the Blue Ridge, General Devin's division remaining at Waynesborough.

The next morning the prisoners were sent back to Winchester under a guard of about 1,500 men, commanded by Col. J. L. Thompson, First New Hampshire Cavalry, who safely reached that point, notwithstanding he was harassed by General Rosser's command as far as the crossing of the North Fork of the Shenandoah near Mount Jackson, at which point General Rosser made a fierce attack upon him and tried to rescue the prisoners, but he was handsomely repulsed by Colonel Thompson, who captured some of his men, and finally arrived at his destination with all his own prisoners, and some of Rosser's men besides.

General Devin resumed his march at 6 a. m., leaving General Gibbs' brigade to destroy the iron bridge over the South Fork of the Shenandoah and to burn and destroy the captured wagons and their contents.

General Custer moved on toward Charlottesville, destroying much Government property and subsistence at Greenwood Depot and Ivy Station, also the railroad and the large bridge over Meechum's River, arriving at Charlottesville at 4 p. m., the mayor and several of the most prominent citizens meeting him in the suburbs of the city and delivering up the keys of the public buildings.

The roads from Waynesborough to Charlottesville had, from the incessant rain and spring thaws, become so terribly cut up and the mud was of such a depth that it was impossible for our train to reach Charlottesville under two days. I therefore notified the command that we would remain two days at this point, for the purpose of resting, refitting, and destroying the railroad. Parties were sent well out toward Gordonsville to break the railroad, and also about fifteen miles toward Lynchburg for the same purpose, to prevent troops massing on me from either Richmond or Lynchburg. A thorough and systematic destruction of the railroads was then commenced, including the large iron bridges over the North and South Forks of the Rivanna River, and the work was continued until the evening of the 5th instant, when General Gibbs reported, with our trains. Forage and subsistence were found in great abundance in the vicinity of Charlottesville.

Commodore Hollins, of the Confederate Navy, was killed while trying to escape from a scouting party from General Custer's division.

This necessary delay forced me to abandon the idea of capturing Lynchburg, but trusty scouts had been sent there to find out the state of affairs in that vicinity.

When the time to start came I decided to separate into two columns, sending General Devin's division, under immediate command of General Merritt, to Scottsville, thence to march along the James River Canal, destroying every lock as far as New Market, while with Custer's division I pushed on up the Lynchburg railroad, through North and South Gardens, destroying it as far as Amherst Court-House, sixteen miles from Lynchburg, and then moved across the country and united with General Merritt's column at New Market.

General Merritt started on the morning of the 6th, first sending the First Michigan Cavalry, Colonel Maxwell commanding, down the Rivanna River to Palmyra and toward Columbia, with directions to rejoin him at Scottsville. General Merritt thoroughly accomplished his orders, destroying all large flour mills, woolen factories, and manufacturing establishments, tearing up and demolishing all the locks on the James River Canal from Scottsville to New Market. I had directed him to try and obtain possession of the bridge across the James River at Duguidsville, intending to hold it and strike the South Side Railroad at Appomattox Depot and follow up its destruction to Farmville, where the High Bridge crosses the Appomattox. A bold dash was made to secure this bridge, but without avail, as the enemy had covered it with inflammable material and set it on fire the instant their scouts signalled the approach of our forces. They also, and by the same means, burned the bridge across the James River at Hardwicksville, leaving me master of all the country north of the James River.

My eight pontoons would not reach half way across the river, and my scouts from Lynchburg reported the enemy concentrating at that point from the west, together with a portion of General Pickett's division from Richmond and Fitz Lee's cavalry. It was here that I fully determined to join the armies of the lieutenant-general in front of Petersburg, instead of going back to Winchester, and also make a more complete destruction of the James River Canal and the Virginia Central and Fredericksburg railroads, connecting Richmond with Lynchburg and Gordonsville.

I now had all the advantage, and by hurrying quickly down the canal, and destroying it as near Richmond as Goochland, or beyond, and then moving up to the railroad and destroying it as close up to the city as possible, in the same manner I did toward Lynchburg, I felt convinced I was striking a hard blow by destroying the means of supply to the rebel capital, and, to a certain extent, the Army of Northern Virginia, besides leaving the troops now concentrating at Lynchburg without anything to oppose them, and forcing them to return to Richmond. This conception was at once decided upon, and Colonel Fitzhugh's brigade was ordered to proceed to Goochland and beyond immediately, destroying every lock upon the canal, and cutting the banks wherever practicable.

The next morning the entire command moved from New Market down the canal leisurely, completely destroying the locks and the banks about the aqueducts, and in some places cutting the banks.

The rain and mud still impeded us, and the command, particularly the transportation, was much worn and fatigued; however, by replacing our worn-out mules with those captured from General Early's trains, and with the assistance of nearly 2,000 negroes who attached themselves to the command, we managed to get along in very good shape, reaching Columbia on the evening of the 10th instant, at which place we were rejoined by Colonel Fitzhugh's brigade. Colonel Fitzhugh had destroyed the canal about eight miles east of Goochland, thereby reducing it to a very small length.

At Columbia we took one day's rest, and I here sent a communication to the lieutenant-general commanding the armies, notifying him of our success, position, and condition, and requesting supplies to be sent to White House.

My anxiety now was to be able to cross the Pamunkey. I felt confident that the enemy would march out a heavy force, and try to destroy my command, and prevent me from crossing the river. The railroad from Richmond to Gordonsville was still intact, and to go south of the Pamunkey River, and between it and Richmond, I regarded as too hazardous, and I was fearful that the enemy might use it to get on my flank and rear; General Custer was therefore directed to strike the railroad at Frederick's Hall, and General Merritt at Louisa Court-House. General

Custer was ordered to thoroughly destroy the track toward Richmond as far as Beaver Dam, while General Merritt did the same thing from Louisa Court-House to Frederick's Hall.

While at this latter place Major Young's scouts from Richmond notified me of preparations being made there to prevent me from getting to the James River, and that Pickett's division of infantry was coming back from Lynchburg, via the South Side Railroad, as was also the cavalry, but that no advance from Richmond had yet taken place. I at once determined that there was no way to stop me unless General Longstreet marched directly for the White House, and that he would be unable to do so if I pushed boldly on toward Richmond, as he would be forced to come out and meet me near Ashland; then I could withdraw, cross the South and North Annas, and march to White House on north side of the Pamunkey. It proved true.

But, to divert from the narrative, when General Custer struck Frederick's Hall Station, he entered it so suddenly that he captured the telegraph office with all the dispatches; among them was one from Lieutenant-General Early to General Lee, stating that he had been informed that Sheridan's forces were approaching Goochland, and that he intended to move up with 200 cavalry which he had and attack them in the flank at daylight. General Custer immediately ordered a regiment of cavalry in pursuit of this bold party, which, in about two hours, it overtook, attacked, and captured or dispersed in every direction, Lieutenant-General Early escaping on a side road with five or six orderlies and two staff officers; he was, however, closely followed by a small detachment, and his staff officers captured, he barely escaping over the South Anna with a single orderly; and the next day he made his way to Richmond, after a campaign in the Shenandoah Valley in which he lost nearly the whole of his army, together with his battle-flags, and nearly every piece of artillery which his troops opened upon us, and also a large part of his transportation.

But, to resume, General Custer, on the morning of the 14th instant, was directed to push down the Negrofoot road and cross the South Anna. He sent his scouting parties up to within eleven miles of Richmond, where they burned a hospital train. The object of this move was to divert the attention of the enemy from the North and South Anna bridges, and bridges over Little River, which Merritt was ordered to destroy with Devin's division, Custer's main column meanwhile being held at the Negrofoot crossing of the South Anna. General Merritt was ordered to follow the railroad to Hanover Junction, cross the Little River, and go into camp on north bank of South Anna.

In the attack upon the railroad bridge over the South Anna the Fifth U. S. Cavalry charged up to the bridge, dismounted, dashed across it, and drove away the company of artillery who tried to defend it, and turned their own guns—four 20-pounder Parrotts—upon them.

I here received a dispatch from the lieutenant-general that supplies were at the White House for me and one brigade of infantry, and also captured the following dispatch, which led me to doubt whether General Longstreet had yet determined in his own mind where I was going:

HANOVER JUNCTION, March 14--11.25.

Colonel HASKELL:

General Longstreet desires you to follow the enemy, if he goes east, until he crosses the Rapidan or Blue Ridge. If he goes toward the peninsula, follow as far as you can.

By order of Lieutenant-General Ewell:

T. O. CHESTNEY,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

The next morning General Custer was ordered to move by the Negro-foot crossing of the South Anna and thence to Ashland, and General Devin was ordered to proceed to the same point; this developed the situation. The prisoners captured in front of Ashland reported Longstreet, with Pickett's and Johnson's divisions, and Fitz Lee's cavalry, on the Ashland road in the direction of Richmond, and four miles from Ashland. My course was now clear and the feat successful; General Devin was quickly ordered to the north side of the South Anna, and General Custer was ordered to follow, sending Colonel Pennington's brigade to amuse the enemy, cover his front, and gradually fall back.

The whole command was meanwhile ordered to cross the North Anna, and go into camp at Carmel Church, and at daylight take up the line of march for White House, via Mangohick Church.

I then knew I could get to White House before the enemy, and that he could not operate upon the Chickahominy, as it would be too close to the lines of the Army of the James.

The enemy finding that he had made a mistake, moved rapidly during the night toward the Pamunkey, through Hanover Court-House, but forgot his pontoon trains and could not cross the river. It would have made no difference, however, as I then could have gotten to the White House without question.

At daylight on the morning of the 16th we leisurely resumed the march to White House, encamping at Mangohick Church; on the 17th we marched to and encamped at Prince [King] William Court-House; on the 18th we reached Indiantown; and on the 19th crossed the Pamunkey at White House, on the railroad bridge which had been repaired by Lieutenant-Colonel Babcock, of Lieutenant-General Grant's staff. We here found supplies in abundance.

The amount of private and public property collected for the use of the enemy and destroyed, and the destruction of lines of communication and supplies, was very great and beyond estimating. Every bridge on the Central railroad between Richmond and Lynchburg, except the one over the Chickahominy, and that over the James River at Lynchburg, and many of the culverts, were destroyed. The James River Canal was disabled beyond any immediate repair.

There perhaps never was a march where nature offered such impediments and shrouded herself in such gloom as upon this; incessant rain, deep and almost impassable streams, swamps, and mud, were overcome with a constant cheerfulness on the part of the troops that was truly admirable. Both officers and men appeared buoyed up by the thought that we had completed our work in the Valley of the Shenandoah, and that we were on our way to help our brothers-in-arms in front of Petersburg in the final struggle.

Our loss in horses was considerable—almost entirely from hoof-rot. After refitting at White House, until the 24th [25th] instant, we resumed our march, crossed the Chickahominy at Jones' Bridge, arriving at and crossing the James River on the evening of the 25th [26th] of March, and on the following day [27th], by direction of the lieutenant-general, went into camp at Hancock's Station, on the railroad, in front of Petersburg.

The whole number of prisoners captured on the march was about 1,600, but some of them we were obliged to parole, as they were unable to keep up with the column, though, after the first three days, our marches did not average over eighteen miles per day.

To General Merritt, chief of cavalry; Generals Custer and T. O. Devin, division commanders; Generals Gibbs and Wells, and Colonels

Fitzhugh, Capelhart, Stagg, and Pennington, brigade commanders; my staff, and every officer and man of the First and Third Cavalry Divisions, I return my sincere thanks for patriotic, un murmuring, and soldierly conduct.

To Maj. H. H. Young, of my staff, chief of scouts, and the thirty or forty men of his command, who took their lives in their hands, cheerfully going wherever ordered, to obtain that great essential of success, information, I tender my gratitude. Ten of these men were lost.

Our entire loss during the march did not exceed 100 men, and some of these we left by the wayside, unable to bear the fatigues of the march.

This report should be regarded as the preface of my report of operations in front of Petersburg and Richmond, as my command only rested one day before its commencement.

I forward herewith list of prisoners captured and property destroyed.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. SHERIDAN,

Major-General.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. JOHN A. RAWLINS,

Chief of Staff, Washington, D. C.:

[Inclosure.]

First Brigade, First Division, Col. Peter Stagg commanding.—Captured: 17 prisoners of war and 120 horses and mules. Destroyed: 5 flouring mills, 1 cotton mill, 2 saw-mills, 27 railroad bridges, 5 canal boats, 19 canal locks, 12 warehouses, 1 lumber yard, 1 boat-house, 1 aqueduct, 4 railroad cars, 7 miles telegraph, 500 barrels wheat, 400 barrels flour, 7 tons of cotton, 1,500 pounds wool, 85 hogsheads tobacco, 1 railroad depot, 3 water tanks and outbuildings, 8 miles of railroad tracks; the Lynchburg and Richmond Canal cut in three places.

Second Brigade, First Division, Col. C. L. Fitzhugh commanding.—Captured: 33 prisoners of war and 395 horses and mules. Destroyed: 6½ miles railroad, 18 canal locks, 6 flat-boats loaded with tobacco and flour, 12 canal boats, 5 canal boats loaded with commissary subsistence and quartermaster stores, 400 hogsheads tobacco, 1 railroad depot with 500 cords of wood, 4 barns, 3,000 pairs boots, 2,000 pairs pants, jackets, blankets, and drawers; 50,000 pounds of wheat, 4,000 pounds tobacco, 20 wagons loaded with quartermaster stores, 1 tannery with 1,000 hides, 2 naval camps near Goochland, 1 steam engine and 50,000 feet lumber, 1 warehouse and a quantity blacksmith tools, 1 saw-mill, 4 bales cotton, 8 boxes tobacco, 1 canal dredge, 1,000 grain sacks, 1,000 shelter-tents, 336 sacks salt, 150 sabers.

Reserve Brigade, Brig. Gen. Alfred Gibbs commanding.—Captured: 24 prisoners of war and 75 horses and mules. Destroyed: 1 railroad bridge, 1 wooden aqueduct, 20 canal bridges, 10 canal locks, 1 woolen factory, 1 candle factory, 3 warehouses, 1,000 pounds candles, 500 bushels wheat, 1 plow and wagon manufactory, 1 machine-shop, 1 forge, 3 flouring mills, 100,000 pounds tobacco, 3 miles Virginia Central Railroad.

Fifth U. S. Cavalry, Captain Leib commanding, doing duty as escort at First Division headquarters.—Captured: 13 prisoners of war and 115 horses and mules; 3 pieces artillery, at South Anna bridge. Destroyed: 500 shell, 16 muskets and accouterments, 2 canal boats loaded with ammunition and subsistence, 1 cotton factory, 1 iron foundry,

1 canal lock, 9,000 shell at Columbia, 1 canal boat loaded with flour and sugar, 2 miles Virginia Central Railroad, 1 railroad bridge over South Anna, 500 feet long.

Detachment of First Virginia and Third Indiana Cavalry, Brevet Major-General Custer's escort.—Destroyed: 24 wagons, loaded with subsistence, and 50 boxes tobacco.

First Brigade, Third Division, Col. A. C. M. Pennington commanding.—Captured: 420 prisoners of war and 160 horses and mules. Recaptured: 2 U. S. guidons. Destroyed: 5 pieces of artillery with limbers, 250 stand of arms, 7 ambulances, 24 sets harness, 4 miles railroad track, 6 railroad bridges, 6 railroad culverts, 3 railroad depots, 1 cotton mill, 200 barrels flour, 60 carbines, 5 Government warehouses.

Second Brigade, Third Division, Col. William Wells commanding.—Captured: 800 prisoners of war, 880 horses and mules, and 13 battle-flags. Destroyed: 4 pieces of artillery, 880 single sets harness, 6 caissons, 200 wagons and ambulances, 9 portable forges, 150 stand small-arms, 9 railroad bridges, 11 miles railroad track, 20 miles telegraph, 7 water-tanks, 1 station-house, 100,000 feet bridge timber, 1 county bridge, 500 bushels of salt, 20 hogsheads tobacco, 1 C. S. store-house.

Third Brigade, Third Division, Col. H. Capchart, commanding.—Captured: 220 prisoners of war, 300 horses and mules, and 3 battle-flags. Destroyed: 5 pieces of artillery, 74 wagons loaded with ammunition and stores, 2 railroad depots, 3,000 [rounds] fixed ammunition, 500,000 [rounds] rifle ammunition, 50 kegs of powder, 1,500 stand of arms, 2 cords of harness leather, 500 wall-tents, 500 cavalry saddles, 1,500 cotton quilts, 1,000 pounds bacon, 45 hogsheads tobacco, 1 tobacco factory and contents, valued at $200,000, 15 miles railroad, 500 kegs tobacco, 600 five-pound bales smoking tobacco, 1 canal lock at New Market.

Army headquarters scouts.—Captured: 20 prisoners of war.

Cavalry headquarters scouts.—Captured: 52 prisoners of war, 110 horses and mules, and 75 beef-cattle. Four boats loaded with commissary and quartermaster's stores destroyed between Greenway and Lynchburg. Captured at Howardsville and issued to First Cavalry Division, 1 boat load of butter, bacon, flour, and molasses.

RECAPITULATION.

| | |
|--------------------------|-------|
| Prisoners of war..... | 1,603 |
| Horses and mules..... | 2,154 |
| Battle-flags..... | 16 |
| Pieces of artillery..... | 17 |
| Small-arms..... | 2,010 |

Disposition.

| | |
|--|-------|
| Prisoners of war forwarded to Winchester..... | 1,336 |
| Prisoners of war forwarded to Fort Monroe..... | 165 |
| Prisoners of war paroled..... | 30 |
| Prisoners of war escaped..... | 18 |
| Citizen prisoners released..... | 54 |
| Total..... | 1,603 |

The above report does not include the large amount of forage and subsistence stores seized by foraging parties for the use of the command.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. H. BAILLY,

Major and Provost-Marshal Cavalry, Middle Military Division.

No. 2.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Ocran H. Howard, Signal Officer, U. S. Army.

HQRS. MILITARY DIVISION OF THE MISSISSIPPI,
OFFICE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER,
New Orleans, La., August 11, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the detachment of the Signal Corps, U. S. Army, under my immediate command during the month of March, 1865:

On the 26th of February I had received orders to be ready on the following morning, 27th, with one officer as an assistant, to accompany the commanding general on an expedition, the object and destination of which was to me unknown. I accordingly designated Lieut. M. A. Ellis, acting signal officer, as the officer to accompany me.

The expeditionary forces consisted of the First and Third Divisions of Cavalry, to which Lieutenants Wiggins and Mayell, signal officers, were respectively attached. The expedition left Winchester on the morning of February 27, and proceeded up the Valley pike. At Cedar Creek Lieutenant Ellis was sent ahead to find the rebel signal stations which had been designated a few days before by a deserter from the rebel signal corps, with instructions to call for a cavalry force if the stations were found, and to capture the officers and men thereon. Lieutenant Ellis proceeded with the advance as far as Woodstock, but saw no stations, and learned from citizens that they had been abandoned some days before. During our march up the Valley a signal officer was kept with the advance with instructions to find, if possible, the rebel signal stations. Owing to the rapid march of the column and the small space occupied by the command when encamped at night it was deemed inexpedient to establish any communication by signals.

By way of Staunton the column reached Waynesborough on the evening of March 2, where Lieutenant Mayell, acting as aide to General Custer in his engagement with the enemy's forces under Early, had his horse shot under him.

The column reached Charlottesville on the evening of March 3.

On the 4th communication by signals was established between the headquarters of the two divisions and headquarters of the army. This communication was maintained during the stay of the army at this point, the stations being also used as of observation, watching and reporting the movements of the enemy's scouts on the surrounding hills.

From Charlottesville the army marched on the morning of the 6th, the First Division marching, via Howardsville, to New Market, reaching that point on the evening of the 7th; headquarters marching with Third Division along the railroad toward Lynchburg, reaching the same point, via Arrington Station, on the morning of the 8th. At New Market the Third Division was put in communication with headquarters by signals.

Leaving New Market on the morning of the 9th, marched through Scottsville to Columbia, reaching the latter place on the evening of the 10th. Communication by signals was here established between the various headquarters. From Columbia, on the 11th, Lieutenant Ellis, with two men, was sent with a brigade of cavalry to Goochland Court-House, returning at 12 p. m.

The command left Columbia on the morning of the 12th and marched, via Tolersville, Frederick's Hall, Beaver Dam Station, Taylorsville, Ashland, Carmel Church, Mangohick, and King William Court-House, to White House Landing, Va., reaching the latter place at 10 a. m. on the 18th.

Crossing the Pamunkey on the 19th, the command went into camp, where it remained until the 25th. While here the enlisted men of the detachment were furnished with such clothing as they required, unserviceable horses were turned in and replaced by others, all horses were shod, and the detachment placed in the best possible condition with the means at hand.

On the 25th marched, via Jones' Bridge, to within five miles of Wilcox's Landing. Upon going into camp Lieutenant Ellis was sent to the signal station in charge of the signal detachment Army of the James at Wilcox's Landing, and communication was opened from headquarters, through this station, with General Grant at City Point. During the night these stations were in constant use and messages were sent to and received from General Grant by General Sheridan.

From Wilcox's Landing marched, via Malvern Hill, crossing the James at Jones' Neck, to Hancock's Station, on the City Point and Army Railroad.

On the 28th, from Hancock's Station, Lieutenant Ellis and I visited the chief signal officer Army of the Potomac, and replaced such unserviceable signal property as required it.

On the 29th marched from Hancock's Station, via Reams' Station, to Dinwiddie Court-House. On the following day, owing to the heavy rain and the impossibility of getting up ammunition, the army lay comparatively quiet, simply pushing a reconnaissance to Five Forks.

On the 31st a note from Lieutenant Niles, chief signal officer Fifth Army Corps, informed me that from a house in their lines the sight of our cavalry could be seen. Lieutenant Ellis was immediately sent to find the spot and open communication if practicable. Before this could be done the cavalry was driven back toward the Court-House by the enemy's infantry, and Lieutenant Ellis was forced to retire.

During the month very little signal duty proper was done by the detachment. The officers and men, however, were not idle, but were constantly employed as aides by the general officers with whom they were serving, proving themselves active, zealous, and efficient in this capacity, meriting and receiving the commendation of their commanders.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. H. HOWARD,

Brevet Major and Chief Signal Officer.

Col. B. F. FISHER,

Chief Signal Officer, U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.

No. 3.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt, U. S. Army, commanding Cavalry, Army of the Shenandoah.

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY, MIDDLE MILITARY DIVISION,
Petersburg, Va., May 7, 1865.

GENERAL: I respectfully furnish the following report of the operations of the cavalry during the past campaigns:

The command consisted of the First and Third Divisions of Cavalry, each division accompanied by one section of artillery (3-inch rifled guns). A pontoon train with a company of engineers, under command of Captain Polwell, also accompanied the expedition. The command marched with five days' rations and thirty pounds of forage on the horses, and fifteen days' rations of sugar, coffee, and salt in wagons. Each man carried on his horse seventy-five rounds of ammunition, while 100 rounds per man were carried in wagons. The entire train of the command, including twelve ambulances and two medical wagons (all that marched with the expedition), was seventy-five wagons. One pack-mule was allowed to each squadron in the command, and two to each regimental headquarters. The command was placed in readiness to march on short notice, yet still the state of preparation was so complete that during the long and arduous marches not the smallest delay or inconvenience resulted from neglect in this respect. The pontoon train, which reported to the undersigned the night before the march, was provided with but poor teams, which, in consequence of the bad condition of the roads and the heaviness of the pontoon wagons, frequently failed on the route. These teams were replaced by others collected in the country through which the march was conducted.

February 27, 1865, the command marched from cantonment near Winchester, Va., camping at Woodstock. The bridge over Cedar Creek having been carried away by the winter freshets, the fording was deep, but attended with but little difficulty. From Woodstock a force of 500 men was sent in advance to hold the bridge at Edenburg during the night.

February 28, the command marched at 6 a. m., and arrived at Mount Jackson at 10.30 a. m., where the bridge over the North Fork of the Shenandoah had been destroyed. The stream being too deep to cross wagons by the ford, which was also unsafe for the passage of mounted men, the pontoon bridge was thrown across, and the command, with the exception of Pennington's brigade, which forded the stream, passed safely over. One man and several horses were drowned in fording this stream. The command camped at Lacey's Spring. Capehart's brigade, of the Third Division, was moved to the front at 3 a. m. on the morning of March 1, to occupy Harrisonburg. The main body moved at 6 a. m., reaching Harrisonburg at 10 a. m. Capehart's brigade was ordered to move rapidly to Mount Crawford, and secure the bridge over North River at that point. The enemy, under Rosser, on the approach of this brigade, attempted to burn the bridge, but were quickly driven away by Capehart's men, who forded the stream above and below, flanking the enemy's rifle-pits. This command, under Rosser, was dispersed, captured, or killed. A number of wagons were taken and destroyed by the advance. The command camped at Middle River, the bridge over which was also secured by a rapid advance. Stagg's brigade was ordered to move forward and destroy the railroad bridge on Christian's Creek. This brigade occupied Staunton the same night.

March 2, the command arriving at Staunton, a force was detached from the First Division to go to Swoope's Station, where it was reported the enemy had stored supplies of war. This expedition found immense quantities of commissary, quartermaster's, and ordnance stores, which it destroyed. The main column, the Third Division in advance, moved toward Waynesborough, where the enemy was found, strongly posted behind barricades and rifle-pits. General Ouster, after engaging the enemy's artillery with his own for a short time, moved three regiments, under directions of Colonel Whitaker, First Connecticut, to the left flank and rear of the enemy, and routed him, with the loss of but 3 or 4 men to our command, capturing over 1,000 prisoners, the enemy's artillery and wagon train, containing all the wardrobe, papers, &c., of the officers of Early's depleted army. This event opened the roads for unresisted advance on the James River and all the roads and means of supply north of Richmond. All the captures which could not be carried away were destroyed. The prisoners and some few pieces of artillery were ordered back to Winchester, under a mounted guard of about 1,500 mounted and dismounted men, under Colonel Thompson, First New Hampshire Cavalry.

March 3, the Third Division marched at 6 a. m. for Charlottesville. General Devin was ordered to move in its rear with two brigades of his command, leaving one to guard the wagon train, which, on account of the fearful condition of the roads, was unable to make the marches effected by the cavalry. The column, as it marched, destroyed all Confederate Government property on its route, as well as the railroad bridges, depots, &c., between Staunton and Charlottesville. This latter place was entered without opposition by the Third Division, which immediately set to work to destroy the railroad bridge over the Rappahannock River. Colonel Randol, of Pennington's brigade, was sent the same day to destroy the railroad bridges on the Lynchburg railroad, over the North and South Forks of the Hardware River. The state of the roads from Staunton to Charlottesville defies description. Heavy rains, which fell during the march, rendered the stiff, yellow clay of that section of country soft and almost impassable. Great injury resulted to the horses of the command from marching over these roads. The disease called the hoof-rot was generated by the mud in this march. Quite a large number of horses were destroyed subsequently by this [disease]. The trains did not arrive at Charlottesville until the 4th of March. The greatest praise is due to Capt. W. H. Brown, chief quartermaster of this command, and his able assistants, for the energy and perseverance with which they worked in getting the train over the road. During the march from Staunton, and until the column reached the White House, they worked night and day, using every exertion and means which a settled determination to succeed could provoke or human ingenuity invent. At no time during the march, under the most trying circumstances, was there the slightest disposition to fail in this most responsible duty of moving the train. The command remained at Charlottesville until the morning of the 6th of March. During the term of its stay at this place the command was fitted up as well as possible. An abundance of forage was found in the country, and the animals well supplied. The best of discipline was maintained. Scarcely an instance of excess of any kind was brought to the notice of the general commanding.

March 6, the command marched in two columns—the First Division, accompanied by these headquarters, to Scottsville, on the James, and the Third Division, with wagon trains, along the Lynchburg railroad toward Lynchburg. This division was accompanied by the major-general commanding. It destroyed the railroad bridges and culverts to Buffalo River, joining the First Division at New Market on the 8th. The First Division arrived at Scottsville on the 6th instant at 3 p. m. The work of destruction on the canal was commenced at once, and continued by the Reserve Brigade, which remained at Scottsville during the night to await the arrival of Colonel Maxwell, First Michigan Cavalry, who was detached with a light force to move down the Rappahannock River, as far as Palmyra, to destroy bridges, mills, manufactories, and rebel Government establishments. The First and Second Brigades of the First Division were marched to Howardsville. The work of destruction on the canal was prosecuted with great vigor. All locks from Goochland to Duguidsville were destroyed during the time the command operated in this country; also immense quantities of rebel Government stores, tobacco, cotton, and subsistence stores were issued to the command or destroyed. The officers and men of the First Division worked with great energy, marching all day over the worst possible roads, and working early and late for the complete accomplishment of the object of the expedition. Great credit is due General Devin and his energetic brigade commanders for their untiring zeal in carrying out the orders given them at this time. Besides the locks, the aqueduct over the mouth of the Tye River was destroyed, and the canal cut down and injured for miles.

On the 10th of March the command moved to Columbia. The idea of crossing the James River and pushing still farther south was abandoned, for the reason that the enemy had destroyed the bridges on the James River, thus rendering the crossing impracticable, and the fact that, owing to the bad condition of the roads and the reduced condition of the teams and animals of the command, it was not thought feasible to pursue that route. Colonel Fitzhugh's brigade was detached on the night of the 8th of March to precede the command to Columbia, and thence send a force down the river as far as Goochland. His command made an elegant march to the point designated, fully accomplishing the objects for which it had been sent out. During the 11th of March the command remained at Columbia, resting and awaiting the arrival of the wagon trains. Reports were furnished at that time of the amount of property destroyed, captured, &c.

On the 12th of March the march toward the Virginia Central Railroad was resumed. The two divisions marched on different roads, the Third Division having orders to occupy the railroad in the neighborhood of Frederick's Hall Station by night. This was done by General Custer, who detached a brigade for the purpose. The fords on the South Anna River were very bad, but after some repairing the command was crossed without trouble, and reached the Central Railroad, at Tolersville, on the 13th of March. Here the First Division commenced the work of destruction on the railroad, while the Third Division prosecuted the same work at Frederick's Hall Station and beyond. Quite a number of miles of track were effectually destroyed.

March 14, the command marched south for the purpose of destroying the bridges over the South Anna and Little Rivers. General Custer directed his march over Ground Squirrel bridge, while General Devin moved directly along the railroad to the South Anna. The bridges were taken possession of and destroyed after a brisk skirmish with the guards at the bridge, in which the Fifth U. S. Cavalry did splendid service. Three pieces of artillery and a number of prisoners were captured. The Third Division pushed south as far as Ashland, while the First Division, after completely destroying the bridges, crossed the river with a view to moving to Hanover Court-House. As it soon became apparent that the enemy in considerable force (Pickett's division and part of Longstreet's corps) were moving to intercept us on our march to the Army of the Potomac, the command recrossed the South Anna and moved on the north bank of the Pamunkey to White House Landing. This point was reached on the 18th of March. Here ample supplies were found for the command, and the time was busily occupied in refitting.

On the 25th of March the command resumed the march to the Army of the Potomac, which it joined on the 27th of March.

Thus was completed a campaign which, for brilliancy of conception and perfect success in execution, has never been equalled in the operations of cavalry in this or any other country. The results attest the importance of the services performed. The remnant of Early's famous Army of the Valley, which, less than a year before, had environed the capital of the country, was captured or dispersed, his artillery, trains, correspondence, and baggage in our hands. Two railroads and one canal, immense arteries of supply for the rebel Army of Northern Virginia, were completely disabled, and millions of dollars' worth of rebel property, contraband of war, was destroyed or used for the command. The rapidity of our march over roads rendered almost impassable by heavy rains, which rendered the crossing of each petty creek a work of great labor and time, was truly marvelous, and led the enemy completely astray as to our movements. Over 350 miles were marched by the main body of the command, some parts of which made over 500 miles. Over 2,000 prisoners were taken, 18 pieces of artillery, a large number of arms, and many stand of colors. These are some of the substantial fruits of the expedition, which, while it inflicted immense damage on the Army of Northern Virginia, introduced for the first time to many of the responsible people of Virginia the stern realities of the wicked war they themselves had sought.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. MERRITT,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

P. S.—I inclose herewith map* of the country marched over by the command, with lines of march indicated in red ink; also, I send reports of division commanders, list of property captured and destroyed, &c.

W. MERRITT,

Brevet Major-General.

Brig. Gen. JAMES W. FORSYTH,
Chief of Staff.

No. 4.

Report of Brig. Gen. Thomas C. Devin, U. S. Army, commanding First Cavalry Division.

HDQRS. FIRST CAVALRY DIV., ARMY OF THE SHENANDOAH,
Camp at White House, March 25, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this division from February 27 to March 18, inclusive:

On the morning of February 27 the division marched from Winchester on the Valley turnpike, and passing through Newtown, Middletown, and Strasburg, encamped the same night near Woodstock. The Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry were ordered to push on and seize and hold the bridge across Stony Creek at Edenburg. The order was carried out with slight opposition from a party of rebel cavalry. At 5 a. m. the same regiment was ordered to push on to Mount Jackson and seize and hold the bridge across the North Fork of the Shenandoah, if it had not been destroyed. The regiment reached the river, but found the bridge had been destroyed some time previous.

* Not found.

On the morning of the 28th the division marched, in rear of the trains, to Mount Jackson, crossed the North Fork on pontoons, marching thence through New Market to Lacey's Spring, where the division encamped at 12 p. m. While on the march between Woodstock and Edenburg the train was attacked in flank by a party of rebel cavalry, who were quickly driven off. The Reserve Brigade, which covered the taking up of the pontoons, did not reach camp until 3 a. m. On the morning of March 1 the division marched, in advance of the train, to Harrisonburg; thence to Mount Crawford, crossing the North River by the turnpike bridge; thence by Mount Sidney to the Middle River, which was crossed on the turnpike bridge, the division encamping within four miles of Staunton, having marched twenty-nine miles. At 8 p. m. the First Brigade, Colonel Stagg commanding, was ordered to march through or around Staunton and destroy the railroad bridge at the crossing of Christian's Creek. Colonel Stagg succeeded in reaching the bridge with but slight opposition, fired the bridge, and returned to Staunton. From some cause (a heavy rain was falling) the structure was not thoroughly destroyed. In connection therewith; I would respectfully refer to the report of Colonel Stagg.

On the morning of March 2 the division marched, in rear of the trains, to Staunton. At this point 300 men of the Twentieth Pennsylvania Cavalry, of Second Brigade, under Major Douglass, were ordered to proceed to Swoope's Station and destroy the Government property at that point. The expedition was entirely successful, resulting in the destruction of the depot and four barns in that vicinity, with all their contents, consisting of an immense amount of valuable commissary and quartermaster's stores and a small quantity of ordnance stores. The Sixth New York Cavalry were detailed to destroy all Government property at Staunton, which duty was fully accomplished, the Government blacksmith shop, a large tannery, and a number of wagons and stage coaches being totally destroyed. The division marched in rear of the trains, and encamped east of the crossing at Christian's Creek, having made but twelve miles. The road from Staunton to the creek was very heavy and the progress of the train very slow.

March 3, orders were received from cavalry headquarters directing that a regiment from each brigade of the division, together with all dismounted men and those mounted on unserviceable horses, be sent to the rear as part of the escort to guard prisoners and guns captured at Waynesborough. In furtherance of said orders the First Rhode Island and Fourth and Twenty-fifth New York Cavalry, together with all sick and dismounted men and the unserviceable horses, were sent to the rear. Lieutenant-Colonel Nichols, Ninth New York Cavalry, was assigned to command the detachment from this division. The division then marched to Waynesborough. At this point the First and Second Brigades were ordered to ford the South River, cross the mountain through Rockfish Gap, and follow the Third Division in the direction of Charlottesville. The river was rising rapidly and the crossing difficult and dangerous, but the column, followed by the trains, was crossed without accident. The Reserve Brigade was ordered to remain at Waynesborough, destroy all Government or public property, and then follow the train. A detachment from this brigade blew up the iron railroad bridge across South River, and destroyed a large number of wagons, caissons, muskets, ordnance stores, ammunition, &c., captured the day previous by General Custer. The brigade then marched in rear of the trains and encamped at Brooksville. The First and Second Brigades had pushed on and encamped at Ivy Station, seven miles from Charlottesville, having marched twenty-six miles. The train was halted at various points along the route, the terrible state of the roads rendering it utterly impossible to close it up and park it at any one point. After crossing the mountain the Second Brigade destroyed a large tannery, with a lot of leather, hides, wagons, &c.

March 4, the trains having closed up at 1 p. m. the First and Second Brigades moved to Charlottesville and encamped. The Reserve Brigade encamped at Ivy Station, covering the rear of the train.

March 5, the First Brigade and three regiments of Second Brigade, all under command of Colonel Stagg, were detached to destroy the Virginia Central Railroad south of Charlottesville. Three miles of the road were thoroughly destroyed by burning the ties and heating, bending, and twisting the rails. Two bridges, fifty feet in length, were also destroyed. The Second Brigade also destroyed at Charlottesville 2,000 pounds of tobacco, 15 wagon loads of corn, wheat, &c., and a tannery containing 1,000 hides. On this day the Reserve Brigade joined the division, having destroyed the depot at Ivy Station, with water-tanks, and warehouses containing tobacco and commissary stores. On this day rations were issued to the command, tents burned, wagons lightened, and the pack train cleaned out to furnish fresh animals in exchange for the jaded ones in the train.

March 6, the division marched to Scottsville, on the James River Canal (twenty miles), arriving at 3 p. m. At this point three canal boats were captured, one loaded with shell (9,600) and two with Government commissary stores and tobacco. These were totally destroyed and burned, together with a large cloth mill, a five-story flouring mill, candle factory, machine-shop, and tobacco warehouse. Each of these buildings was crammed with the products of its manufacture to a surprising extent, and all were totally destroyed. The Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry was sent east on the towpath to destroy the aqueduct over Hardware River, and a detachment of Second Massachusetts Cavalry was sent west on the towpath to the aqueduct over Tooler's Creek, with the same instructions. Those structures were destroyed to as great an extent as the solid masonry of which they were constructed would admit with the limited means at our command. Before starting from Charlottesville, the First Michigan, of the First Brigade, Colonel Maxwell commanding, had been detached to the left to strike the Rivanna River near Palmyra Court-House, to destroy all public property in that vicinity, and proceed thence to Scottsville. Colonel Maxwell executed efficiently the duty intrusted to him, destroying the Rivanna bridge at Palmyra, together with one cotton mill, one flouring mill, and immense amounts of wheat, flour, cotton, and wool, marching the same night to Scottsville. At 5 p. m. the First and Second Brigades were ordered to march to Howardsville, on the canal, twelve miles distant. Brigadier-General Gibbs, with the Reserve Brigade, was ordered to remain at Scottsville and complete the destruction of public works in that vicinity, and then, with the parties that had been detached, rejoin the division. The Second Brigade and division headquarters marched direct to Howardsville, by the Back road, arriving at 10 p. m. The First Brigade struck the towpath at Warren, and marched to Howardsville by that route. The Ninth New York Cavalry, of Second Brigade, accompanied by Captain Cooley, of corps staff, marched by the towpath to Howardsville, destroying five locks, and two tobacco warehouses containing 200 hogsheds of tobacco. The First and Second Brigades encamped at Howardsville.

March 7, at 2 a. m. the First New York Dragoons, Major Smith commanding, were ordered to proceed on the towpath twelve miles to Hardwicksville and seize and hold the bridge across the James River, at that point. Major Smith was unable to save the bridge, as for some time previous it had been filled with straw, and saturated with tar and turpentine, and was fired at the first intimation of his approach. He, however, destroyed 336 sacks of salt and a quantity of tobacco and cotton. During the morning detachments from First and Second Brigades were employed in destroying the aqueduct over Rockfish River, breaching the canal, and burning a canal boat heavily loaded with government commissary stores. About 10 a. m. the First Brigade was ordered to march up the towpath to New Market and to destroy all locks, &c., on the canal. This duty was efficiently performed, seven locks being totally destroyed. The Second Brigade crossed the canal bridge over Rockfish River, and striking off to the right marched to New Market by the river road, and halting near Warminster destroyed the lock at that point. The Reserve Brigade, which had arrived from Scottsville after the division started, had marched up by the towpath, destroying all public works left by other commands, including a large mill at Warren, and before leaving Howardsville burned a large manufactory and warehouse filled with Government saddle trees, &c., plow factory, and a tobacco and commissary warehouse. The division encamped at New Market on the night of the 7th, with the exception of the Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry, which was ordered to proceed at a rapid gait to the bridge across James River at Duguidsville and endeavor to seize and hold that approach to the south bank of the river. The Seventeenth Pennsylvania Cavalry was sent in support of the Sixth. Every exertion was made to accomplish the end desired, but the enemy's precautions were too well taken, and the bridge was fired before the regiment had approached within a mile.

March 8, the First and Reserve Brigades were for a short time employed in destroying the dam and breaching the canal at New Market. The Second Brigade was then detached to proceed toward Columbia and occupy that place. This brigade made a forced march of fifty-six miles in seventeen hours, a most severe task when the weather (a heavy rain-storm) and the state of the roads are borne in mind. In the meantime the First and Reserve Brigades had been ordered to march by the towpath to Duguidsville (twelve miles) and await further orders. On arriving opposite Duguidsville I massed the two brigades on the hill over the canal. I soon after received orders to retire at 4 p. m. I directed the First Brigade and section of battery to march by the towpath to New Market, intending to follow with the Reserve Brigade. Just as the First Brigade and battery had stretched out upon the towpath a force of the enemy, which had been watching us from the opposite bank of the river, opened a sharp fire on the column. I at once ordered the Fifth U. S. Cavalry to dismount and cover the retirement of the troops then en route. As I considered it imprudent to allow the enemy to suppose that he could annoy the column with impunity, I felt justified in using extreme measures, and at once opened fire upon the town, quickly emptying it of all concerned. I then retired the Reserve Brigade by the mountain road, reaching New Market at 8 p. m. On returning from Duguidsville to New Market the locks between the two points, five in number, together with two canal boats, one dredge, two bridges, and one flouring mill, were totally destroyed by the First Brigade, Colonel Stagg.

March 9, at 1 p. m. the First and Second Brigades marched in rear of the train by the river road, via Warminster, to a point near Howardsville, where the command crossed the canal by a bridge and advanced upon the towpath to Scottsville. This was a most harassing and fatiguing march to the already hard-worked command. The wagons were greatly impeded by the horrible state of the roads, and the men were alternately halting and marching until daybreak, when the command reached Scottsville.

March 10, after resting two hours to feed and groom the animals the First Brigade was ordered to follow the train on the towpath to Columbia. The Reserve Brigade, with division headquarters, marched by the Back road, and the command encamped at Columbia at 10 p. m. While en route the First Brigade destroyed all the locks between Scottsville and Columbia, 8 in number, together with 13 canal bridges, 4 flouring mills, 5 warehouses, lumber-yard, tobacco, cotton, &c.

March 11, at 3 p. m. the division crossed the Rivanna River and encamped beyond Columbia, on the road to Louisa Court-House. The Second Brigade here joined the division, having marched and returned from Goochland Court-House, destroying all canal locks, 10 in number, between Goochland and Columbia, 15 canal boats loaded with grain and commissary stores, 4,000 pounds of tobacco, 1 saw-mill, 1 grist-mill, 1 dredge, 1 warehouse, and the jail at Goochland, and capturing, in a charge, 1 officer and 13 men of the Seventh South Carolina Cavalry. While at Goochland Colonel Fitzhugh scouted to within eighteen miles of Richmond.

March 12, the command marched by Yanceyville to the north bank of the South Anna and encamped, the First Brigade fording the river and the Second and Reserve Brigades, with the wagon trains, crossing the bridge two and a half miles east.

March 13, the division marched to Tolersville, on the Central Railroad. Nearly the whole available force of the command was at once set to work destroying the railroad by ripping up and burning the ties, and heating, bending, and twisting the rails. The road was rendered useless from Tolersville to near Frederick's Hall, where the division encamped at 10 p. m. A large tannery at the former place was also destroyed by the Fifth U. S. Cavalry attached to division headquarters.

March 14, I was ordered to march with the First and Second Brigades and strike the Central Railroad bridge over South Anna. I reached Taylorsville, eighteen miles distant, at 4 p. m., and immediately ordered the Second Massachusetts Cavalry to advance and destroy the bridge, which was three miles to the left. I ordered the Fifth U. S. Cavalry to follow and cover the Second Massachusetts and charge the bridge, if there was any opposition, and if it could be crossed. I at the same time directed the Sixth Pennsylvania to advance to the long bridge on the Fredericksburg railroad, which was directly in my front, and to destroy that structure. The Sixth U. S. Cavalry was ordered to cover the work. Major Drew, of the division staff, accompanied the Fifth U. S. Cavalry, and Major Dana, assistant adjutant-general, the Sixth Pennsylvania. The Fifth U. S. [Cavalry], taking a different route, reached the bridge before the Second Massachusetts, and the advance, under Lieutenant Hastings, dismounting, charged across the bridge, routed the enemy from behind his works, capturing three 3-inch rifled guns, with caissons, &c. The enemy rallied 800 yards in front and attempted to charge, but the gallant Fifth loaded and turned his own guns upon him, and a few rounds sufficed to drive him from the field.

Before midnight the bridge was completely destroyed, as was also the Fredericksburg railroad bridge. In the meantime I had detailed strong working parties to destroy the two railroad bridges over the Little River, a work which was fully accomplished before daylight.

March 15, at daylight one regiment of the First Brigade was sent to destroy the bridge of Fredericksburg railroad across the North Anna. Another regiment of the same brigade was ordered to destroy the trestle-work over the swamp at Hanover Junction, together with the depot and Government property at that place. At an early hour I received orders from cavalry headquarters to cross the South Anna and advance to Hanover Court-House. As the river could not be forded, and no bridge existed in the vicinity, the work was allowed to go on while a crossing was sought for. As soon as the bridge was found, two miles to the right, the parties were called in, and the First Michigan Cavalry was ordered to cross, advance to Hanover Court-House, and open communication with General Custer at Ashland. The Reserve Brigade followed at once, and the command was about to advance when orders were received to halt and await further developments. Strong scouting parties were thrown out on the line between Ashland and Hanover Court-House, at which latter place Colonel Maxwell, with the First Michigan, continued to maintain his position, after driving an equal force of the enemy from the town. At 5 p. m. the division was ordered to return and cross the North Anna at Oxford, near which the command encamped. The bridge across the South Anna was destroyed before Colonel Maxwell reached it, although I had a guard with positive orders that it should not be destroyed until he came in. With some difficulty he found a ford and crossed safely.

March 16, the division marched in rear of the trains to Mangohick Church, and encamped.

March 17, the division marched by Aylett's to King William Court-House, and encamped.

March 18, the division marched in rear of the trains to the Pamunkey, at Indian town, and encamped.

March 19, the division crossed the Pamunkey on the railroad [bridge], and encamped near the White House.

The raid has been a trying and severe one on both men and horses, but hard as the latter were worked, they have suffered far more from disease than from fatigue, and I can say with confidence that were it not for the ravages of grease heel, and rotten hoof, and black tongue, that the loss of horses would have been comparatively slight in this command. The conduct of men and officers has been admirable whenever there was work to do. Such excesses as may have been committed while foraging are chargeable to the lawless men, whom of late there has been scant opportunity to ferret out and punish. The brigade commanders, Brigadier-General Gibbs and Colonels Stagg and Fitzhugh, have, one and all, been prompt and efficient in the execution of orders intrusted to them. In this connection I would respectfully invite attention to the fact that Colonel Fitzhugh, although without previous experience to command a brigade, or even a regiment, has displayed an amount of tact, decision, and judgment that entitles him to the confidence of his superiors. To the division staff I am under many obligations for the willing and cheerful assistance they have invariably rendered me. The untiring energy of Major Drew, division inspector, and Major Dana, assistant adjutant-general, is too well-known to require mention here. They have rendered me marked and valuable service. Lieutenant Wiggins, signal officer, cheerfully volunteered his services on all occasions, and shrank from no duty, however arduous. Captain Halberstadt, Lieutenants Owen, Trimble, Sweatman, and Crocker, and Assistant-Surgeon Williams, were most efficient.

Inclosed please find list of property captured and destroyed by this division, together with reports of brigade commanders. Attention is respectfully invited to the latter, as showing in detail the best amount of labor performed by the command; also to the valuable service rendered by that gallant regiment, the Fifth U. S. Cavalry, under Captain Leib, in charging the South Anna bridge before the enemy could occupy his works in force.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. C. DEVIN,

Brig. Gen., Comdg. First Cavalry Div., Army of the Shenandoah.

Capt. J. SPREADBURY,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Hdqrs. Cavalry.

[Inclosure.]

Schedule of property and public works captured and destroyed by the First Cavalry Division from February 27 to March 18, 1865:

James River and Kanawha Canal, with all boats plying thereon, and depots with their contents, &c., destroyed for a space of ninety-eight miles from a point three miles west of Duguidsville to Goochland Court-House, as follows: 45 canal locks burned and destroyed; 3 large and deep breaches in canal; 5 aqueducts destroyed; 39 canal and road bridges destroyed; 2 naval repair shops, with machinery; 3 saw-mills; 2 steam canal dredges; 1 machine-shop and forge; 1 lumber yard; 1 foundry; 21 warehouses, containing 540 hogsheads of tobacco; 8 boxes of tobacco; 336 sacks of salt; 12 barrels of potash; 24 canal boats loaded with grain, commissary, quartermaster's, ordnance, and hospital supplies, including 9,600 shell, &c.; 6 flat boats, loaded as above. Railroad property destroyed as follows: 3 miles of Virginia Central Railroad south of Charlottesville—ties burned, rails heated, bent, and twisted; 8 miles of Virginia Central Railroad between Tolersville and Frederick's Hall—ties burned, and rails heated, bent, and twisted; 4 railroad depots, tanks, and buildings; 4 railroad cars; 400 cords of wood. Bridges: Iron bridge at Waynesborough blown up; bridge on Virginia Central Railroad over South Anna, 400 feet, burned; bridge on Virginia Central Railroad over Little River, 200 feet, burned; 2 bridges on Virginia Central Railroad over Morso Creek, 50 feet, burned; bridge on the Richmond and Potomac Railroad over South Anna, 600 feet, burned; bridge on the Richmond and Potomac Railroad over North Anna, 300 feet, burned; bridge on Richmond and Potomac Railroad over Little River, 200 feet, burned; trestle-work and swamp at Hanover Junction, 400 feet, burned; 7 miles of telegraph. In Government depots: 3,000 pairs of pants; 2,000 drawers and shirts; 1,000 shelter-tents; 1,000 grain sacks; 500 saddle-trees; 100 sides harness leather; 400 gross buckles and rings; 1 barrel oil. Miscellaneous property: 1 cloth mill, filled with machinery and in full operation, containing an immense amount of Confederate gray cloth and 1,500 pounds of wool; 2 cotton mills with 35 bales of cotton; 1 candle factory, containing 1,000 pounds candles; 3 tanneries, filled with hides and leather; 7 flour and grist mills, containing 1,500 bushels of wheat and 400 barrels of flour, 18 wagon-loads of grain and commissary stores. The jail at Goochland, which had been used for the imprisonment of Federal soldiers, was also destroyed.

The destruction of property enumerated in the schedule was thorough and complete. The command captured 90 prisoners of war, 436 horses, 248 mules, 3 pieces rifled artillery, and a quantity of shell, small-arms, ammunition, &c.

THOS. C. DEVIN,
Brig. Gen., Comdg. First Cavalry Div., Army of the Shenandoah.

No. 5.

Report of Col. Peter Stagg, First Michigan Cavalry, commanding First Brigade.

HDQRS. FIRST BRIGADE, FIRST CAVALRY DIVISION,
ARMY OF THE SHENANDOAH,
Near White House, Va., March 22, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of this brigade from the 27th day of February to the 18th day of March, 1865:

February 27, brigade broke camp at Camp Russell, Va., at 5 a. m., and marched up the Valley pike, through Newtown, Middletown, Strasburg, and Woodstock, and encamped one mile and a half from that place. February 28, marched at 6 a. m. up the pike, through Mount Jackson, and encamped at Lacey's Spring. March 1, marched at 6 a. m. up the pike, and encamped within five miles of Staunton. At 8 p. m. I received orders to go through Staunton out on the Waynesborough road and burn the railroad bridge across Christian's Creek, five miles from Staunton. I was detained until after midnight by one of my regiments, which was on picket. I met with but slight opposition, although I found the enemy in small force within 1,000 yards of our lines. I intrusted the destruction of the bridge to Lieut. Col. G. R. Maxwell, First Michigan Cavalry, who with a dismounted force piled fence rails on the bridge. He being fearful the flames would not consume the timbers, as it was beginning to rain, cut the timbers with axes until the heat drove him away. After remaining here about an hour and a half I returned to Staunton. The corps then came up, and I moved with the division to near Fishersville and encamped. March 3, brigade moved at 7 a. m. through Waynesborough and across the Blue Ridge at Rockfish Gap to Ivy Station and encamped. Before starting in the morning the Twenty-fifth New York Cavalry was detached, together with other regiments, to guard to Winchester the prisoners and guns taken the previous day by General Custer's division from General Early at Waynesborough. March 4, I moved with my brigade at 8 a. m., escorting army and corps headquarters wagons to Charlottesville and encamped. March 5, with my brigade and two regiments of the Second Brigade I destroyed three miles of railroad on the Orange and Alexandria road toward Lynchburg. March 6, marched at 8 a. m. through Scottsville, on the James, to Howardsville. Lieut. Col. G. R. Maxwell, First Michigan Cavalry, with 300 men, moved at the same time down the Rivanna and destroyed the bridge at Palmyra, 1 flouring mill, 1 cotton mill, 500 bushels of wheat, 400 barrels flour, 2 tons of cotton, and 1,500 pounds wool. March 7, marched at 11 a. m.; after partially destroying the aqueduct across Rockfish River, and cutting the canal bank, moved up the canal to New Market, destroying all the locks, seven in number. March 8, moved up the canal to Duguidsville and back to New Market, destroying 4 canal locks, 2 boats, 2 bridges, and 1 flouring mill. March 9 and 10 were consumed in guarding the train from New Market to Columbia. From Scottsville to Columbia the brigade destroyed 8 locks, 13 canal bridges, 4 flouring mills, 1 warehouse, 60 hogsheads tobacco, 1 boat-house and lumber yard. March 11, destroyed 4 warehouses, 1 mill, 50 bales of cotton, and moved across the Rivanna River. March 11 [12], moved across the South Anna River and encamped at Walnut Grove Gold Mine. March 12 [13], moved to Tolersville Station, on the Virginia Central Railroad, and destroyed one mile and three-quarters of track toward Frederick's Hall Station, where we encamped for the night. March 13 [14], moved at 7 a. m. to Taylorsville Station, on the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad and encamped after burning the railroad bridge across the Little River on the Virginia Central road.

March 14 [15], destroyed the railroad bridge across the North Anna and the trestle bridges at Hanover Junction. The brigade then moved to the South Anna. The First Michigan Cavalry moved down and occupied Hanover Court-House until 5 p. m., when they returned to the South Anna, but not before the bridge across the river was burned. With great difficulty they succeeded in fording the river and joining the command, which moved at 5 p. m. across the North Anna at Oxford Ford. At Hanover Court-House Colonel Maxwell captured two of the enemy's commissary wagons and destroyed a railroad bridge 150 feet in length. March 15 [16], began to move down the north side of the North Anna River toward White House, where we arrived on the 18th.

The following is a synopsis of property destroyed: 4½ miles of railroad, 4 railroad bridges, 400 feet of trestle-work, station at Hanover Junction, 3 breaks in canal, 1 aqueduct, 19 canal-locks, 19 canal and road bridges, 4 canal boats, 1 boat-house and lumber yard, 7 flouring mills, 1 cotton mill, 500 bushels of wheat, 400 barrels flour, 3 tons of cotton, 1,500 pounds wool, 60 hogsheads tobacco, and 5 warehouses.

Captured 54 horses and 37 mules.

The casualties during the expedition were 5 wounded and 4 missing. The brigade marched during this time 370 miles.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. STAGG,

Colonel First Michigan Cavalry, Commanding.

Maj. A. E. DANA,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 6.

Report of Col. Charles L. Fitzhugh, Sixth New York Cavalry, commanding Second Brigade.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND BRIGADE, CAVALRY DIVISION,
White House, Va., March 19, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to forward the following report of the operations of the Second Brigade, First Cavalry Division, during the late cavalry expedition:

The brigade left Winchester with the cavalry of the Valley, February 27, 1865, and marched without incident of importance by the Valley pike to Staunton, arriving there March 2, having seen no enemy by the way but a small party of fifty cavalry, which made a demonstration on right flank of the brigade February 28, but were easily repulsed by a squadron from Sixth New York Cavalry. Near Staunton a detachment of 300 men from Twentieth Pennsylvania, under Major Douglass, was sent to Swoope's Station, eight miles west of Staunton, for the destruction of rebel Government property there. The expedition was highly successful, destroying a large amount of valuable quartermaster's and commissary stores, viz, the depot and four barns in the vicinity, containing the following amount of stores: 3,000 pairs of boots, a like number of shirts, drawers, pants, jackets, and blankets; 50,000 pounds of ham and bacon, and a small quantity of ordnance stores, consisting of small-arms and ammunition. At Staunton the Fourth New York (120 strong) and 257 men with unserviceable horses, under Lieutenant-Colonel Nichols, of the Ninth New York, were sent to the rear, as part of the escort to prisoners and guns captured by Third Division at Waynesborough. The Sixth New York, Major White commanding, were left at Staunton for the destruction of rebel property there, and reported to me at night, having destroyed 17 stage coaches, 60 wagons, 1 tannery, containing a large quantity of leather, and 1 Government blacksmith shop.

Leaving Staunton March 3, the brigade marched with the division through Waynesborough and Rockfish Gap, burning a large tannery by the way, and camped seven miles west of Charlottesville; distance made, twenty-nine miles. Arrived at Charlottesville on the 4th of March, and on the 5th the Sixth New York, Ninth New York, and Seventeenth Pennsylvania were detached and sent to assist in the destruction of the Orange and Alexandria Railroad south of Charlottesville. This work was done most effectually, the regiments named demolishing the road for a distance of two miles, burning the ties and heating and bending every rail, and burning two bridges, each fifty feet in length. A rebel caisson, concealed near camp, was also destroyed here. At Charlottesville also was destroyed 2,000 pounds of tobacco, 15 wagons loaded with corn, wheat, tobacco, and flour; also a tannery containing 1,000 hides. The command was supplied at Charlottesville with seven days' rations of sugar, coffee, and salt, and marched, March 6, through Scottsville to Howardsville, at the mouth of Rockfish River, on the James, making a march of thirty-three miles and destroying effectually one canal lock at Scottsville. The First New York Dragoons, Major Smith commanding, was sent from Howardsville, March 6, with instructions to proceed rapidly to Hardwicksville, twelve miles up the river, and to use his utmost exertions to seize and hold the bridge at that point. The attempt was a failure, Major Smith reaching the bridge at early dawn just in time to see it destroyed by fire. It was impossible to save the bridge, each end being filled with straw and a man stationed ready to apply a match on the slightest indication of a hostile approach. Major Smith contented himself with destroying 336 sacks of salt, 4 bales of cotton, and a large quantity of tobacco, and then rejoined the brigade at Warminster, and, with the Sixth New York, destroyed the locks at that point.

March 8, the brigade was ordered by Brevet Major-General Merritt to proceed without delay to Columbia, to reach there by daylight on 9th, and to remain there until further orders, holding the place and sending back all the information possible regarding the movements of the enemy. The brigade marched at 12 m., reached Scottsville at dark, halted one hour to rest and feed, and then, in a hard rain and through heavy roads, pushed on for Columbia, reaching there at daylight. Two squadrons of the Sixth New York were left to protect the bridge over the Hardware River, and were relieved two days after by Colonel Pennington's brigade, of the Third Division, Major Farmer, commanding the detachment, having captured and destroyed in the meantime three wagons loaded with commissary stores and a number of horses and mules. The march from Warminster to Columbia, a distance of fifty-six miles, was made in seventeen hours, and was a most severe one, owing to the rain and mud encountered. The loss in horses was less than the severity of the march might be supposed to cause, and this loss was more than made up by animals captured on the route. Before reaching Columbia Captain Blunt, brigade inspector, with two orderlies, succeeded in capturing three of Fitz Lee's scouts with their horses, arms, and equipments. Arriving at Columbia strong scouting parties were at once sent out on the Richmond and Palmyra roads, and a small party sent back to acquaint General Merritt with the progress of the brigade. This party captured two rebels, with horses, arms, and equipments, near Scottsville. The detachment on Richmond road, fifteen men and one officer, proceeded to Cartersville, eleven miles down the river, to the site of the old bridge, and returned at night without seeing the enemy, after destroying a canal boat and a large amount of commissary stores. The information obtained by this detachment, as well as that sent to Palmyra, was all to the effect that Fitzhugh Lee's division of cavalry was south of the James River, marching toward Columbia in anticipation of our crossing there. According to orders received from General Merritt there was no destruction of property at Columbia, with the exception of breaching the canal. The brigade remained at Columbia until the arrival of the rest of the cavalry on the 10th of March, and then destroyed two naval camps in the vicinity, containing the following property: 1 valuable steam-engine, a great number of workmen's tools, and a large amount of dressed timber.

March 11, in compliance with orders from General Merritt the brigade proceeded to Goochland Court-House, for the destruction of Government property there. The march was commenced at 6 a. m. and Goochland reached at 1 p. m., the distance made being twenty miles. The advance into Goochland was disputed by a squadron of fifty of the Seventh South Carolina, Gary's brigade, which was charged by Major Dinnin, with one squadron of the Ninth New York, and routed, Major Dinnin capturing an officer and thirteen enlisted men. A strong scouting party sent out on the river road advanced to within eighteen miles of Richmond, without meeting any opposition. The brigade destroyed all the canal locks between Columbia and Goochland, 10 in number; also 15 canal boats, most of them loaded with grain and commissary stores; 2,000 pounds of tobacco, 4 hogsheads of tobacco, 1 large warehouse, 1 dredge, 1 grist-mill, and 1 saw-mill. The jail at Goochland, in which Union soldiers had been imprisoned, was also burned. The command left Goochland at 6 p. m. and rejoined the cavalry at Columbia at midnight.

On the 12th the brigade marched with the cavalry command to within a short distance of Tolersville, on the Virginia Central Railroad, and camped, and the next day assisted in tearing up the track, burning the ties, and bending the rails as far as Frederick's Hall. Marched on the 14th to Beaver Dam, twelve miles; on the 15th to Taylorsville and returned, crossing the North Anna at 4 p. m. at lower ford, and camped at Mount Carmel Church. Continued the march next day and reached the White House without further incident March 19.

During the expedition the brigade has marched over 450 miles, and has destroyed the amount of property shown in the appended list; has captured 51 prisoners of war, 270 horses, and 175 mules. The command has never suffered from scarcity of forage or rations; good foraging parties under competent officers having been able to meet every want. The loss in the brigade has been slight; 1 man killed and 1 wounded by guerrillas, 42 reported missing, chiefly stragglers, who have been picked up by the enemy, and 1 died from disease. The health of the command is perfect; no sick are reported.

I cannot speak in too high terms of the zeal and intelligence of the members of the staff, whom I found at brigade headquarters on assuming command: Captain Muhnken, assistant adjutant-general; Captain Cating, provost-marshal; Captain Blunt, brigade inspector; Lieutenant Chamberlain, ordnance officer, and Doctor Clarke, brigade surgeon, have all performed their duties with energy and ability, and I commend them to my superiors for a proper recognition of their services.

Report of property destroyed by the Second Brigade, First Cavalry Division, during the late cavalry expedition: 6½ miles railroad, 18 canal locks, 6 flat-boats (loaded with tobacco and flour), 12 canal boats, 5 canal-boat loads of tobacco, flour, and hospital supplies; 2 large buildings containing 300 hogsheads tobacco, 1 jail at Goochland Court-House, 500 cords railroad wood, 1 depot, 4 barns, 3,000 pairs boots, 2,000 pairs pants, jackets, blankets, and drawers; 50,000 pounds meat, a small quantity of ordnance (small-arms and ammunition), 4,000 pounds of tobacco, 15 wagons containing corn, wheat, flour, and tobacco; 1 tannery with 1,000 hides, 2 naval camps with workmen's implements, 1 steam-engine, and a quantity of dressed timber, 4 hogsheads leaf tobacco, quantity of blacksmith's tools, 1 boat-load corn, the machinery of a saw-mill, 1 large warehouse, 1 mill, 3 wagons loaded with quartermaster's and commissary and subsistence stores, 4 bales cotton, 8 boxes tobacco, 42 hogsheads tobacco, 12 barrels potash, 8 bales hay, 1 dredge, 1,000 grain sacks, 1,000 shelter-tents, and 336 sacks of salt.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. L. FITZHUGH,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Maj. A. E. DANA,
Assistant Adjutant-General, First Cavalry Division

No. 7.

Report of Brig. Gen. Alfred Gibbs, U. S. Army, commanding Reserve Brigade.

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY RESERVE BRIGADE,
Camp near White House, Va., March 21, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with instructions from headquarters First Cavalry Division of this date, I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of this brigade since leaving Winchester, Va., on the 27th ultimo:

The brigade, consisting of the Sixth U. S. Cavalry, Lieutenant McLellan commanding; Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry, Major Morrow commanding; First Rhode Island Cavalry, Captain Capron commanding; Second Massachusetts Cavalry, Colonel Crowninshield commanding, left camp at Winchester on the morning of the 27th of February last; marched thirty miles to camp, one mile beyond Woodstock. The Sixth U. S. Cavalry and Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry were sent, under command of Major Morrow, Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry, to Edentburg, drove the enemy's pickets from the town, and secured the bridges at that place. On the 28th marched to Laurel [Lacey's] Spring, thirty miles; arrived at 3.30 a. m. on the 1st instant. On March 1 marched through Harrisonburg to within five miles of Staanton, twenty-nine miles. Marched on the Waynesborough road eleven miles, and camped on Christian's Creek on the 2d of March. On March 3 marched to Waynesborough; destroyed iron railroad bridge over North Fork South River; destroyed 1 light steel 3-inch ordnance limber and caisson; also 100 wagons, forges, battery, and ammunition wagons; threw ammunition into river; also a large quantity of muskets, small ammunition, and other ordnance stores, previously captured same day by the Third Cavalry Division under Brevet Major-General Custer. Moved through Rockfish Gap and camped two miles beyond Brooksville, fifteen miles; weather cold and rainy; roads execrable. On the 4th marched eight miles, and camped at Ivy Depot, on the Virginia Central Railroad; burned the depot, water-tank, and warehouse containing Confederate tobacco and commissary stores; roads and weather worse. March 5, marched seven miles; camped near University of Virginia, at Charlottesville. Joined the command, drew rations, burned the tents, and lightened the loads. On the 6th marched without transportation to Scottsville, twenty-one miles; worked till midnight destroying James River Canal, locks, boats with subsistence stores, and bridges. 7th, burned woolen factory with a large quantity of cloth, candle factory with a large amount of candles, lard-oil, &c.; large five-story flouring mill, with flour, corn, and wheat; a large manufactory, machine-shops, and tobacco warehouses.

I regret that a few private dwellings, close to the mill, were more or less charred by the intense heat. No accident or loss of life, however, occurred. Same day marched towpath to New Market, thirty-two miles, destroying canal locks, bridges, stables, store-houses, tobacco, &c. Halted and burned large mill at Warren. Stopped at Howardsville; destroyed large wagon and plow factory, wagon shop, forge; also railroad bridge, and tobacco and subsistence warehouses. On the 8th marched up towpath to Bent Creek bridge, on the James, opposite Duguidsville, and returned to New Market, twenty-five miles. Returned by ridge road. Weather rainy, and return road dangerous and deep in mud. On the 9th moved back to Howardsville, thence on towpath to Scottsville, which place was reached at noon on the 10th; thence moved same day to Fluvanna Institute and Columbia; camped about midnight; distance marched, fifty-six miles in thirty-six hours. March 11, moved across the viaduct and camped two miles beyond Columbia. March 12, marched twenty-four miles to near Tolersville, on Virginia Central Railroad. March 13, marched to Tolersville; thence to Frederick's Hall Station, fifteen miles, destroying sections of Virginia Central Railroad, twisting rails, burning cross-ties, &c.; camped two miles beyond the station near army headquarters. March 14, marched to Taylorsville, on Richmond and Potomac Railroad, twenty-seven miles. Burned railroad bridges (three) on Richmond and Potomac Railroad and Virginia Central Railroad, over the Little and South Anna River, respectively, 1,000, 600, and 700 feet long. Captured 3 pieces of artillery (3-inch ordnance guns), by a few men of the Fifth U. S. and Second Massachusetts Cavalry; turned the guns and fired them upon the enemy. Marched on the 15th across the South Anna; remained in position all day; deployed Sixth U. S. Cavalry as skirmishers. Sent squadron of Second Massachusetts Cavalry to Hanover Court-House; marched back to Oxford across the North Anna and bivouacked, ten miles. On the 16th rejoined wagons; marched through Chesterfield Station to Mangohick Church, eighteen miles. March 17, marched via Aylett's to King William Court-House; camped at 2 p. m. On the 18th moved slowly to White House, where arrived at 2 p. m. Found forage and stores awaiting us. Marched on the 19th across the river, and camped on Hill's plantation. Weather last three days warm and pleasant; roads sandy and much better.

I have omitted to mention that on the 3d instant Captain Capron, commanding First Rhode Island Cavalry, was sent back to Winchester as part escort to the prisoners, captured at Waynesborough by the Third Division, together with sick, wounded, and dismounted men; also that the brigade destroyed the aqueduct at Howardsville and the bridge across the Tye at New Market.

Total casualties in this brigade, 3 killed and 2 wounded.

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALFRED GIBBS,

Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Comdg. Cavalry Reserve Brigade.

Maj. A. E. DANA,

Assistant Adjutant-General, First Cavalry Division.

No. 8.

Reports of Bvt. Maj. Gen. George A. Custer, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division.

HDQRS. THIRD CAVALRY DIV., MIDDLE MILITARY DIV.,

White House, Va., March 20, 1865.

I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my command since February 27, 1865:

At an early hour on the morning of the 27th my command broke camp near Winchester, and moved up the Valley pike, following the First Cavalry Division. The Second Brigade, of the Second Cavalry Division, Army of West Virginia, having been assigned to my command, reported to me soon after leaving camp, and was designated the Third Brigade of the Third Division. Nothing worthy of note occurred until March 1. At 3 o'clock on that morning the Third Brigade, Colonel Capehart commanding, was pushed forward to Harrisonburg, and there awaited the arrival of the main column, when it again moved in advance, skirmishing with the enemy under Rosser, until the North River was reached. Here the enemy had made preparations to oppose the crossing, by throwing up a line of earth-works and barricades on the south bank and occupying them with dismounted cavalry. The long, covered bridge over the North River had also been fired by the enemy, and was in flames upon Colonel Capehart's arrival. Sending two of his regiments to swim the river above the bridge and attack the enemy in flank, Colonel Capehart at the same time sent a column to charge through the burning bridge. The enemy was driven in disorder and the bridge saved. The pursuit was continued to within four miles of Staunton, where the command was encamped for the night. The enemy in the affair at the bridge lost 37 men, including 5 commissioned officers; our loss was slight.

The importance of our success in securing the bridge over North River cannot be over-estimated. Had the enemy succeeded in destroying the bridge it would have compelled a long delay on our part, as there were no fords practicable in that vicinity. On the 2d we moved to Staunton, where the command was halted for a short interval. In accordance with verbal orders received from the major-general commanding the expedition I then marched toward Waynesborough. My orders were to proceed to Waynesborough, ascertain something definite in regard to the position, movements, and strength of the enemy, and, if possible, to destroy the railroad bridge over the South River at that point. The roads were almost impassable, owing to the mud caused by the heavy rains of the past few days. Our march was necessarily slow. Upon reaching Fishersville, six miles from Staunton, our advance struck the enemy's pickets, and drove them in the direction of Waynesborough. Upon arriving at the latter point we found the enemy in force, posted behind a formidable line of earth-works. His position was well chosen, being upon a range of hills west of the town, from which his artillery could command all the approaches, while his infantry could, by their fire, sweep the open space extending along their entire front. The Second Brigade, Colonel Wells commanding, was at once moved against the enemy to compel him to display his force. A short but brisk engagement convinced me that while our success would be doubtful, it would involve a large loss of life to attack the enemy in his front. A careful reconnaissance along his entire line convinced me that the enemy had a heavy force of infantry behind his works, while ten pieces of artillery were in position and completely covered his front. But one point seemed favorable for attack. The enemy's left flank, instead of resting on South River, was thrown well forward, leaving a short gap between his left and the river. The approach to this point could be made under cover of the woods. I directed Lieutenant-Colonel Whitaker, of my staff, to conduct three regiments of Pennington's brigade to our extreme right. Selecting three regiments armed with the Spencer carbine, they were moved, dismounted, under cover of the woods to the point previously indicated, where they were held in readiness to charge the enemy's left. Colonel Wells, commanding the Second Brigade, had been instructed to keep the enemy's attention engaged in front by displaying a heavy force of mounted skirmishers, while Colonel Capehart, commanding the Third Brigade, was ordered to place his brigade in readiness to charge the enemy in front the moment the attack on the right began. The remaining two regiments of the First Brigade were under similar instructions. Woodruff's section of horse artillery, which, to deceive the enemy, had previously been moved to the rear in open view of their line, was again brought to the front, under cover of the woods, and placed in position to open on the enemy's lines. At a given signal the three dismounted regiments charged on our right. Woodruff opened his guns upon the enemy, compelling them to lie down behind their works, while the brigades of Wells and Capehart moved to the attack in front, at the charge. So sudden was our attack and so great was the enemy's surprise that but little time was offered for resistance. The artillery, however, continued to fire till the last moment and till our troops had almost reached the muzzles of their guns. One piece was captured with the sponge-staff still inserted in the bore and the charge rammed half way home. The rout of the enemy could not have been more complete; no order or organization was preserved. The pursuit was taken up by my entire command, and continued through Rockfish Gap for a distance of twelve miles.

Among some of the substantial fruits of this victory we had possession of about 1,800 prisoners, 14 pieces of artillery, 17 battle-flags, and a train of nearly 200 wagons and ambulances, including General Early's headquarters' wagon, containing all his official desks and records. The result of this engagement was of the highest value and importance to us for another reason; it opened a way across the Blue Ridge Mountains through Rockfish Gap, and thereby saved us from several days' delay and marching.

My command encamped that night at Brookfield [Brooksville]. The following morning I moved in the direction of Charlottesville. When near that place we struck a force of the enemy's cavalry, but drove them without difficulty. A deputation of the citizens of Charlottesville, headed by the mayor and common council, met me outside the town and formally surrendered the town. Moving through the town, in the direction of Gordonsville, the enemy was again encountered, and a skirmish ensued, which resulted in the rout of the enemy, we gaining possession of 3 guns and 1 battle-flag. We remained at Charlottesville until the morning of the 6th, destroying, in the meanwhile, the railroad bridge over the Rappahannock River, beside rendering unserviceable about twenty miles of the Virginia Central Railroad. A scouting party sent out from my command on the 5th came upon a party of rebels, among them being Commodore Hollins, formerly of our Navy. In attempting to make his escape the commodore was killed. On the morning of the 6th my command moved in the direction of Lynchburg, parallel to the railroad to that point. All the bridges and trestle-work on the Lynchburg road were destroyed as far as the bridge over Buffalo Run, including the latter bridge. On the 8th we moved to New Market, on the James River, where a cut was made in the canal. On the 9th marched to Scottsville; the following day reached Columbia, where we rested until the morning of the 12th, when we marched to Frederick's Hall Station, on the Virginia Central Railroad, a portion of the division going to Bumpass Station. The following day the entire command was engaged in destroying the railroad track, by burning the ties and bending the rails. In this manner about ten miles of the road was destroyed at this point. On the 14th marched to Ground Squirrel bridge over the South Anna, at which point the main portion of the command was halted, while two regiments proceeded as far as Ashland and returned, meeting no enemy on the route. The entire command encamped near the Ground Squirrel bridge. I sent a scouting party toward Richmond on the Brook pike, which succeeded in capturing a train of 40 wagons and a number of prisoners, including one of General Early's staff officers. Moved at 2 o'clock on the morning of the 15th, reaching Ashland early in the day, where I learned that Longstreet and Pickett were advancing upon that point, with a heavy force composed of all arms. The First Brigade, under Colonel Pennington, was sent forward to hold the enemy in check until the rest of the command could pass that point in the direction of the railroad bridge over the South Anna. The enemy made several attempts to force Pennington back, but was repulsed each time. His most determined effort was made just before dark, but was a complete failure. Having held the cross-road as long as was desirable or necessary, Pennington, in obedience to my orders, withdrew his command, and followed the remainder of the division to the north bank of the North Anna, where the entire command encamped near Carmel Church. From the latter point we marched, via Mangohick Church and King William Court-House, to White House, crossing the Pamunkey River at that point over the railroad bridge on the 19th; encamped near White House.

In the battle of Waynesborough, in which the loss of the enemy in killed, wounded, and captured was upward of 2,000, my loss was but 9 in all. With reference to the conduct of the officers and men of my command throughout the entire expedition, both when engaged with the enemy and while on the march, I have nothing but words of the highest praise and commendation to offer. As a special report will be made, making mention of those who are particularly deserving and meritorious, none of the many instances of personal gallantry and merit, as displayed on the late expedition, are mentioned in this report.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

G. A. CUSTER,
Brevet Major-General.

Capt. E. M. BAKER,
Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Cavalry, Middle Military Division.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD CAVALRY DIVISION,
March 4, 1865.

Report of property captured and destroyed by Third Cavalry Division.

Captured: 14 pieces of artillery, 54 double sets artillery harness, 6 caissons, 9 forges, 800 horses and mules, 150 army wagons, 15 ambulances, 300 double sets wagon harness, 15 double sets ambulance harness, 1 medicine wagon and harness, 15 battle-flags, 1 U. S. guidon (recaptured).

Destroyed: 7 railroad cars, loaded with supplies, saddles, and shoes; 18 railroad bridges, 50 miles of railroad, 30 army wagons, 500,000 rounds of ammunition, 2,250 stand small-arms, 500 wall-tents, 300 pack-saddles, 1,500 cotton quilts, 1,000 pounds bacon, 2 mills filled with corn and wheat, 45 hogsheads of tobacco, 3 store-houses.

G. A. CUSTER,
Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

Capt. LEVANT W. BARNHART,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 9.

Report of Col. Alexander C. M. Pennington, Third New Jersey Cavalry, commanding First Brigade.

HDQRS. FIRST BRIG., THIRD DIVISION, CAVALRY CORPS,
Near White House Landing, Va., March 19, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my brigade during the recent cavalry expedition, from February 27 to present date:

At 6 o'clock on the morning of February 27, in pursuance of orders from headquarters Third Cavalry Division, I broke camp on the Romney pike, two miles from Winchester, Va., and marched in rear of the Second Brigade, Colonel Wells commanding; took the Valley pike and reached Woodstock, thirty miles from Winchester, about 7 p. m., and bivouacked for the night.

At 6 a. m. on the 28th resumed the march, my brigade having the advance of the division. Passed through Edenburg and Mount Jackson, and upon reaching the North Fork of the Shenandoah forded that stream with the brigade. The stream was extremely high, owing to the recent rains, and the current was very strong. One man was carried away and drowned, and many others would have been drowned had it not been for the superhuman efforts of a number of officers and men upon the bank, who rushed into the stream, and at great personal risk brought them to the shore. Among those who were conspicuous in their efforts to save life upon this occasion were Maj. Thomas McClung and Doctor Helm, of the Third New Jersey Cavalry. After crossing the stream I moved on to Lacey's Spring, thirty miles from Woodstock, and bivouacked for the night.

Left Lacey's Spring at 6 a. m. on the 1st of March and bivouacked seven miles north of Staunton. The next day, at 6 a. m., marched through Staunton, following the Second Brigade, which had the advance, and took the road to Waynesborough. Upon reaching Waynesborough the enemy, under General Early, were found strongly posted on the rising ground between us and the town, with artillery in position. Halting my command I reported to General Custer for orders, and was directed by him to dismount three regiments, and to make an effort to turn the enemy's left flank through a piece of wood which he pointed out to me. Dismounting the Second Ohio, Third New Jersey, and First Connecticut Cavalry, and leaving the Second New York and the battalion of Eighteenth Pennsylvania in reserve, I moved to the edge of a piece of woods which concealed the command from the enemy, and which was a convenient point from which to advance, and then proceeded to reconnoiter the ground in my front, with the view to find the best concealed route by which to move upon the enemy. This object being attained I ordered forward the column, which advanced, concealed from the view of the enemy, to within about 100 yards of the woods through which we were to charge. Halting for a moment to take down a fence in my front I ordered the command forward, the Second Ohio Cavalry leading at a charge, and followed by the Third New Jersey and First Connecticut Cavalry. The movement was completely successful. The entire line of the enemy was thrown into confusion and obliged to retreat, many throwing away their arms and accouterments to enable them to do so more effectually. As a result of this movement the enemy lost about 1,500 prisoners (enlisted men), about 70 officers, and 11 pieces of artillery, about 150 army wagons and ambulances, and 14 stand of colors. The Second Ohio Cavalry captured 5 pieces of artillery and 435 prisoners; the First Connecticut Cavalry captured 67 prisoners. My command, being dismounted, was not able to follow up the enemy beyond South River, across which they retreated. The Second Brigade, Colonel Wells commanding, took up the chase at that point. The Second New York Cavalry, Col. A. M. Randol, and a battalion of the Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry (Captain Nieman), belonging to my brigade, did not take an active part in the affair, but were massed and held in reserve. The retreat was so sudden that the affair was over before they could be called up. The First Connecticut also destroyed 52 stand of arms and a large quantity of small-arm ammunition. In this affair my command had but one man wounded; this was the only casualty. I moved with the division that night (March 2), through Rockfish Gap, and encamped on the Charlottesville road.

On the 3d of March we moved from camp at 6 a. m. and reached Charlottesville at 3 p. m. and encamped; the Second New York Cavalry was detached and ordered to North Garden, on Charlottesville and Lynchburg Railroad, and the remainder of the brigade was detailed to destroy the iron bridge across the Rivanna River at Charlottesville. Remained at Charlottesville until the morning of the 6th of March, being engaged while there in tearing up the railroad track and completing the destruction of the bridge.

We left Charlottesville at 7 a. m. on the 6th instant, in rear of the wagon train, and marched to Rockfish River, which we reached at 7 o'clock on the morning of the 7th instant, being on the road forty-eight hours, marching a distance of twenty-five miles. At 11 a. m. again took up the march, still guarding the wagon train and passing through Lovington, encamped at 11 p. m. about three miles from Arrington Station, on the Charlottesville and Lynchburg Railroad, and picketed the road in that vicinity.

On the morning of the 8th, at 6 a. m., guarding the train to Arrington, and then taking the advance, we marched to New Market, at the mouth of Tye River, when we encamped for the night. The following day, March 9, I moved at 6 a. m. and encamped at the crossing of the Columbia road with the Hardware River, five miles from Scottsville.

Broke camp at 6 a. m. [10th] and marched in advance of the division to Columbia, on the James River, reaching it at 1 p. m.; encamped and remained till the 11th instant. Leaving Columbia at 7 a. m. on the 12th I proceeded to Frederick's Hall, on the Virginia Central Railroad, bringing up the rear of the division; arrived at Frederick's Hall at 10 p. m. and encamped. Engaged during the 13th in tearing up the railroad track, &c. Moved to Ground Squirrel bridge, on the South Anna River, on the 14th, leaving camp at 6 a. m. Before reaching it we learned that General Early, with an escort, had passed along only an hour before us. I sent the First Connecticut and a battalion of the Second Ohio Cavalry in pursuit. They came up with the party, but succeeded in taking a few prisoners only, the enemy having dispersed on hearing the shots and the cheering in their rear. The First Connecticut and Second New York marched to Ashland, and returned to Ground Squirrel bridge; they reported no enemy in the vicinity. Moved with the brigade to Ashland at 6 a. m. [15th], following the Second Brigade. Received information on arriving that General Longstreet, with a large force of infantry, was in the vicinity, about five miles from Ashland. I sent the Second Ohio Cavalry out upon the Telegraph road, with orders to form on the right of the road, and the Second New York was directed to form on the left of the road, in line with the Second Ohio. The Third New Jersey Cavalry was placed in position, mounted, to the left and rear of the Second New York, behind a piece of woods. The First Connecticut Cavalry was sent down the railroad, and their left connected with the right of the Second New York, when the Second Ohio was withdrawn soon after. I had, previous to forming, received an order to draw in my command and withdraw to the north side of the South Anna River as soon as the Second Brigade of the division, which was then passing through the station, had cleared the town. It not being thought advisable to bring on an engagement, the enemy not pressing me, I remained at Ashland till sundown, sending out reconnaissances toward the enemy on the different roads, to ascertain their whereabouts and strength. The Second Ohio was relieved from the line of battle and sent down the Telegraph road, and its place in the line was filled up by the Second New York. On the return of the Second Ohio it was placed in reserve at the railroad crossing. The First Connecticut Cavalry then connected with the Second New York.

The First Connecticut Cavalry, commanded on this occasion by Lieut. Col. E. W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, acting assistant inspector-general Third Cavalry Division, sent out a reconnaissance of one squadron toward the enemy from the right of my line, while a battalion of the Second New York moved down the Telegraph road. The squadron of the First Connecticut, accompanied by Lieutenant-

Colonel Whitaker, was ambushed by infantry and cavalry, losing 1 officer (Lieut. J. W. Clark) killed and 2 men missing. This reconnoissance ascertained that the enemy were in force, and that they had both infantry and cavalry. At sundown, as I was about retiring in pursuance to orders received from General Custer, the enemy made a spirited attack upon the line of the Second New York with infantry. They were held in check till the Second New York, which was to bring up the rear, retired. They did not follow as I fell back. The Second New York lost 1 officer and 2 men wounded and 1 man killed, and had 22 horses so badly wounded that they had to be abandoned on the march. Encamped that night north of the North Anna River, near Mount Carmel Church. The next day marched to Mangohick, thence to King William Court-House on the 17th, and to the White House on the 18th.

During this trip my command marched 400 miles, both men and horses subsisting entirely off the country. During the expedition the Second Ohio Cavalry captured 7 pieces of artillery, 1 caisson, 200 stand of small-arms, 7 ambulances, 25 mules, 50 horses, 24 sets of harness, 425 enlisted men, 10 commissioned officers, and destroyed one mile and three-fourths of railroad track, 4 depot buildings, 1 railroad bridge (length 400 feet), and 25 hogsheads of tobacco. The First Connecticut Cavalry captured 67 prisoners, and assisted in destroying 1 railroad bridge across the Rivanna River at Charlottesville; it also participated in the destruction of the Gordonsville and Lynchburg and Virginia Central Railroads, and at Waynesborough destroyed 67 stand of small-arms, which they captured. The Second New York captured 2 commissioned officers and 17 men and 80 horses, and destroyed the station-house, water-tanks, freight-house (containing Confederate stores), and 2 culverts at North Garden, 2 fine railroad bridges over the North and South Fork of the Hardware River, each about 200 feet in length; also a large railroad bridge over Rockfish River, and the station-house and water-tanks at Rockfish and Covesville Station. The regiment also assisted in the destruction of the large wooden railroad bridge over the Meechum River; also destroyed one mile and a half of track near North Garden. The Third New Jersey participated in the capture of Early's army at Waynesborough, captured 1 gun at Charlottesville, abandoned by the enemy, and, exclusive of the Waynesborough affair, they have captured 7 prisoners, 60 horses, and 15 mules. It also assisted in destroying the railroad bridge at Charlottesville over the Rivanna River, and in tearing up the railroad track on the Gordonsville and Lynchburg and Virginia Central Railroad.

To recapitulate, the brigade has captured 8 pieces of artillery, 1 caisson, 267 stand of arms, 7 ambulances, 190 horses, 40 mules, 24 sets of harness, 516 enlisted men prisoners, 12 commissioned officers. The command has destroyed 5 large railroad bridges, about 5 miles of railroad track, 4 railroad station houses and outbuildings, 25 hogsheads of tobacco, and 1 cotton mill.

My casualties were as follows, viz: 1 officer killed, 1 officer wounded, 4 enlisted men killed (2 accidental), 4 men wounded, and 16 men missing. The horses of this command have suffered greatly from hoof-rot, this disease having broken out and spread in the command to a great extent, rendering several hundred horses completely unserviceable.

My regimental commanders, Col. A. M. Randol, Second New York Cavalry; Lieut. Col. A. B. Nettleton, commanding Second Ohio Cavalry; Lieut. Col. William P. Robeson, commanding Third New Jersey Cavalry; Maj. L. P. Goodwin, commanding First Connecticut Cavalry, and the men of their commands, deserve great credit for the zeal and energy displayed by them in performing all duties assigned to them.

Lieutenant-Colonel Nettleton, Second Ohio Cavalry, and Lieut. William Robertson, Second Ohio Cavalry, acting brigade commissary, had their horses shot under them at the affair at Waynesborough, Va.

The Second Ohio Cavalry, which led the charge, the Third New Jersey, and First Connecticut Cavalry, deserve praise for the creditable manner in which they made the assault on that day.

I desire here to render my thanks to my staff officers—Capt. Charles H. Miller, assistant adjutant-general; Capt. R. E. Lawder, Second Ohio Cavalry, acting assistant inspector-general; Lieut. James Moffitt, provost-marshal of brigade; Dr. W. W. Bowlby, surgeon-in-chief of brigade; Capt. A. C. Houghton, Second Ohio Cavalry, aide-de-camp; Lieuts. C. E. B. Voegelé, Third New Jersey Cavalry, S. N. Hinman, First Connecticut Cavalry, and Ray T. Gordon, Second New York Cavalry, acting aides-de-camp—for the able manner in which they performed their duties and for the promptitude with which they carried all orders intrusted to them.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. C. M. PENNINGTON,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Capt. L. W. BARNHART,
Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Third Division, Cavalry Corps.

No. 10.

Report of Maj. Hartwell B. Compson, Eighth New York Cavalry, Second Brigade.

Report of operations of the Eighth New York Cavalry during the late expedition:

Moved with the Cavalry Corps from Winchester, Va., February 27, 1865. Were not engaged until March 2, when we met the enemy, under Lieutenant-General Early, at Waynesborough. Remained in position about one hour and a half, when we were ordered to charge them. The charge was made, driving the enemy from his position, completely routing and demoralizing them, and capturing as follows, viz: Brigadier-General Wharton, U. S. Army, 3 colonels, and upward of 50 other officers of inferior grade, 700 to 900 non-commissioned officers and privates, 5 pieces of artillery with caissons, &c., upward of 200 wagons and ambulances, 9 portable forges, 1,200 to 1,500 stand of small-arms, upward of 900 single sets of harness, upward of 800 team horses and mules, and 10 battle flags; camping that night at Brooksville. After this we continued the march, without any special adventure, until the morning of the 8th ultimo, when we received orders to destroy three railroad bridges, one across Buffalo River, length about 100 feet, two across smaller streams between the Tye and Buffalo Rivers, each about sixty feet in length. One U. S. storehouse was also destroyed near New Glasgow Station. On the 13th instant, at Frederick's Hall Station, we tore up and destroyed about three-quarters of a mile of railroad track and one mile of telegraph. We were then ordered to Beaver Dam Station. In moving to that place we encountered the enemy, numbering about 300 men, commanded by Colonel Morgan. We repulsed them and moved on to Beaver Dam, where we destroyed the railroad track, 1 mile of telegraph, 1 steam saw-mill with a stationary steam engine of 40-horse power in complete running order, with about 100,000 feet of sawed bridge timber, 400 cords of wood, 3 water-tanks, and 3 force pumps.

March 15, destroyed road bridge across the South Anna River, about 200 feet long, near Ashland.

Respectfully submitted.

HARTWELL B. COMPSON,
Major, Commanding Eighth New York Cavalry.

No. 11.

Report of Col. John J. Coppinger, Fifteenth New York Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTEENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,
Near White House, Va., March 18, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders from brigade headquarters, as regards the operations of this regiment since leaving Winchester, Va. (February 27, 1865), I have the honor to state that on the 4th of March the command destroyed two miles of the track of the Virginia and Tennessee Railroad; also, two bridges and two cars. On the 8th of March burned 452 feet bridge across Tye River. On the 12th and 13th of March destroyed telegraph and about one mile of railroad track, between Frederick's Hall and Bumpass Station; also burned a water-tank at Bumpass.

JOHN J. COPPINGER,
Colonel Fifteenth New York Cavalry.
Capt. J. J. MOVEAN, Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 12.

Medals of Honor awarded for distinguished services under Resolution of Congress, No. 43, approved July 12, 1862, and section 6 of Act of Congress, approved March 3, 1863.

| Name. | Rank and organization. | Date. | Awarded for— |
|------------------------|---|-----------------|--|
| Anderson, Charles W. | Private, Company K, 1st New York (Lincoln) Cavalry. | 1865. Mar. 2 | Capture of unknown rebel flag at Waynesborough, Va. |
| Bickford, Henry H. | Corporal, Company E, 8th New York Cavalry. | Mar. 2 | Recapture of flag at Waynesborough, Va. |
| Bowry, Richard | Sergeant, Company C, 1st West Virginia Cavalry. | Mar. 5 | Capture of flag at Charlottesville, Va. |
| Bruton, Christopher C. | Captain, Company C, 22d New York Cavalry. | Mar. 2 | Capture of General Early's headquarters flag (Confederate national standard) at Waynesborough, Va. |
| Carmant, Warren. | Private, Company H, 1st New York (Lincoln) Cavalry. | Mar. 2 | Capture of flag at Waynesborough, Va. |
| Compson, Hartwell B. | Major, 8th New York Cavalry. | Mar. 2 | Capture of flag at Waynesborough, Va. |
| Congdon, James. | Sergeant, Company E, 8th New York Cavalry. | Mar. 2 | Recapture of General Crook's headquarters flag at Waynesborough, Va. |
| Crowley, Michael. | Private, Company A, 22d New York Cavalry. | Mar. 2 | Capture of flag at Waynesborough, Va. |
| Glohen, Charles A. | First Sergeant, Company G, 8th New York Cavalry. | Mar. 2 | Capture of flag at Waynesborough, Va. |
| Harvey, Harry | Corporal, Company A, 22d New York Cavalry. | Mar. 2 | Capture of flag at Waynesborough, Va. |
| Kelly, Daniel | Sergeant, Company G, 8th New York Cavalry. | Mar. 2 | Capture of flag at Waynesborough, Va. |
| Kuder, Andrew | Second Lieutenant, Company G, 8th New York Cavalry. | Mar. 2 | Capture of flag at Waynesborough, Va. |
| Ladd, George | Private, Company H, 22d New York Cavalry. | Mar. 2 | Capture of battle-flag at Waynesborough, Va. |
| Miller, John | Private, Company H, 8th New York Cavalry. | Mar. 2 | Capture of flag at Waynesborough, Va. |
| Moers, Robert | Second Lieutenant, Company H, 8th New York Cavalry. | Mar. 2 | Capture of two flags at Waynesborough, Va. |
| O'Brien, Peter | Private, Company A, 1st New York (Lincoln) Cavalry. | Mar. 2 | Capture of flag at Waynesborough, Va. |

No. 13.

*Reports of General Robert E. Lee, C. S. Army.*HEADQUARTERS,
March 1, 1865. (Received 5 p. m.)

General Early reported yesterday that the enemy's cavalry have moved up the Valley in large force, and halted last night seven miles north of Harrisonburg. To-day he reports them advancing rapidly, and between Mount Sidney and Staunton.

R. E. LEE.

Hon. J. C. BRECKINRIDGE,
Secretary of War.

[Indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
March 1, 1865.

Respectfully submitted for the information of the President.
By order of the Secretary of War:

J. A. CAMPBELL,
Assistant Secretary of War.

RICHMOND, March 7, 1865.

General Early reports enemy at Charlottesville. Divided his forces yesterday, and one part moved toward Lynchburg, the other down the Rivanna. He is probably going to Scottsville or Columbia, and may be making for south side of James River. Will you have the different bureaus notified, that they may save their property? Lomax is at Lynchburg, and all troops under Generals H. H. Walker and Echols have been sent there. Fitz Lee is ordered up the James, with all his cavalry. The want of forage and provisions paralyzes us.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. E. LEE.

Hon. J. C. BRECKINRIDGE,
Secretary of War, Richmond.

[Indorsement.]

ADJUTANT AND INSPECTOR GENERAL'S OFFICE,
March 7, 1865—10 a. m.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.
The different bureaus have been notified.

JOHN W. RIELY,
Major and Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 14.

*Journal of Capt. Jed. Hotchkiss, Topographical Engineer, Second Corps, Army of Northern Virginia (Valley District), of operations January 1-May 8, 1865.

Sunday, January 1, 1865.—Spent the day at home. * * * It was very cold, but clear.

* Omissions of strictly private matter in the Journal are indicated by asterisks.

Addenda. On the 1st of January, 1865, Lomax's division of cavalry was located, one brigade at Burtonsville, one brigade at Liberty Mills, one brigade at Stanardsville, three regiments on picket. Headquarters at Barboursville. The outer line of pickets began at Criglersville, on the left; then, via Madison Court-House, to Locust Dale. Interior reserves at Culpeper Court-House. Vedettes at fords of Rappahannock.

Monday, January 2.—Went to Staunton to hire servants, but did not get one, as they were hired only for grain and at very high rates, men bringing 100 bushels of corn or wheat. The day was quite cold in the a. m., but became quite pleasant. General Early has gone to Richmond. * * *

Tuesday, January 3.—Went over to see the bridge at the river, which the pioneers nearly completed to-day, and then H. B. Sieg and myself went to Staunton, where I hired a servant woman of Mrs. Opie for $50 in specie, or its equivalent. Came back, and hunted wagons to haul wood to-morrow. A fine morning, but it began to snow about noon, and snowed all the rest of the day quite fast. Snowed until midnight.

Wednesday, January 4.—Spent the day at home, looking after hauling wood, &c. Had five men of pioneer party to cut, and a team from there, and Doctor Wilson's and Dudley's teams. Got two loads of wood from Dudley's and twelve from Heiser's woods. Cold in morning, but became pleasant. R[obinson] copying battle maps.

Thursday, January 5.—I went up to Swoope's Depot to see General Rosser. Found him at Colonel Baylor's. Got from him positions of cavalry in fights, &c. Dined with him and then returned home. Munford, with Wickham's brigade, came from Midway to Swoope's to-day. He came by the Parkersburg road to Staunton the same day we went to Harrisonburg after Custer, then crossed to Ivy Depot, back to Greenwood, then to Rockfish and across Tye River Gap. Rosser's pickets are still at Stony Creek, and he has a squadron in Pocahontas County. It thawed and froze alternately to-day.

Friday, January 6.—Spent the morning at home looking after things generally. After dinner self and servant rode to camp at Fishersville. It began to rain last night and rained quite steadily all day. The streams are rising rapidly and the snow is nearly gone, but the frost has not yet left the ground. General Early came back yesterday. R[obinson] is copying battle maps at my house.

Saturday, January 7.—Worked at map of Rosser's fight at Lacey's Spring. Oltmanns at reduction, and James Arthur Wilson began work to-day by copying map of Rockbridge. A fine, bracing day; thawed some in a. m. and froze in p. m. and at night; clear.

Sunday, January 8.—* * * It froze hard last night; thawed some to-day. * * *

Monday, January 9.—Orders came to move camp to Staunton, and this morning the general and all moved up. I went to look for rooms. Had much trouble. Ground frozen hard in the morning, thawed and rained in p. m. Robinson came back to camp. W[ilson] and O[ltmanns] at maps.

Tuesday, January 10.—It rained all last night and most of the day quite hard. Ground still frozen some, but very muddy. Got rooms at Arnall's for $50 a month. It cleared off about sundown.

Wednesday, January 11.—Worked at Rosser's fight at Lacey's Spring and at Hanging Rock. O[ltmanns] at reduction. R[obinson] at copy of Lynchburg. W[ilson] finished Rockbridge. It froze very hard and the day was quite bracing. Thawed some in p. m. General Rosser attacked and captured the garrison at Beverly this morning before day, and took 585 prisoners of the Eighth [Ohio Cavalry] and Thirty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Attacked with 300 men. Colonel Cook lost his leg (commanding Payne's brigade). Snow from six to eighteen inches deep on Cheat and Alleghany.

Thursday, January 12.—Finished map of battle at Hanging Rock, and W[ilson] began copy of map of Western Virginia for Rosser. Colonel Smith went to Lexington. Quite cold.

Friday, January 13.—All engaged as usual. Cool day.

Saturday, January 14.—Worked at battles of Wilderness. W[ilson] copying Western Virginia. O[ltmanns] at reduction. R[obinson] copying Hanging Rock. * * * Little snow in the a. m. Air quite bracing. Rosser at Greenbrier bridge.

Sunday, January 15.—* * * A fine day. Quite mild. Robins singing. * * *

Monday, January 16.—Came to camp early in the morning and worked at Wilderness battles. R[obinson] copying Hanging Rock. O[ltmanns] and W[ilson] at same as before. Major Gilmer came to see the general at night. He is now in command in Hardy County. General Early seems to think we have hard times ahead of us, the supply of grain is so small.

Tuesday, January 17.—Finished Wilderness map and began one of Spotsylvania battles. O[ltmanns] reducing Adams County. W[ilson] finished map of part of Western Virginia for General Rosser and began map of part of Pennsylvania for Major Gilmer. R[obinson] finishing map of Hanging Rock, tracing part of Spotsylvania, &c. * * * Day bracing; hurries of snow. Rosser himself reported.

Wednesday, January 18.—Worked at Spotsylvania, &c. O[ltmanns] finished Adams and began York. W[ilson] at Pennsylvania. R[obinson] helped Colonel Smith to make his property returns. I sent to bureau, &c., for maps last night. Echols' brigade going to Dublin Depot. McCausland's brigade came to Fishersville, and he to headquarters on way to Alleghany and Greenbrier; the Fourteenth to go to Weldon. Cold day; air chilly. Wrote to Rosser at night and inclosed map.

Thursday, January 19.—All engaged as yesterday, except R[obinson], who began copy of Wilderness battle. The cavalry of Lomax's division is on its way westward to subsist. McCausland was here at night, and gave me details of the campaign in regard to his brigade. A fine, bracing day.

Friday, January 20.—W[ilson] finished map of part of Pennsylvania, R[obinson] also copy of Wilderness, O[ltmanns] at York, I at Spotsylvania. Jackson's cavalry went through westward. Fine, bracing day. * * *

Saturday, January 21.—I finished Spotsylvania and began Lomax's Gordonsville fight. R[obinson] finished map of first day in Wilderness; O[ltmanns] at York; W[ilson] map of Western Virginia for Lomax. It sleeted and froze all day; cold; trees loaded with ice. I went home in p. m.

Sunday, January 22.—* * * It misted some, but thawed most of the day; very muddy. Enemy captured picket at Edenburg, which was retaken.

Monday, January 23.—Returned to Staunton early. Worked at Gordonsville and Liberty Mills; completed them. R[obinson] at Spotsylvania; O[ltmanns] and W[ilson] as before. It rained quite hard most of the day; froze at night. R[obinson] copying report to Engineer Bureau.

Tuesday, January 24.—Made maps for actions at Hedgesville, Martinsburg, and Hanover Junction. R[obinson] copying Spotsylvania, O[ltmanns] York, W[ilson] Western Virginia. * * * It froze nearly all day and was quite cold.

Wednesday, January 25.—Corrected map of Western Virginia, office copy. R[obinson] finished battles of Spotsylvania for General Ewell; W[ilson] finished Western Virginia for General Long, and O[ltmanns] at York. Quite cool and bracing. Wrote to Nelson and General Lawton. Finished report at night.

Thursday, January 26.—Made map of routes of Second Corps in May for General Ewell. W[ilson] began second copy of Western Virginia. O[ltmanns] at York; R[obinson] copied battles of Wilderness. * * * Intensely cold. Froze very hard. Cold wind.

Friday, January 27.—Finished route maps and began Hagerstown; W[ilson] at Western Virginia, O[ltmanns] at York; R[obinson] copying actions at Liberty Mills and Gordonsville. Rosser came and gave details of Beverly affair at night, and got from Munford actions of his brigade during campaign. Day very raw and cold. Dined with General Early.

Saturday, January 28.—I made map of Rosser's Beverly affair and the route to the same. R[obinson] copied ———, W[ilson] at Western Virginia, O[ltmanns] at York. A very cold and windy day. I went home in the p. m.

Sunday, January 29.— * * * Mild and pleasant.

Monday, January 30.—Attended trial of Colonel Munford and gave evidence. Finished route map to Beverly and made map of action at Milford at night. Very cold and frosty morning, but the day was very pleasant. * * * Much agitation about peace.

Tuesday, January 31.—Finished map of action at Milford and made map of position of army the 1st day of February, 1865. O[ltmanns] not well; finished York. W[ilson] finished Western Virginia. R[obinson] copying maps for Colonel Smith. A very fine day; warm; thawed; the ice has been ten inches thick. General Wharton spent night with me.

Wednesday, February 1.—Completed map showing the present position, &c., of the army, and made map of McCausland's expedition to Chambersburg. At night made map of action at Guard Hill. O[ltmanns] finished York County; W[ilson] copying King George; R[obinson] copying maps for Colonel Smith's report for January. Colonel Carter came up to say good-bye. He and two battalions of artillery go to Richmond to-morrow. A fine, warm day. * * *

Thursday, February 2.—Reduced map of Tygart's Valley; O[ltmanns] reducing Cumberland County, Pa.; W[ilson] at King George; R[obinson] copying for Colonel Smith. Fine day, somewhat cool.

Friday, February 3.—Reduced Tygart's Valley. At night wrote twelve pages of report to chief engineer, Army of Northern Virginia, of operations of the Army of the Valley, 1864. Some rain.

Saturday, February 4.—I went home in the p. m. Very mild and pleasant; thawed most of the day. Wrote six pages of report at night. * * *

Sunday, February 5.— * * * The wind was quite high last night and it froze hard; it was quite cool to-day.

Monday, February 6.—Returned to Staunton quite early and made route map. We heard of the return of the so-called "Peace Commissioners," with no results. No one seems disappointed. Quite cold in the morning. Day became pleasant, but was chilly. Wrote ten pages of report at night.

Tuesday, February 7.—Worked at route map. R[obinson] was finishing up maps for General Ewell, and W[ilson] tracing maps of routes, &c., for me; O[ltmanns] reducing Cumberland County. It began to snow before day and snowed quite steadily all day. Finished my report of thirty pages and sent it off. Snow about eight inches deep. No cars.

Wednesday, February 8.—Employed on maps for report. Sent General Ewell six maps to accompany his report. W[ilson] traced maps for me; O[ltmanns] finished reducing Cumberland County, Pa. Payne's brigade yesterday got orders to cross the mountain from Lexington. We heard of the defeat of the Second Corps below Petersburg and of General Pegram's death. Fitz Lee leaves to-morrow. A fine day; cooler toward night. R[obinson] finished General Ewell's maps.

Thursday, February 9.—Made map of the route of Second Corps from Hanover Junction to Gaines' Mill; R[obinson] copying map of Wilderness; W[ilson] tracing outlines for me and began Northwestern Virginia; O[ltmanns] finished Cumberland. A fine day; thawed a little; good sleighing. * * *

Friday, February 10.—Engaged on map of battles in Hanover County. O[ltmanns] finished Loudoun. * * * Fine day; thawed some. * * *

Saturday, February 11.—* * * The morning was quite cold, but the day was pleasant. * * * O[ltmanns] began copying Howard County. * * *

Sunday, February 12.—* * * Cold and windy; ground covered with snow six inches deep and crusty.

Monday, February 13.—* * * The day was pleasant and it thawed some, but it became very cold in the evening.

Tuesday, February 14.—* * * Intensely cold morning, but pleasant day; thawed some. * * *

Wednesday, February 15.—* * * I worked at battles near Richmond. O[ltmanns] finished reducing Howard County. It snowed very hard in the a. m., then rained and thawed. Very sloppy.

Thursday, February 16.—Engaged as yesterday. O[ltmanns] began Anne Arundel County; R[obinson] and W[ilson] came back, and R[obinson] copied map of routes; W[ilson] at Western Virginia. Thawed considerable.

Friday, February 17.—Same as yesterday; also, O[ltmanns] and W[ilson]. R[obinson] copied route map from Hanover Junction to Gaines' Mill. It snowed nearly all day. * * * Not very cold.

Saturday, February 18.—Finished map of positions in Hanover County. R[obinson] copied route from Gaines' Mill to Staunton; others as before. I went home in the evening. A fine, warm day; thawed rapidly. We heard of the fall of Columbia.

Sunday, February 19.—* * * Fine day; thawed some.

Monday, February 20.—* * * I worked at map of Fisher's Hill. R[obinson] copied route from Staunton to Washington; others as before. Very fine day; cool morning. Heard of the fall of Charleston. Part of army hospital went to Richmond.

Tuesday, February 21.—Finished map of Fisher's Hill. R[obinson] copied three small maps. O[ltmanns] began copying Fauquier for Engineer Bureau. Wrote in journal at night. A very pleasant day. * * *

Wednesday, February 22.—Worked at map of Winchester. O[ltmanns] copying Fauquier, and W[ilson] at Western Virginia. R[obinson] copied cavalry fight at Milford. The Churchville cavalry started for Petersburg. The day was quite pleasant. It began to rain about 4 p. m., and rained very hard. * * *

Thursday, February 23.—Engaged as on the 22d. I looked over the reports of the battle of Belle Grove at night. It rained and misted all day; foggy in the p. m. Very muddy.

Friday, February 24.—I put positions on battle of Cedar Creek from the reports; then worked at Winchester, No. 3. O[ltmanns] copying Yankee survey, R[obinson] battle maps, and W[ilson] at Western Virginia. Major-Generals Kelley and Crook were brought here by McNeill's men, boldly captured from their beds at Cumberland last Tuesday morning, from the very midst of an army of 5,000 men. Cloudy, but temperate.

Saturday, February 25.—Finished map of battle of Winchester and corrected map of part of Eastern Virginia. Copied from United States surveys for Engineer Bureau. O[ltmanns] reducing Fairfax County; R[obinson] copying Spotsylvania battles, and W[ilson] at Western Virginia. It rained quite hard a good deal of the day and was very muddy. I went home late in the p. m. The enemy is reported preparing to advance.

Sunday, February 26.—* * * It was quite warm and the snow melted rapidly, raising the streams, which got very high. It rained very hard during the night. * * * The railroad bridge over Christian's Creek washed away.

Monday, February 27.—I came back to Staunton, via West View, the river being too high to ford. It was very muddy. A fine day. I looked over some maps for bureau; others engaged as on Saturday. There was a meeting of citizens at the court-house, addressed by J. R. Tucker, A. H. H. Stuart, and others, and a large subscription of supplies and money for the Government was made up. Enthusiastic meeting.

Tuesday, February 28.—We worked awhile, when orders came to pack up, as the enemy is advancing. Came to Mount Jackson last night. Said to be Hancock, with 20,000 men. So we packed up and spent the day on the streets. Much excitement in Staunton, moving stores, &c. Late at night enemy reported near Harrisonburg. A pleasant day. * * * Maj. B. H. Green came back from a Yankee prison day before yesterday, and is with us now. Colonel Smith was at the railroad bridge and finished it to-day. Sent off maps of Eastern Virginia to Engineer Bureau.

2 a. m. of the 2d, and slept awhile at a refugee camp, as I could not find my own.) Our infantry picketed the road at Fishersville, but spent the night in its own camp. General Rosser had but few men, twenty or thirty, to watch the enemy's movements. Pleasant, but chilly.

Thursday, March 2.—Wharton's division was put in line of battle at an early hour at Waynesborough, the left at the edge of the woods northwest of town, and the right at the barn back of Gallagher's, with two pieces of artillery on the right, one just in rear and near the railroad and one more to the right on the river road. After the enemy advanced, four pieces were taken to the left wing and disposed along it. The enemy came on very early and drove in our pickets and destroyed the railroad bridge over Christian's Creek, and it was then reported that they had gone back, and the troops were ordered to the woods to make fires to protect themselves from the cold sleet which was constantly falling; but before the order could be sent news came that they were advancing in force, and the general and staff went on the hill on the northeast of the railroad. About 2 p. m. the enemy came on and formed a line of battle about a mile in front of Waynesborough and on the right of the road, deploying skirmishers along our front and to the left. We opened artillery on them, especially from our left, and did them some damage, compelling them to fall back and breaking their line, and it seemed from appearances through the sleet that they were falling back, but about 3 p. m. they massed, and moving through the woods turned our left flank, which made a feeble resistance and gave way, followed by the giving way of the whole line, and one of the most terrible panics and stampedes I have ever seen. There was a perfect rout along the road up the mountain, and the enemy (all of the force being cavalry and mounted infantry) dashed rapidly forward into the swarm of flying men, wagons, &c., and pursued over the mountain at Rockfish Gap, capturing over 1,000 prisoners and all the artillery and train. No artillery had been posted on the other side of the river, as I had suggested to General Long, so there was nothing to check the enemy. The mud was very deep, and it rained and sleeted all day and became very foggy. The whole army was captured or scattered, and we had no cavalry to aid us, as it was back toward Lexington. The general committed an unpardonable error in posting so small a force with a swollen river in its rear and with its flanks wholly exposed, the left having an interval of one-eighth of a mile between it and the river and with a body of woods that concealed every movement that might be made. The only precaution taken was to have boards put on the railroad bridge for a foot bridge in the morning. The only other crossing was a foot bridge by the roadside, two or three feet wide. Nothing was done to cover a retreat. I had just gone to the fire to warm when the stampede began. I went to the stable and got my horse and rode rapidly across the river, expecting to find artillery on the hill there, and by its aid rally the men who were crossing by the railroad bridge; but, to my surprise, there was none there, and the situation, as I turned and saw it, convinced me that all was lost, especially when I saw general officers rush by me in the headlong stampede. So I rode rapidly on toward my wagon and got my saddlebags and reports, and had my servant mounting his horse when the enemy came and commenced firing and compelled me to go on. I went up the mountain at a gallop, the road full of fugitives and the foe yelling "Stop! Stop!" behind and firing constantly. I left the road near Lipscomb's and took to the right into the woods; was soon joined by another man on horseback, and shortly after by Antrim, of Waynesborough, and we kept on when it began to rain. The Yankees went to Charlottesville and thence toward Lynchburg.

Thursday, March 9.—Went down to South River, but could not cross, so went up and crossed at Waynesborough. Dined at Antrim's and then went on to Staunton, where I found General Rosser. Spent the night there. A fine day. Heard that the enemy was at Tye River.

Friday, March 10.—Spent the day in Staunton. * * * A fine day. Imboden's brigade came to Staunton.

Saturday, March 11.—General Rosser started at 7 a. m. toward Lexington; went three miles beyond Midway; had about 500 men. I went to Fishersville to see about my servant, and then went on and joined General Rosser at Bell's, beyond Midway. It froze quite hard last night, but the day was fine.

Sunday, March 12.—Started at sunrise and crossed the Blue Ridge at Tye River Gap, and went by Massie's Mills and Fleetwood, and halted to feed at Hubbard's. A very fine day. Froze some last night. Enemy reported returning to Scottsville. After resting until dark we went on to Lovington, and three miles beyond to Mrs. Harris', where we put up at midnight.

Monday, March 13.—We started at 8 a. m. by the old Stage road, and crossed Rockfish River to Colonel Heiskell's, and then turned across by by-roads to the Brooksville and Scottsville road at Mrs. ———, three miles from Scottsville; there we fed, and then went on through Scottsville, where the Yankees did a great deal of damage, to Mr. Sprinkle's, five miles down the river road. A fine, pleasant day; roads very muddy. We marched until 10 p. m.

Tuesday, March 14.—We started at 8 a. m. and rode twenty miles to Columbia, where we rested three hours and fed, and then went on to Hudensville, fifteen miles, where we rested for the night at 11 p. m. The Yankees did a great deal of damage at Columbia. A fine day.

Wednesday, March 15.—We started at 8 a. m. and went to Thompson's Cross-Roads; then to Payne's Mill, and, via Salem Church, to the Louisa road, and down it to Goodall's Tavern, and then to Ashland, where we stopped at 11 p. m. The enemy was driven from Ashland about dark. It rained some, but was pleasant.

Thursday, March 16.—We spent last night at Ashland, and General Rosser moved on to-day toward Hanover Court-House. I came on to Richmond with dispatches for General Lee. Attended to some business at the bureau, &c. Went to General Ewell's for quarters. Found General Early in Richmond. A very fine day.

Friday, March 17.—Spent the day in Richmond, getting my business arranged. Saw Major Campbell about maps, &c. Got General Gilmer to send the engineer troops to railroad. Spent the night at Col. Nat Tyler's. Very fine day. General Early went to see General Lee.

Saturday, March 18.—Spent the day in Richmond. Went to Major Campbell's; also saw General Gilmer about the publication of my map. A fine day; trees leafing out; spring weather. Spent the night at General Ewell's. General Early came back.

Sunday, March 19.—Remained in Richmond. * * * General Early informed me that we were all to go to the Valley again. He spent the day at Worsham's. What a man! A very fine day. A large lot of returned prisoners came up.

Monday, March 20.—I started Wilson and William, with the horses, back to the Valley with Major Rogers. I finished my business and got my boxes to go to Petersburg, but the drayman carried them to the wrong depot, and I missed the train, so spent the night with Oltmanns. Fine weather; cool nights.

Tuesday, March 21.—Started for Petersburg at 6 a. m. and got there about 10, and spent the day at Generals Gordon's, Grimes', and Walker's headquarters, getting information for my report of the campaign of 1864. It rained a good deal during the day, and was cool. I spent the night with Captain Hinrichs, at Walker's headquarters. The Second Corps is in the breast-works in front of Petersburg, and the division commanders all have quarters in Petersburg. General Early went to Lynchburg yesterday.

Wednesday, March 22.—Left Petersburg at 6 a. m. for Lynchburg by the South Side Railroad, a very rough one. We did not reach Lynchburg until 8 p. m. Then we tried to get transportation, but could find no officer. The canal to Lexington is broken, so we will have to go via Salem. General Early left Lynchburg in the p. m. of to-day for Abingdon. Pleasant, but cool. The cars are full of our returned prisoners.

Thursday, March 23.—Got transportation and left Lynchburg for Salem at 8 a. m. Reached [Salem] by 2 p. m., and found Major Pitzer leaving on the cars to join General Early. Captain Moore and myself went to Pitzer's for the night. A very fine day. Enemy reported advancing from East Tennessee.

Friday, March 24.—We went to Salem in the morning and got a wagon and four mules and rations, and in the p. m. started for Staunton. Went eleven miles to Cloverdale Mills, and encamped at Langhorne's. Fine day.

Saturday, March 25.—Started at 6 a. m. and went, via Buchanan, to Flaherty's, six miles beyond. Got our own supper, because refused a lodging at Flaherty's. Then went to Barger's for the night. Fine day.

Sunday, March 26.—We continued our journey, via the Natural Bridge, to Lexington. Found the road very rough and some deep mud holes. I spent the night at Rev. W. H. Ruffner's. Major Kyle joins us from here. Fine day.

Monday, March 27.—We went to Ballard Smith's, three miles beyond Midway. Fine day; roads better.

Tuesday, March 28.—We reached Staunton about 2 p. m., the stage only being a half day ahead of us. Lieutenant Flood and party got there in the p. m. After looking up my horses, seeing to my baggage, &c., I went on home. Got there about dusk. Found Jackson's and Imboden's brigades near Churchville. They reached there Monday from Hanover Junction. Fine day; quite warm.

Wednesday, March 29.—* * * A very fine day. Robinson and Wilson went to town.

Thursday, March 30.—It rained quite hard last night and was showery all day to-day; grass and all things growing finely. I came to Staunton and got rooms at the Virginia Hotel. General Lomax was ordered to take command of the Valley District to-day. [Robinson] made map of Rude's Hill, Rosser's affair, and [Wilson] finished West Virginia. I did not do much. There was a fight on Hatcher's Run.

Friday, March 31.—I corrected some maps. [Robinson] made second map of Rude's Hill, [Wilson] copying vicinity of Lynchburg. A pleasant day, but cool. Lomax moved to the country.

Saturday, April 1.—I spent the day assorting my maps and putting all things in good order. Robinson ruled the map of the Valley for reduction and a sheet for the same; Wilson copying vicinity of Lynchburg. I went home in the p. m. A fine day.

Sunday, April 2.—I spent the day at home; rode to Staunton in the p. m. * * * A very fine day.

Monday, April 3.—Spent the day fixing up, &c. [Robinson] and [Wilson] engaged as on Saturday. At an early hour a report got out that Richmond had been evacuated, and then one that the Yankees were coming up the Valley. Gloom pervaded the whole community, and some made preparations for moving away. General Lomax came to town and ordered the impressment of teams to haul bacon, &c., to Lexington. No definite information could be gotten from Richmond. News came up the Valley that 300 Federal cavalry came to Woodstock yesterday. A fine day. Shower after dark. Colonel O'Ferrall attacked the enemy in camp at Haykinstown and routed them.

Tuesday, April 4.—Spent to-day in getting transportation, &c., to move away. Town full of rumors. Richmond has certainly been given up, and Lee has gone toward Danville. R[obinson] reducing Valley map; Wilson copying vicinity of Lynchburg. I corrected Valley map some. Fine day.

Wednesday, April 5.—W[ilson] as yesterday; I corrected Valley map; R[obinson] reducing Roanoke County. The enemy is again advancing up the Valley. Encamped last night at Fisher's Hill and came to-day to Maurertown, our cavalry skirmishing with them. I went home in the p. m. and spent the night. Started Robinson with my maps to Lynchburg. A fine day, but cloudy.

Thursday, April 6.—I came back to Staunton at an early hour. The enemy is still advancing up the Valley; also said to be at Christiansburg. Our trains from Richmond going toward Lynchburg; the enemy at Goochland Court-House. It rained quite hard last night and this a. m. We spent the day in Staunton. Late in the p. m. it was reported that the enemy had gone back down the Valley. Fine day.

Friday, April 7.—Lomax's division started toward Lexington yesterday in the p. m. and went some ten miles, and to-day it went through Lexington and to the mouth of Buffalo Creek. I accompanied it. Supped at Colonel Preston's. We marched until 10 p. m. General Lomax went ten miles farther to the "Rope Ferry." Fine day. Country full of rumors and much excited. Rode forty-six miles.

Saturday, April 8.—We continued the march to-day by the Amherst road to Lynchburg. Got there after dark. General Lomax reached there about 2 p. m. The citizens had determined to surrender the place, and were much excited at the near approach of the enemy from the west, a few hundred; but General Lomax soon restored confidence, and got convalescents, &c., into the trenches; but he soon found that only a small force was coming from the west and that it had retired, so he put his cavalry toward Farmville, as reports came of disasters to General Lee's army, which was at Appomattox Station. We traveled thirty-six miles. Fine day. Peaches, apples, &c., in full bloom.

Sunday, April 9.—We rode around the city to see its defenses. Went also to the cavalry camp three miles down the river. News came rapidly that our army lost most of its train and artillery yesterday, and that there was a fight this morning and the army had surrendered. It was confirmed later in the day, and sadness and gloom pervaded the entire community. Generals Rosser and Munford came in late in the day, and the town was full of fugitives. Cool, part of the day. I went out to General Jackson's camp for the night.

Monday, April 10.—We marched at 6 a. m. toward Danville, via Campbell Court-House. The command went to Pannill's Bridge. General Lomax went by the Ward road. The train and artillery started to-day. I crossed to it from Campbell Court-House, and went across Bridge and four miles beyond to McDaniel's. Saw General Lee's road, going to Danville to see General R. E. Lee, who he gone down the day before. It rained a good deal of the day. Rode thirty miles. The country is full of fugitives from the surrender.

Tuesday, April 11.—We rode to seven miles beyond Pittsylvania Court-House, toward Danville. The division came by Chalk Level to a few miles beyond the Court-House. It misted in the morning, cool in a. m., warmer in p. m. Vegetation quite forward. Majors Howard and Rowland and myself spend the night at Doctor Hutchins'.

Wednesday, April 12.—We went to the division camp at Meeting-House. Heard positively that General R. E. Lee had surrendered himself. A good portion of the division went off last night, and Colonel Nelson to-day disbanded his artillery, leaving everything at Pittsylvania Court-House. I soon ascertained that the Virginia troops had all determined to go home, and that the surrender of General Lee had caused nearly every one to give up all hopes for the Confederacy. Though many had escaped without being paroled, only now and then one had a gun. A complete demoralization had taken place. General Rosser saw the Secretary of War at Danville, and to-day passed through Pittsylvania Court-House toward Lynchburg, where he disbanded his division on Monday last. General Lomax went to Danville to see the Secretary of War. The division melted away during the day, and but few were left to follow General W. L. Jackson when he turned back toward the Valley. Major Howard and myself went to the Court-House, dined at Judge Gilmer's, and then, in company with Colonel Nelson and others, went to Berger's Store and two miles beyond, toward Toler's Ferry. Nearly every house was full of soldiers going home, and we had much trouble in finding quarters. Fine day, but it rained most of the evening and night. Skulkers and deserters are coming out of their holes.

Thursday, April 13.—We started early; crossed the Staunton River, much swollen, at Toler's Ferry. Fed at Mr. Leftwich's, and went on through Liberty to Nichols', on the Peaks road. Rode thirty-four miles. Very fine day. The full spring tide of growth. Vegetation much advanced. Fully six weeks earlier than last year. Some Federal cavalry at Lynchburg. Country getting quite quiet. The paroled men are getting home. We wish to find the wagons to get our baggage.

Friday, April 14.—We started quite early and went by the Peaks Gap to Buchanan, working our way through the blockade made against Sheridan in March. Found everything gone from Buchanan, so went toward Salem as far as Blue Ridge Tavern; then went home with Mr. Obenchain for the night. Fine spring day; apples, peaches, &c., in full bloom in the Valley. Rode thirty-six miles. Heard that Echols had disbanded his force at Wytheville, save a few cavalry with which he had started for the Trans-Mississippi Department, via Kentucky. It rained some late in the p. m.

Saturday, April 15.—I spent the day at Mr. Obenchain's, suffering from a boil on my left breast. Major Howard went to the turnpike to ascertain where the train was. It was quite cool and rained most of the day.

Sunday, April 16.—We went to Buchanan, met Mr. Robinson there, and found where the train had gone to, and where the property had been distributed. Major Howard went back toward Salem, and [Robinson] and myself went on to Lexington; got there about dark and put up with the Rev. W. H. Ruffner. Pleasant day; roads muddy. Jackson's and Lomax's divisions disbanded at Buchanan yesterday until the 1st of May.

Monday, April 17.—We spent the morning in Lexington, arranging some business. Saw Col. George [H.] Smith and General W. N. Pendleton.

Learned many particulars about the surrender of General Lee's army. The disposition is general to submit to the Federal Government in consideration of the mild policy proposed by Lincoln, especially if there be no truth in the many rumors of French recognition and armed intervention. Hancock, in command of Federal force in the lower valley, invites all the stragglers, &c., of the Army of Northern Virginia to come and be paroled on the same terms those were that were captured at Appomattox Court-House, saying they may remain undisturbed at home. Many are disposed to go and seek this parole. We rode on to Brownsburg, and spent the night with Dr. Morrison. Pleasant day. Rode fourteen miles.

Tuesday, April 18.—Went on home, via Summerdean, where we dined at Dunlap's. Got home about dark. The Soldiers' Aid Society of Churchville had just adjourned as I got there. Many of the soldiers have reached home. Found all well at home; not expecting me, thinking I had gone on south. The minds of soldiers much exercised as to what course to pursue. Lincoln's proposition for Virginia to come back as she was, &c., has worked a revolution in sentiment. Pleasant day. Rode thirty-two miles.

Wednesday, April 19.—Spent the day at home; almost sick from my boil. Enemy reported coming up to parole soldiers. Pleasant day.

Thursday, April 20.— * * * Bands of men are marauding, gathering up what they claim to be Government property, but really stealing cattle, sheep, &c., where they can find them. Quite an engagement took place three miles from Staunton yesterday, in which Col. M. G. Harman and his men retook a lot of his sheep and drove off the plunderers. Colonel Harman's horse was shot. Heard that Lincoln had been assassinated. Cool in the morning; pleasant day. Soldiers, &c., all busy planting corn and sowing oats.

Friday, April 21.— * * * Fine day; quite warm. * * *

Saturday, April 22.— * * * Pleasant day; turned cool in evening. Many rumors about French intervention, Lincoln's death, &c.

Sunday, April 23.— * * * The day was quite cool. Reports of Lincoln's death confirmed, also of an attempt to kill Seward. Johnson, of Tennessee, has become President and breathes out wrath against the South. * * *

Monday, April 24.—Went to Staunton. A full bench of justices had been summoned to take steps to prevent the plundering and stealing that is going on throughout the county by bands of men pretending to gather up public property. Mr. Sheffey and Colonel Baldwin made some advisory remarks, and an address was ordered, calling on the people to abide by the laws, &c. It was also ordered to go on with the collection of taxes. Soldier part of the community still in a quandary. Warm.

* * * * *

Saturday, April 29.—I went to Staunton. The Federal troops, about 800, came in at 2 p. m. and went into camp west of town. They were very quiet and disturbed no one. Rosser was here but left in the morning, and Jackson also went on, where, no one can tell, for it is highly probable that all the armies have surrendered since Sherman and Breckinridge have had a truce to agree upon terms. * * *

Sunday, April 30.— * * * Soldiers in doubt what to do. Some of them indisposed to be paroled. * * *

Monday, May 1.—I went to Staunton to-day and got myself paroled as a prisoner of war, with permission to remain at home. There was a large crowd at Staunton, more than could be paroled. Large numbers of servants collected at the Federal camp. * * *

Tuesday, May 2.—The troops left Staunton this morning and returned toward Winchester, leaving large numbers of unparoled soldiers in the community. Rosser and Jackson, with a few followers, left yesterday for the Southwest. * * *

* * *
Thursday, May 4.— * * * Heard of Johnston's surrender. * * *

* * *
Monday, May 8.—Went to Staunton to a meeting of the people called for an expression of sentiments in reference to the state of the country, and to take steps to restore the civil government. Mr. Stuart was made chairman, and a committee was sent to draft resolutions. They reported, through Mr. Sheffey, a series of resolutions, declaring that armed resistance has ceased in this county; that the only way to make our laws conform to the condition of the country, from necessity, is to call a convention on the basis of the House of Delegates, and appointing a committee to go to Richmond and see if the Federal authorities will allow such a body to meet and deliberate. Colonel Baldwin explained the resolutions in some forcible remarks, and they were unanimously adopted. The chairman was authorized to appoint the committee. * * * Federal troops coming up Valley again, said to have encamped at Harrisonburg yesterday.

FEBRUARY 27—APRIL 23, 1865.—Operations in the Shenandoah Valley.

SUMMARY OF THE PRINCIPAL EVENTS.

- Mar. 3-8, 1865.—Movement of convoy of prisoners from Waynesborough to Winchester, Va., with skirmishes (5th) at Harrisonburg and (7th) near Mount Jackson and at Rude's Hill.
- 13, 1865.—Skirmish near Charlestown, W. Va.
- 14, 1865.—Skirmish at Woodstock, Va.
- 16, 1865.—Scout from near Winchester to Front Royal, Va.
- 16-17, 1865.—Scout from Summit Point, through Kabetown and Myerstown, to Shenandoah Ferry, W. Va.
- 17-19, 1865.—Scout from Winchester to Edenburg, Va.
- 20, 1865.—Scout to Kabetown, Myerstown, and Myers' Ford, W. Va.
- 20-21, 1865.—Scout from Winchester to Edenburg, Va., with skirmish (21st) near Fisher's Hill.
- 20-25, 1865.—Scout from Harper's Ferry into Loudoun County, Va., with skirmishes (21st) near Hamilton and (23d) at Goose Creek.
- 27-29, 1865.—Scout from Winchester to Woodstock, Va.
- 29, 1865.—Scout from Stephenson's Depot, Va., to Smithfield, W. Va.
- 30, 1865.—Affair near Patterson's Creek, W. Va.
- Apr. 6, 1865.—Affair near Charlestown, W. Va.
- 11-12, 1865.—Scout from Winchester to Timber Ridge, W. Va.
- 21, 1865.—Surrender of majority of Mosby's command.
- 23, 1865.—Transfer of headquarters of Middle Military Division from Winchester, Va., to Washington, D. C.

REPORTS.

No. 1.—Maj. Gen. Winfield S. Hancock, U. S. Army, commanding the Middle Military Division, the Department of West Virginia, and the Middle Department, including operations February 27, 1865—August 6, 1865.

No. 2.—Col. John L. Thompson, First New Hampshire Cavalry, of operations March 3-8.

- No. 3.—Lieut. John M. Webb, Ninth New York Cavalry, of operations March 14.
 No. 4.—Maj. David T. Bunker, Third Massachusetts Cavalry, of operations March 16.
 No. 5.—Lieut. Col. John B. Mead, Eighth Vermont Infantry, of operations March 16-17.
 No. 6.—Maj. Charles C. Brown, Twenty-second New York Cavalry, of operations March 17-19.
 No. 7.—Capt. Henry P. Underhill, One hundred and sixtieth New York Infantry, of operations March 20.
 No. 8.—Capt. William H. Oliver, Fourth New York Cavalry, of operations March 20-21.
 No. 9.—Col. Marcus A. Reno, Twelfth Pennsylvania Cavalry, of operations March 20-25.
 No. 10.—Maj. William Russell, jr., Assistant Adjutant-General, U. S. Army, of operations March 27-29.
 No. 11.—Capt. Henry C. Inwood, One hundred and sixty-fifth New York Infantry, of operations March 29.
 No. 12.—Brig. Gen. Samuel S. Carroll, U. S. Army, commanding Second Infantry Division, Department of West Virginia, of operations March 30.
 No. 13.—Lieut. Stephen H. Draper, Twenty-first New York Cavalry, of operations April 11-12.
 No. 14.—General Robert E. Lee, U. S. Army, of operations March 5-7.

No. 1.

Report of Maj. Gen. Winfield S. Hancock, U. S. Army, commanding the Middle Military Division, the Department of West Virginia, and the Middle Department, including operations February 27, 1865-August 6, 1866.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI,
Fort Leavenworth, Kans., February 18, 1867.

THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL U. S. ARMY,
Washington, D. C.:

GENERAL: I have the honor herewith to inclose a brief report of the military operations in the Middle Military Division, the Department of West Virginia, and in the Middle Military Department, while commanded by me during portions of the years 1865 and 1866.

The long delay in transmitting this report has been occasioned by the constant pressure of public business, which has prevented me from preparing it sooner.

I request that it may be placed on file with my former reports of military operations now in your office, so that in this respect the records of the various commands which I have held may be complete.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
 WINFID S. HANCOCK,
Major-General, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI,
Fort Leavenworth, Kans., February 18, 1867.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following brief report of the operations in the Middle Military Division, the Department of West Virginia, and the Middle Military Department during the years 1865 and 1866:

On the 26th day of February, 1865 (being then engaged in organizing the First Veteran Army Corps, at Washington, D. C.), I received an order to proceed without delay to Winchester, Va., and to assume command of the Department of West Virginia, and the Middle Military Division, temporarily (relieving Major-General Sheridan), under the assignment of the President of the United States. I left Washington the same day, and arrived at Winchester about 2 a. m. on the following morning, when I relieved Major-General Sheridan, who moved out that morning with the cavalry forces under his command toward Staunton, Va.

The Middle Military Division then embraced the Army of the Shenandoah; the Department of Washington, Major-General Augur commanding; the Department of Maryland [Middle Department] commanded by Maj. Gen. Lewis Wallace; the Department of Pennsylvania, Major-General Cadwalader commanding; and the Department of West Virginia, of which last Major-General Sheridan had exercised the command after the capture of Major-General Crook.

My headquarters were established at Winchester, as the point where I could most readily and promptly obtain information of the movements of the enemy; but Winchester being without the limits of West Virginia, I decided to remove the headquarters of that department to Cumberland, Md., and in view of such change sought and obtained the permission of the War Department to assign Brig. Gen. S. S. Carroll, U. S. Volunteers, on his supposed rank of brevet major-general, to the command thereof; but was notified a few days afterward that General Carroll had not received the brevet of major-general, and with great regret I was obliged to relieve this gallant officer.

Major-General Emory was then directed by me to assume command of that department, with his headquarters at Cumberland, Md. General Carroll was assigned to the command of a district extending from Sleepy Creek to Clarksburg, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; Brigadier-General Lightburn, U. S. Volunteers, commanded the First Separate Brigade, stationed along the railroad from Clarksburg to Parkersburg; the post of Wheeling was also under his command. Brig. Gen. J. D. Stevenson commanded a district extending from the Monocacy to Sleepy Creek, including Harper's Ferry; Brigadier-General Seward commanding the post at Martinsburg, Va., Brigadier-Generals Hayes and Duval commanding provisional brigades, west of Cumberland, stationed along the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the Parkersburg branch of that line.

Two regiments of troops, the men principally mounted, were stationed in the Kanawha Valley, under the command of Colonel Oley. Brevet Major-General Torbert, U. S. Volunteers, commanded the cavalry in the Valley which had been left there by General Sheridan when I succeeded him in the command. Brigadier-Generals Sullivan and Max Weber were under my command at Frederick City. They were unassigned.

Upon my arrival at Winchester I immediately began preparations to concentrate as large a force as possible at that point, and collecting supplies and transportation, preparatory to a movement against the enemy down the Valley.

I found that by the reports there were about 60,000 men for duty in the division, including twelve new regiments from Ohio, Indiana, New York, and Pennsylvania, which had been ordered to report to me. A camp of organization was established at Hallsboro, about four miles from Harper's Ferry, composed of two divisions of infantry, one of which was commanded by Bvt. Maj. Gen. John R. Brooke, U. S. Volunteers, the other by Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas W. Egan, U. S. Volunteers.

One brigade of the First Army Corps was ordered from Camp Stoneman, near Washington, to Winchester, and another brigade of infantry from the Department of West Virginia, under Brigadier-General Duval, U. S. Volunteers, the two forming a division, which I placed under the command of Brig. Gen. S. S. Carroll, U. S. Volunteers. A division of the Nineteenth Army Corps, commanded by Brigadier-General Dwight, U. S. Volunteers, was in position in front of Winchester, covering the roads leading down the Valley. Brig. Gen. James D. Fessenden, who had a brigade of that division, was in command also of the town of Winchester.

In Pleasant Valley, near Harper's Ferry, there was a "dismounted camp" of about 6,000 cavalry, who, at that time, could not be mounted and brought into the field on account of the great scarcity of horses, and the demand for them in the Army of the Potomac. I made use of a portion of these dismounted men, however, to guard the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

Not to go further into details, I found that in case a movement was ordered I could march with about 25,000 infantry, about 3,000 cavalry, and a proper proportion of artillery.

While engaged in equipping and disciplining this force for active movements, either up the Valley, or wherever it might be ordered, I had detachments of cavalry out daily, scouting the roads south from Winchester; and, with the intention of destroying supplies, said to be collected at Upperville, I directed an expedition to that point, under Col. M. A. Reno, of the Twelfth Pennsylvania Cavalry, composed of his own regiment, and the First Regiment, First Corps, under Colonel Bird. Colonel Reno crossed the Shenandoah at Harper's Ferry, and encountered the enemy, about 300 strong, under Mosby, at Hillsborough. According to the reports received by me Mosby drove the cavalry back in disorder, but hastily retired when he met the infantry skirmishers. The expedition returned having accomplished much less than I had expected it to do.

March 30, 1865, a band of guerrillas attacked and captured a passenger train, about ten miles east of Cumberland, robbing the passengers and plundering the mails. I proposed to supply a guard for each passenger train on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, which would have effectually prevented depredations of this nature, but the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company declined to carry guards for their own protection, without compensation from the Government, and therefore I did not furnish them.

On the 6th of April a body of Mosby's guerrillas surprised the camp of the Loudoun County Rangers near Charlestown, capturing a number of men and nearly all of their horses.

The surrender of General Lee's army to General Grant April 9, 1865, rendered further preparations for moving unnecessary. A force was sent up the Valley to parole such detachments of the enemy as might desire to avail themselves of the terms proposed. Mosby, the guerrilla chief, was at first excepted from the offer of the parole, by instructions from the War Department, but afterward, by direction of General Grant, he was tendered the parole by a staff officer, whom I sent to meet him at Millwood for that purpose, but not receiving a favorable reply from him, I arranged to move a large force of infantry and cavalry into Loudoun County, which, co-operating with a force which was to march from Washington City, would, I had every reason to expect, break up Mosby's command entirely, as I had accurate information as to their haunts, habits, places of concealment, &c. It was my intention also, at the same time, to have punished severely those of the inhabitants who harbored or assisted him, but the assassination of President Lincoln, occurring on the night the force from Washington was to have marched (14th of April, 1865), the movement was temporarily postponed, and before preparations to put it into operation had again been completed, the majority of Mosby's force, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Chapman, came into Winchester, and were paroled (April 21, 1865). Mosby and a few of his followers refused to surrender, and moved off, I was informed, in the direction of Lynnhburg.

On the 20th of April, by direction of General Grant, I directed Dwight's division of the Nineteenth Army Corps to proceed to Washington, via the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and the same day ordered Brigadier-General Chapman's brigade of cavalry to march to that city.

April 22, 1865, I received instructions from the War Department to remove the headquarters of the Middle Military Division from Winchester, Va., to Washington City, and, in accordance therewith, proceeded to Washington on the 23d of April; and established my headquarters there, where they remained until July 10, 1865, when, the Middle Military Division having been discontinued, I was assigned by the President to the command of the Middle Military Department, relieving Maj. Gen. Lewis Wallace, U. S. Volunteers. That department embraced the States of West Virginia, Maryland (except the counties of Montgomery, that part of Anne Arundel lying south of the Annapolis and Elk Ridge Railroad, and excluding the city of Annapolis, Prince George's, Calvert, Charles, and Saint Mary's), the county of Loudoun, and the Shenandoah Valley as far south as and including Rockingham County, in Virginia, the States of Delaware and Pennsylvania, headquarters at Baltimore, Md.

While I held command of that department all of the one-year troops of the First Veteran Army Corps (which had been organized by me, under instructions from the War Department) were mustered out of service, on account of the expiration of their term of enlistment, and that corps as an organization was discontinued. A large number of other volunteer troops were mustered out within the limits of the Middle Department during the time it was commanded by me.

In August, 1865, the Second Regiment U. S. Artillery, commanded by Lieut. Col. and Bvt. Brig. Gen. William H. French, U. S. Army, embarked at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, for California.

October 13, 1865, the Second and Sixth Regiments U. S. Cavalry, then stationed in Maryland, were ordered away from my command—the Second Cavalry to the Division of the Mississippi, the Sixth Cavalry to the Department of the Gulf.

I retained command of the Middle Military Department until a new arrangement of departments was made by General Orders, No. 59, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, August 6, 1866, when I was assigned in said order to the command of the Department of the Missouri.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WINF'D S. HANCOCK,

Major-General, U. S. Army, Comdg. Department of the Missouri.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL U. S. ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

No. 2.

Report of Col. John L. Thompson, First New Hampshire Cavalry, of operations March 3-8.

HEADQUARTERS DETACHMENT OF CAVALRY,
Winchester, March 9, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the conducting a convoy of prisoners from Waynesborough to our lines at this place:

Some 1,300 prisoners, including 56 officers, were turned over to me at Waynesborough on the 3d instant, with instructions to conduct them to Winchester. I was furnished with an escort, consisting of the dismounted men and those with poor horses, from all the cavalry, about 600 men, together with seven small organizations, numbering about 600 men in the ranks.

I destroyed at Waynesborough 4 guns and caissons and 6 ambulances, leaving the sick and wounded in the houses, the horses and mules being too weak to draw them. I took 1 gun, with a train of 14 horses and 2 mules. I was provided with no forage for the horses nor rations for the escort or prisoners, except three days' rations of coffee, sugar, and salt.

I encamped at Fishersville on the night of the 3d, and before daylight sent the Fourth New York Cavalry, Major Schwartz commanding, to secure the two bridges between Staunton and Harrisonburg, as the streams were so swollen that it was impossible to ford them. They arrived only in time to save them from burning.

Major Schwartz was directed to inform the citizens of Staunton that a large number of prisoners would pass through the town, and that they must supply them with food. On reaching Staunton I found a few females bringing out a poor pittance in small baskets. I refused to allow them to approach the prisoners, and told the citizens that they could have a half hour to provide food or I should take it from the insane asylum. They brought none, and I took flour and bacon from the asylum, upon which the prisoners subsisted until they arrived at Winchester. I learned at Staunton that General Rosser was collecting his command, which had all been furloughed, for the purpose of releasing the prisoners. He had then only fifty men, with whom he skirmished with the rear guard and prevented foraging except with large parties.

At Harrisonburg McNeill's company joined him, together with about 100 more of his regular troops. He had sent dispatches in front of us to all parts of the country, directing the citizens and soldiers to rendezvous at Mount Jackson to prevent our crossing the North Fork of the Shenandoah, stating that he would follow with his forces, and certainly capture us. I arrived at Mount Jackson at noon on the 6th, and found the river impassable, even for horsemen, except at the ford near the pike. A force of 200 men had collected, and held all the fords. I spent the afternoon in trying to build a bridge by felling trees, but was unsuccessful. The river was falling rapidly, however, and would be fordable the next morning. At daylight I directed Major Brown, commanding Twenty-second New York, with his own regiment and the First Rhode Island, to force the ford above the pike, and drive the enemy from the main ford. This was executed very handsomely; in ten minutes the enemy was scattered in the mountains, and we had taken several prisoners. At this time the enemy attacked our rear, which had taken a position on Rude's Hill, but was repulsed. The dismounted men and prisoners forded the stream in groups of fifty or sixty, holding each other by the arm. It was impossible for a single footman to ford, the water being breast high, with a rapid current. When the fording was nearly completed General Rosser, with about 300 men, made a vigorous assault upon the troops guarding our rear, and was again repulsed, with a loss to him of 10 killed, several wounded, and 25 prisoners. The enemy made no other attack, though I was informed by the citizens that Mosby's men were to join General Rosser, and they would attack us in our camp that night. We marched, however, across Cedar Creek, and encamped in the earth-works at that place, reaching our lines at Winchester at noon on the 8th. I think General Rosser gave up the pursuit at Woodstock. During the night at Mount Jackson the gun we had brought was spiked and the carriage destroyed, as I was fearful that it could not be drawn over the ford, and it might fall into the hands of the enemy. I had no ammunition for it, the cartridges having been taken, by order of General Merritt, to destroy the bridge at Waynesborough.

Lieutenant-Colonel Nichols, Ninth New York Cavalry, who was detailed by General Sheridan to take command of the troops belonging to the First Division, rendered very efficient services. Lieutenant-Colonel Boice, Fifth New York Cavalry, whom I put in charge of those from the Third Division, deserves high commendation. He covered the rear during the entire march. His repulse of the enemy in the two assaults at Rude's Hill was brilliant. The prisoners could not withhold their commendation, but shouted with our own men.

Major Brown, Twenty-second New York, also merits praise for the manner in which he forced the ford, and cleared the enemy from our front.

The troops were all severely tried with labor and hunger, and behaved perfectly.

Our loss was 1 officer (Captain Wyatt, First New Hampshire) and 5 men wounded, and 2 captured. The number of prisoners was increased by 4 officers and 30 men.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. L. THOMPSON,

Colonel First New Hampshire Cavalry, Comdg. Detachment.

Maj. WILLIAM RUSSELL, Jr.,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., Cavalry Corps, Middle Military Division.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY, MIDDLE MILITARY DIVISION,

March 10, 1865.

Respectfully forwarded.

The attention of the major-general commanding is particularly invited to this report. The harassing difficulties overcome, and the skill, genius, and judgment displayed by Colonel Thompson in bringing safely to Winchester more prisoners than he started with, is deserving of the highest commendation and worthy of more than an ordinary notice.

A. T. A. TORBERT,

Brevet Major-General, &c.

No. 3.

Report of Lieut. John M. Webb, Ninth New York Cavalry, of operations March 11.

CAMP OF DETACHMENT NINTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,
March 16, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to make the following report after making a reconnaissance to Woodstock:

I left camp at 6 o'clock on the morning of the 14th instant; arrived at Fisher's Hill at 12 m., where I discovered a small party of the enemy's cavalry, not exceeding twenty in number, filing from the top of Round Top Mountain to the right. I halted the column a short time, when I pushed forward, arrived at Woodstock at 4 p. m., where I found about fifteen of the enemy, but they made well their escape as we entered the town. I stopped the column on the north side of the town, forming a picket-line around the city, and went into camp. At 8 o'clock in the evening my line was attacked in three separate places; the enemy charged the post on the pike leading to Edenburg, capturing one man, and wounding the second. I then established the line again, but the enemy were continually harassing the line, and about 11 p. m. I withdrew the line to the north side of the town, also moving the reserve back about 100 rods, where I was troubled only by an occasional shot. At 4 o'clock on the morning of the 15th I returned to camp, finding nothing to impede the march, arriving at camp at 1 p. m.

Very respectfully,

JNO. M. WEBB,

First Lieutenant, Ninth New York Cavalry, Comdy. Scout.

Maj. WILLIAM RUSSELL, JR.,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., Cavalry Corps, Middle Military Division.

No. 4.

Report of Maj. David T. Bunker, Third Massachusetts Cavalry, of operations March 16.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD MASSACHUSETTS CAVALRY,
March 16, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report as commanding officer of a scouting party ordered from this regiment to-day for Front Royal.

I communicated with the infantry regiment about six miles from Winchester, on their return from White Post. I then proceeded by the Front Royal pike to the Shenandoah River and crossed a part of my force through the North Fork, but found the South Fork too full to cross with safety. Rumors from General Sheridan last Sunday were that his troops, or a part, were between Little Washington and Flint Hill. Rumors are afloat in Front Royal that the "Yankee cavalry are coming through Chester Gap" soon. There are "many rebel troops" in Front Royal and across the Ridge. Five rebels—Meade, Horton, Eddy, and two brothers Hughes, five in all—are at White Post to-night. They left town when the infantry arrived yesterday, but returned so soon as they left. I am not familiar with the country about White Post, and having no guide, he having failed to report, I did not attempt their capture.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

DAVID T. BUNKER,

Major Third Massachusetts Cavalry.

Maj. WILL. RUMSEY,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 5.

Report of Lieut. Col. John B. Mead, Eighth Vermont Infantry, of operations March 16-17.

HQRS. EIGHTH VERMONT VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,
Summit Point, Va., March 17, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report upon an expedition from which I have just returned, made pursuant to orders received on the morning of the 16th instant, that I should, with my command, "take a tour through the country in the vicinity of Kabletown, Myerstown, and Shenandoah Ferry, to obtain all possible information as to the movements of guerrillas, and arrest all citizens found in any way concerting with the enemy":

In obedience to such orders, I started at 7 o'clock on the morning of the 16th instant, taking direction across the country, striking the Charlestown and Berryville pike at Rippon. Here I found several citizens upon horseback, and upon learning from them that they were going to an auction sale about one mile to the left of Kabletown, I retained and required them to pilot me direct to the place, thinking to find some of the enemy thereabouts. But, upon arriving at the place of sale, found nothing but apparently a few quiet citizens, who, upon examination, claimed to know nothing of any movements of the enemy, or to have been in any way concerned therein. I should have said that, previous to this, I fell in with three scouts belonging to Colonel Reno, at Charlestown, who informed me that a company of cavalry had that morning passed on the pike toward Berryville, on their way to the ferry at Snicker's Gap. I then passed through Kabletown and Myerstown, to a point near the Shenandoah River; found that the force that crossed the river last Monday was variously estimated from 100 to 200, and that nothing had been seen of them since; that small parties of from six to fifteen or twenty men were occasionally seen, and that they were not to be seen when any sufficient force was likely to encounter them, which I found to be true, as I saw nothing of any armed force whatever. I encamped for the night near Berryville; was fortunate to find shelter for the men, as the change in the weather was very sudden and the rain and hail came in torrents in the night.

On the morning of the 17th started, taking the pike to Berryville, passing through the old camp-ground at that place. Here I learned of another small party of guerrillas being seen on the morning of the 15th, but could not learn which way they had gone. Feeling satisfied that I had obtained all the information I could from the citizens, and that I should not have the pleasure of encountering or capturing any of the enemy, I took up march for camp, arriving at about noon to-day. Distance traveled yesterday, as estimated by the citizens, seventeen miles, and about eight to-day.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JNO. B. MEAD,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. F. W. NOBLETT,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., Second Brig., First Div., Nineteenth Army Corps.

No. 6.

Report of Maj. Charles C. Brown, Twenty-second New York Cavalry, of operations March 17-19.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-SECOND NEW YORK CAVALRY,
March 19, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report that, in compliance with orders from Brevet Major-General Torbert, commanding Cavalry Corps, Middle Military Division, I left Winchester on the morning of the 17th at 1.30 o'clock, and moved up the Back road to Cedar Creek, with the intention of crossing at either Fawcett's or Mount Hope Gap. On arriving at Cedar Creek I found the water so high that it was impossible to cross. I then moved by a mountain road and struck the Moorefield pike, moving up Cedar Valley, crossing Cedar Creek at the entrance of Rudolph's Pass, crossed the mountain by that pass, and struck on the Back road, moving up on that road as far as the cross-road leading to Woodstock, where I encamped for the night. The guide (Sailor) judging from Cedar Creek and all the runs that we passed that it would be dangerous, if not impossible, to cross Stony Creek, and also the fact that it would be impossible for me to reach Columbia Furnace without the enemy being notified of my approach, I decided to move directly to Woodstock, and then to Edenburg, if I found it necessary. On arriving at Woodstock the scouts dashed through the town, followed by the advance guard, capturing two rebel cavalymen, dismounted, belonging to Gilmor's battalion; one or two others managed to get away. From information gained from Union families along the route and at Woodstock, I found that there was no force at all this side of New Market, and doubtful if any this side of Staunton. From the time we left Winchester till we reached Woodstock but two rebel soldiers were seen; all that I conversed with gave the same information, that all the soldiers were moving up the Valley. By one Union family in Woodstock I was told that there was an order for all of Rosser's command to meet at or near Staunton, and that small parties of six or eight were passing about every day through Woodstock and on the Back road up the Valley, and none moving down. The scout Stearns, who had been lying at or near Woodstock for a week, confirmed this information from his own knowledge. His impression was, he told me, that Rosser had gathered about 800 men between New Market and Staunton, and that his intention was to make a raid in some direction down one of the valleys. Among the Union families in Woodstock the impression prevailed that Rosser was gathering in his cavalry with the purpose of withdrawing toward Richmond, instead of a raid down the Valley. Having been frustrated by the high water in my intention of passing to the rear of Edenburgh unheralded, and being certain from all the information gained that there was no force at all this side of New Market, and also from the fact that the detachment of the Eighteenth Pennsylvania had joined me without a pound of forage or rations, I decided to return to Winchester without proceeding farther.

In explanation of my not moving at 6 p. m. of the 16th as ordered, I have the honor to state that when I reported to General Torbert at 5 o'clock of that evening the eighty men that I reported to him as all the men that I could move with, from this regiment, were saddled, bridled, forage packed on the horses, and men ready to move off, as soon as I returned; that on my return to the regiment I found that Colonel Ives, commanding this detachment of cavalry, had made a detail from this regiment for thirty mounted men for picket duty. Thirty of the eighty men ready to move with me had gone on picket at Kernstown. Colonel Ives requested that I would replace these men by others, and it occasioned a delay in my moving of two hours in getting those men back again. I had ordered Captain Johnson, of the Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, on his reporting to me to move out on the pike to the pickets at Mill Creek, and to notify me of his arrival. Not hearing from him within an hour after I was ready to move, I sent an orderly to try and find the command. He found them at Kernstown. Captain Johnson was not to be found; had not been seen within an hour and a half. Lieutenant McKay, the next in command, reported to me. It was then raining in torrents, and it was too dark to move with safety to man or beast. I ordered Lieutenant McKay to shelter his men in the house and out houses of Mr. Prichard, near the pike.

At 1.30 the next morning, the moon being up and it having ceased raining, I moved. Lieutenant McKay reports to me that the detachment of the Eighteenth Pennsylvania left their camp, under command of a man named Johnson and one officer, Lieutenant McKay; that Johnson was a sergeant in some other regiment, was mustered out to receive promotion in the Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry as captain, and has never been mustered in as captain; that he was, or appeared to be, under the influence of liquor; that he laid down under a tree while the command was waiting at Kernstown and could not be found, and was not seen again; that while Lieutenant McKay was absent from his command at Kernstown, reporting to me, quite a number of the men left the command and went back to Winchester, leaving only seventy-five men and one commissioned officer. The two prisoners we captured I sent you by Captain Cadwell, the next in command.

In my decision as to the direction, after finding it impossible to cross at Mount Hope Ford, I was governed mainly, of course, by the judgment of the scout Sailor, keeping in view the end to be obtained. I have nothing to say of him but praise for his general conduct, forethought, and intelligence. I also have the honor to state that I should have reported promptly in person last evening and with written report, but for a violent attack of bilious colic, which made it impossible for me to move farther than the camp. I am still suffering severely from its effects.

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. C. BROWN,
Major, Commanding.

Maj. WILLIAM RUSSELL, Jr.,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 7.

Report of Capt. Henry P. Underhill, One hundred and sixtieth New York Infantry, of operations March 20.

HEADQRS. 160TH REGIMENT NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
Camp Babcock, Va., March 20, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report that in obedience to orders I left camp with the One hundred and sixtieth New York Volunteers at 6.30 o'clock this a. m., and proceeding down the Berryville and Smithfield pike about two miles, took the Rippon cross-road, and marched through Rippon to Myerstown. There I ordered the right wing, under Capt. J. B. Burrell, to take the road, which I was told led straight to the river, and, after reaching the river, to wait till the left wing should join him. I then took the left wing and marched to Kabletown, and then turning to the right, by a farm road, proceeded to the river, striking it near Myers' Ford. I there found the right wing, their route, instead of leading straight to the river, bending obliquely to the left, and striking the river opposite Kabletown at Myers' Ford. With the entire regiment I then followed the bank of the river up to Long Marshy Run, passing Rocky and Backhouse Fords. After crossing Long Marshy Run, turning to the right, I struck over the country, by cross-roads, crossing the Berryville and Charlestown pike, and reached the Berryville and Smithfield pike some three miles from camp. I reached camp at 6.30 p. m., having been gone just twelve hours, making between twenty-five and thirty miles. The river was too deep to be forded at any of the crossings. It must fall two feet before cavalry can cross at Backhouse Ford, and five feet before it can be crossed at Rocky or Myers' Fords. The river is now falling very rapidly. I saw no parties of mounted men, and only now and then solitary horsemen. I heard of but one party of the enemy, estimated at six or seven strong, which was said to have had a skirmish last Monday with a party of our men, and when seen on that day were going off rapidly, having one prisoner. Another party was seen to-day by several persons living between the Berryville and Charlestown and Berryville and Smithfield pikes, and was estimated at fifteen or twenty strong. I could not learn whether the latter party belonged to the Union or rebel army. I think, however, it was a party of our scouts.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
HENRY P. UNDERHILL,

Captain, Commanding 160th New York Volunteers.

Capt. F. W. NOBLETT,

Asst. Adj. Gen., Second Brig., First Div., Nineteenth Army Corps.

No. 8.

Report of Capt. William H. Oliver, Fourth New York Cavalry, of operations March 20-21.

HEADQRS. FOURTH REGIMENT NEW YORK CAVALRY,
March 22, 1865.

I have the honor to make the following report of the scout upon which I was ordered on the morning of the 20th instant:

I left Winchester at 7 a. m. on the morning of the 20th, by the way of the Winchester grade road, traveling a distance of twenty-two miles and encamping at 4 p. m. at Big Paddy's Gap, in Cedar Valley. Started the next day at 2 a. m. for Woodstock, at which place I arrived at 10 o'clock. I immediately pushed on for Edenburg. My advance guard charged the town, capturing a captain of the Twelfth Virginia Cavalry and two prisoners. I learned at this point from a Union refugee on his way from Staunton that there were but two small companies of rebel cavalry stationed at New Market, numbering sixty men, and that they were picketing Rude's Hill with a picket of one non-commissioned officer and six men. I also learned from parties whom I deemed good authority (Union citizens of Woodstock) that General Rosser's headquarters were at Staunton, most of his forces having gone over the ridge south of Staunton by the way of Buffalo Gap. I also captured, on the way from Winchester to Woodstock, two privates of Imboden's and one of Rosser's command.

On my return from Edenburg I halted at Woodstock for an hour to feed horses, &c. Started from there at 1 o'clock, and when near Fisher's Hill my advance encountered a force of rebel cavalry, who fired on them, killing the lieutenant's horse in command of the advance guard. I estimate that their force did not consist of more than thirty or thirty-five men.

I arrived at Winchester at 10 p. m. without suffering any loss, either in killed, wounded, or missing. Two of my men were dismounted, but I succeeded, however, in remounting them.

I have the honor to remain, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. H. OLIVER,

Captain, Commanding Fourth New York Cavalry.

Colonel IVES,

Comdy. Detachments First and Third Cavalry Divisions, Cavalry Corps, Middle Military Division.

No. 9.

Report of Col. Marcus A. Reno, Twelfth Pennsylvania Cavalry, of operations March 20-25.

HEADQRS. TWELFTH PENNSYLVANIA VOL. CAVALRY,
Charlestown, Va., March 29, 1865.

I have the honor to submit the following report of operations in the Valley of Virginia, in pursuance to instructions from Middle Military Division headquarters, dated March 17, 1865:

The command—First [U. S.] Veteran [Volunteer Infantry], Lieutenant-Colonel Bird; Twelfth Pennsylvania Cavalry, Captain McAllister, and Loudoun County Rangers, Captain Grubb—left the bridge at Harper's Ferry at 9.30 a. m. March 20, and that night encamped at Hillsborough, the cavalry moving by way of Lovettsville, destroying what forage could be found in the possession of disloyal persons. 21st, marched to Purcellville, moving the cavalry by way of Leesburg, Waterford, and Wheatland, with the same instructions; the cavalry reported to me at Purcellville, and, with the whole command, I moved to Hamilton, near which point I attacked Mosby's command, who was posted on the road leading to Middleburg. The enemy succeeded in throwing the cavalry into some confusion, but they were easily driven away by a volley from the infantry. I followed them as far and as fast as I could until dark, and encamped for the night on a branch of Goose Creek. My loss was 9 killed and 12 wounded; the enemy lost about the same, including three captains killed, and four commissioned officers wounded, and six prisoners. I did not succeed in bringing him to close quarters again. 22d, marched to Bloomfield, via Snickersville, and encamped, the cavalry destroying what forage could be found. 23d, marched from Bloomfield, via Upperville and Middleburg, to Goose Creek, sending the cavalry to destroy what could be found. I was skirmishing all day with the enemy, who, by this time, had congregated some 500 men. He had some few casualties. At this point met Colonel Gamble with command, Eighth Illinois Cavalry and section artillery, in pursuit of Mosby; marched thence to Purcellville, via Philomont and Union; arrived at Harper's Ferry March 25. My return was hastened one day by the upsetting of a wagon in Goose Creek, in which were the short rations of Colonel Bird's command. I found a good deal of information about Mosby, and think he can be ousted, but it would take some time to effect it. Colonel Bird and his men behaved most handsomely. I inclose nominal statement of casualties in the command.

Very respectfully,

M. A. RENO,
Colonel, Commanding Expedition.

Brig. Gen. C. H. MORGAN,
Chief of Staff.

No. 10.

Report of Maj. William Russell, jr., Assistant Adjutant-General, U. S. Army, of operations March 27-29.

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY, MIDDLE MILITARY DIVISION,
March 29, 1865.

GENERAL: In compliance with your orders, I left Winchester on the morning of the 27th instant, with a detachment of 300 men, to go up the Valley as far as Woodstock, for the purpose of ascertaining the position and strength of any force of the enemy in the Valley. I arrived at Woodstock at 4 p. m., and there ascertained through citizens, and two refugees who came from Staunton on Saturday last, that there was no force of any nature between Staunton and this place. At Edenburg there is a small picket of not more than twenty men, stationed there for the purpose of preventing deserters and refugees from coming north. At New Market there is a small provost guard, left there for the purpose of collecting any men of Rosser's command and sending them to Gordonsville, where it is said that Rosser is collecting what forces he can; also, that Imboden's command has been ordered to report to him. The present whereabouts of Imboden's command I could not ascertain. The most significant information I received was that the re-enforcements sent to Lynchburg at the time General Sheridan was approaching that place consisted of the Engineer Brigade from Richmond, composed of 1,800 men, who were to strengthen the works, and it was the opinion of my informant (a citizen of Woodstock) that no other troops had been sent there.

The inhabitants of the Valley being cut off from southern communication by the destruction of the Virginia Central Railroad, it is difficult to learn anything of late occurrence. Aside from some half dozen scouts at Woodstock and a party of some fifteen guerrillas, who fired into my rear guard to-day at Newtown, I saw none of the enemy.

I am, general, very respectfully, &c.,

WM. RUSSELL, JR.,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Brevet Major-General TORBERT,
Chief of Cavalry.

No. 11.

Report of Capt. Henry C. Inwood, One hundred and sixty-fifth New York Infantry, of operations March 29.

OFFICE PROVOST-MARSHAL, U. S. TROOPS,
MIDDLE MILITARY DIVISION,
Stephenson's Station, March 29, [1865].

COLONEL: I have the honor to report that at 4.30 p. m. the 28th instant, I received instructions from the general commanding to take the headquarters cavalry escort and go along the Martinsburg pike a few miles, and try and overtake and capture some guerrillas who had been reported as committing depredations upon the Union citizens. After proceeding about two miles from our pickets, upon inquiry, I learned they had stopped at the yellow house (Mr. Glendenning occupant), had entered, found them very poor, had taken some food, and passed on toward Bunker Hill; they also stopped at Mrs. Payne's house and took some food. She afterward missed one of her horses, but does not think the rebels took it (Mrs. Payne is a rebel sympathizer). They stopped at nearly all the houses and took overcoats, blankets, and food. They stopped all passengers on the road, and robbed several of them of all their money and valuables; among them were Mr. J. Jackson and Mr. Light. Some citizens coming from the direction of Martinsburg they robbed and turned back. On arriving at Bunker Hill the guerrillas entered the house and store of the postmaster, took all his money from him, and the mail; also some leather and other articles from the store. They obtained food from the citizens and robbed Mr. Rickers' mill for their horses; they took a horse from one of the citizens at Bunker Hill, and horse equipments from travelers on the road. The question of loyalty was not spoken of by any of the guerrillas; plunder seems to have been the object of their raid. At Bunker Hill I learned that there were twenty-six of them, commanded by Lieutenant Russell; they passed as Mosby's men and part of Rosser's command of 500, aggregate distributed through Clarke and Jefferson Counties in bands not exceeding fifty each.

Judging that Smithfield was their rendezvous, we pushed on, but on arriving there found that they had taken the Charlestown road at 4.30 p. m.; they had made a stay of one hour at Smithfield and nearly that at Bunker Hill. Finding there was no probability of overtaking them, and having but a small force (twenty-eight men), I ordered the return to camp, taking back roads and coming in by way of Brucetown, arriving in camp at 12 p. m., having traveled a distance of twenty-five miles.

The citizens are very much frightened, and several able-bodied men had run away on their approach, supposing them to be a conscripting party. This information I received from a lady in Smithfield, husband had started that afternoon to Maryland to avoid them. The young man, David Light, they took with them. I could learn nothing of him in Smithfield. He had not been brought there by the rebels. The citizens believe he was conscripted and taken in another direction. I could not trace them from Bunker Hill.

I am, colonel, respectfully, your obedient servant,
 HENRY C. INWOOD,
Captain, Provost-Marshal.

Lieut. Col. D. S. WALKER,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 12.

Report of Brig. Gen. Samuel S. Carroll, U. S. Army, commanding Second Infantry Division, Department of West Virginia, of operations March 30.

CUMBERLAND, MD., March 31, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report that a party of McNeill's band of marauders, numbering some thirty or forty, last evening shortly before dusk came to the railroad about three miles east of Patterson's Creek; finding a small party of railroad brakemen there, they forced them to take up a few rails and turn the track so as to throw the engine off, headed in an embankment. About 7 o'clock, as the train from the east approached, they fired a few shots, when the engineer immediately whistled down brakes, and the speed was slackened enough to prevent a complete smash-up, though the engine and two cars ran off the track. The guerrillas then entered the cars and robbed the male passengers of their money, watches, and, in some instances, overcoats, hats, and boots; opened some of the mail bags, taking part of the contents; they then fired the train and took off, with two captains and two lieutenants that were on board as passengers. They did not have the train in their possession over twenty minutes; no one was hurt. Troops from Patterson's Creek and Green Spring Run arrived on the spot about an hour after the occurrence. I got the information about 8.30 o'clock, by telegram from Green Spring Run, and immediately telegraphed to the command there to send a company out to Frankfort to try and head the guerrillas off; also telegraphed to New Creek for 150 cavalry to start immediately toward the Romney road, for the same purpose. The commanding officer at Green Spring Run had sent a company before he got my dispatch. The cavalry from New Creek started shortly after 9 o'clock. I sent from this place, as soon as the cars could be got ready, 150 infantry on a train with two engines, to the scene of the disaster. They got there about 11.15 o'clock. The passengers were transferred to the passenger cars sent down for them, and got here about 1.30 o'clock. The troops returned shortly after, finding there were as many men there from Patterson's Creek and Green Spring Run as could be used to advantage in clearing the debris from the track. The guerrillas set the cars on fire, but it was extinguished before doing much damage. The result of the affair is the loss to the male passengers of their money, watches, and jewelry, and, in a few instances, part of their outer clothing; the loss of a small part of the mail, severe injuries to the engine and one passenger and one baggage car, and slight injuries to three passenger cars. Troops from this point could reached there an hour sooner, had not the engine been thrown off track here, just as the train was starting, by the mismanagement of railroad employes.

The first man who arrived here was the mail agent from the captured place, who jumped off at the first shot, ran three miles to Patterson's place, took a hand-car there, and was here in about an hour. The commanding officers at Patterson's Creek and Green Spring Run do not appear responsible. The distance between these two points is about eight miles, and there is no station of troops between them. There is no road along that line. The guerrillas came down through a gorge, as they are liable to do in fifty other similar places along the line of railroad. I have made such disposition, by having the pickets from the different regiments connect, as, I think, will guard against such accidents in the future, but it is an impossibility, with the troops now on the road, to exclude the possibility of such things happening until the country in front of the railroad is entirely cleared of these guerrilla bands. It is a perilous enterprise for those engaged in it, and I do not believe will be attempted often. The company that went out from Green Spring Run returned without any success, but I will not hear from the cavalry that went from New Creek before some time to-morrow, and I hope they will have accomplished something.

Sir, I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. S. CARROLL,

U. S. Army, Brigadier-General of Volunteers.

General C. H. MORGAN,
Chief of Staff, Winchester, Va.

No. 13.

Report of Lieut. Stephen H. Draper, Twenty-first New York Cavalry, of operations April 11-12.

HEADQUARTERS SCOUTS, MIDDLE MILITARY DIVISION,
Winchester, Va., April 13, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report the following as the result of a scout of Timber Ridge, Va., on the 11th and 12th instant, viz:

When seven miles out on the Romney pike I learned from the guide that it was to pilot me that there was a quantity of cotton and tobacco concealed at different places on the ridge, also that about 100 rebel soldiers had been known to be in and about the same neighborhood but only on two previous; hence my request for re-enforcements in order to take sufficient time to find the cotton and tobacco, and remove it, if possible, without loss of life. The re-enforcements reached me at the point above named at about 12 o'clock in the night, when I immediately started, searching such places as the guide advised, but found no rebels. While waiting for there-enforcements above named, a detachment of my scouts had a skirmish with a detachment of rebels, wounded one of the rebels; the balance escaped under cover of the darkness, being about 9 o'clock in the evening. Said rebels represented themselves as being General Hancock's scouts.

Upon my arrival at Mr. Meredith Capper's, where I was informed a quantity of the cotton and tobacco was concealed, I proceeded to the house and found Mr. Capper, and told him my name, business, and that I would require the services of himself and team in removing the goods from Winchester. He appeared very much surprised at my knowing of the whereabouts of the articles, and said he supposed of course I knew the parties concerned, and acknowledged that Thomas Wills, a noted rebel and Confederate conscript officer, was one of the main speculators, also Mr. Julius Waddles, who claims to be a Union man (but who is not so represented by many of the inhabitants in that vicinity whom I believe to be Union). I found 112 bunches of cotton yarn (called by them cotton), five pounds in each bunch, at Mr. Capper's, and 23 bunches at Jacob Oats', near Mr. Capper's, and 151 bunches at Mrs. Joseph Eaton's, three miles west of Mr. Capper's, on Capon River, all stored at the several places above mentioned. There is another man concerned in the same kind of traffic, by the name of Silket (John or Aaron), and there are also 3,400 bunches of cotton reported undiscovered by us, and 15 more boxes of tobacco.

The tobacco delivered here consists of eight boxes, marked to contain 883 pounds. One box was broken open and distributed among the Fifth New York Cavalry by one of the officers belonging to it, after Colonel Boice took charge of it, and eleven bunches of the cotton were missing upon delivery, and, I am informed, some of it was seen strapped on the saddles of the Fifth Cavalry. For reference see Sailor, General Torbert's scout.

Mr. J. W. Hook, a loyal citizen, was unfortunately wounded through mistake, the facts of which you have been informed verbally. One prisoner was taken in bed at Jacob Oats', with arms and uniform lying on the table at his bedside.

Several articles were taken at Mr. Anderson's, a loyal citizen, under circumstances at the time well calculated to brand the parties as rebels, but after the mistake was discovered many of the articles were returned, and the balance will, I trust, be returned soon.

Several other articles were taken at other places, in a cowardly and unsoldierly manner, some by my scouts and some by the men of the column supporting me. Some of the articles so taken I have discovered, and am taking all steps possible to find the rest and punish the guilty parties.

The rebel force above mentioned left for up the Valley on the 10th instant, and the whole country in that vicinity I believe to be free from rebel soldiers.

Cotton yarn seized, 286 bunches (about 5 pounds each); delivered here, 275 bunches (about 5 pounds each). Tobacco seized, 9 boxes (over 100 pounds each); delivered here, 8 boxes (over 100 pounds each).

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. H. DRAPER,

Second Lieutenant, Twenty-first New York Cavalry, Commanding Scouts, Headquarters Middle Military Division.

General MORGAN,

Chief of Staff, Middle Military Department.

No. 14.

Report of General Robert E. Lee, U. S. Army, of operations March 5-7.

HEADQUARTERS,

March 9, 1865.

General Rosser reports that on the 6th [5th], with a few of his men, he attacked the enemy near Harrisonburg, who were guarding prisoners taken at Waynesborough, and captured a few prisoners.

On morning of 7th again attacked near Rude's Hill. Having detained them for a day and night at the river, he caused them to retire in haste, abandoning the only piece of artillery they had and their ambulance. He annoyed them a great deal, and enabled good many of our men to escape.

R. E. LEE.

(General JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE,
Secretary of War.

MARCH 3-8, 1865.—Operations about Warrenton, Bealeton Station, Sulphur Springs, Salem, and Centerville, Va.

Report of Capt. Joseph Schneider, Sixteenth New York Cavalry.

CAMP SIXTEENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,
Vienna, Va., March 8, 1865.

Pursuant to orders from regiment headquarters, I left Vienna, Va., with 200 men, at 4 a. m. March 3, 1865, to report to brigade headquarters, where I received instructions to proceed on the road to Centerville, to encamp in a convenient place, and await the arrival of detachment of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry. About 8 a. m. this detachment arrived, under command of Captain Russell, who ordered me to take the rear with my detachment. We marched on the Warrenton pike to within one mile of Warrenton, where we encamped for the night. March 4, we marched through Warrenton, Lieutenant Goulding, with his platoon, having the rear guard. In this town the Eighth Illinois Cavalry left the column in scores, spreading themselves all over the place, dismounting, and entering the houses. I had a great deal of work to make them rejoin the column. After getting outside of Warrenton I found one corporal and four men having the extreme of the rear guard; they seemed to be vigilant and had their pistols drawn. They were instructed to allow no stragglers behind them. I then rode to the head of my command, ordering the chiefs of platoons to see that nobody would leave the ranks without orders. Not more than one-half hour had elapsed since my leaving the rear when one of the rear guard reported that about a dozen guerrillas had captured one corporal and three men of Company I, Sixteenth New York Cavalry; one man of Company L had been in advance of the extreme rear and consequently escaped. The guerrillas were dressed in our uniform, and the men mistook them for members of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry. There was not a shot fired; they had got into the mountains when I arrived near the rear guard, therefore pursuit would have been useless. We passed Bealeton Station toward the Rappahannock, through Sulphur Springs, three miles beyond which we bivouacked that night. Sunday, March 5, we went through Warrenton, took the pike toward Salem, crossed the Bull Run Mountains, got into the Warrenton pike near New Baltimore, followed it to Centerville, thence to camp.

On this day the Eighth Illinois Cavalry were continually leaving their column, riding as far as one mile from it. I have counted thirty horses dismounted near one house. The Eighth Illinois being apparently permitted by their officers to enter farms, it acted as a bad example on our men, and to stop their following it I threatened my platoon commanders with arrest, telling them I should put sergeants in command if they could not keep the men in the ranks. Crossing Bull Run Mountains from the Salem pike, the guerrillas again (dressed in our uniform) attacked the rear guard; succeeded in taking one corporal and two men of Company K. Two other men escaped. This time our rear guard exchanged shots with the rebels, and when I arrived at the rear, I saw the rebels on the mountains about 300 yards off. I had given Lieutenant Hoover (commanding rear guard) orders to be from 150 to 200 yards in our rear, to be more than 50 yards from his column. I thought Lieutenant Hoover rather slow in his movements, and instructed him to attack the guerrillas with his rear-guard whenever they appeared, which he had neglected before, as it seemed to me he kept marching on while the extreme rear was fighting. About noon a squadron of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry took the rear, after I had been remonstrating with Captain Russell, who then told me our men were continually falling out. But I convinced him that in nearly every instance his men were the perpetrators, not ours.

To force those men to re-enter their ranks it would have been necessary to engage in a fight with them. One of them passed Captain Baker, Sixteenth New York Cavalry, at the head of our detachment, shouting to one of his comrades, "that son of a b— wanted to arrest me," pointing toward the rear, where I was engaged driving up stragglers. One party of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry left the column, went up to a house, dismounted, and entered it. A party of guerrillas attacked them. This was about a half mile from and in full view of the whole command. Captain Baker and the commanders of my rear guard greatly exerted themselves to prevent our men from straggling.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. SCHNEIDER,

Captain, 16th New York Cav., Com. Detach. 16th New York Cav.

MARCH 5-8, 1865.—Expedition from Fort Monroe to Fredericksburg, Va.

REPORTS.

- No. 1.—Col. Samuel H. Roberts, One hundred and thirty-ninth New York Infantry.
- No. 2.—Lieut. Col. Rawley W. Martin, Fifty-third Virginia Infantry.
- No. 3.—Capt. Littleburry W. Allen, Twenty-fourth Virginia Cavalry.

No. 1.

Report of Col. Samuel H. Roberts, One hundred and thirty-ninth New York Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS EXPEDITION AGAINST FREDERICKSBURG, Fort Monroe, Va., March 9, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report of my recent operations on the Rappahannock River:

I left Fort Monroe at 5 p. m. March 5. The expedition consisted of five regiments, numbering 1,800 infantry and a detachment of 300 men from the First New York Mounted Rifles, under Col. E. V. Sumner. The army gun-boats Mosswood, Chamberlain, and Jesup accompanied under command of Capt. J. M. Durell, of General Graham's staff. At the mouth of the Rappahannock I met Commander Parker, of the ac flotilla, who strongly advised me to abandon my proposed route, and land at some point on the Potomac and march across to Fredericksburg, representing that it would take two days to reach the city by water, even if we escaped the torpedoes supposed to be planted in the channel. On signifying my determination to try the Rappahannock route, he furnished me with the gun-boats Yankee and Commodore Read, under Acting Volunteer Lieutenant Hooker, who gave me every assistance in his power. The army gun-boat Mosswood, Captain Harris, led the way up the river. Opposite Tappahannock the transport Northerner, containing 960 infantry and six days' rations for the command, grounded, but was after several hours' labor got off, and did not delay the rest of the fleet. At the obstructions, six miles below Fredericksburg, the Northerner again grounded, and the Harrier, a cavalry transport, was unable to proceed farther. The troops on both vessels were brought up before the next morning. The advance reached the wharf at the city at dusk on the 6th. A squadron of cavalry, under Colonel Sumner, took possession of the town without opposition. Another body of cavalry, under Lieutenant-Colonel Patton, was at once dispatched to the railroad bridge on the Massaponax River, where they succeeded in capturing a train of 27 freight cars, 17 of which were loaded with tobacco and the others with vegetables and corn. A train of 14 army wagons, with 40 mules and sets of harness, was also taken near Hamilton's Cross-Roads. The railroad bridge, a structure 120 feet long and 75 feet high, was burned, and the depot and telegraph office destroyed. A picket of twenty-five men was left to insure the complete destruction of the bridge and to guard the tobacco. The wagons were brought in empty, since the roads were in a very bad state, and as much tobacco was known to be stored in the city as could be brought away on our transports.

The next morning the cars with their contents were burned, and the picket withdrawn. Meanwhile, in the city a thorough search had been made for rebel soldiery. Thirteen were discovered concealed in houses and cellars. At the provost-marshal's office fifty muskets were captured; half of them were Enfield rifles in fine order. The quartermaster's office was broken open, and what few rations were found were issued to the poor. Infantry pickets were established to cover the boats on both sides of the river, and to prevent our soldiers from entering the town to plunder. Cavalry pickets were thrown out on the principal roads to prevent all persons from leaving the city. While posting the latter, Capt. C. S. Masten, of the First New York Mounted Rifles, arrested two rebel soldiers, who fired six shots at him without effect. The two prisoners on being searched were found to be two rebel scouts of Jeff. Davis Legion, by name of Shadburne and Taylor. The former is a notorious guerrilla, and is well known to the Army of the Potomac as a desperado, whose capture has long been desired. It is proper to state that after being taken he offered $3,000 to each of his three guards if they would release him. The names of the guards who refused this tempting bribe are Privates Vandervoort, Holmes, and Glutz, of Troop M, First New York Mounted Rifles. The 7th of March was spent in loading tobacco from the store-houses, and in crowding on whatever other public property could be carried away. The mules were all brought off with their harnesses and eight of the wagons. The other wagons were burned. A small quantity of stores, collected for contraband traffic in the city, were also destroyed. Among these were several barrels of liquor (apple jack) and of tobacco. No private property was molested, and no depredations committed by the troops.

As the water in the river was falling rapidly I did not deem it safe to remain after having accomplished what has already been reported. The force re-embarked at 4 p. m., and left the city, amid the openly expressed regrets of the crowd who witnessed our departure. I brought with me a citizen, Doctor Rose, the consignee of the tobacco which I had captured. I forward him to General Patrick, for the purpose of explaining certain strange statements concerning this property; I would add that his statements were confirmed by common report in the city. Not a casualty occurred in the command. The fleet reached Fort Monroe at 9 p. m. March 8.

Having, in accordance with instructions received from General Grant, turned over the property and prisoners brought with me, I intend, in further obedience to his orders, to start to-morrow morning for the Potomac and the Coan River. Forty-five thousand one hundred pounds of tobacco, 80 bushels of grain, 46 muskets, 15 sabers, 2 horses, and 12 mules were turned over to the proper authorities at Fort Monroe. The other mules and the wagons are retained for further use. A careful estimate of the whole property captured shows its value to be about $700,000 in U. S. currency.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. H. ROBERTS,

Colonel 139th New York Volunteers, Commanding.

Brig. Gen. J. A. RAWLINS,

Chief of Staff of Lieutenant-General Commanding.

No. 2.

Report of Lieut. Col. Rawley W. Martin, Fifty-third Virginia Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS DEFENSES LOWER RAPPAHANNOCK,

Dumsville, March 6, 1865—9 a. m.

CAPTAIN: Two of the enemy's war steamers, and eleven transports with bow guns, have just passed up the river, and are now six miles above Tappahannock. All the boats are heavily laden, and move up the river rapidly without shelling, except at one or two points. Our artillery was insufficient to keep them back. The mounted reserves are following up the river, and will report any movement on shore. While I write two more boats, with a schooner in tow, are passing. The movement seems to indicate a demonstration into the country, somewhere near Fredericksburg.

Most respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. W. MARTIN,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding, &c.

Capt. R. H. CATLETY,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 3.

Report of Capt. Littlebury W. Allen, Twenty-fourth Virginia Cavalry.

APPLEWOOD, CAROLINE [COUNTY],

March 8, 1865—3 a. m.

ly yesterday morning one of my scouts reported the ksburg. I went to ascertain the truth of the report.

I proceeded to Fredericksburg, passing by Hamilton's Crossing. At the crossing they burnt everything of value, some thirty cars, seventeen of which were loaded with tobacco. The bridge over the Massaponax was also burned. No other injury to the road. They captured fifty-six mules and burned the wagons. All the colored drivers but one went with them. In the city they took and carried off some 500 boxes of tobacco. The provost-marshal (Captain Doggett), with most of his men, escaped. The expedition consisted of two gun-boats and five transports, conveying one brigade of infantry, under the command of Brigadier-General Roberts, and one regiment of cavalry, commanded by Colonel Sumner.

General Roberts informed Mr. Slaughter (the mayor) that the expedition was fitted out by General Grant to break up the illicit trade in tobacco, which he had heard was carried on in Fredericksburg, and which he was determined to break up. They left at 5 o'clock this afternoon, and proceeded down the river. I left the city at 7 o'clock, and am now at home on my way to camp.

Most respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. W. ALLEN,

Captain, Co. F, 24th Virginia Cavalry, Comdg. at Taylorsville.

Colonel EWELL,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS,

March 8, 1865.

Respectfully submitted to the honorable Secretary of War for his information.

R. E. LEE,

General.

MARCH 7, 1865.—Skirmish near Flint Hill, Va.

REPORTS.

No. 1.—Col. Nelson B. Sweitzer, Sixteenth New York Cavalry.

No. 2.—Lieut. Olney K. Gault, Sixteenth New York Cavalry.

No. 3.—Sergt. Otto Richter, Company I, Sixteenth New York Cavalry.

No. 1.

Report of Col. Nelson B. Sweitzer, Sixteenth New York Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS SIXTEENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,

Vienna, March 8, 1865.

CAPTAIN: Inclosed I have the honor to transmit the report of Lieut. O. K. Gault, Sixteenth New York Cavalry, concerning the attack on his party of one sergeant and privates of this regiment, en route from Vienna, Va., to Fairfax Court-House, Va., on the 7th instant; also the report of the sergeant of the party made to the captain of his company and referred to these headquarters.

The officer in charge of the patrol was one in whom I thought caution and forethought concerning the details of the march of a patrol in flankers, &c., were his special recommendations. He has been but lately appointed a lieutenant, having received his appointment while a prisoner of war, having last summer been captured while on picket. His recommendation was, I understand, made on his steady habits (being of mature age), and his being captured and suffering in a rebel prison. I am, however, led to believe that the lieutenant commanding was confounded by the sudden and unexpected appearance of a body of enemy preparing for attack, and did not, by manner or example, endeavor to inspire the men to meet the attack, to which effort I believe the men would have responded with gallantry and determination. I am of the opinion this conduct of the lieutenant arose from the misfortune of his having no advantage of experience during the war, and not during his previous life having been accustomed to associations tending to prepare him for such circumstances. The report of the affair coming into camp was much exaggerated, also of an advance in force. I had the command under arms, being in command of post; sent 100 men to the scene of the affair, with orders to endeavor to attack the party, and also a reconnaissance to the immediate front of the post. The raiding party, after having made the attack, retreated in great haste, and, separating, it was impossible for the party to overtake them before dark. They returned to camp.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

N. B. SWETZER,

Colonel Sixteenth New York Cavalry, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. C. I. WICKERSHAM,

Asst. Adj. Gen., First Separate Brig., Fairfax Court-House, Va.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS FIRST SEPARATE BRIGADE,
Fairfax Court-House, Va., March 10, 1865.

Respectfully forwarded to department headquarters.

I consider this very disgraceful—an officer, sergeant, and twenty men running away from thirty guerrillas without firing a shot, the lieutenant leading the running away. I respectfully recommend that Lieutenant Gault be sent home, out of the service. I want fighting officers to lead the men in action, same as I do myself.

WM. GAMBLE,

Colonel Commanding Brigade.

No. 2.

Report of Lieut. Olney K. Gault, Sixteenth New York Cavalry.

HQDQS. COMPANY A, SIXTEENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,
Vienna, Va., March 8, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report, to wit:

That the patrol in my charge proceeded from Vienna to Flint Hill, taking the left of the stockade, through the fields, the road usually traveled by the patrol, passing an old chimney standing in an orchard, between that and the road. We then discovered a body of mounted men coming from the woods on our right; at first sight thought them to be Union troops, as they were most all dressed in blue. As soon as we discovered that they were making for us I commanded front into line, then seeing that they were too strong the men broke, and I ordered them to about face and run. After passing a ditch and striking into a deep mud many of the horses could hardly run; the enemy soon overtook us and commenced firing and killing one, wounding two, and three supposed captured. We retreated back to Flint Hill stockade. I then sent a man to headquarters to report. We remained at the stockade until the Third Battalion arrived. I then went with Major Bosworth to show him the route they had taken, when I returned back some of patrol with the Third Battalion. Soon after the sergeant-major and three men came up, and said they were going over to Fairfax Court-House. I then fell in what men were left and proceeded to the Court-House in company with the sergeant-major. On our way back to Vienna we overtook two men that were dismounted; their horses were brought into camp.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. K. GAULT,

Second Lieutenant Company A, Sixteenth New York Cavalry.

Capt. H. M. GAYLORD,

Acting Adjutant.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS SIXTEENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,

Vienna, Va., March 8, 1865.

Respectfully returned.

This report must state the number of officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates on patrol; the names of men killed, wounded, and missing; the number of horses killed, wounded, and missing, and the probable number of the enemy attacking.

By order of Col. N. B. Sweitzer:

H. M. GAYLORD,

Captain and Acting Adjutant.

CAMP SIXTEENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,

Vienna, Va., March 8, 1865.

The above patrol consisted of one second lieutenant, one sergeant, and twenty privates; we were attacked by a party of the enemy numbering about forty or fifty, killing 1 man, Eli Carts, Company A; wounding 2 men, A. Pocomny (fatal), James Hart, both of Company I; missing, Harvey Chambers, Frank Calson, of Company A, Andreas Richberger, Company I; 1 horse, Company A, wounded, and 2 missing; Company I, 3 horses missing.

O. K. GAULT,

Second Lieutenant, Sixteenth New York Cavalry.

Capt. H. M. GAYLORD,

Acting Adjutant.

No. 3.

Report of Sergt. Otto Richter, Company I, Sixteenth New York Cavalry.

CAMP SIXTEENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,

Vienna, Va., March 8, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In obedience to your directions, I report the transaction of yesterday, in which the patrol of this regiment from Vienna to Fairfax Court-House was attacked by guerrillas.

The patrol left camp for Fairfax Court-House at 1 p. m., under command of Second Lieut. Gault, of Company A, and consisted of one sergeant and twenty privates. About one mile and a half from Flint Hill, and near the Fairfax road, in an open field, we saw about thirty mounted men, approaching us at a distance of 300 or 400 yards. The patrol was marching in column by twos, without an advance guard or flankers. We immediately discovered that the advancing force was the enemy approaching at an easy canter, in scattered ranks. The attention of the lieutenant commanding was called to them, and at my request he ordered the column to form into line, which order he repeated three times hastily. I immediately moved to the right of the line into my proper position, and looking around I was surprised to see the lieutenant galloping from the field to the rear, followed by the men, first from the rear and center. I heard the lieutenant give no other order than that above stated. The men followed the retreating officer.

I remain, sir, your obedient servant,

OTTO RICHTER,

Sergeant, Company I, Sixteenth New York Cavalry.

MARCH 10-11, 1865.—Expedition from Suffolk, Va., to Murfree's Depot, N. C., with skirmish (10th) at South Quay, Va.

Report of Col. George W. Lewis, Third New York Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS,

Suffolk, Va., March 12, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that, in pursuance with instructions received from you, I left Suffolk at 5 a. m. March 10, my command consisting of 225 men from the Third New York Cavalry, 225 men from the Thirteenth New York Heavy Artillery, and a section of the Eighth New York Independent Battery. I sent three companies of cavalry in advance to, if possible, capture the ferry-boat at South Quay. On arriving at the Blackwater they discovered the boat on the opposite side. The enemy, although in small force, were very strongly intrenched, and successfully disputed the crossing until my main column came up at 3 p. m. I at once commenced crossing my men in small boats, several hundred feet this side of the ferry, landing them in a densely wooded swamp, intending to work through and get in the enemy's rear. Before, however, a sufficient number of men could be got over darkness set in and I sent two men over in small boats to capture the ferry, which they succeeded in doing although under a severe fire. Having obtained the ferry I set to work crossing my command. Started from the other side toward Murfree's Depot at 8.30 p. m. and arrived there at 10.30 p. m. Found from 40 to 50 bales of cotton and a small lot of corn, all of which I destroyed, together with the depot, warehouse, and other buildings used as barracks by the enemy. Having obeyed my instructions and thereby accomplished the object of the expedition, I returned to the Blackwater and recrossed, arriving on this side at 6 a. m. on the 11th instant. Casualties: 1 man killed, 1 man wounded, and 1 man missing.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. W. LEWIS,

Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. S. L. MOHENRY,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

MARCH 11-13, 1865.—Expedition from Fort Monroe into Westmoreland County, Va., and skirmish (12th) near Warsaw, Va.

Report of Col. Samuel H. Roberts, One hundred and thirty-ninth New York Infantry.

HDQRS. THIRD BRIG., THIRD DIV., 24TH ARMY CORPS,
ARMY GUN-BOAT CHAMBERLAIN,
Point Lookout, Md., March 13, 1865.

GENERAL: In my report of March 9* I had the honor to state my intention of starting the next morning for the Potomac and the vicinity of Coan River. The Northerner, being too unwieldy for the service required, was exchanged for the Massachusetts and the Pioneer. This change, together with the coaling, delayed me until the 11th instant, at which date the expedition again left Fortress Monroe at 8 a. m. We reached Piney Point, just above the Saint Mary's River, at dusk, and waited there for the slower boats to close up. It was my intention to land at Machodoe Bay and march first on the village of Montrose, but there being no place where troops could be landed rapidly the plan was changed, and 5 a. m. the next day we sailed up the Yeocomico River, and landed at Kinsale. The first boat-load of cavalry was sent out at once, and met the rebel cavalry pickets a mile from the village. The second boat-load of cavalry were hurried out, and at about 10 o'clock were followed by the infantry and ambulances. The route agreed upon was through a place called The Hague, and thence to Warsaw. The rebel cavalry, under Lieutenant-Colonel Chapman, of Mosby's command, were constantly hovering about our column, and being splendidly mounted and familiar with the roads, were able to avoid collision with anything more than our advance and rear guard. About a mile from The Hague they made a slight stand, but were driven by our charge and chased into the village. At every cross-road the enemy would separate, each squad taking a different path, until our cavalry found themselves pursuing only three men. These were captured and sent back toward the main column, but were retaken, together with a portion of their guard, on the way. Nothing was found at The Hague of any value. At the point where the skirmish commenced there was a blacksmith's shop and quite an extensive wheelwright's establishment. These, with a granary containing 500 bushels of wheat, were burned. I now decided to return. I could have marched through in any direction, but it seemed unwise to continue the risk of occasionally losing a few men when the damage inflicted on the enemy was so trifling and the results secured so unsubstantial. Four small store-houses, filled with grain, tobacco, and bacon, were destroyed, and twenty-six head of cattle and fifty sheep were driven before us on our march back to Kinsale. Abundant rations of fresh meat were issued to the troops, and at 11 p. m. I ordered a portion of them to re-embark. By 3 o'clock all were on board, and we dropped down to the mouth of the river, the army gun-boats throwing a few shells as a farewell present to the rebels, who were concealed in the background of woods.

* See p. 542.

The casualties, which were all among the cavalry, were 1 commissioned officer and 5 enlisted men wounded. Five cavalrymen were captured from us, including 2 of the wounded, and 2 of the enemy's men were captured and retained by us. Four citizens, of suspicious antecedents, were also taken and brought away. The enemy followed us closely on our return and twice charged our rear guard, but were repulsed. It is not supposed that their loss was equal to ours. My prisoners I have turned over to provost-marshal at Point Lookout, and my force is now on its way to the White House, as ordered.

In closing my report I desire to call to the notice of the lieutenant-general commanding the services of Captain James, assistant quartermaster at Fortress Monroe, who rendered me important aid with the utmost alacrity.

I inclose the report of Captain Harris, of the Mosswood, who was sent to patrol the Rappahannock during our operations on the north side of the river.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. H. ROBERTS,
Colonel 139th New York Volunteers, Commanding.

Brig. Gen. J. A. RAWLINS,
Chief of Staff to Lieutenant-General Commanding.

[Inclosure.]

U. S. ARMY GUN-BOAT MOSSWOOD,
White House, Va., March 14, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders received from General Roberts, on the 11th instant, I proceeded up the Rappahannock River as far as Urbana, where I awaited the arrival of the other gun-boats. During the night I picked up a darkey, who informed me that the enemy had three pieces of artillery near Lowry's Point. On the morning of the 12th instant I was signaled by the steamer Morse that she had been attacked by a shore battery. I immediately got under way, steamed up the river, found the Morse out of range of the battery, but continuing a heavy fire with her 100-pounder Parrott. When within three-quarters of a mile from the battery I opened fire, which they returned briskly, their shot going over and far beyond us. After a spirited engagement of one hour and fifteen minutes they were compelled to withdraw. I laid off and on, but finding that they did not reappear I dropped down the river and anchored. The steamer Commodore Read, Lieutenant-Commander Hooker, then came in sight. Captain Hooker requested me to drop down the river and ascertain if there were any guns at Jones' Point, also to communicate with your forces, if possible. During the night I received orders to report at this place, where I arrived at 4 p. m.

I am much indebted to the naval forces for lying by me while my vessel was ashore and assisting me in getting afloat.

I am, captain, your obedient servant,

ARNOLD HARRIS,
Commanding.

[Capt. WILLIAM S. HUBBELL,
Assistant Adjutant-General.]

MARCH 12, 1865.—Skirmish near Peach Grove, Va.

REPORTS.

No. 1.—Col. William Gamble, Eighth Illinois Cavalry, commanding First Separate Brigade, Department of Washington.

No. 2.—Col. Henry S. Gansevoort, Thirteenth New York Cavalry.

No. 1.

Report of Col. William Gamble, Eighth Illinois Cavalry, commanding First Separate Brigade, Department of Washington.

HEADQUARTERS SEPARATE BRIGADE,
Fairfax Court-House, Va., March 12, 1865—6.30 p. m.

COLONEL: The patrol of one officer, sergeant, and twenty men, Thirteenth New York Cavalry, was attacked by guerrillas at 1 p. m. about two miles beyond Vienna, this side of Peach Grove stockade. Lieutenant Cuyler was with the party, and reports by signal from Vienna 2 men killed, 5 wounded, 6 horses killed, and 1 wounded. The balance of the patrol came into Vienna. A detailed report will be sent so soon as received. I have ordered a squadron from Prospect Hill to march through the woods one mile west on the flank of the daily patrol until the cavalry now out returns, when the country in front will be swept by the whole cavalry force at night, and every house examined from here to Bull Run Mountain, at the same time, where the guerrillas stop at night.

W. GAMBLE,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Lieut. Col. J. H. TAYLOR,
Chief of Staff, Department of Washington.

No. 2.

Report of Col. Henry S. Gansevoort, Thirteenth New York Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS THIRTEENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,
Prospect Hill, Va., March 13, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report all quiet at this post for the last twenty-four hours. Yesterday Lieutenant Freeman, Company H, Thirteenth New York Cavalry, and twenty men, comprising the escort for Vienna, were attacked near Peach Grove by a force of the enemy in ambush in the pines, estimated from 80 to 100. The escort charged the rebels and were well handled by the officer in command. In the charge the officer escaped, but a corporal and a private were killed and 8 men were severely wounded; 7 (including 3 slightly wounded) were taken prisoners by the enemy, whose loss, further than 1 killed and several wounded, is not known. They left in great haste, dividing into three parties, one known to number sixty men. A report reached me this morning that a large force of the enemy was in front, endeavoring to cut off some of the wood teams. I have just returned with all my available cavalry from near Dranesville, without discovering anything of the enemy. On this account the escort was to-day delayed.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
H. S. GANSEVOORT,
Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. O. I. WICKERSHAM,
Assistant Adjutant-General, First Separate Brigade.

MARCH 12-14, 1865.—Scout in Loudoun County, Va.*Report of Col. Nelson B. Sweitzer, Sixteenth New York Cavalry.*HEADQUARTERS SIXTEENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,
Vienna, Va., March 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that, in obedience to instructions from brigade headquarters March 10, 1865, I proceeded on the morning of the 12th instant, with 2 staff and 10 line officers and 357 enlisted men, with three days' rations; 6 officers and 157 enlisted men absent under Capt. J. Schneider; left 142 dismounted men in camp and 4 officers, 2 on the sick report; the 142 dismounted men included sick men and men permanently disabled unavailable for efficient mounted duty. Proceeding by the way of Dranesville and Farnwell I reached the vicinity of Leesburg the morning of the 13th. All along the route the reports were that quite a force of White's and Mosby's men were in and about Leesburg.

Making a hasty reconnaissance of Leesburg before entering with the whole command, I found no force there; that White and Mosby had left, White for the Valley of the Shenandoah and Mosby for the country about Vienna, &c. Small parties were seen about Leesburg, but would scatter to the woods when pursued. Thinking I might come upon some of the parties in the direction of Hamilton and Waterford I pushed on, with an extended line of skirmishers and patrols, but found nothing there but small parties ranging from four to fifteen, who kept out of range. Ascertained that no organized force of the rebels was in the country, and that the report of large force was for the purpose of covering the conscripting and impressing going on in Loudoun County and to draw our forces from the lower country to assist marauding parties during their absence.

Moving back to the vicinity of Ball's Mills and Goose Creek, hoping to come upon some of the parties at the fords, on the 14th I returned by the way of Gum Springs and Flint Hill to this post. From the opportunities of perfect information it is difficult to capture these guerrillas except by detachments operating in concert and rapidly, with information as to the locality of the rebels. The force of Mosby and White have been scattered about the county of Loudoun, conscripting and impressing horses and provisions, and between which two parties there is great hostility, from their stealing each other's horses, &c. This conscripting, &c., is growing very unpopular, and I anticipate good results to the Union cause, as it leads to the public moving in self-defense and anxious to assist the Union forces, in which they now do but little. In coming back I endeavored by halting and stationing parties to catch any small parties following my rear, to pick up stragglers, but the enemy was unusually wary. I had one man and one horse wounded during the scout, which comprised all the casualties.

My original plan was to have scouted the country to the Shenandoah at Harper's Ferry, obtaining a fresh supply of rations, and return over a route near the base of the mountains, but the information of the guerrillas taking advantage of the absence of cavalry in making forays in the vicinity of the post decided my course as decided above.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

N. B. SWEITZER,

Colonel Sixteenth New York Cavalry, Commanding Post.

Capt. CHARLES I. WICKERSHAM,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., First Separate Brig., Fairfax Court-House, Va.

MARCH 14-16, 1865.—Scout from Philippi to Carrick's Ford, W. Va.

Report of Lieut. George W. Cable, Eighth Ohio Cavalry.

PHILIPPI, W. VA., March 16, 1865—6 p. m.

SIR: In obedience to instructions from you, I proceeded on an expedition to Red Creek. Leaving this place at 4 p. m. on the 14th instant I proceeded to Meadowville. After passing through I halted, fed, and rested for two hours, then took up the march for Carrick's Ford, crossing the road from Beverly to Saint George. Arriving at the ford at 8 a. m. on the morning of the 15th, I found the river so swollen and the current so swift that I deemed it dangerous to cross. However, not wishing to give it up without a trial, I selected four men on the best horses, and started them across. As soon as they got into the channel two of the horses were taken off their feet and swept down the stream, and both men and horses were with difficulty saved from drowning. I then went farther up and tried to cross at other fords, but met with no better results. I then returned to Clover Run, where there was forage, and camped for the night, leaving three men to watch and see whether the river fell enough through the night to admit of a crossing the next morning.

Early in the morning of the 16th the men came in and reported the river still rising; also that the cause of the rising was the melting of the snow in the mountains and not the rain that had been pouring down in torrents the previous night and day; therefore, I concluded not to cross, for had I succeeded in doing so, with the addition of the falling rain, I would have become water-bound and had to remain in a country that would not subsist man nor horses. Accordingly I set out on my return, having marched up to this time forty miles and farther, the roads being greatly obstructed by falling timber and slides, which made it very hard traveling, thus making it impossible to have reached Red Creek by the time laid down.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. W. CABLE,

First Lieutenant, Commanding Expedition.

Maj. A. DOTZE,

Commanding Eighth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

MARCH 14-17, 1865.—Scout from New Creek to Moorefield, W. Va.

Report of Lieut. Col. Andrew J. Greenfield, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry.

HDQRS. TWENTY-SECOND PENNSYLVANIA VOL. CAVALRY,

New Creek, W. Va., March 18, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to submit the following report:

On Tuesday, the 14th instant, in obedience to orders from your headquarters, I left camp with 250 men, arriving at Moorefield 6 o'clock Wednesday morning. On entering I made such disposition of the command as I thought might intercept and capture any parties that might be occupying the place. I there ascertained, from what I deemed reliable authority, that all the rebel forces in that vicinity had been ordered to the Valley, there being no organized force at Moorefield, Petersburg, or Franklin. I directed Captain McNulty to proceed with 100 men rapidly up the South Fork eight or ten miles, which he did, dispersing a small party of guerrillas, killing and wounding two, and returning with a few prisoners. The river rising rapidly I was compelled to recross to the west side. Two horses were drowned in fording. Having marched rapidly over sixty miles, I rested until 3 a. m. 16th. The river not being fordable I divided the command, one detachment, 120 men, proceeding via Petersburg and Williamsport, the other detachment returning, via Mill Creek road, to Burlington, the place of rendezvous. Owing to the swollen streams the plans of the general could not be fully carried out. I have the names of a number of prominent rebel citizens who have been arrested and have taken the oath, yet I doubt very much whether they have kept it strictly. I could not, however, obtain sufficient evidence to convict them, therefore did not arrest them. The two detachments, having arrived at Burlington, returned to camp at 5 p. m. 17th, with three prisoners and a number of horses.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
 A. J. GREENFIELD,
Lieutenant-Colonel Twenty-second Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry.
 Lieut. H. J. JOHNSON,
Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Second Infantry Div., Cumberland, Md.

MARCH 18, 1865.—Skirmish near Dranesville, Va.

Report of Col. Henry S. Gansevoort, Thirteenth New York Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS THIRTEENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,
Camp Lowell, Prospect Hill, Va., March 19, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report all quiet. Yesterday a party of rebels crossed the front of this line, coming from Vienna. My available cavalry being absent from camp, flanking the Vienna escort, I followed them in person, with about thirty daily duty men, and succeeded in overtaking them between Dranesville and the Potomac. A skirmish ensued, in which fifteen of the enemy charged on eleven men of this regiment under Lieutenant Crawley, but were gallantly charged in turn by him and scattered through the pines. Several of the enemy are known to have been wounded, but escaped—one, evidently the leader, through the body—and several horses killed; one was taken prisoner, named Dowell, who is sent by escort to-day to your headquarters. Lieutenant Crawley received a wound in the left leg. I would respectfully report that the force of cavalry under my command is insufficient for the duties required at this point.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
 H. S. GANSEVOORT,
Colonel Thirteenth New York Cavalry, Commanding Post.
 Capt. C. I. WICKERSHAM,
Assistant Adjutant-General, First Separate Brigade.

MARCH 22, 1865.—Skirmish near Patterson's Creek Station, W. Va.
Report of Col. Daniel D. Johnson, Fourteenth West Virginia Infantry.

HDQRS. FOURTEENTH WEST VIRGINIA VOL. INFANTRY,
Sir John's Run, W. Va., March 27, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to report the result of a skirmish which occurred between a detachment of Company H, of this regiment, and a party of rebel cavalry, supposed to be McNeill's old command, on the night of 22d instant, about nine miles and a half from Patterson's Creek Station and at the house of a Mr. Baker.

On the evening of the 22d instant Lieut. G. W. Jolliffe, commanding Company H, sent out Lieutenant Martin and eleven men as a scout. On their arrival at the house of Mr. Baker, Lieutenant Martin posted a sentinel, and entered the house with the remainder of the detachment. After remaining in the house about an hour they were aroused by the firing of the sentinel, and, on rushing from the house, encountered at the fence a party of rebel cavalry, about sixty in number. The rebels made three successive charges upon Lieutenant Martin and men, but were each time repulsed, and at last retreated in confusion, leaving upon the field 2 men killed and 3 wounded. There were also 7 horses wounded and 2 killed. From a subsequent scout Lieutenant Jolliffe has ascertained that the rebels took with them several wounded men when they retreated. None of Lieutenant Martin's men were struck. Lieutenant Martin's detachment was armed with Henry rifles, and it is supposed the rebels thought from the rapid firing that his force was much larger than it really was.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. D. JOHNSON,
Colonel.

Lieut. J. W. OVERTURE,
Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., First Infy. Div., Dept. of W. Va.

MARCH 28–APRIL 11, 1865.—Expedition from Deep Bottom, Va., to near Weldon, N. C., with skirmishes.

Report of Col. Edwin V. Sumner, First New York Mounted Rifles.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST NEW YORK MOUNTED RIFLES,
Suffolk, Va., April 11, 1865.

I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my command:

On Tuesday, the 28th day of March, the regiment, numbering 700 men, was embarked at Deep Bottom and proceeded to Portsmouth, Va. It was there disembarked and encamped at Getty's Station until Friday, March 31, 1865. March 31, Lieutenant-Colonel Walsh, Thirteenth New York Heavy Artillery, reported to me with 300 infantry. This portion of the command, with supplies for both infantry and cavalry, were sent by transports through the canal to Winton, N. C. The cavalry marched from Suffolk Saturday morning, April 1, encamping at night within three miles of Winton. A party was sent down to the crossing to meet the gun-boats and transports. They were not there and did not arrive until the next evening, making a delay of twenty-four hours. This delay was unfortunate, inasmuch as it gave the enemy timely notice, and the necessary preparations to meet us were made. On th arrival of the ferry boats the cavalry was immediately crossed, taking until daylight next morning to complete the work. Leaving the infantry with the boats, I pushed on immediately with the cavalry on the morning of the 3d, reaching Jackson about 9 p. m. A strong mounted picket of the enemy was stationed here, which my advance pushed through the town toward Weldon, capturing three of the number. I halted at Jackson to rest my horses a few hours. I ascertained while there that there was a sufficient force at Weldon to prevent my gaining the bridge. I therefore determined to leave Weldon on my left and strike the railroad, if possible, between that place and Hicksford.

We left Jackson at 4 a. m. April 4, reaching the Seaboard Railroad at a point about seven miles from Weldon at daylight. I was engaged in tearing up this road when a train with troops on board came in sight from the direction of Margaretsville, in my rear. The troops, infantry, jumped from the cars, formed line, and attacked. My men were prepared for them, and soon drove them back to the train, capturing five enlisted men. This force was said to be between 400 and 500 strong, with one section of artillery, under command of General Whitmore [Colonel Whitford?]. As soon as they were driven back to the cars and were on board, the train pushed rapidly back out of my reach. With this force on the Seaboard road, Weldon, and Hicksford well garrisoned, I did not deem it advisable to go farther toward the Weldon road, and returned the same day to Rich Square. I could hear no favorable news from either of our armies. On the other hand rumors most unfavorable reached us hourly. The force sent out from Suffolk, under command of Colonel Lewis, Third New York Cavalry, composed of 200 cavalry, 100 infantry, and a section of artillery, to co-operate with me, and take and hold the railroad bridge over the Meherrin, had not been successful, and as they were not able to reach the bridge had retired. The infantry and artillery returned to Suffolk. The cavalry, under Colonel Lewis, met me on my return to Winton. The night of April 4 I encamped at Rich Square. This place is and has been a Government depot. A large amount of cotton is collected here and in the surrounding country. It is sent from Rich Square across the Chowan about Edenton, and supplies of all kinds are brought back in return. They have been exchanging from 10,000 to 20,000 pounds per week, at the rate of a pound of cotton for a pound of bacon. From Rich Square I marched, on the 5th instant, to Murfreesborough, communicating there with the gun-boats on the Meherrin River. The transports were brought up to Murfreesborough, and I collected and put on board of them seventy bales of cotton. Negroes to the number of 150 had joined my command; they were furnished transportation and rations. A battalion of North Carolina cavalry was stationed near Murfreesborough. Of their number 1 officer and 5 enlisted men were captured; the rest got out of the way. A few good horses were taken, but my loss is equal to my gain in that respect. The cotton was sent by water to Norfolk, and turned over to Captain Blunt, assistant quartermaster. The infantry under Colonel Walsh also returned to that place. My regiment is now occupying the vacant houses in this town. My horses are in good condition and ready for duty. I respectfully ask that we may not be left unoccupied at this time.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. V. SUMNER,

Colonel First New York Mounted Rifles, Comdg. Regiment.

J. EDWARD W. SMITH,]

Adjutant-General, Department of Virginia.

MARCH 29—APRIL 9, 1865.—The Appomattox (Virginia) Campaign.SUMMARY OF THE PRINCIPAL EVENTS.

- Mar. 29, 1865.—Engagement at Lewis Farm near Gravelly Run.
Skirmish at junction of the Quaker and Boydton Roads.
Skirmish on the Vaughan Road, near Hatcher's Run.
- 30, 1865.—Skirmishes on the line of Hatcher's Run and Gravelly Run.
Skirmish near Five Forks.
- 31, 1865.—Engagement at the White Oak Road, or White Oak Ridge.
Action at Hatcher's Run, or Boydton Road.
Action at Crow's House.
Engagement at Dinwiddie Court-House.
- Apr. 1, 1865.—Battle of Five Forks.
Skirmish at the White Oak Road.
Bvt. Maj. Gen. Charles Griffin, U. S. Army, relieves Maj. Gen. Gouverneur K. Warren of the command of the Fifth Army Corps.
- Apr. 2, 1865.—Engagement at Sutherland's Station, South Side Railroad.
Assault upon and capture of fortified lines in front of Petersburg.
Skirmish at Gravelly Ford, on Hatcher's Run.
Action at Scott's Cross-Roads.
- 3, 1865.—Occupation of Richmond and Petersburg by the Union forces.
Action at Namozine Church.
- 4, 1865.—Skirmish at Tabernacle Church, or Beaver Pond Creek.
- 4-5, 1865.—Skirmish at Amelia Court-House.
- 5, 1865.—Skirmish at Paine's Cross-Roads.
Engagement at Amelia Springs.
- 6, 1865.—Engagement at Sailor's Creek.
Skirmish at Flat Creek, near Amelia Springs.
Action near High Bridge.
Engagement at Rice's Station.
- 7, 1865.—Engagement at High Bridge.
Engagement at Farnville.
Skirmish at Prince Edward Court-House.
- 8, 1865.—Engagement at Appomattox Station.
- 9, 1865.—Engagement at Appomattox Court-House.
Surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia at Appomattox Court-House (Clover Hill).

REPORTS, ETC.*

- No. 1.—Organization of the Union Forces commanded by Lieut. Gen. Ulysses S. Grant.
- No. 2.—Return of casualties in the Union Forces commanded by Lieut. Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, March 29—April 9, 1865.
- No. 3.—General summary of casualties in the Union Forces operating against Richmond, Va., under Lieut. Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, January 1 to April 9, 1865.
- No. 4.—Maj. Gen. George G. Meade, U. S. Army, commanding Army of the Potomac.
- No. 5.—Lieut. Francis H. Parker, U. S. Army, Chief Ordnance Officer.
- No. 6.—Surg. Thomas A. McParlin, U. S. Army, Medical Director, of operations January 1—June 30.
- No. 7.—Surg. John A. Liddell, U. S. Army, Inspector of Medical and Hospital Department.
- No. 8.—Surg. George B. Parker, U. S. Army, in charge of Depot Field Hospital, of operations March 27—June 30.
- No. 9.—Capt. Charles L. Davis, Chief Signal Officer.

* See also reports of Lieut. Gen. U. S. Grant (pp. 50-53), Surg. T. Rush Spencer (p. 263), and Journal of Capt. Jed. Hotchkiss (p. 510).

- No. 10.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. George N. Macy, Twentieth Massachusetts Infantry, commanding Provost Guard.
- No. 11.—Capt. Richard G. Lay, Third U. S. Infantry, commanding Headquarters Guard.
- No. 12.—Brig. Gen. Henry W. Benham, U. S. Army, commanding Engineer Brigade.
- No. 13.—Bvt. Col. Ira Spaulding, Fiftieth New York Engineers.
- No. 14.—Bvt. Maj. Franklin Harwood, U. S. Army, commanding Battalion U. S. Engineers.
- No. 15.—Bvt. Maj. William H. Paine, Aide-de-Camp.
- No. 16.—Bvt. Capt. Charles W. Howell, U. S. Corps of Engineers.
- No. 17.—Lieut. Charles B. Phillips, U. S. Corps of Engineers.
- No. 18.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Henry J. Hunt, U. S. Army, Chief of Artillery.
- No. 19.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Henry L. Abbot, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Siege Train, of operations April 1-May 31.
- No. 20.—Lieut. William H. Rogers, commanding detachment First Connecticut Heavy Artillery.
- No. 21.—Maj. Gen. Andrew A. Humphreys, U. S. Army, commanding Second Army Corps.
- No. 22.—Surgeon Charles Page, U. S. Army, Medical Director.
- No. 23.—Asst. Surgeon Charles Smart, U. S. Army, Medical Inspector, of operations March 1-April 30.
- No. 24.—Capt. John G. Pelton, Fourteenth Connecticut Infantry, Chief of Ambulances.
- No. 25.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, U. S. Army, commanding First Division.
- No. 26.—Col. George W. Scott, Sixty-first New York Infantry, commanding First Brigade.
- No. 27.—Capt. Lucius H. Ives, Twenty-sixth Michigan Infantry.
- No. 28.—Lieut. Col. Welcome A. Crafts, Fifth New Hampshire Infantry.
- No. 29.—Capt. Francis R. Humphreys, Second New York Heavy Artillery.
- No. 30.—Maj. George W. Schaffer, Sixty-first New York Infantry.
- No. 31.—Capt. William A. F. Stockton, One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 32.—Col. Robert Nugent, Sixty-ninth New York Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.
- No. 33.—Capt. Patrick H. Bird, Twenty-eighth Massachusetts Infantry.
- No. 34.—Capt. William H. Terwilliger, Sixty-third New York Infantry.
- No. 35.—Lieut. Col. James J. Smith, Sixty-ninth New York Infantry.
- No. 36.—Lieut. Col. Denis F. Burke, Eighty-eighth New York Infantry.
- No. 37.—Maj. Seward F. Gould, Fourth New York Heavy Artillery.
- No. 38.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Clinton D. MacDongall, One hundred and eleventh New York Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.
- No. 39.—Lieut. Col. Anthony Pokorny, Seventh New York Infantry.
- No. 40.—Maj. John McE. Hyde, Thirty-ninth New York Infantry.
- No. 41.—Lieut. Col. Henry M. Karples, Fifty-second New York Infantry.
- No. 42.—Lieut. Col. Lewis W. Husk, One hundred and eleventh New York Infantry.
- No. 43.—Lieut. Col. Joseph Hyde, One hundred and twenty-fifth New York Infantry.
- No. 44.—Capt. I. Hart Wilder, One hundred and twenty-sixth New York Infantry.
- No. 45.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. John Ramsey, Eighth New Jersey Infantry, commanding Fourth Brigade.
- No. 46.—Lieut. Col. William Glenn, Sixty-fourth New York Infantry.
- No. 47.—Capt. Nathaniel P. Lane, Sixty-sixth New York Infantry.
- No. 48.—Col. William M. Mintzer, Fifty-third Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 49.—Capt. John R. Wellner, One hundred and sixteenth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 50.—Capt. James H. Hamlin, One hundred and forty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 51.—Capt. John F. Sutton, One hundred and forty-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry.

- 2.—Col. George T. Egbert, One hundred and eighty-third Pennsylvania Infantry.
- 3.—Brig. Gen. William Hays, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division.
- 4.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Francis C. Barlow, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division.
- 5.—Col. William A. Olmsted, Fifty-ninth New York Infantry, commanding First Brigade.
- 6.—Lieut. Col. Joseph W. Spaulding, Nineteenth Maine Infantry.
- 7.—Col. James P. McIvor, One hundred and seventieth New York Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.
- 8.—Col. Daniel Woodall, First Delaware Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.
- 9.—Capt. J. Frank Morgan, Fourteenth Connecticut Infantry.
- 10.—Maj. John T. Dent, First Delaware Infantry.
- 1.—Maj. Henry F. Chew, Twelfth New Jersey Infantry.
- 2.—Lieut. Col. George F. Hopper, Tenth New York Infantry.
- 3.—Lieut. Col. Francis E. Pierce, One hundred and eighth New York Infantry.
- 4.—Capt. Charles McAnally, Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- 5.—Capt. John H. Gallagher, One hundred and sixth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- 6.—Lieut. Col. Francis W. H. Baldwin, Seventh West Virginia Infantry.
- 7.—Brig. Gen. Regis de Trobriand, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division.
- 8.—Brig. Gen. Regis de Trobriand, U. S. Army, commanding First Brigade.
- 9.—Col. Russell B. Shepherd, First Maine Heavy Artillery, commanding First Brigade.
- 10.—Brig. Gen. Byron R. Pierce, U. S. Army, commanding Second Brigade.
- 1.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Robert McAllister, Eleventh New Jersey Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.
- 2.—Bvt. Lieut. Col. John G. Hazard, First Rhode Island Light Artillery, commanding Artillery Brigade.
- 3.—Capt. J. Webb Adams, Tenth Battery Massachusetts Light Artillery.
- 4.—Maj. Gen. Gouverneur K. Warren, U. S. Army, commanding Fifth Army Corps.
- 5.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Charles Griffin, U. S. Army, commanding Fifth Army Corps.
- 6.—Asst. Surg. Charles K. Winne, U. S. Army, Medical Inspector.
- 7.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Charles Griffin, U. S. Army, commanding First Division.
- 8.—Brig. Gen. Joshua L. Chamberlain, U. S. Army, commanding First Brigade.
- 9.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Edgar M. Gregory, Ninety-first Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.
- 10.—Lieut. Col. Daniel Myers, One hundred and eighty-seventh New York Infantry.
- 1.—Lieut. Col. Isaac Doolittle, One hundred and eighty-eighth New York Infantry.
- 2.—Lieut. Col. Joseph G. Townsend, One hundred and eighty-ninth New York Infantry.
- 3.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph J. Bartlett, U. S. Army, commanding Third Brigade.
- 4.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Alfred L. Pearson, One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.
- 5.—Capt. George R. Abbott, First Maine Sharpshooters.
- 6.—Capt. Charles F. Sawyer, First Maine Sharpshooters.
- 7.—Lieut. Col. Walter G. Morrill, Twentieth Maine Infantry.
- 8.—Lieut. Col. Eli G. Sellers, Ninety-first Pennsylvania Infantry.
- 9.—Bvt. Lieut. Col. Henry O'Neill, One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- 10.—Maj. John A. Cline, One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- 1.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Romeyn B. Ayres, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division.
- 2.—Brig. Gen. Joseph Hayes, U. S. Army, commanding First Brigade.
- 3.—Col. David L. Stanton, First Maryland Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.

- No. 94.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. James Gwyn, One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.
- No. 95.—Bvt. Col. Joseph B. Pattee, One hundred and ninetieth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding One hundred and fifty-seventh, One hundred and ninety-sixth, and One hundred and ninety-first Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 96.—Lieut. Col. Edward L. Witman, Two hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 97.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Samuel W. Crawford, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division.
- No. 98.—Col. John A. Kellogg, Sixth Wisconsin Infantry, commanding First Brigade.
- No. 99.—Col. Jonathan Tarbell, Ninety-first New York Infantry.
- No. 100.—Brig. Gen. Henry Baxter, U. S. Army, commanding Second Brigade.
- No. 101.—Lieut. Col. Rouse S. Eggleston, Ninety-seventh New York Infantry.
- No. 102.—Col. Thomas F. McCoy, One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 103.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Richard Coulter, Eleventh Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.
- No. 104.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Charles S. Wainwright, First New York Light Artillery, commanding Artillery Brigade.
- No. 105.—Maj. Gen. Horatio G. Wright, U. S. Army, commanding Sixth Army Corps.
- No. 106.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Frank Wheaton, U. S. Army, commanding First Division.
- No. 107.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. William H. Penrose, Fifteenth New Jersey Infantry, commanding First Brigade.
- No. 108.—Lieut. Col. Baldwin Hufty, Fourth New Jersey Infantry.
- No. 109.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Joseph E. Hamblin, Sixty-fifth New York Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.
- No. 110.—Lieut. Col. Henry C. Fisk, Sixty-fifth New York Infantry.
- No. 111.—Bvt. Col. Egbert Olcott, One hundred and twenty-first New York Infantry.
- No. 112.—Lieut. Col. John Harper, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 113.—Capt. James T. Stuart, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Sharpshooters.
- No. 114.—Col. Oliver Edwards, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.
- No. 115.—Capt. Archibald Hopkins, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Infantry.
- No. 116.—Bvt. Col. Baynton J. Hickman, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 117.—Col. Isaac C. Bassett, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 118.—Maj. William C. Gray, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 119.—Lieut. Col. Elisha H. Rhodes, Second Rhode Island Infantry.
- No. 120.—Col. Thomas S. Allen, Fifth Wisconsin Infantry.
- No. 121.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. George W. Getty, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division.
- No. 122.—Lieut. Col. Charles A. Milliken, Forty-third New York Infantry, Division Officer of the Day.
- No. 123.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. James M. Warner, First Vermont Heavy Artillery, commanding First Brigade.
- No. 124.—Capt. B. Frank Hcan, Ninety-third Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 125.—Capt. Bernhard Gessler, Ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 126.—Maj. James McGregor, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 127.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Lewis A. Grant, U. S. Army, commanding Second Brigade.
- No. 128.—Lieut. Col. Ronald A. Kennedy, Fifth Vermont Infantry.
- No. 129.—Col. Thomas W. Hyde, First Maine Veteran Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.
- No. 130.—Capt. Augustus Merrill, Company B, First Maine Veteran Infantry.
- No. 131.—Brig. Gen. Truman Seymour, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division.
- Col. William S. Truex, Fourteenth New Jersey Infantry, commanding First Brigade.

- No. 133.—Bvt. Maj. Hiram W. Day, One hundred and sixth New York Infantry, Brigade Inspector.
- No. 134.—Lieut. Col. Jacob J. Janeway, Fourteenth New Jersey Infantry.
- No. 135.—Col. Andrew N. McDonald, One hundred and sixth New York Infantry.
- No. 136.—Lieut. Col. Charles Bogardus, One hundred and fifty-first New York Infantry.
- No. 137.—Capt. James Tearney, Eighty-seventh Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 138.—Lieut. Col. George B. Damon, Tenth Vermont Infantry.
- No. 139.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. Warren Keifer, One hundred and tenth Ohio Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.
- No. 140.—Lieut. Col. Joseph C. Hill, Sixth Maryland Infantry.
- No. 141.—Lieut. Col. James W. Snyder, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery.
- No. 142.—Bvt. Col. Otho H. Binkley, One hundred and tenth Ohio Infantry.
- No. 143.—Lieut. Col. Charles M. Cornyn, One hundred and twenty-second Ohio Infantry.
- No. 144.—Col. Benjamin F. Smith, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Infantry.
- No. 145.—Maj. William G. Williams, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Infantry, commanding Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 146.—Col. Matthew R. McClellan, One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 147.—Bvt. Maj. Andrew Cowan, First Battery New York Light Artillery, commanding Artillery Brigade.
- No. 148.—Capt. Augustin N. Parsons, Battery A, First New Jersey Light Artillery.
- No. 149.—Bvt. Capt. Orsamus R. Van Etten, First Battery New York Light Artillery.
- No. 150.—Bvt. Maj. William A. Harn, Third Battery New York Light Artillery.
- No. 151.—Capt. Crawford Allen, jr., Battery H, First Rhode Island Light Artillery.
- No. 152.—Lieut. John R. Brincklé, Battery E, Fifth U. S. Artillery.
- No. 153.—Maj. Gen. John G. Parke, U. S. Army, commanding Ninth Army Corps.
- No. 154.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Orlando B. Willcox, U. S. Army, commanding First Division.
- No. 155.—Col. Samuel Harriman, Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Infantry, commanding First Brigade.
- No. 156.—Col. Charles Waite, Twenty-seventh Michigan Infantry.
- No. 157.—Lieut. Col. Colwert K. Pier, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Infantry, commanding One hundred and ninth New York Infantry.
- No. 158.—Maj. Robert N. Roberts, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Infantry.
- No. 159.—Bvt. Col. Ralph Ely, Eighth Michigan Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.
- No. 160.—Capt. Albert A. Day, Twentieth Michigan Infantry.
- No. 161.—Lieut. Col. Adolph Becker, Forty-sixth New York Infantry.
- No. 162.—Col. James Bintliff, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.
- No. 163.—Capt. John M. Deane, Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Infantry.
- No. 164.—Maj. Ezra P. Gould, Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Infantry.
- No. 165.—Lieut. Col. Joseph M. Clough, Eighteenth New Hampshire Infantry.
- No. 166.—Maj. Norman J. Maxwell, One hundredth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 167.—Brig. Gen. Simon G. Griffin, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division.
- No. 168.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. John I. Curtin, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding First Brigade.
- No. 169.—Brig. Gen. Simon G. Griffin, U. S. Army, commanding Second Brigade.
- No. 170.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. John F. Hartranft, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division.
- No. 171.—Lieut. Col. William H. H. McCaff, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding First Brigade.

- No. 172.—Col. Alfred B. McCalmont, Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding First Brigade.
- No. 173.—Col. Joseph A. Mathews, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.
- No. 174.—Col. Robert C. Cox, Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.
- No. 175.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. John C. Tidball, Fourth New York Heavy Artillery, commanding Artillery Brigade.
- No. 176.—Capt. Adelbert B. Twitchell, Seventh Battery Maine Light Artillery.
- No. 177.—Bvt. Maj. Charles A. Phillips, Battery E, Massachusetts Light Artillery.
- No. 178.—Capt. Richard S. Milton, Ninth Battery Massachusetts Light Artillery.
- No. 179.—Capt. Edward J. Jones, Eleventh Battery Massachusetts Light Artillery.
- No. 180.—Capt. Joseph W. B. Wright, Fourteenth Battery Massachusetts Light Artillery.
- No. 181.—Bvt. Maj. Christian Woerner, Third Battery New Jersey Light Artillery.
- No. 182.—Capt. David F. Ritchie, Battery C, First New York Light Artillery.
- No. 183.—Capt. Angell Matthewson, Battery E, First New York Light Artillery.
- No. 184.—Lieut. George H. Barse, Battery E, First New York Light Artillery.
- No. 185.—Capt. Samuel A. McClellan, Battery G, First New York Light Artillery.
- No. 186.—Bvt. Maj. George Breck, Battery L, First New York Light Artillery.
- No. 187.—Capt. Edward W. Rogers, Nineteenth Battery New York Light Artillery.
- No. 188.—Capt. John B. Eaton, Twenty-seventh Battery New York Light Artillery.
- No. 189.—Bvt. Maj. Jacob Roemer, Thirty-fourth Battery New York Light Artillery.
- No. 190.—Capt. William McClelland, Battery B, First Pennsylvania Light Artillery.
- No. 191.—Capt. Samuel H. Rhoads, Battery D, Pennsylvania Light Artillery.
- No. 192.—Lieut. Valentine H. Stone, Batteries C and I, Fifth U. S. Artillery.
- No. 193.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Charles H. T. Collis, One hundred and fourteenth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Independent Brigade.
- No. 194.—Col. Charles F. Walcott, Sixty-first Massachusetts Infantry.
- No. 195.—Col. Jacob B. Hardenbergh, Eightieth New York Infantry (Twentieth Militia).
- No. 196.—Col. Andrew H. Tiffin, Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 197.—Lieut. Col. Robert E. Winslow, Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 198.—Capt. John R. Waterhouse, One hundred and fourteenth Pennsylvania Infantry.
- No. 199.—Maj. Gen. Philip H. Sheridan, U. S. Army, commanding Cavalry.
- No. 200.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt, U. S. Army, commanding Cavalry, Army of the Shenandoah.
- No. 201.—Brig. Gen. Thomas C. Devin, U. S. Army, commanding First Division.
- No. 202.—Brig. Gen. Alfred Gibbs, U. S. Army, commanding Reserve Brigade.
- No. 203.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. George A. Custer, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division.
- No. 204.—Col. Alexander C. M. Pennington, Third New Jersey Cavalry, commanding First Brigade.
- No. 205.—Maj. James Bliss, Eighth New York Cavalry, Second Brigade.
- No. 206.—Col. John J. Coppinger, Fifteenth New York Cavalry.
- No. 207.—Lieut. Col. Josiah Hall, First Vermont Cavalry.
- No. 208.—Maj. Gen. George Crook, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division, Army of the Potomac.
- No. 209.—Brig. Gen. Henry E. Davies, jr., U. S. Army, commanding First Brigade.
- No. 210.—Maj. Walter R. Robbins, First New Jersey Cavalry.
- No. 211.—Col. Samuel B. M. Young, Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry, commanding Second Brigade.
- No. 212.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Charles H. Smith, First Maine Cavalry, commanding Third Brigade.
- No. 213.—Maj. Gen. Edward O. C. Ord, U. S. Army, commanding Army of the James.

- No. 214.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Peter S. Michie, U. S. Army, Chief Engineer.
No. 215.—Maj. Henry B. Scott, Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry (unattached).
No. 216.—Lieut. Joseph H. Lathrop, Adjutant Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry.
No. 217.—Maj. Gen. George L. Hartsuff, U. S. Army, commanding Defenses of Bermuda Hundred.
No. 218.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. Edward Ferrero, U. S. Army, commanding Infantry Division.
No. 219.—Maj. Gen. John Gibbon, U. S. Army, commanding Twenty-fourth Army Corps.
No. 220.—Lieut. Frederick J. Amsden, Signal Corps, U. S. Army.
No. 221.—Brig. Gen. Robert S. Foster, U. S. Army, commanding First Division.
No. 222.—Col. Thomas O. Osborn, Thirty-ninth Illinois Infantry, commanding First Brigade.
No. 223.—Capt. Homer A. Plympton, Thirty-ninth Illinois Infantry.
No. 224.—Col. Alvin C. Voris, Sixty-seventh Ohio Infantry.
No. 225.—Col. James C. Briscoe, One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry.
No. 226.—Col. George B. Dandy, One hundredth New York Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.
No. 227.—Capt. Francis G. Hickerson, Tenth Connecticut Infantry.
No. 228.—Capt. Henry C. Adams, Eleventh Maine Infantry.
No. 229.—Capt. Edwin Nichols, One hundredth New York Infantry.
No. 230.—Col. Harrison S. Fairchild, Eighty-ninth New York Infantry, commanding Fourth Brigade.
No. 231.—Lieut. Col. Edward A. True, Eighth Maine Infantry.
No. 232.—Capt. Edward H. Reynolds, Eighth Maine Infantry.
No. 233.—Capt. William Dobie, Eighty-ninth New York Infantry.
No. 234.—Col. John B. Murray, One hundred and forty-eighth New York Infantry.
No. 235.—Lieut. Col. William H. McNary, One hundred and fifty-eighth New York Infantry.
No. 236.—Capt. George H. Hill, Fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry.
No. 237.—Brig. Gen. Charles Devens, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division.
No. 238.—Capt. George A. Bruce, Thirteenth New Hampshire Infantry, Officer of the Pickets.
No. 239.—Maj. Charles Warren, Eleventh Connecticut Infantry, First Brigade.
No. 240.—Bvt. Maj. Gen. John W. Turner, U. S. Army, commanding Independent Division.
No. 241.—Lieut. Col. Andrew Potter, Thirty-fourth Massachusetts Infantry, commanding First Brigade.
No. 242.—Lieut. Col. Horace Kellogg, One hundred and twenty-third Ohio Infantry.
No. 243.—Col. William B. Curtis, Twelfth West Virginia Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.
No. 244.—Brig. Gen. Thomas M. Harris, U. S. Army, commanding Third Brigade.
No. 245.—Capt. George T. Anthony, Seventeenth Battery New York Light Artillery.
No. 246.—Capt. Samuel S. Elder, Battery B, First U. S. Artillery.
No. 247.—Lieut. Charles P. Muhlenberg, Battery A, Fifth U. S. Artillery.
No. 248.—Maj. Gen. Godfrey Weitzel, U. S. Army, commanding detachment Army of the James.
No. 249.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Richard H. Jackson, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division, Twenty-fifth Army Corps.
No. 250.—Surg. Charles P. Reichhold, Eighth U. S. Colored Troops, Surgeon-in-Chief.
No. 251.—Lieut. Dilwyn V. Purington, Seventh U. S. Colored Troops, Acting Assistant Quartermaster.
No. 252.—Capt. Henry F. Hawkes, Commissary of Subsistence, U. S. Army, Chief Commissary.
No. 253.—Col. James Shaw, jr., Seventh U. S. Colored Troops, commanding First Brigade.

- No. 254.—Bvt. Brig. Gen. Ulysses Doubleday, Forty-fifth U. S. Colored Troops, commanding Second Brigade.
- No. 255.—Col. Samuel C. Armstrong, Eighth U. S. Colored Troops.
- No. 256.—Col. Llewellyn F. Haskell, Forty-first U. S. Colored Troops.
- No. 257.—Maj. Theodore C. Glazier, Forty-fifth U. S. Colored Troops.
- No. 258.—Lieut. Col. James Givin, One hundred and twenty-seventh U. S. Colored Troops.
- No. 259.—Col. William W. Woodward, One hundred and sixteenth U. S. Colored Troops, commanding Third Brigade.
- No. 260.—Brig. Gen. Ranald S. Mackenzie, U. S. Army, commanding Cavalry Division.
- No. 261.—Col. Robert M. West, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, First Brigade.
- No. 262.—Maj. J. Stannard Baker, First District of Columbia Cavalry, Second Brigade.
- No. 263.—Col. Andrew W. Evans, First Maryland Cavalry.
- No. 264.—Lieut. Col. Franklin A. Stratton, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry.
- No. 265.—Capt. Thornton J. Elliott, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry.
- No. 266.—Medals of Honor awarded for distinguished services under Resolution of Congress, No. 43, approved July 12, 1862, and Section 6 of Act of Congress approved March 3, 1863.
- No. 267.—General Robert E. Lee, C. S. Army, commanding Army of Northern Virginia.
- No. 268.—Organization of the U. S. Forces, commanded by General Robert E. Lee.
- No. 269.—Tabular statement of officers and men of the Confederate Army paroled at Appomattox Court-House.
- No. 270.—Brig. Gen. William N. Pendleton, U. S. Army, Chief of Artillery.
- No. 271.—Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Kershaw, C. S. Army.
- No. 272.—Brig. Gen. James H. Lane, C. S. Army.
- No. 273.—Maj. Gen. Bushrod R. Johnson, C. S. Army.
- No. 274.—Brig. Gen. William H. Wallace, C. S. Army.
- No. 275.—Lieut. Gen. Richard S. Ewell, C. S. Army.
- No. 276.—Maj. Gen. George W. C. Lee, C. S. Army.
- No. 277.—Maj. Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, C. S. Army, commanding Cavalry Corps.

No. 1.

Organization of the Union Forces commanded by Lieut. Gen. Ulysses S. Grant.

ESCORT.

5th U. S. Cavalry, Companies B, F, and K, Capt. Julius W. Mason.

HEADQUARTERS GUARD.

4th United States, Capt. Joseph B. Collins.

ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

Maj. Gen. GEORGE G. MEADE.

PROVOST GUARD.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. GEORGE N. MACY.

1st Indiana Cavalry, Company K, ————.

1st Massachusetts Cavalry, Company C, Capt. Edward A. Flint.

1st Massachusetts Cavalry, Company D, Capt. James J. Higginson.

3d Pennsylvania Cavalry, Lieut. Col. James W. Walsh.

11th United States, First Battalion, Capt. Alfred E. Latimer.

14th United States, Second Battalion, Capt. William H. Brown.

HEADQUARTERS GUARD.

3d United States, Capt. Richard G. Lay.

QUARTERMASTER'S GUARD.

Independent Company Oneida (New York) Cavalry, Capt. James E. Jenkins.

ENGINEER BRIGADE.

Brig. Gen. HENRY W. BENHAM.

15th New York (nine companies), Col. Wesley Brainerd.
50th New York, Col. William H. Pettes.*

BATTALION U. S. ENGINEERS.

Bvt. Maj. FRANKLIN HARWOOD.

ARTILLERY.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. HENRY J. HUNT.

SIEGE TRAIN.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. HENRY L. ABBOT.

1st Connecticut Heavy:

Maj. George Ager.

Maj. George B. Cook.†

Connecticut Light, 3d Battery, Capt. Thomas S. Gilbert.

ARTILLERY RESERVE.

Brig. Gen. WILLIAM HAYS.‡

Maine Light, 2d Battery (B), Capt. Charles E. Stubbs.
 Maine Light, 3d Battery (C), Capt. Ezekiel R. Mayo.
 Maine Light, 4th Battery (D),‡ Capt. Charles W. White.
 Maine Light, 6th Battery (F),§ Capt. William H. Rogers.
 Massachusetts Light, 5th Battery (E),|| Bvt. Maj. Charles A. Phillips.
 Massachusetts Light, 9th Battery,¶ Capt. Richard S. Milton.
 Massachusetts Light, 14th Battery,¶ Capt. Joseph W. B. Wright.
 New Jersey Light, 3d Battery, Bvt. Maj. Christian Woerner.
 1st New York Light, Battery C,|| Capt. David F. Ritchie.
 1st New York Light, Battery E,|| Lieut. George H. Barse.
 1st New York Light, Battery G, Capt. Samuel A. McClellan.
 1st New York Light, Battery I:||
 Lieut. Dowitt M. Perine.
 Bvt. Maj. George Breck.
 New York Light, 12th Battery,§ Capt. Charles A. Clark.
 1st Ohio Light, Battery H,‡ Capt. Stephen W. Dorsey.
 1st Pennsylvania Light, Battery B,¶ Capt. William McClelland.
 1st Pennsylvania Light, Battery F,§ Lieut. John F. Campbell.
 1st Rhode Island Light, Battery E,‡ Lieut. Ezra K. Parker.
 Vermont Light, 3d Battery,‡ Capt. Romeo H. Start.
 5th United States, Batteries C and I, Lieut. Valentine H. Stone.

* Commanding detachment at Washington, D. C., the remainder of regiment serving in the field under Bvt. Col. Ira Spaulding and other subordinate officers.

† In command from April 6.

‡ Attached from Sixth Corps.

§ Attached from Second Corps.

|| Attached from Fifth Corps and detached with Ninth Corps.

¶ Attached from the Reserve to the Ninth Corps.

 Attached from Second Corps and detached with Ninth Corps.

SECOND ARMY CORPS.

Maj. Gen. ANDREW A. HUMPHREYS.

FIRST DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. NELSON A. MILES.

First Brigade.

Col. GEORGE W. SCOTT.

26th Michigan, Capt. Lucius H. Ives.
 5th New Hampshire (battalion), Lieut. Col. Welcome A. Crafts.
 2d New York Heavy Artillery, Maj. Oscar F. Hulser.
 61st New York, Maj. George W. Schaffer.
 81st Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. William Wilson.
 140th Pennsylvania, Capt. William A. F. Stockton.

Second Brigade.

Col. ROBERT NUGENT.

28th Massachusetts (five companies), Capt. Patrick H. Bird.
 63d New York (six companies), Capt. William H. Terwilliger.
 69th New York, Lieut. Col. James J. Smith.
 88th New York (five companies), Lieut. Col. Denis P. Burke.
 4th New York Heavy Artillery, Maj. Seward F. Gould.

Third Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. HENRY J. MADILL.*
 Bvt. Brig. Gen. CLINTON D. MACDOUGALL.

7th New York, Lieut. Col. Anthony Pokorny.

39th New York:

Col. Augustus Funk.†
 Maj. John McE. Hyde.

52d New York:

Lieut. Col. Henry M. Karples.‡
 Maj. Henry P. Ritzius.
 Lieut. Col. Henry M. Karples.

111th New York:

Bvt. Brig. Gen. Clinton D. MacDougall.
 Lieut. Col. Lewis W. Husk.

125th New York, Lieut. Col. Joseph Hyde.

126th New York (battalion):

Capt. John B. Geddis.*
 Capt. I. Hart Wilder.

Fourth Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. JOHN RAMSEY.

64th New York (battalion), Lieut. Col. William Glenn.

66th New York, Capt. Nathaniel P. Lane.

53d Pennsylvania, Col. William M. Mintzer.

116th Pennsylvania:

Maj. David W. Megraw.†
 Capt. John R. Weltner.

145th Pennsylvania, Capt. James H. Hamlin.

148th Pennsylvania:

Capt. Alfred A. Rhinehart.†
 Capt. John F. Sutton.

183d Pennsylvania, Col. George T. Egbert.

* Wounded April 2.

† Wounded March 31.

‡ Temporarily disabled April 2.

SECOND DIVISION.

Brig. Gen. WILLIAM HAYS,*
 Brig. Gen. THOMAS A. SMYTH.
 Bvt. Maj. Gen. FRANCIS C. BARLOW.†

First Brigade.

Col. WILLIAM A. OLMSTED.

19th Maine:

Col. Isaac W. Starbird.‡

Lieut. Col. Joseph W. Spaulding.

19th Massachusetts, Capt. Charles S. Palmer.

20th Massachusetts, Lieut. Col. Arthur R. Curtis.

7th Michigan, Lieut. Col. George W. La Point.

1st Minnesota (two companies), Capt. Frank Houston.

59th New York, Capt. William Ludgate.

152d New York, Maj. James E. Curtiss.

184th Pennsylvania, Col. John H. Stover.

36th Wisconsin, Lieut. Col. Clement E. Warner.

Second Brigade.

Col. JAMES P. McIVOR.

8th New York Heavy Artillery, Col. Joel B. Baker.

155th New York, Capt. Michael Doheny.

164th New York, Capt. Timothy J. Burke.

170th New York, Capt. John Mitchell.

182d New York (69th New York National Guard Artillery), Capt. Robert Hoggart.

Third Brigade.

Brig. Gen. THOMAS A. SMYTH.§
 Col. DANIEL WOODALL.

14th Connecticut, Capt. J. Frank Morgan.

1st Delaware:

Col. Daniel Woodall.

Maj. John T. Dent.

12th New Jersey, Maj. Henry F. Chew.

10th New York (battalion), Lieut. Col. George F. Hopper.

108th New York, Lieut. Col. Francis E. Pierce.

4th Ohio (four companies), Lieut. Col. Charles C. Calahan.

69th Pennsylvania, Capt. Charles McAnally.

106th Pennsylvania (three companies), Capt. John H. Gallagher.

7th West Virginia (four companies), Lieut. Col. Francis W. H. Baldwin.

Unattached.

2d Company Minnesota Sharpshooters, Lieut. Edward N. Schoff.

* Assigned to command of Artillery Reserve April 6.

† Assigned April 6.

‡ Wounded April 7.

§ Succeeded General Hays in command of division April 6; was relieved same day by assignment of General Barlow, and resumed command of Third Brigade; was mortally wounded April 7. During the time Smyth commanded the division, Colonel Woodall commanded the Third Brigade, which he resumed April 7, when Smyth was wounded.

THIRD DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. GERSHOM MOTT.*
 Brig. Gen. REGIS DE TROBRIAND.

First Brigade.

Brig. Gen. REGIS DE TROBRIAND.
 Col. RUSSELL B. SHEPHERD.

20th Indiana, Capt. John W. Shafer.
 1st Maine Heavy Artillery:
 Col. Russell B. Shepherd.
 Lieut. Col. Zenro A. Smith.
 40th New York, Lieut. Col. Madison M.
 Cannon.
 73d New York, Lieut. Col. Michael W.
 Burns.
 86th New York, Lieut. Col. Nathan H.
 Vincent.
 124th New York, Lieut. Col. Charles H.
 Weygant.
 99th Pennsylvania, Capt. Jacob Giller.
 110th Pennsylvania, Capt. Franklin B.
 Stewart.

Second Brigade.

Brig. Gen. BYRON R. PIERCE.

17th Maine:
 Lieut. Col. William Hobson.*
 Maj. Charles P. Mattocks.
 1st Massachusetts Heavy Artillery,
 Maj. Nathaniel Shatswell.
 5th Michigan, Col. John Palford.
 93d New York, Lieut. Col. Haviland
 Gifford.
 57th Pennsylvania, Col. George Zinn.
 105th Pennsylvania, Maj. James Miller.
 141st Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. Joseph
 H. Horton.

Third Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. ROBERT McALLISTER.

11th Massachusetts, Lieut. Col. Charles C. Rivers.
 7th New Jersey, Col. Francis Price.
 8th New Jersey, Maj. Henry Hartford.
 11th New Jersey, Lieut. Col. John Schoonover.
 120th New York, Lieut. Col. Abram L. Lockwood.

ARTILLERY BRIGADE.

Bvt. Lieut. Col. JOHN G. HAZARD.

Massachusetts Light, 10th Battery, Capt. J. Webb Adams.
 1st New Hampshire, Battery M, Capt. George K. Dakin.
 1st New Jersey Light, Battery B, Capt. A. Judson Clark.
 New York Light, 11th Battery, Lieut. James A. Manning.
 4th New York Heavy, Company C, Capt. Richard Kennedy.
 4th New York Heavy, Company I, Lieut. Frank Seymour.
 1st Rhode Island Light, Battery B, Lieut. William B. Westcott.
 4th United States, Battery K, Bvt. Capt. John W. Roder.

FIFTH ARMY CORPS.

Maj. Gen. GOUVERNEUR K. WARREN.
 Bvt. Maj. Gen. CHARLES GRIFFIN.†

ESCORT.

4th Pennsylvania Cavalry, Company C, Capt. Napoleon J. Horrell.

PROVOST GUARD.

104th New York, Capt. William W. Graham.

* Wounded April 6.

† In command from April 1.

FIRST DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. CHARLES GRIFFIN.
Bvt. Maj. Gen. JOSEPH J. BARTLETT.*

First Brigade.

Brig. Gen. JOSHUA L. CHAMBERLAIN.
185th New York, Col. Gustavus Sniper.
198th Pennsylvania:
Bvt. Brig. Gen. Horatio G. Sickel,†
Maj. Edwin A. Glenn,‡
Capt. John Stanton.

Second Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. EDGAR M. GREGORY.
187th New York, Lieut. Col. Daniel Myers.
188th New York, Lieut. Col. Isaac Doolittle.
189th New York, Lieut. Col. Joseph G. Townsend.

Third Brigade.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. JOSEPH J. BARTLETT.
Bvt. Brig. Gen. ALFRED L. PEARSON.*

1st Maine Sharpshooters, Capt. George R. Abbott.
20th Maine, Lieut. Col. Walter G. Morrill.
32d Massachusetts, Lieut. Col. James A. Cunningham.
1st Michigan, Lieut. Col. George Lockley.
16th Michigan,§ Bvt. Col. Benjamin F. Partridge.
83d Pennsylvania, Col. Chauncey P. Rogers.
91st Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. Eli G. Sellers.
118th Pennsylvania, Bvt. Lieut. Col. Henry O'Neill.
155th Pennsylvania:
Bvt. Brig. Gen. Alfred L. Pearson.
Maj. John A. Cline.

SECOND DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. ROMEYN B. AYRES.

First Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. FREDERICK WINTHROP,†
Col. JAMES GRINDLAY.
Brig. Gen. JOSEPH HAYES,||
5th New York (veteran):
Capt. Henry Schiekhardt.
Lieut. Col. William F. Drum.*
15th New York Heavy Artillery:
Lieut. Col. Michael Wiedrich,¶
Maj. Louis Biehe.
140th New York, Lieut. Col. William S. Grantsynn.
146th New York:
Col. James Grindlay.
Lieut. Henry Loomis.
Col. James Grindlay.

Second Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. ANDREW W. DENISON.
Col. RICHARD N. BOWERMAN,¶
Col. DAVID L. STANTON.
1st Maryland:
Col. David L. Stanton.
Maj. Robert Neely.
4th Maryland:
Col. Richard N. Bowerman.
Maj. Harrison Adreon.
7th Maryland:
Lieut. Col. David T. Bennett.
Maj. Edward M. Mobley.
8th Maryland, Lieut. Col. Ernest F. M. Faetz.

* In command from April 1.

† Wounded March 29.

‡ Mortally wounded April 1.

§ Brady's and Jardine's companies Michigan Sharpshooters attached.

|| In command from April 3.

¶ Wounded April 1.

 Wounded March 31.

Third Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. JAMES GWYN.

3d Delaware, Capt. John H. Cade.

4th Delaware:

Capt. William H. Maclary.*

Bvt. Lieut. Col. Moses B. Gist.

8th Delaware (three companies), Capt. John N. Richards.

157th Pennsylvania (four companies),

190th Pennsylvania,

191st Pennsylvania,

210th Pennsylvania:

Col. William Sergeant.†

Lieut. Col. Edward L. Witman.

} Bvt. Col. Joseph B. Patton.

THIRD DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. SAMUEL W. CRAWFORD.

First Brigade.

Col. JOHN A. KELLOGG.

91st New York, Col. Jonathan Tarbell.

6th Wisconsin:

Lieut. Col. Thomas Kerr.‡

Capt. Edward A. Whaley.§

Capt. Lewis A. Kent.

7th Wisconsin, Lieut. Col. Hollon Richardson.§

Second Brigade.

Brig. Gen. HENRY BAXTER.

16th Maine, Col. Charles W. Tilden.

39th Massachusetts:

Lieut. Col. Henry M. Tremlett.‡

Capt. Joseph J. Cooper.

97th New York, Lieut. Col. Rouse S.

Eggleston.‡

11th Pennsylvania, Maj. John B. Overmyer.

107th Pennsylvania, Col. Thomas F. McCoy.

Third Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. RICHARD COULTER.

94th New York:

Maj. Henry H. Fish.¶

Capt. Albert T. Morgan.

95th New York, Capt. George D. Knight.

147th New York:

Maj. Dennis B. Dailey.‡

Capt. James A. McKinley.

56th Pennsylvania, { Maj. Henry A. Laycock.

88th Pennsylvania, }

121st Pennsylvania,†† Maj. West Funk.

142d Pennsylvania,†† Lieut. Col. Horatio N. Warren.‡

Unattached.

1st Battalion New York Sharpshooters, Capt. Clinton Perry.

ARTILLERY BRIGADE.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. CHARLES S. WAINWRIGHT.

1st New York Light, Battery B, Capt. Robert E. Rogers.

1st New York Light, Battery D, Lieut. Delosa M. Johnson.

1st New York Light, Battery H, Bvt. Maj. Charles E. Mink.

15th New York Heavy, Company M, Capt. William D. Diekey.

4th United States, Battery B:

Lieut. John Mitchell.††

Lieut. William P. Vose.

5th United States, Batteries D and G, Lieut. Jacob B. Rawles.

* Killed April 1.

† Mortally wounded March 31.

‡ Wounded March 31.

§ Wounded April 1.

|| Wounded April 2.

¶ Wounded March 31 and killed April 1.

 In command from April 3.

†† Consolidated April 1 and commanded by Major Funk.

‡‡ Wounded March 29.

SIXTH ARMY CORPS.

Maj. Gen. HORATIO G. WRIGHT.

ESCORT.

21st Pennsylvania Cavalry, Company E, Capt. William H. Boyd, jr.

FIRST DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. FRANK WHEATON.

First Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. WILLIAM H. PENROSE.

1st and 4th New Jersey (battalion),
Lieut. Col. Baldwin Huffy.2d New Jersey (two companies), Capt.
Adolphus Weiss.3d New Jersey (one company), Capt.
James H. Comings.10th New Jersey, Maj. James W. Mc-
Neely.15th New Jersey, Maj. Ebenezer W.
Davis.40th New Jersey, Col. Stephen R. Gilkyson.Second Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. JOSEPH E. HAMBLIN.

2d Connecticut Heavy Artillery, Col.
James Hubbard.65th New York, Lieut. Col. Henry C.
Fisk.121st New York, Bvt. Col. Egbert Olcott.95th Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. John Harper.Third Brigade.

Col. OLIVER EDWARDS.

37th Massachusetts, Capt. Archibald Hopkins.

49th Pennsylvania, Bvt. Col. Baynton J. Hickman.

82d Pennsylvania, Col. Isaac C. Bassett.

119th Pennsylvania:

Lieut. Col. Gideon Clark.*

Maj. William C. Gray.

2d Rhode Island, Lieut. Col. Elisha H. Rhodes.

5th Wisconsin, Col. Thomas S. Allen.

SECOND DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. GEORGE W. GETTY.

First Brigade.

Col. JAMES M. WARNER.

62d New York, Lieut. Col. Theodore B.
Hamilton.93d Pennsylvania:
Col. Charles W. Eckman.

Capt. B. Frank Hean.†

Col. Charles W. Eckman.

98th Pennsylvania:
Lieut. Col. Charles Reen.*

Capt. Bernhard Gessler.

102d Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. James Patchell.

139th Pennsylvania:

Lieut. Col. John G. Parr.

Maj. James McGregor.‡

Lieut. Col. John G. Parr.

Second Brigade.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. LEWIS A. GRANT.*

Lieut. Col. AMASA S. TRACY.

Bvt. Col. CHARLES MUNDEE.†

Lieut. Col. AMASA S. TRACY.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. LEWIS A. GRANT.

2d Vermont, Lieut. Col. Amasa S.
Tracy.3d Vermont, Bvt. Col. Horace W.
Floyd.‡

4th Vermont, Capt. George H. Amidon.

5th Vermont, Lieut. Col. Ronald A. Kennedy.

6th Vermont:

Maj. William J. Sperry.

Lieut. Col. Sumner H. Lincoln.§

1st Vermont Heavy Artillery, Lieut. Col.
Charles Hunsdon.

* Wounded April 2.

† In command part of April 2.

‡ Commanded 3d and 4th Vermont on March 31.

§ In command from April 4.

Third Brigade.

Col. THOMAS W. HYDE.

1st Maine (veteran), Lieut. Col. Stephen C. Fletcher.
 43d New York (five companies), Lieut. Col. Charles A. Milliken.
 49th New York (five companies):
 Lieut. Col. Erastus D. Holt.*
 Maj. George H. Selkirk.
 77th New York (five companies):
 Lieut. Col. David J. Cay.*
 Capt. Charles E. Stevens.
 122d New York, Lieut. Col. Horace H. Walpole.
 61st Pennsylvania:
 Lieut. Col. John W. Crosby.†
 Col. George F. Smith.

THIRD DIVISION.

Brig. Gen. TRUMAN SEYMOUR.

First Brigade.

Col. WILLIAM S. TRUEN.

14th New Jersey, Lieut. Col. Jacob J. Janeway.
 106th New York:
 Col. Andrew N. McDonald.
 Lieut. Col. Alvah W. Briggs.‡
 Col. Andrew N. McDonald.
 151st New York (five companies), Lieut. Col. Charles Bogardus.
 87th Pennsylvania, Capt. James Tearney.
 10th Vermont, Lieut. Col. George B. Damon.

Second Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. WARREN KEIFER.

6th Maryland:
 Maj. Clifton K. Prontiss.*
 Lieut. Col. Joseph C. Hill.
 9th New York Heavy Artillery, Lieut. Col. James W. Snyder.
 110th Ohio:
 Bvt. Col. Otho H. Binkley.
 Capt. William D. Shellenberger.¶
 Bvt. Col. Otho H. Binkley.
 122d Ohio, Lieut. Col. Charles M. Cornyn.
 126th Ohio, Col. Benjamin F. Smith.
 67th Pennsylvania, Maj. William G. Williams.
 138th Pennsylvania, Col. Matthew R. McClellan.

ARTILLERY BRIGADE.

Bvt. Maj. ANDREW COWAN.

1st New Jersey Light, Battery A, Capt. Augustin N. Parsons.
 New York Light, 1st Battery, Bvt. Capt. Orsamus R. Van Etten.
 New York Light, 3d Battery, Bvt. Maj. William A. Harn.
 9th New York Heavy, Company L, Capt. S. Augustus Howe.
 1st Rhode Island Light, Battery G, Bvt. Maj. George W. Adams.
 1st Rhode Island Light, Battery H, Capt. Crawford Allen, jr.
 5th United States, Battery E, Lieut. John R. Brincklé.
 1st Vermont Heavy, Company D, Capt. Charles J. Lewis.

* Mortally wounded April 2.

† Sick from April 2.

‡ Killed April 2.

§ In command April 2.

¶ Wounded April 2.

NINTH ARMY CORPS.

Maj. Gen. JOHN G. PARKE.

PROVOST GUARD.

79th New York, Maj. Andrew D. Baird.

FIRST DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. ORLANDO B. WILLCOX.

First Brigade.

Col. SAMUEL HARRIMAN.

8th Michigan, Maj. Richard N. Doyle.
 27th Michigan, Col. Charles Waite.
 109th New York, Lieut. Col. Colwert K.
 Pier.
 51st Pennsylvania, Col. William J.
 Bolton.
 37th Wisconsin, Lieut. Col. John Green.
 38th Wisconsin:
 Col. James Bintliff.
 Maj. Robert N. Roberts.

Second Brigade.

Bvt. Col. RALPH ELY.

1st Michigan Sharpshooters:
 Lieut. Col. Asahel W. Nichols.*
 Maj. Edwin J. Buckhee.
 2d Michigan, Capt. John C. Boughton.
 20th Michigan, Capt. Albert A. Day.
 46th New York, Lieut. Col. Adolph
 Becker.
 60th Ohio, Lieut. Col. Martin P. Avery.
 50th Pennsylvania, Maj. Samuel K.
 Schwenk.

Third Brigade.

Bvt. Col. GILBERT P. ROBINSON.
 Col. JAMES BINTLIFF.†

3d Maryland (four companies):

Capt. Joseph F. Carter.

Bvt. Col. Gilbert P. Robinson.

29th Massachusetts, Capt. John M. Deane.
 57th Massachusetts, Capt. Albert W. Cook.
 59th Massachusetts, Maj. Ezra P. Gould.
 18th New Hampshire, Lieut. Col. Joseph M. Clough.
 14th New York Heavy Artillery, Maj. George M. Randall.
 100th Pennsylvania, Maj. Norman J. Maxwell.

Acting Engineers.

17th Michigan, Lieut. Col. Frederick W. Swift.

SECOND DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. ROBERT B. POTTER.*
 Brig. Gen. SIMON G. GRIFFIN.

First Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. JOHN I. CURTIN.

35th Massachusetts, Col. Sumner Carruth.
 36th Massachusetts, Lieut. Col. Thaddens L. Barker.
 58th Massachusetts, Lieut. Col. John C. Whiton.
 39th New Jersey, Col. Abram C. Wildrick.
 51st New York, Capt. Thomas B. Marsh.
 45th Pennsylvania:
 Capt. Roland C. Cheesman.*
 Bvt. Col. Theodore Gregg.
 48th Pennsylvania:
 Col. George W. Gowan.†
 Lieut. Col. Isaac F. Brannon.
 7th Rhode Island, Bvt. Col. Percy Daniels.

* Wounded April 2.

† In command from April 2.

‡ Killed April 2.

Second Brigade.

Brig. Gen. SIMON G. GRIFFIN.
Col. WALTER HARRIMAN.

31st Maine:

Lieut. Col. Edward L. Gatchell.*
Capt. Ebenezer S. Kyes.

2d Maryland, Lieut. Col. Benjamin F. Taylor.

56th Massachusetts:

Maj. Zabdiel B. Adams.
Col. Stephen M. Weld, jr.†

6th New Hampshire, Lieut. Col. Phin P. Bixby.

9th New Hampshire, Capt. John B. Cooper.

11th New Hampshire:

Col. Walter Harriman.
Capt. Hollis O. Dudley.

179th New York:

Col. William M. Gregg.*
Maj. Albert A. Terrill.

186th New York:

Col. Bradley Winslow.*
Lieut. Col. E. Jay Marsh.

17th Vermont:

Maj. Lyman E. Knapp.*
Col. Francis V. Randall.

THIRD DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. JOHN F. HARTRANFT.

First Brigade.

Lieut. Col. WILLIAM H. H. MCCALL.
Col. ALFRED B. MCCALMONT.‡

200th Pennsylvania:

Maj. Jacob Rohrer.
Lieut. Col. William H. H.
McCall.

208th Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. Mish T.
Heintzelman.209th Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. George W. Frederick.Second Brigade.

Col. JOSEPH A. MATHEWS.

205th Pennsylvania:

Maj. B. Mortimer Morrow.*
Capt. Joseph G. Holmes.

207th Pennsylvania, Col. Robert C. Cox.§

211th Pennsylvania, Col. Levi A. Dodd.

ARTILLERY BRIGADE.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. JOHN C. TIDBALL.

Maine Light, 7th Battery (G), Capt. Adelbert B. Twitchell.

Massachusetts Light, 11th Battery, Capt. Edward J. Jones.

New York Light, 19th Battery, Capt. Edward W. Rogers.

New York Light, 27th Battery, Capt. John B. Eaton.

New York Light, 34th Battery, Bvt. Maj. Jacob Roemer.

Pennsylvania Light, Battery D, Capt. Samuel H. Rhoads.

CAVALRY.

2d Pennsylvania, Col. William W. Sanders.

INDEPENDENT BRIGADE.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. CHARLES H. T. COLLIS.

1st Massachusetts Cavalry (eight companies), Maj. John Towksbury.

61st Massachusetts, Col. Charles F. Walcott.

80th New York (20th Militia), Col. Jacob B. Hardenbergh.

68th Pennsylvania:

Col. Andrew H. Tippin.¶

Lieut. Col. Robert E. Winslow.

114th Pennsylvania:

Capt. Henry M. Eddy.¶

Capt. John R. Waterhouse.

* Wounded April 2.

† In command from April 4.

‡ In command from April 3.

§ In command of brigade parts of April 2 and 3.

¶ Disabled April 2.

¶ Mortally wounded April 2.

CAVALRY.

Maj. Gen. PHILIP H. SHERIDAN.

ARMY OF THE SHENANDOAH.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. WESLEY MERRETT.

FIRST DIVISION.

Brig. Gen. THOMAS C. DEVIN.

First Brigade.

Col. PETER STAGG.

1st Michigan:
 Lieut. Col. George R. Maxwell.
 Capt. Edward L. Negus.
 5th Michigan, Lieut. Col. Smith H.
 Hastings.
 6th Michigan, Lieut. Col. Harvey H.
 Vinton.
 7th Michigan, Lieut. Col. George G.
 Briggs.

Second Brigade.

Col. CHARLES L. FITZHUGH.

6th New York, Maj. Harrison White.
 9th New York, Maj. James R. Dinnin.
 19th New York (1st Dragoons), Maj.
 Howard M. Smith.
 17th Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. Coe Dur-land.
 20th Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. Gabriel
 Middleton.

Third (Reserve) Brigade.

Brig. Gen. ALFRED GIBBS.

2d Massachusetts, Col. Casper Crowninshield.
 6th Pennsylvania (six companies), Col. Charles L. Leipor.
 1st United States, Capt. Richard S. C. Lord.
 5th United States:
 Capt. Thomas Drummond.[†]
 Lieut. Gustavus Urban.
 6th United States, Maj. Robert M. Morris.

Artillery.

4th United States, Batteries C and E, Capt. Marcus P. Miller.

THIRD DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. GEORGE A. CUSTER.

First Brigade.

Col. ALEXANDER C. M. PENNINGTON.

1st Connecticut, Col. Brayton Ives.
 3d New Jersey, Lieut. Col. William P.
 Robeson, Jr.
 2d New York, Col. Alanson M. Randol.
 2d Ohio, Capt. Albert Barnitz.

Second Brigade.

Col. WILLIAM WELLS.

8th New York, Maj. James Bliss.
 15th New York, Col. John J. Coppinger.
 1st Vermont, Lieut. Col. Josiah Hall.

Third Brigade.

Col. HENRY CAPEHART.

1st New York (Lincoln), Lieut. Col. Jonyas C. Battersby.
 1st West Virginia:
 Maj. Shosh B. Howe.[†]
 Lieut. Col. Charles E. Capehart.
 2d West Virginia (seven companies), Lieut. Col. James Allen.
 3d West Virginia, Maj. John S. Witcher.

^{*} Wounded April 1.[†] Killed April 1.[‡] Killed April 8.

SECOND DIVISION.

(Army of the Potomac.)

Maj. Gen. GEORGE CROOK.

First Brigade.

Brig. Gen. HENRY E. DAVIES, Jr.
 1st New Jersey:
 Col. Hugh H. Janeway.*
 Maj. Walter R. Robbins.
 10th New York, Col. M. Henry Avery.
 24th New York:
 Col. Walter C. Newberry.†
 Lieut. Col. Melzer Richards.‡
 Maj. William A. Snyder.
 1st Pennsylvania (five companies), Maj.
 Hampton S. Thomas.§
 2d U. S. Artillery, Battery A, Lieut.
 James H. Lord.

Second Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. IRVIN GREGG.¶
 Col. SAMUEL B. M. YOUNG.
 4th Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. Alender P.
 Duncan.
 8th Pennsylvania (eight companies),
 Lieut. Col. William A. Corrie.
 16th Pennsylvania:
 Lieut. Col. John K. Robison.¶¶
 Maj. William H. Fry.
 21st Pennsylvania, Col. Oliver B.
 Knowles.
 1st U. S. Artillery, Batteries H and I,
 Lieut. Chandler P. Eakin.

Third Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. CHARLES H. SMITH.
 1st Maine, Lieut. Col. Jonathan P. Cilley.
 2d New York Mounted Rifles:
 Maj. Paul Chadbourne.†
 Col. John Fisk.††
 6th Ohio, Capt. Matthew H. Cryer.
 13th Ohio, Lieut. Col. Stephen R. Clark.

[See also Cavalry Division, Army of the James, p. 580.]

ARMY OF THE JAMES.

Maj. Gen. EDWARD O. C. ORD.

HEADQUARTERS GUARD.

3d Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery; Company D, Capt. Edwin A. Evans.
 3d Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, Company I, Capt. Osbourn Wattson.

ENGINEERS.

1st New York, Bvt. Brig. Gen. James F. Hall.

PONTONIERS.

3d Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, Company I, Capt. John Pickering, jr.

UNATTACHED CAVALRY.

4th Massachusetts, Companies I, L, and M, Col. Francis Washburn.††
 5th Massachusetts (colored), Col. Charles F. Adams, jr.
 7th New York (1st Mounted Rifles), §§ Col. Edwin V. Sumner.

DEFENSES OF BERMUDA HUNDRED.

Maj. Gen. GEORGE L. HARTSUFF.

INFANTRY DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. EDWARD FERRERO.

First Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. GILBERT H. MCKIBBIN.
 41st New York, Lieut. Col. Detleo von Einsiedel.
 103d New York, Capt. William Redlick.
 2d Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, Maj.
 Benjamin F. Winger.
 104th Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. Theophilus Kephart.

Second Brigade.

Col. GEORGE C. KIMME.
 6th New York Heavy Artillery, Lieut.
 Col. Stephen Baker.
 10th New York Heavy Artillery, Lieut.
 Col. G. de Peyster Arden.

* Killed April 5.

† Wounded March 31.

‡ Mortally wounded April 5.

§ Wounded April 5.

|| Captured April 7.

¶ Wounded April 7.

 Detached with Artillery Brigade,
Ninth Army Corps.

†† In command from April 3.

‡‡ Mortally wounded April 6.

§§ On expedition into North Carolina.

Artillery.

New York Light, 33d Battery, Capt. Alger M. Wheeler.

ARTILLERY.

Byt. Belg. Gen. HENRY L. ABBOT.

13th New York Heavy, Companies A and H, Capt. William Pendrell.

New York Light, 7th Battery, Lieut. Martin V. McIntyre.

3d Pennsylvania Heavy, Company E, Capt. Erskine H. Miles.

3d Pennsylvania Heavy, Company M, Lieut. Sylvester W. Marshall.

SEPARATE BRIGADE.

Brig. Gen. JOSEPH B. CARR.

FORT POCAHONTAS, VA.

Lieut. Col. ASHBEL W. ANGEL.

h New Jersey (four companies), Maj. William H. Tatum.

h New York Cavalry, Company D, Capt. Wayland F. Ford.

h New York Heavy Artillery, Companies E and H, Capt. Henry C. Thompson.

h New York, Company I, Capt. George Wetmore.

HARRISON'S LANDING, VA.

Col. WARDWELL G. ROBINSON.

184th New York, Lieut. Col. William P. McKinley.

1st U. S. Colored Cavalry, Company I, Lieut. Horace Hudson.

FORT POWHATAN, VA.

Col. WILLIAM J. SEWELL.

38th New Jersey (six companies), Col. William J. Sewell.

20th New York Cavalry, Company F, Lieut. John E. Pollard.

3d Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery (detachment), Lieut. Frederick Grill.

1st U. S. Colored Cavalry, Company E, Capt. Charles W. Emerson.

TWENTY-FOURTH ARMY CORPS.

Maj. Gen. JOHN GIBBON.

HEADQUARTERS GUARD.

Capt. CHARLES E. THOMAS.

4th Massachusetts Cavalry, Company F, Capt. Joseph J. Baker.

4th Massachusetts Cavalry, Company K, Capt. Charles E. Thomas.

FIRST DIVISION.

Brig. Gen. ROBERT S. FOSTER.

First Brigade.

Col. THOMAS O. OSBORN.

Illinois, Capt. Homer A. Plympton.

Ohio:

Lieut. Col. Henry R. West.*

Maj. Thomas J. Platt.

Ohio, Col. Alvin C. Voris.

Pennsylvania, Company G, † Lieut.

Absalom S. Dial.

Pennsylvania, Col. James C. Briscoe.

Third Brigade.

Col. GEORGE B. DANDY.

10th Connecticut:

Lieut. Col. Ellsworth D. S.

Goodyear.†

Capt. Francis G. Hickerson.

11th Maine:

Lieut. Col. Jonathan A. Hill.

Maj. Charles P. Baldwin.§

Lieut. Col. Jonathan A. Hill.

Capt. Henry C. Adams.

24th Massachusetts, † Capt. Thomas F. Edmonds.

100th New York:

Maj. James H. Dandy.¶

Capt. Edwin Nichols.

206th Pennsylvania, Col. Hugh J. Brady.

ounded April 6.

most guard at division headquar-

ounded April 2.

87 R R—VOL. XLVI, PT. I

§ Wounded April 1.

¶ Detached at Bermuda Hundred.

¶ Killed April 2.

 Wounded April 9.

Fourth Brigade.

Col. HARRISON S. FAIRCHILD.

8th Maine:
 Lieut. Col. Edward A. True.
 Capt. Edward H. Reynolds.*
 89th New York:
 Maj. Frank W. Tremaine.
 Capt. William Dobie.
 148th New York, Col. John B. Murray.
 158th New York:
 Lieut. Col. William H. McNary.
 Maj. Hyron Kalt.
 55th Pennsylvania, Capt. George H. Hill.

THIRD DIVISION.

Brig. Gen. CHARLES DEVENS.

First Brigade.

Col. EDWARD H. RIPLEY.

11th Connecticut, Maj. Charles Warren.
 13th New Hampshire, Lieut. Col. Norman Smith.
 81st New York, Capt. Matthew T. Betton.
 98th New York, Lieut. Col. William Kreutzner.
 139th New York, Maj. Theodore Miller.
 19th Wisconsin, Maj. Saml. K. Vaughan.

Second Brigade.

Col. MICHAEL T. DONOHUE.

8th Connecticut, Maj. William M. Pratt.
 5th Maryland, Lieut. Col. William W. Banberger.
 10th New Hampshire, Capt. Warren M. Kelley.
 12th New Hampshire, Lieut. Col. Thomas E. Barker.
 96th New York, Maj. George W. Hinds.
 118th New York, Lieut. Col. Levi S. Dominy.
 9th Vermont, Lieut. Col. Valentino G. Barney.

Third Brigade.

Col. SAMUEL H. ROBERTS.

21st Connecticut, Lieut. Col. James F. Brown.
 40th Massachusetts, Lieut. Col. John Pollack.
 2d New Hampshire, Lieut. Col. Jacob N. Patterson.
 58th Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. Cecil Clay.
 188th Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. George K. Bowen.

INDEPENDENT DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. JOHN W. TURNER.

First Brigade.

Lieut. Col. ANDREW POTTER.

34th Massachusetts, Capt. Frank T. Leach.
 110th Ohio, Lieut. Col. Wilbert B. Tetters.
 123d Ohio, Lieut. Col. Horace Kollogg.

Second Brigade.

Col. WILLIAM B. CURTIS.

23d Illinois, Capt. Patrick M. Ryan.
 54th Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. Albert P. Moulton.
 12th West Virginia, Capt. Erastus G. Bartlett.

* In command from April 6.

† Killed April 2.

Third Brigade.

Brig. Gen. THOMAS M. HARRIS.

10th West Virginia, Capt. Marshal W. Coburn.
 11th West Virginia, Maj. Michael A. Ayers.
 15th West Virginia, Lieut. Col. John W. Holliday.

ARTILLERY.

Maj. CHARLES C. ABELL.

3d New York Light, Battery E, Capt. George E. Ashby.
 3d New York Light, Battery H, Capt. Enoch Jones.
 3d New York Light, Battery K, Capt. James R. Angel.
 3d New York Light, Battery M, Capt. John H. Howell.
 New York Light, 17th Battery, Capt. George T. Anthony.
 1st Pennsylvania Light, Battery A, Capt. William Stitt.
 1st Rhode Island Light, Battery F, Lieut. Charles E. Guild.
 1st United States, Battery B, Capt. Samuel S. Elder.
 4th United States, Battery L, Lieut. Henry C. Hasbrouck.
 5th United States, Battery A, Lieut. Charles P. Muhlenberg.
 5th United States, Battery F, Lieut. Henry B. Beecher.

TWENTY-FIFTH ARMY CORPS.

Maj. Gen. GODFREY WEITZEL.

PROVOST GUARD.

4th Massachusetts Cavalry, Companies E and H, Maj. Atherton H. Stevens, jr.

FIRST DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. AUGUST V. KAUTZ.

First Brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. ALONZO G. DRAPER.

22d U. S. Colored Troops, Lieut. Col.
 Ira C. Terry.
 36th U. S. Colored Troops, Lieut. Col.
 Benjamin F. Pratt.
 38th U. S. Colored Troops, Col. Robert
 M. Hall.
 118th U. S. Colored Troops, Col. John C.
 Moon.

Second Brigade.

Brig. Gen. EDWARD A. WILD.

29th Connecticut (colored), Col. William B. Wooster.
 9th U. S. Colored Troops, Col. Thomas
 Bayley.
 115th U. S. Colored Troops,* Col. Robert
 H. Earnest.
 117th U. S. Colored Troops, Col. Lewis G.
 Brown.

Third Brigade.

Brig. Gen. HENRY G. THOMAS.

19th U. S. Colored Troops, Col. Joseph
 G. Perkins.
 23d U. S. Colored Troops, Lieut. Col.
 Marshall L. Dempsey.
 43d U. S. Colored Troops, Col. Stephen
 B. Yeoman.
 114th U. S. Colored Troops, Lieut. Col.
 Thomas D. Sedgwick.

Attached Brigade.†

Bvt. Brig. Gen. CHARLES S. RUSSELL.

10th U. S. Colored Troops, Lieut. Col.
 Edward H. Powell.
 28th U. S. Colored Troops, Lieut. Col.
 Thomas H. Logan.

Cavalry.

2d U. S. Colored, Col. George W. Cole.

* Detached from First Brigade, Second Division.

† Detached from Third Brigade, Second Division.

SECOND DIVISION.

Brig. Gen. WILLIAM BIRNEY.

First Brigade.

Col. JAMES SHAW, JR.

7th U. S. Colored Troops, Lieut. Col. Oscar E. Pratt.
 109th U. S. Colored Troops, Col. Orion A. Bartholomew.
 116th U. S. Colored Troops, Lieut. Col. George H. Laird.

Second Brigade.

Col. ULYSSES DOUBLEDAY.

8th U. S. Colored Troops, Col. Samuel C. Armstrong.
 41st U. S. Colored Troops, Col. Lowellyn F. Haskell.
 45th U. S. Colored Troops, Maj. Theodore C. Glazier.
 127th U. S. Colored Troops, Lieut. Col. James Givin.

Third Brigade.

Col. WILLIAM W. WOODWARD.

29th U. S. Colored Troops, Col. Clark R. Royce.
 31st U. S. Colored Troops, Col. Henry C. Ward.

ARTILLERY BRIGADE.

Capt. LOOMIS L. LANGDON.

Connecticut Light, 1st Battery, Capt. James B. Clinton.
 New Jersey Light, 4th Battery, Capt. Charles R. Doane.
 New Jersey Light, 5th Battery, Capt. Zeuss C. Warren.
 1st Pennsylvania Light, Battery B, Capt. Henry Y. Willey.
 3d Rhode Island, Battery C, Capt. Martin S. James.
 1st United States, Battery D, Lieut. Redmond Tully.
 1st United States, Battery M, Lieut. Egbert W. Oleott.
 4th United States, Battery D, Capt. Frederick M. Pollett.

CAVALRY DIVISION.^a

Brig. Gen. RANALD S. MACKENZIE.

First Brigade.

Col. ROBERT M. WEST.

20th New York, Company G, Capt.
 Thomas H. Butler.
 5th Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. Christopher Kleinz.

*Second Brigade.*Col. SAMUEL P. SPEAR.[†]

1st District of Columbia (battalion),
 Maj. J. Stannard Baker.
 1st Maryland, Col. Andrew W. Evans.
 11th Pennsylvania, Lieut. Col. Franklin
 A. Stratton.

Artillery.

Wisconsin Light, 4th Battery, Capt. Dorman L. Noggle.

^a Temporarily assigned April 1 to Sheridan's cavalry command.
[†] Wounded April 1.

No. 2.

*Return of casualties in the Union Forces commanded by Lieut. Gen.
Ulysses S. Grant, March 29–April 9, 1865.*

[Compiled from nominal lists of casualties.]

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| GENERAL HEADQUARTERS. | | | | | | | |
| ESCOFT. | | | | | | | |
| 5th U. S. Cavalry, Companies B, F, and K..... | | | | | | | |
| HEADQUARTERS GUARD. | | | | | | | |
| 4th United States | | | | | | | |
| ARMY OF THE POTOMAC. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. GEORGE G. MEADE. | | | | | | | |
| PROVOST GUARD. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. GEORGE N. MACY. | | | | | | | |
| 1st Indiana Cavalry, Company K..... | | | | | | | |
| 1st Massachusetts Cavalry, Companies C and D..... | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| 3d Pennsylvania Cavalry..... | | 1 | | | | | 1 |
| 11th United States, 1st Battalion..... | | | | | | | |
| 14th United States, 2d Battalion..... | | 1 | | | | | 1 |
| Total Provost Guard..... | | 2 | | 1 | | | 3 |
| HEADQUARTERS GUARD. | | | | | | | |
| 3d United States | | | | | | | |
| Signal Detachment..... | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| QUARTERMASTER'S GUARD. | | | | | | | |
| Ononda (New York) Cavalry | | | | | | | |
| ENGINEER BRIGADE. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. HENRY W. BENHAM. | | | | | | | |
| 15th New York (two companies) | | | | | | | |
| 50th New York | | | | | | | |
| Total Engineer Brigade..... | | | | | | | |
| Battalion U. S. Engineers | | | | | | | |
| ARTILLERY. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. HENRY J. HUNT. | | | | | | | |
| SIEGE TRAIN. | | | | | | | |
| Col. HENRY L. ABBOT. | | | | | | | |
| 1st Connecticut Heavy..... | | 3 | | 11 | | | 14 |
| Connecticut Light, 3d Battery..... | | | | | | | |
| Total Siege Train | | 3 | | 11 | | | 14 |
| ARTILLERY RESERVE. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. WILLIAM HAYS. | | | | | | | |
| Maine Light, 2d Battery (B)..... | | | | | | | |
| Maine Light, 3d Battery (C) | | | | | | | |
| Maine Light, 4th Battery (D) | | | | | | | |
| Maine Light, 6th Battery (F)..... | | | | | | | |
| Massachusetts Light, 6th Battery (B)..... | | | 1 | 3 | | | 4 |
| Massachusetts Light, 9th Battery..... | | | | | | | |
| Massachusetts Light, 14th Battery..... | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| New Jersey Light, 3d Battery..... | | | | | | | |
| 1st New York Light, Battery C..... | | 1 | | 2 | | | 3 |
| 1st New York Light, Battery E..... | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| 1st New York Light, Battery G..... | | | | | | | |
| 1st New York Light, Battery I..... | | | | | | | |
| New York Light, 12th Battery..... | | | | | | | |
| 1st Ohio Light, Battery H..... | | | | | | | |
| 1st Pennsylvania Light, Battery B..... | | 2 | | 2 | | | 4 |

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c. | | | | | | | |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| ARTILLERY RESERVE—continued. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. WILLIAM HAYS. | | | | | | | |
| 1st Pennsylvania Light, Battery F | | | | | | | |
| 1st Rhode Island Light, Battery E | | | | | | | |
| Vermont Light, 3d Battery | | | | | | | |
| 5th United States, Batteries C and I | | | | | | | |
| Total Artillery Reserve | | 3 | 1 | 0 | | | 13 |
| Total Artillery | | 6 | 1 | 20 | | | 27 |
| SECOND ARMY CORPS. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. ANDREW A. HUMPHREYS. | | | | | | | |
| Staff | 1 | | 1 | | | | 2 |
| FIRST DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. NELSON A. MILES. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. GEORGE W. SCOTT. | | | | | | | |
| Staff | | 6 | 1 | | | | 1 |
| 20th Michigan | 1 | 13 | 4 | 20 | 1 | 12 | 45 |
| 5th New Hampshire (battalion) | | 6 | 5 | 62 | 5 | 77 | 162 |
| 2d New York Heavy Artillery | | 6 | 1 | 57 | 3 | 70 | 141 |
| 61st New York | 1 | 6 | 1 | 40 | | 49 | 97 |
| 81st Pennsylvania | 2 | 6 | 2 | 26 | 2 | 44 | 82 |
| 140th Pennsylvania | 2 | 2 | 2 | 21 | | 24 | 51 |
| Total First Brigade | 6 | 30 | 15 | 232 | 11 | 276 | 579 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. ROBERT NUGENT. | | | | | | | |
| 28th Massachusetts (five companies) | | 2 | 1 | 4 | | 2 | 6 |
| 63d New York (six companies) | 1 | 2 | 3 | 18 | | | 12 |
| 69th New York | | 2 | | 4 | | | 23 |
| 88th New York (five companies) | | 7 | 2 | 92 | | 1 | 4 |
| 4th New York Heavy Artillery | | | | | | | 102 |
| Total Second Brigade | 1 | 11 | 8 | 124 | | 3 | 147 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. HENRY J. MADILL.* | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. CLINTON D. MACDOUGALL. | | | | | | | |
| Staff | 1 | 17 | 8 | 78 | | 10 | 114 |
| 7th New York | | 3 | 1 | 32 | | | 36 |
| 39th New York | 3 | 9 | 1 | 48 | | 12 | 73 |
| 52d New York | 1 | 8 | 3 | 60 | | | 81 |
| 111th New York | 1 | 4 | | 24 | | 3 | 32 |
| 125th New York | | 1 | 3 | 10 | | 5 | 19 |
| 126th New York (battalion) | | | | | | | |
| Total Third Brigade | 6 | 42 | 17 | 261 | | 30 | 356 |
| Fourth Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. JOHN RAMSEY. | | | | | | | |
| Staff | | 6 | 1 | 23 | 1 | 10 | 1 |
| 61th New York (battalion) | | 1 | | 12 | | | 41 |
| 66th New York | | 17 | 2 | 57 | | | 76 |
| 53d Pennsylvania | 1 | 2 | 2 | 22 | | | 27 |
| 116th Pennsylvania | | 1 | | 6 | | | 6 |
| 145th Pennsylvania | 1 | 5 | 2 | 36 | | 3 | 40 |
| 48th Pennsylvania | | | | 4 | | | 4 |
| 83d Pennsylvania | | | | | | | |
| Total Fourth Brigade | 2 | 32 | 0 | 157 | 1 | 13 | 214 |
| Total First Division | 15 | 124 | 40 | 774 | 12 | 322 | 1,200 |

* Wounded April 2.

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| SECOND DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. WILLIAM HAYS. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. THOMAS A. SMYTH. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. FRANCIS C. BARLOW. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. WILLIAM A. OLMSTED. | | | | | | | |
| 10th Maine..... | | | 2 | 10 | | | 18 |
| 19th Massachusetts..... | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| 20th Massachusetts..... | | | | | | | |
| 7th Michigan..... | 1 | | 1 | | | | 2 |
| 1st Minnesota (two companies)..... | | 1 | | 1 | | | 2 |
| 50th New York..... | | | | | | | |
| 152d New York..... | | | | | | | |
| 184th Pennsylvania..... | | | | 3 | | | 3 |
| 36th Wisconsin..... | | | | | | | |
| Total First Brigade*..... | 1 | 1 | 3 | 21 | | | 20 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. JAMES P. McIVOR. | | | | | | | |
| 8th New York Heavy Artillery..... | | | 1 | 4 | | | 5 |
| 155th New York..... | | | | | | | |
| 164th New York..... | | | | 2 | | | 2 |
| 170th New York..... | | | | | | | |
| 182d New York (60th New York National Guard Artillery)..... | | | | | | | |
| Total Second Brigade..... | | | 1 | 6 | | | 7 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. THOMAS A. SMYTH. | | | | | | | |
| Col. DANIEL WOODALL. | | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | | | 1 | 2 | | | 3 |
| 14th Connecticut..... | | | 1 | 2 | | | 3 |
| 1st Delaware..... | | 2 | 2 | 9 | | | 13 |
| 12th New Jersey..... | | | | 2 | 1 | | 3 |
| 10th New York (battalion)..... | | | 1 | 4 | | | 5 |
| 108th New York..... | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| 4th Ohio (four companies)..... | | | | | | | |
| 60th Pennsylvania..... | | | | | | | |
| 106th Pennsylvania (three companies)..... | | | | | | | |
| 7th West Virginia (four companies)..... | | | 1 | 4 | | | 5 |
| Total Third Brigade..... | | 2 | 6 | 23 | | 1 | 31 |
| Unattached. | | | | | | | |
| 2d Company Minnesota Sharpshooters..... | | | | | | | |
| Total Second Division..... | 1 | 3 | 10 | 40 | | 1 | 64 |
| THIRD DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. GERSHOM MOTT. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. REUBEN DE TROMBAND. | | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | | | 1 | | | | 1 |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. REUBEN DE TROMBAND. | | | | | | | |
| Col. ROSSIE B. SHEPHERD. | | | | | | | |
| 20th Indiana..... | | | 2 | 11 | | | 13 |
| 1st Maine Heavy Artillery..... | | 3 | 3 | 24 | | 1 | 31 |
| 40th New York..... | | 3 | 1 | 7 | | | 11 |
| 73d New York..... | | | | 6 | | | 6 |
| 86th New York..... | | 2 | 1 | 7 | | | 10 |
| 124th New York..... | 1 | 3 | 1 | 24 | | 3 | 32 |
| 60th Pennsylvania..... | | 11 | 2 | 28 | | 10 | 67 |
| 110th Pennsylvania..... | | 3 | 2 | 15 | | 2 | 22 |
| Total First Brigade..... | 1 | 25 | 12 | 122 | | 22 | 182 |

* Four officers and 91 men captured, were released April 9.

† Mortally wounded April 7.
‡ Wounded April 6.

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|-------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. BYRON R. PIERCE. | | | | | | | |
| 17th Maine | 1 | 4 | 4 | 24 | | | 33 |
| 1st Massachusetts Heavy Artillery | | 2 | | 15 | | | 17 |
| 5th Michigan | 1 | 4 | 2 | 7 | | | 10 |
| 93d New York | | | 1 | 10 | | | 21 |
| 57th Pennsylvania | | 2 | | 21 | | | 22 |
| 105th Pennsylvania | | | | 20 | | 1 | 22 |
| 141st Pennsylvania | | | | 1 | | | 2 |
| Total Second Brigade | 2 | 13 | 7 | 104 | | 1 | 127 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. ROBERT McALLISTER. | | | | | | | |
| 11th Massachusetts | | 1 | | 13 | 2 | 11 | 27 |
| 7th New Jersey | | 1 | 1 | 6 | | 2 | 9 |
| 8th New Jersey | 1 | 8 | 1 | 26 | | 2 | 38 |
| 11th New Jersey | | | | 23 | | | 23 |
| 120th New York | | 1 | | 10 | | 32 | 53 |
| Total Third Brigade | 1 | 11 | 2 | 80 | 2 | 47 | 140 |
| Total Third Division | 4 | 40 | 23 | 312 | 2 | 70 | 459 |
| ARTILLERY BRIGADE. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Lieut. Col. JOHN G. HAZARD. | | | | | | | |
| Massachusetts Light, 10th Battery | | | | | | | |
| 1st New Hampshire, Battery M | | | | 8 | | 1 | 4 |
| 1st New Jersey Light, Battery B | | | | | | | |
| New York Light, 11th Battery | | | | | | | |
| 4th New York Heavy, Company C | | | | | | | |
| 4th New York Heavy, Company I | | | | | | | |
| 1st Rhode Island Light, Battery B | | | | 8 | | | 8 |
| 4th United States, Battery K | | | | | | | |
| Total Artillery Brigade | | | | 11 | | 1 | 12 |
| Total Second Army Corps | 21 | 170 | 82 | 1,140 | 14 | 304 | 1,833 |
| FIFTH ARMY CORPS. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. GOVERNOR K. WARREN. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. CHARLES GRIFFIN. | | | | | | | |
| ESCORT. | | | | | | | |
| 4th Pennsylvania Cavalry, Company C | | | | 4 | | 1 | 5 |
| PROVOST GUARD. | | | | | | | |
| 104th New York | | | | | | | |
| FIRST DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. CHARLES GRIFFIN. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. JOSEPH J. BARTLETT. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. JOSHUA T. CHAMBERLAIN. | | | | | | | |
| Staff | | | 1 | | | | 1 |
| 185th New York | 2 | 30 | 0 | 102 | | 0 | 200 |
| 108th Pennsylvania | 3 | 84 | 10 | 108 | | 22 | 237 |
| Total First Brigade | 5 | 114 | 20 | 310 | | 22 | 447 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. EDGAR M. GREGORY. | | | | | | | |
| 187th New York | | | | 5 | | | 5 |
| 188th New York | | 4 | 3 | 37 | | | 44 |
| 180th New York | | 3 | 2 | 18 | | | 23 |
| Total Second Brigade | | 7 | 5 | 60 | | | 72 |

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. JOSEPH J. BARTLETT. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. ALFRED L. PEARSON. | | | | | | | |
| Staff | | | | | | | |
| 1st Maine Sharpshooters | | | 1 | | | | 1 |
| 29th Maine | | 4 | 1 | 28 | | 5 | 38 |
| 32d Massachusetts | | 7 | 2 | 47 | | 1 | 57 |
| 1st Michigan | | 2 | | 21 | | 2 | 25 |
| 16th Michigan | | 1 | 1 | 19 | | 1 | 23 |
| 83d Pennsylvania | | 2 | 1 | 7 | | | 10 |
| 91st Pennsylvania | | 3 | | 8 | | | 11 |
| 118th Pennsylvania | | 1 | | 15 | | | 16 |
| 156th Pennsylvania | | 1 | 2 | 16 | | | 19 |
| 156th Pennsylvania | 2 | 0 | 1 | 40 | | | 62 |
| Total Third Brigade | 2 | 30 | 0 | 201 | | 0 | 251 |
| Total First Division | 7 | 101 | 34 | 591 | | 37 | 770 |
| SECOND DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. ROMEYN B. AYRES. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. FREDERICK WINTHROP.* | | | | | | | |
| Col. JAMES GRINDLAY. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. JOSEPH HAYES. | | | | | | | |
| 5th New York (Veteran) | 1 | 8 | 1 | 28 | | 30 | 68 |
| 15th New York Heavy Artillery | | 12 | 14 | 84 | | 132 | 242 |
| 140th New York | | 0 | | 21 | | 30 | 57 |
| 140th New York | | 5 | 4 | 34 | | 22 | 65 |
| Total First Brigade | 1 | 31 | 10 | 167 | | 214 | 432 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. ANDREW W. DENISON.† | | | | | | | |
| Col. RICHARD N. BOWERMAN.† | | | | | | | |
| Col. DAVID L. STANTON. | | | | | | | |
| 1st Maryland | | 9 | 6 | 42 | | 24 | 81 |
| 4th Maryland | | 1 | 1 | 8 | | 4 | 9 |
| 7th Maryland | | 7 | 4 | 32 | | 30 | 73 |
| 8th Maryland | | | 2 | 4 | | 7 | 19 |
| Total Second Brigade | | 17 | 13 | 81 | | 65 | 170 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. JAMES GWYN. | | | | | | | |
| 3d Delaware | | 1 | 2 | 13 | | 8 | 24 |
| 4th Delaware | 2 | 7 | 1 | 27 | 2 | 9 | 48 |
| 8th Delaware (three companies) | | 2 | 1 | 12 | | 6 | 23 |
| 157th Pennsylvania (four companies) | | 1 | | 7 | | 7 | 15 |
| 160th Pennsylvania | | 3 | | 11 | | 4 | 18 |
| 191st Pennsylvania | | 2 | | 15 | | 0 | 20 |
| 210th Pennsylvania | | 7 | 5 | 77 | 1 | 27 | 117 |
| Total Third Brigade | 2 | 23 | 9 | 162 | 3 | 72 | 271 |
| Total Second Division | 3 | 71 | 41 | 410 | 3 | 351 | 870 |
| THIRD DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. SAMUEL W. CHAWFORD. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. JOHN A. KELLONG. | | | | | | | |
| 51st New York | | 33 | 0 | 170 | | 21 | 230 |
| 6th Wisconsin | | 8 | 6 | 74 | 1 | 31 | 119 |
| 7th Wisconsin | | 11 | 4 | 55 | | 11 | 81 |
| Total First Brigade | | 52 | 15 | 299 | 1 | 63 | 430 |

* Mortally wounded April 1. † Wounded March 31. ‡ Wounded April 1.

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|--|-----------|------|-----------|-------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. HENRY BAXTER. | | | | | | | |
| 16th Maine | | 12 | 1 | 16 | 2 | 24 | 45 |
| 39th Massachusetts | | 4 | 4 | 27 | | 5 | 38 |
| 97th New York | | 2 | 2 | 18 | | 7 | 20 |
| 11th Pennsylvania | | 3 | 3 | 48 | | 5 | 50 |
| 107th Pennsylvania | | | | 11 | | 2 | 13 |
| Total Second Brigade | | 9 | 10 | 120 | 2 | 43 | 184 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. RICHARD COULTER. | | | | | | | |
| 94th New York | 2 | 10 | 4 | 45 | | 24 | 85 |
| 95th New York | | 4 | 2 | 61 | | 9 | 70 |
| 147th New York | | 2 | 1 | 28 | | 2 | 33 |
| 59th Pennsylvania | | 1 | 2 | 22 | | | 25 |
| 88th Pennsylvania | 1 | | 2 | 23 | 1 | 9 | 35 |
| 121st Pennsylvania | | 1 | 1 | 6 | | 1 | 9 |
| 142d Pennsylvania | | | 4 | 8 | | 4 | 16 |
| Total Third Brigade | 3 | 18 | 10 | 192 | 1 | 40 | 270 |
| Unattached. | | | | | | | |
| 1st Battalion New York Sharpshooters | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| Total Third Division | 3 | 79 | 41 | 612 | 4 | 155 | 894 |
| ARTILLERY BRIGADE. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. CHARLES S. WAINWRIGHT. | | | | | | | |
| 1st New York Light Battery B. | | | | 3 | | | 3 |
| 1st New York Light Battery D. | | | | 2 | | | 3 |
| 1st New York Light Battery H. | | 1 | | | | | |
| 15th New York Heavy Company M. | | | | 3 | | | 5 |
| 4th United States Battery B. | | 1 | 1 | 1 | | | 2 |
| 5th United States Batteries D and G. | | 1 | | | | | |
| Total Artillery Brigade | | 3 | 1 | 9 | | | 13 |
| Total Fifth Army Corps | 13 | 254 | 117 | 1,020 | 7 | 514 | 2,501 |
| SIXTH ARMY CORPS. | | | | | | | |
| (Maj. Gen. HORATIO G. WRIGHT | | | | | | | |
| ESCORT. | | | | | | | |
| { 21st Pennsylvania Cavalry, Company E. | | | | | | | |
| FIRST DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. FRANK WHEATON. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. WILLIAM H. PENROSE. | | | | | | | |
| 1st New Jersey { Battalion | { | 2 | 1 | 8 | | 2 | 13 |
| 4th New Jersey { | { | 1 | 1 | 18 | | 1 | 23 |
| 2d New Jersey (two companies) | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| 3d New Jersey (one company) | | | | | | | |
| 10th New Jersey | | | | 9 | | | 9 |
| 15th New Jersey | | | | 0 | | | 0 |
| 40th New Jersey | | | 4 | 17 | | | 21 |
| Total First Brigade | 1 | 4 | 6 | 62 | | 3 | 70 |

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|--------------------------------------|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. JOSEPH E. HAMBLIN. | | | | | | | |
| 2d Connecticut Heavy Artillery | | | 1 | 14 | | | 15 |
| 65th New York | | 1 | 1 | 21 | | | 23 |
| 121st New York | 2 | 7 | 1 | 24 | | | 34 |
| 95th Pennsylvania | 1 | 8 | | 25 | | | 34 |
| Total Second Brigade | 3 | 16 | 3 | 84 | | | 100 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. OLIVER EDWARDS. | | | | | | | |
| 37th Massachusetts | | 13 | 0 | 66 | | | 75 |
| 49th Pennsylvania | 1 | 15 | 2 | 48 | | | 66 |
| 82d Pennsylvania | 1 | 23 | 8 | 95 | | 1 | 123 |
| 119th Pennsylvania | 1 | 4 | 4 | 20 | | 2 | 40 |
| 2d Rhode Island | 2 | 6 | 5 | 44 | | | 57 |
| 5th Wisconsin | 1 | 27 | 7 | 137 | | | 172 |
| Total Third Brigade | 6 | 88 | 32 | 400 | | 3 | 538 |
| Total First Division | 10 | 108 | 41 | 555 | | 0 | 720 |
| SECOND DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. GEORGE W. GETTY. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. JAMES M. WANNER. | | | | | | | |
| 62d New York | | | 3 | 32 | | | 39 |
| 93d Pennsylvania | | 4 | 4 | 16 | | 6 | 26 |
| 98th Pennsylvania | | | 2 | 21 | | | 24 |
| 102d Pennsylvania | | 1 | 1 | 18 | | | 19 |
| 189th Pennsylvania | | | | | | | |
| Total First Brigade | | 5 | 10 | 87 | | 6 | 108 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. LEWIS A. GRANT.* | | | | | | | |
| Lieut. Col. AMASA S. TRACY. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. CHARLES MUNDEE. | | | | | | | |
| Lieut. Col. AMASA S. TRACY. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. LEWIS A. GRANT. | | | | | | | |
| Staff | | | 1 | | | | 1 |
| 2d Vermont | 1 | 7 | 1 | 32 | | | 41 |
| 3d Vermont | | 4 | 1 | 10 | | | 24 |
| 4th Vermont | | 1 | 2 | 0 | | | 12 |
| 6th Vermont | | 6 | 3 | 31 | | 7 | 47 |
| 6th Vermont | | 2 | | 10 | | | 21 |
| 1st Vermont Heavy Artillery | 1 | 4 | 3 | 42 | | | 60 |
| Total Second Brigade | 2 | 24 | 11 | 152 | | 7 | 196 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. THOMAS W. HYDE. | | | | | | | |
| 1st Maine (Veteran) | 1 | 2 | 2 | 26 | | | 31 |
| 43d New York (five companies) | | 1 | 1 | 9 | | | 11 |
| 49th New York (five companies) | | 1 | 2 | 3 | | 3 | 9 |
| 77th New York (five companies) | | 1 | 4 | 10 | | | 15 |
| 123d New York | | | 1 | 7 | | | 8 |
| 61st Pennsylvania | 1 | 2 | 3 | 17 | | | 23 |
| Total Third Brigade | 2 | 7 | 13 | 72 | | 3 | 97 |
| Total Second Division | 4 | 36 | 34 | 311 | | 10 | 401 |

*Wounded April 2.

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|--|-----------|------|-----------|-------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| THIRD DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. TRUMAN SEYMOUR. | | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | | | 1 | | | | 1 |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. WILLIAM S. TRUEX. | | | | | | | |
| 14th New Jersey..... | | 2 | 1 | 22 | | | 25 |
| 100th New York..... | | 5 | | 40 | | | 48 |
| 151st New York (five companies)..... | | 2 | 1 | 15 | | | 18 |
| 87th Pennsylvania..... | 2 | 5 | 2 | 23 | | 1 | 33 |
| 10th Vermont..... | | 2 | 13 | 44 | | | 48 |
| Total First Brigade..... | 2 | 19 | 6 | 144 | | 1 | 172 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. WARREN KEEFER. | | | | | | | |
| 6th Maryland..... | | 3 | 6 | 23 | | 1 | 33 |
| 9th New York Heavy Artillery..... | | 5 | 4 | 59 | | 4 | 72 |
| 110th Ohio..... | 1 | 3 | 2 | 20 | | | 29 |
| 122d Ohio..... | | | | 11 | | | 11 |
| 126th Ohio..... | | 2 | 1 | 8 | | | 11 |
| 67th Pennsylvania..... | | 4 | | 20 | | 1 | 31 |
| 138th Pennsylvania..... | | 3 | 2 | 21 | | | 26 |
| Total Second Brigade..... | 1 | 20 | 15 | 171 | | 6 | 213 |
| Total Third Division..... | 3 | 39 | 22 | 315 | | 7 | 380 |
| ARTILLERY BRIGADE. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. ANDREW COWAN. | | | | | | | |
| 1st New Jersey Light, Battery A..... | | | | 2 | | | 2 |
| New York Light, 1st Battery..... | | | | 2 | | | 2 |
| New York Light, 3d Battery..... | | | | | | | |
| 9th New York Heavy, Company L..... | | | | 2 | | | 2 |
| 1st Rhode Island Light, Battery G..... | | | 1 | 9 | | | 13 |
| 1st Rhode Island Light, Battery H..... | | 4 | | 2 | | | 2 |
| 5th United States, Battery E..... | | | | | | | |
| 1st Vermont Heavy, Company D..... | | | | | | | |
| Total Artillery Brigade..... | | 4 | 1 | 17 | | | 22 |
| Total Sixth Army Corps..... | 17 | 187 | 98 | 1,192 | | 20 | 1,520 |
| NINTH ARMY CORPS. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. JOHN G. PARKE. | | | | | | | |
| PROVOST GUARD. | | | | | | | |
| 70th New York..... | | | | | | | |
| FIRST DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. ORLANDO B. WILLCOX. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. SAMUEL HARRIMAN. | | | | | | | |
| 8th Michigan..... | | 2 | 5 | 14 | | 1 | 22 |
| 27th Michigan..... | | 2 | 2 | 8 | | | 12 |
| 100th New York..... | | 1 | 2 | 20 | | | 23 |
| 51st Pennsylvania..... | | 1 | | 1 | | | 2 |
| 47th Wisconsin..... | 1 | 8 | | 28 | | | 37 |
| 4th Wisconsin..... | | 12 | 4 | 70 | | 7 | 93 |
| Total First Brigade..... | 1 | 20 | 13 | 141 | | 8 | 180 |

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|--|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Col. RALPH ELY. | | | | | | | |
| 1st Michigan Sharpshooters | | 5 | 5 | 25 | 1 | 13 | 49 |
| 2d Michigan | | 1 | | 6 | | 3 | 10 |
| 20th Michigan | | | | 5 | | | 5 |
| 46th New York | | 2 | 2 | 17 | | 1 | 22 |
| 60th Ohio | | 3 | 3 | 20 | | 1 | 27 |
| 59th Pennsylvania | | 1 | | 3 | | | 4 |
| Total Second Brigade | | 12 | 10 | 76 | 1 | 18 | 117 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Col. GILBERT P. ROBINSON. Col. JAMES BINTLIFF. | | | | | | | |
| 3d Maryland (four companies) | | | | 5 | | | 5 |
| 29th Massachusetts | | | | 4 | | | 4 |
| 57th Massachusetts | | | | | | | |
| 59th Massachusetts | | | | | | | |
| 18th New Hampshire | 1 | 2 | 2 | 9 | | | 14 |
| 14th New York Heavy Artillery | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| 100th Pennsylvania | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| Total Third Brigade | 1 | 2 | 2 | 20 | | | 25 |
| Acting Engineers. | | | | | | | |
| 17th Michigan | | | | 2 | | | 2 |
| Total First Division | 2 | 40 | 25 | 239 | 1 | 26 | 333 |
| SECOND DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. ROBERT B. POTTER. Brig. Gen. SIMON G. GRIFFIN. | | | | | | | |
| Staff | | | 2 | | | | 2 |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. JOHN L. CURTIS. | | | | | | | |
| 35th Massachusetts | | 3 | | 11 | | | 14 |
| 36th Massachusetts | | 1 | | 4 | | | 5 |
| 58th Massachusetts | | 4 | 1 | 17 | 2 | 17 | 41 |
| 39th New Jersey | 1 | 16 | 5 | 79 | | 1 | 102 |
| 61st New York | | | | | | | |
| 45th Pennsylvania | | 5 | 4 | 31 | 1 | 20 | 61 |
| 48th Pennsylvania | 1 | 12 | 3 | 58 | | 25 | 99 |
| 7th Rhode Island | | | 3 | 11 | | 1 | 15 |
| Total First Brigade | 2 | 41 | 10 | 211 | 3 | 64 | 337 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. SIMON G. GRIFFIN. Col. WALTER HARRIMAN. | | | | | | | |
| 31st Maine | | 11 | 3 | 71 | | 3 | 88 |
| 2d Maryland | | 5 | | 21 | | 0 | 32 |
| 50th Massachusetts | 1 | 1 | 2 | 11 | | | 15 |
| 6th New Hampshire | | 3 | 1 | 24 | | 3 | 31 |
| 9th New Hampshire | | | | | | | |
| 11th New Hampshire | | | 1 | 1 | | | 2 |
| 179th New York | | 0 | 0 | 34 | | 8 | 60 |
| 186th New York | | 33 | 11 | 127 | | 9 | 180 |
| 17th Vermont | 1 | 8 | 3 | 35 | | 2 | 49 |
| Total Second Brigade | 2 | 70 | 30 | 324 | | 31 | 457 |
| Total Second Division | 4 | 111 | 48 | 635 | 3 | 95 | 790 |

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|--|-----------|------|-----------|-------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| THIRD DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. JOHN F. HARTMANFT. | | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | | | 1 | | | | 1 |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Lieut. Col. WILLIAM T. H. McCALL. | | | | | | | |
| Col. ALFRED B. McCALMONT. | | | | | | | |
| 206th Pennsylvania | | 2 | 1 | 33 | | 3 | 36 |
| 208th Pennsylvania | | 7 | 1 | 38 | | 1 | 47 |
| 209th Pennsylvania | | 6 | 4 | 40 | | 3 | 62 |
| Total First Brigade | | 15 | 6 | 120 | | 7 | 148 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. JOSEPH A. MATHEWS. | | | | | | | |
| 205th Pennsylvania | 2 | 22 | 6 | 91 | | 5 | 120 |
| 207th Pennsylvania | 1 | 37 | 9 | 130 | 1 | 7 | 185 |
| 211th Pennsylvania | 4 | 17 | 4 | 89 | | 21 | 135 |
| Total Second Brigade | 7 | 76 | 19 | 310 | 1 | 33 | 446 |
| Total Third Division..... | 7 | 91 | 26 | 430 | 1 | 40 | 595 |
| ARTILLERY BRIGADE. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. JOHN C. TIDBALL. | | | | | | | |
| Maine Light, 7th Battery (G)..... | | | | | | | |
| Massachusetts Light, 11th Battery | | | | | | | |
| New York Light, 10th Battery | | | | | | | |
| New York Light, 27th Battery | | | | | | | |
| New York Light, 94th Battery | | | | | | | |
| Pennsylvania Light, Battery D | | | | | | | |
| Total Artillery Brigade*..... | | | | | | | |
| CAVALRY. | | | | | | | |
| 2d Pennsylvania | | | | | | | |
| Total Ninth Army Corps | 13 | 242 | 99 | 1,204 | 5 | 101 | 1,724 |
| INDEPENDENT BRIGADE. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. CHARLES H. T. COLLIS. | | | | | | | |
| 1st Massachusetts Cavalry (eight companies) .. | | | | | | | |
| 61st Massachusetts | 1 | 4 | 1 | 28 | | | 34 |
| 80th New York (20th Militia) | | | | 13 | | | 13 |
| 68th Pennsylvania | | 1 | 2 | 2 | | | 5 |
| 114th Pennsylvania | 2 | 3 | 3 | 25 | | | 33 |
| Total Independent Brigade | 3 | 8 | 6 | 68 | | | 85 |

RECAPITULATION.

| | | | | | | | |
|---------------------------------|----|-----|-----|-------|----|-------|-------|
| Provost Guard | | 2 | | 1 | | | 3 |
| Signal Detachment | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| Artillery | | 6 | 1 | 20 | | | 27 |
| Second Army Corps | 21 | 170 | 82 | 1,140 | 14 | 304 | 1,833 |
| Fifth Army Corps | 13 | 254 | 117 | 1,626 | 7 | 544 | 2,561 |
| Sixth Army Corps | 17 | 187 | 98 | 1,108 | | 20 | 1,520 |
| Ninth Army Corps | 13 | 242 | 99 | 1,204 | 5 | 101 | 1,724 |
| Independent Brigade | 3 | 8 | 6 | 68 | | | 85 |
| Total Army of the Potomac | 67 | 875 | 403 | 5,264 | 26 | 1,128 | 7,763 |

* See also explanatory foot-notes H, I, and *, p. 565.

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| CAVALRY. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. PHILIP H. SHERIDAN. | | | | | | | |
| ARMY OF THE SHENANDOAH. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. WESLEY MERRITT. | | | | | | | |
| FIRST DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. THOMAS C. DEVIN. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. PETER STAGO. | | | | | | | |
| 1st Michigan | 1 | 8 | 4 | 30 | | | 43 |
| 5th Michigan | | 1 | 2 | 15 | | | 18 |
| 6th Michigan | | 2 | 2 | 18 | | | 22 |
| 7th Michigan | | | | 10 | | | 16 |
| Total First Brigade..... | 1 | 11 | 8 | 79 | | | 99 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. CHARLES L. FITZHUGH. | | | | | | | |
| 8th New York | | | 2 | 6 | 1 | 3 | 12 |
| 9th New York | | 2 | 3 | 8 | | | 13 |
| 10th New York (1st Dragoons) | | 1 | 4 | 15 | | 1 | 21 |
| 17th Pennsylvania | | 3 | 6 | 13 | 1 | 3 | 26 |
| 20th Pennsylvania | 1 | 4 | 1 | 14 | | 1 | 21 |
| Total Second Brigade | 1 | 10 | 16 | 50 | 2 | 8 | 93 |
| Third (Reserve) Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. ALFRED GIBBS. | | | | | | | |
| 2d Massachusetts | 1 | 1 | 3 | 15 | 1 | 4 | 25 |
| 6th Pennsylvania (six companies) | 1 | | 1 | 3 | | | 5 |
| 1st United States | | 2 | 2 | 11 | | | 15 |
| 5th United States | 1 | 2 | 1 | 8 | 1 | 9 | 22 |
| 9th United States | | 1 | | 7 | 1 | 18 | 27 |
| Total Third (Reserve) Brigade | 3 | 6 | 7 | 44 | 3 | 31 | 94 |
| Artillery. | | | | | | | |
| 4th United States, Batteries C and E..... | | | | 4 | | | 4 |
| Total First Division..... | 5 | 27 | 31 | 183 | 5 | 30 | 290 |
| THIRD DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. GEORGE A. CUSTER. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. ALEXANDER C. M. PENNINGTON. | | | | | | | |
| 1st Connecticut | 1 | 6 | | 15 | | | 22 |
| 3d New Jersey | 1 | 2 | 7 | 25 | | 7 | 42 |
| 2d New York | | 9 | 8 | 30 | | | 53 |
| 2d Ohio | 1 | 6 | 5 | 31 | | 1 | 44 |
| Total First Brigade | 3 | 23 | 20 | 107 | | 8 | 161 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. WILLIAM WELLS. | | | | | | | |
| 8th New York | 1 | 4 | 2 | 22 | | | 29 |
| 15th New York | 1 | 8 | 2 | 35 | 1 | 4 | 51 |
| 1st Vermont | | 2 | 2 | 10 | | 1 | 21 |
| Total Second Brigade | 2 | 14 | 6 | 73 | 1 | 6 | 101 |

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. HENRY CAPEHART. | | | | | | | |
| 1st New York (Lincoln)..... | | | 2 | 11 | | | 13 |
| 1st West Virginia..... | 1 | | | 8 | | | 9 |
| 2d West Virginia (seven companies)..... | | 7 | 4 | 46 | | 3 | 60 |
| 3d West Virginia..... | | | 1 | 10 | | | 11 |
| Total Third Brigade | 1 | 7 | 7 | 75 | | 3 | 93 |
| Total Third Division..... | 6 | 44 | 33 | 255 | 1 | 16 | 365 |
| Total Army of the Shenandoah | 31 | 71 | 64 | 438 | 6 | 55 | 645 |
| SECOND DIVISION. (Army of the Potomac.) | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. GEORGE CROOK. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. HENRY E. DAVIES, JR. | | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | | | 1 | | | | 1 |
| 1st New Jersey | 2 | 9 | 7 | 36 | 4 | 30 | 88 |
| 10th New York | | 14 | 0 | 38 | | 14 | 72 |
| 24th New York | 1 | 4 | 4 | 39 | 1 | 33 | 73 |
| 1st Pennsylvania (five companies)..... | | 2 | 1 | 6 | | 1 | 10 |
| 2d U. S. Artillery, Battery A..... | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| Total First Brigade | 3 | 29 | 10 | 111 | 5 | 78 | 246 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. IRVIN GREGG. Col. SAMUEL B. M. YOUNG. | | | | | | | |
| 4th Pennsylvania..... | 2 | 7 | 4 | 37 | | 7 | 57 |
| 8th Pennsylvania (eight companies)..... | | 9 | 2 | 45 | 1 | 5 | 62 |
| 16th Pennsylvania..... | | 9 | 5 | 38 | 1 | 4 | 57 |
| 21st Pennsylvania..... | | 4 | 1 | 24 | 3 | 60 | 101 |
| 1st U. S. Artillery, Batteries H and I..... | | | | | | | |
| Total Second Brigade | 2 | 29 | 12 | 144 | 5 | 85 | 277 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. CHARLES H. SMITH. | | | | | | | |
| 1st Maine..... | 2 | 21 | 7 | 100 | | 12 | 142 |
| 2d New York Mounted Rifles..... | | 5 | 4 | 24 | 1 | 28 | 62 |
| 6th Ohio..... | | 3 | 1 | 16 | | 3 | 23 |
| 13th Ohio..... | 2 | 4 | 3 | 43 | 1 | 25 | 78 |
| Total Third Brigade | 4 | 33 | 15 | 183 | 2 | 68 | 305 |
| Total Second Division, Army of the Potomac..... | 9 | 91 | 46 | 438 | 13 | 241 | 827 |
| Total Cavalry..... | 20 | 102 | 140 | 870 | 18 | 286 | 1,472 |
| ARMY OF THE JAMES. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. EDWARD O. C. ORR. | | | | | | | |
| Staff..... | 1 | | | | | | 1 |
| HEADQUARTERS GUARD. | | | | | | | |
| 3d Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, Company D..... | | | | | | | |
| 3d Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, Company I..... | | | | | | | |

* Captured April 7.

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| ENGINEERS. | | | | | | | |
| 1st New York (eight companies)..... | | | | | | | |
| PONTONIERS. | | | | | | | |
| 3d Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, Company I..... | | | | | | | |
| UNATTACHED CAVALRY. | | | | | | | |
| 4th Massachusetts, Companies I, L, and M..... | 3 | 2 | 5 | 5 | 5 | 60 | 80 |
| 5th Massachusetts (colored)..... | | | | | | | |
| Total Unattached Cavalry..... | 3 | 2 | 5 | 5 | 5 | 60 | 80 |
| DEFENSES BERMUDA HUNDRED. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. GEORGE L. HARTSUFF. | | | | | | | |
| INFANTRY DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. EDWARD FERRERO. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. GILBERT H. MCKIMBEN. | | | | | | | |
| 41st New York..... | | | | | | | |
| 103d New York..... | | | | | | | |
| 2d Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery..... | | | | | | | |
| 104th Pennsylvania..... | | | | | | | |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. GEORGE C. KIMBE. | | | | | | | |
| 6th New York Heavy Artillery..... | | | | | | | |
| 10th New York Heavy Artillery..... | | 2 | 2 | 36 | 1 | 43 | 84 |
| Total Second Brigade..... | | 2 | 2 | 36 | 1 | 43 | 84 |
| Artillery. | | | | | | | |
| New York Light, 33d Battery..... | | | | | | | |
| Total Infantry Division..... | | 2 | 2 | 36 | 1 | 43 | 84 |
| ARTILLERY. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. HENRY L. ABBOT. | | | | | | | |
| 13th New York Heavy, Companies A and H..... | | | | | | | |
| New York Light, 7th Battery..... | | | | | | | |
| 3d Pennsylvania Heavy, Company E..... | | | | | | | |
| 3d Pennsylvania Heavy, Company M..... | | | | | | | |
| Total Defenses Bermuda Hundred..... | | 2 | 2 | 36 | 1 | 43 | 84 |
| SEPARATE BRIGADE. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. JOSEPH B. CARR. | | | | | | | |
| 38th New Jersey..... | | | | | | | |
| 20th New York Cavalry, Companies D and F..... | | | | | | | |
| 16th New York Heavy Artillery, Companies E and H..... | | | | | | | |
| 184th New York..... | | | | | | | |
| 3d Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery (detachment)..... | | | | | | | |
| 1st U. S. Colored Cavalry, Companies E and I..... | | | | | | | |

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| TWENTY-FOURTH ARMY CORPS. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. JOHN GIBBON. | | | | | | | |
| Sharpshooters..... | | | | 18 | | 3 | 21 |
| HEADQUARTERS GUARD. | | | | | | | |
| 4th Massachusetts Cavalry, Companies F and K..... | | 1 | | | | | 1 |
| FIRST DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. ROBERT S. FOSTER. | | | | | | | |
| PROVOST GUARD. | | | | | | | |
| 85th Pennsylvania (detachment)..... | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. THOMAS O. OSBORN. | | | | | | | |
| 39th Illinois..... | 1 | 19 | 2 | 50 | | | 72 |
| 62d Ohio..... | | 4 | 1 | 50 | 2 | 38 | 101 |
| 67th Ohio..... | | 8 | 2 | 63 | | | 73 |
| 190th Pennsylvania..... | 2 | 20 | 6 | 80 | | 1 | 116 |
| Total First Brigade..... | 3 | 51 | 11 | 255 | 2 | 39 | 301 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. GEORGE B. DANDY. | | | | | | | |
| 10th Connecticut..... | 1 | 12 | 8 | 83 | | | 104 |
| 11th Maine..... | | 9 | 4 | 95 | 2 | 32 | 112 |
| 24th Massachusetts..... | | | | | | | |
| 100th New York..... | 1 | 11 | 2 | 45 | | | 59 |
| 206th Pennsylvania..... | | | | 7 | 1 | 1 | 9 |
| Total Third Brigade..... | 2 | 32 | 14 | 200 | 3 | 33 | 284 |
| Fourth Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. HARRISON S. FAIRCHILD. | | | | | | | |
| 8th Maine..... | | 3 | 2 | 9 | | | 14 |
| 89th New York..... | 1 | 4 | 1 | 21 | | | 27 |
| 148th New York..... | 1 | 1 | 1 | 8 | | | 11 |
| 158th New York..... | 1 | 10 | 2 | 42 | | | 55 |
| 55th Pennsylvania..... | 1 | 4 | 2 | 20 | | | 30 |
| Total Fourth Brigade..... | 4 | 22 | 8 | 100 | | | 143 |
| Total First Division..... | 9 | 105 | 33 | 504 | 5 | 72 | 788 |
| THIRD DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. CHARLES DEVENS. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. EDWARD H. RIPLEY. | | | | | | | |
| 11th Connecticut..... | | | | | | | |
| 13th New Hampshire..... | | | | | | | |
| 81st New York..... | | | | | | | |
| 98th New York..... | | | | | | | |
| 139th New York..... | | | | | | | |
| 19th Wisconsin..... | | | | | | | |

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|--|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. MICHAEL T. DONOHUE. | | | | | | | |
| 8th Connecticut..... | | | | | | | |
| 5th Maryland..... | | | | | | | |
| 10th New Hampshire..... | | | | | | | |
| 12th New Hampshire..... | | | | | | | |
| 90th New York..... | | | | | | | |
| 118th New York..... | | | | | | | |
| 9th Vermont..... | | | | | | | |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. SAMUEL H. ROBERTS. | | | | | | | |
| 21st Connecticut..... | | | | | | | |
| 40th Massachusetts..... | | | | | | | |
| 2d New Hampshire..... | | | | | | | |
| 58th Pennsylvania..... | | | | | | | |
| 188th Pennsylvania..... | | | | | | | |
| INDEPENDENT DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. JOHN W. TURNER. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Lieut. Col. ANDREW POTTER. | | | | | | | |
| 34th Massachusetts..... | | 5 | 2 | 47 | | | 54 |
| 110th Ohio..... | 1 | 9 | 1 | 55 | | | 66 |
| 123d Ohio..... | | 4 | 2 | 37 | | | 43 |
| Total First Brigade..... | 1 | 18 | 5 | 139 | | | 163 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. WILLIAM B. CURTIS. | | | | | | | |
| 23d Illinois..... | | 2 | 1 | 24 | | | 27 |
| 54th Pennsylvania..... | 2 | 5 | | 59 | | | 57 |
| 12th West Virginia..... | 1 | 9 | 1 | 16 | | | 27 |
| Total Second Brigade..... | 3 | 16 | 2 | 99 | | | 111 |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. THOMAS M. HARRIS. | | | | | | | |
| 10th West Virginia..... | | 4 | 1 | 24 | | | 29 |
| 11th West Virginia..... | | 5 | 4 | 57 | | | 66 |
| 15th West Virginia..... | | 1 | 1 | 29 | | | 31 |
| Total Third Brigade..... | | 10 | 6 | 110 | | | 126 |
| Total Independent Division..... | 4 | 44 | 13 | 339 | | | 400 |
| ARTILLERY. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. CHARLES C. ABELL. | | | | | | | |
| 3d New York Light, Battery E..... | | | | | | | |
| 3d New York Light, Battery H..... | | | | | | | |
| 3d New York Light, Battery K..... | | | | | | | |
| 3d New York Light, Battery M..... | | | | | | | |
| New York Light, 17th Battery..... | | | | | | | |
| 1st Pennsylvania Light, Battery A..... | | | | | | | |
| 1st Rhode Island Light, Battery F..... | | | | | | | |
| 1st United States, Battery B..... | | 1 | | F | | | 2 |
| 4th United States, Battery L..... | | | | | | | |
| 5th United States, Battery A..... | | | | | | | |
| 5th United States, Battery F..... | | | | | | | |
| Total Artillery..... | | 1 | | 1 | | | 2 |
| Total Twenty-fourth Army Corps..... | 13 | 151 | 40 | 922 | 5 | 75 | 1,212 |

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| TWENTY-FIFTH ARMY CORPS. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. GODFREY WETZEL, | | | | | | | |
| PROVOST GUARD. | | | | | | | |
| 4th Massachusetts Cavalry, Companies E and H. | | | | | | | |
| FIRST DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Maj. Gen. AUGUST V. KAUTZ. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. ALONZO G. DRAPER. | | | | | | | |
| 22d U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| 36th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| 38th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| 118th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. EDWARD A. WILD. | | | | | | | |
| 29th Connecticut (colored) | | | | | | | |
| 9th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| 116th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| 117th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. HENRY G. THOMAS. | | | | | | | |
| 10th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| 23d U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| 43d U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| 114th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| Attached Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. CHARLES S. RUSSELL. | | | | | | | |
| 10th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| 28th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| Cavalry. | | | | | | | |
| 2d U. S. Colored | | | | | | | |
| SECOND DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. WILLIAM BIRNEY. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. JAMES SHAW, JR. | | | | | | | |
| 7th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| 100th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| 116th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. ULYSSES DOUBLEDAY. | | | | | | | |
| 8th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| 41st U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| 45th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| 127th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| Third Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. WILLIAM W. WOODWARD. | | | | | | | |
| 29th U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |
| 31st U. S. Colored Troops | | | | | | | |

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| ARTILLERY BRIGADE. | | | | | | | |
| Capt. LOOMIS L. LANGDON. | | | | | | | |
| Connecticut Light, 1st Battery | | | | | | | |
| New Jersey Light, 4th Battery | | | | | | | |
| New Jersey Light, 5th Battery | | | | | | | |
| 1st Pennsylvania Light, Battery E | | | | | | | |
| 3d Rhode Island Light, Battery C | | | | | | | |
| 1st United States, Battery D | | | | | | | |
| 1st United States, Battery M | | | | | | | |
| 4th United States, Battery D | | | | | | | |
| Total Twenty-fifth Army Corps | | 10 | 1 | 39 | | 40 | 90 |
| CAVALRY DIVISION. | | | | | | | |
| Brig. Gen. RANALD S. MACKENZIE. | | | | | | | |
| First Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. ROBERT M. WEST. | | | | | | | |
| 20th New York, Company G | | | | 3 | | | 3 |
| 5th Pennsylvania | | 1 | | 10 | | 1 | 12 |
| Total First Brigade | | 1 | | 13 | | 1 | 15 |
| Second Brigade. | | | | | | | |
| Col. SAMUEL P. SPEAR. | | | | | | | |
| 1st District Columbia (battalion) | | | 1 | 2 | | 2 | 5 |
| 1st Maryland | | 2 | 1 | 15 | | 20 | 38 |
| 11th Pennsylvania | 3 | 4 | 1 | 8 | 1 | 3 | 20 |
| Total Second Brigade | 3 | 6 | 2 | 25 | 1 | 25 | 63 |
| Artillery. | | | | | | | |
| Wisconsin Light, 4th Battery | | | | | | | |
| Total Cavalry Division | 3 | 7 | 3 | 38 | 1 | 26 | 78 |

RECAPITULATION.

| | | | | | | | |
|-----------------------------------|----|-----|----|-------|----|-----|-------|
| Staff | 1 | | | | | | 1 |
| Unattached Cavalry | 3 | 2 | 5 | 5 | 5 | 60 | 80 |
| Defenses of Bermuda Hundred | | 2 | 2 | 30 | 1 | 43 | 84 |
| Twenty-fourth Army Corps | 13 | 151 | 46 | 922 | 5 | 75 | 1,212 |
| Twenty-fifth Army Corps | | 10 | 1 | 30 | | 40 | 80 |
| Cavalry Division | 3 | 7 | 3 | 38 | 1 | 26 | 78 |
| Total Army of the James | 20 | 172 | 57 | 1,010 | 12 | 244 | 1,515 |

GENERAL RECAPITULATION.

| | | | | | | | |
|---------------------------|-----|-------|-----|-------|----|-------|--------|
| Army of the Potomac | 97 | 875 | 403 | 5,204 | 20 | 1,128 | 7,703 |
| Army of the James | 20 | 172 | 57 | 1,040 | 12 | 244 | 1,545 |
| Cavalry (Sheridan) | 20 | 102 | 110 | 870 | 18 | 286 | 1,472 |
| Grand total | 107 | 1,209 | 570 | 7,180 | 50 | 1,658 | 10,780 |

* Losses not reported in detail.

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.OFFICERS KILLED OR MORTALLY WOUNDED.

CONNECTICUT.

| | | |
|---------------------------------------|--|--------------------------------------|
| Capt. Uriah N. Parmelee, 1st Cavalry. | | Capt. Brainerd Smith, 10th Infantry. |
|---------------------------------------|--|--------------------------------------|

DELAWARE.

| | | |
|---|--|--------------------------------------|
| Lieut. Lorenzo D. Wilson, 3d Infantry. | | Lieut. Alphens Wilson, 4th Infantry. |
| Capt. William H. Maclury, 4th Infantry. | | |

ILLINOIS.

Lieut. William M. Lamb, 39th Infantry.

MAINE.

| | | |
|--|--|--|
| Capt. John A. Heald, 1st Cavalry. | | Lieut. Alvin A. Messer, 1st Veteran In- |
| Lieut. Leander M. Comins, 1st Cavalry. | | fantry. |
| Lieut. James E. Stayner, 1st Cavalry. | | Lieut. Jerome B. Ireland, 11th Infantry. |
| | | Lieut. Schollay G. Usher, 17th Infantry. |

MARYLAND.

| | | |
|-----------------------------------|--|---------------------------------------|
| Capt. Thomas Ocker, 6th Infantry. | | Lieut. Samuel W. Angel, 6th Infantry. |
|-----------------------------------|--|---------------------------------------|

MASSACHUSETTS.

| | | |
|--|--|--|
| Lieut. Lewis Munger, 2d Cavalry. | | Capt. Isaac H. Boyd, 19th Infantry. |
| Col. Francis Washburn, 4th Cavalry. | | Capt. Willard C. Kinsley, 39th Infantry. |
| Capt. John D. B. Goddard, 4th Cavalry. | | Capt. Ansel B. Randall, 56th Infantry. |
| Capt. William T. Hodges, 4th Cavalry. | | Lieut. Thomas B. Hart, 61st Infantry. |
| Lieut. George F. Davis, 4th Cavalry. | | |

MICHIGAN.

| | | |
|--|--|---|
| Lieut. George C. Whitney, 1st Cavalry. | | Lieut. Stephen Patterson, 7th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Selon H. Finney, 6th Cavalry. | | Lieut. Henry B. Burritt, 8th Infantry. |

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

| | | |
|--------------------------------------|--|---------------------------------------|
| Capt. William Collins, 5th Infantry. | | Maj. William I. Brown, 18th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Warren Ryder, 5th Infantry. | | |

NEW JERSEY.

| | | |
|---|--|--|
| Col. Hugh H. Janeway, 1st Cavalry. | | Lieut. Wellington Bird, 8th Infantry. |
| Maj. James H. Hart, 1st Cavalry. | | Capt. Gustavus Dupuis, 39th Infantry. |
| Lieut. John S. Hough, 3d Cavalry. | | Capt. George W. Harrison, 39th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Lewis M. Thompson, 1st Veteran | | Lieut. Joseph W. Nason, 39th Infantry. |
| Battalion Infantry. | | |
| Lieut. William S. Ackley, 4th Infantry. | | |

NEW YORK.

| | | |
|---|--|---|
| Capt. Edwin F. Savacool, 1st Cavalry. | | Lieut. William Malcolm, 61st Infantry. |
| Lieut. Joseph Walter, 1st Cavalry. | | Capt. Edward B. Carroll, 63d Infantry. |
| Maj. Joseph O'Keefe, 2d Cavalry. | | Capt. Henry H. Darby, 64th Infantry. |
| Capt. Asa L. Goodrich, 8th Cavalry. | | Lieut. William Byron, 65th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Col. Augustus I. Root, 15th Cav- | | Maj. Frank W. Tremain, 89th Infantry. |
| alry. | | Lieut. Charles H. Danford, 93d Infantry. |
| Lieut. Col. Melzer Richards, 24th Cavalry. | | Maj. Henry H. Fish, 94th Infantry. |
| Maj. James E. Doran, 24th Cavalry. | | Capt. George French, 94th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Charles P. Williams, 24th Cavalry. | | Maj. James H. Dandy, 100th Infantry. |
| Capt. Eli Morso, 2d Mounted Rifles. | | Lieut. Silas W. Bolding, 111th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Peter Pichler, 2d Heavy Artillery. | | Capt. Ten Eyck C. Howland, 121st In- |
| Lieut. Charles H. Burghardt, 4th Heavy | | fantry. |
| Artillery. | | Lieut. John T. Morton, 121st Infantry. |
| Capt. Thomas Low, 8th Heavy Artillery. | | Capt. Edward J. Cornick, 124th Infantry. |
| Maj. Emil Dnyssing, 15th Heavy Artillery. | | Capt. John Quay, 125th Infantry. |
| Bvt. Brig. Gen. Frederick Winthrop, 5th | | Capt. Thomas A. Wilson, 146th Infantry. |
| Veteran Infantry. | | Lieut. Caleb G. Jackson, 148th Infantry. |
| Capt. Joseph Turkington, 5th Veteran | | Lieut. Edward Reilly, 158th Infantry. |
| Infantry. | | Lieut. Col. Franklin B. Doty, 179th In- |
| Lieut. Erich Bartels, 7th Infantry. | | fantry. |
| Lieut. Hermann Elmier, 7th Infantry. | | Lieut. Ephraim F. Bander, 185th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Col. Erastus D. Holt, 49th Infantry. | | Lieut. Hiram Clark, 185th Infantry. |
| Lieut. John Burke, 52d Infantry. | | Lieut. Daniel Minor, 185th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Max Klingenberg, 52d Infantry. | | Lieut. William Meehan, 188th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Paul Schreiber, 52d Infantry. | | |

Return of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

OHIO.

| | |
|--|---|
| Capt. Warner Newton, 2d Cavalry. | Lieut. Edward F. Cooper, 13th Cavalry. |
| Lieut. Joseph L. Stearns, 2d Cavalry. | Capt. Henry H. Stevens, 116th Infantry. |
| Capt. Benjamin F. Metcalf, 13th Cavalry. | Lieut. William H. Bush, 116th Infantry. |

PENNSYLVANIA.

| | |
|---|---|
| Maj. William B. Mays, 4th Cavalry. | Lieut. Edward T. Marion, 114th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Clement Engelmann, 4th Cavalry. | Lieut. Eugene Brady, 116th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Charles E. Nugent, 4th Cavalry. | Lieut. John D. Mercer, 119th Infantry. |
| Lieut. John A. Welton, 4th Cavalry. | Capt. Samuel S. Kerr, 140th Infantry. |
| Lieut. James Magee, 6th Cavalry. | Lieut. William J. Cunningham, 140th Infantry. |
| Capt. John S. Howard, 8th Cavalry. | Lieut. William D. Lank, 140th Infantry. |
| Maj. Robert S. Monroe, 11th Cavalry. | Lieut. Samuel Everhart, 148th Infantry. |
| Capt. William Lancaster, 11th Cavalry. | Lieut. Thomas B. Dunn, 155th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Oscar S. Mathews, 11th Cavalry. | Lieut. James Strong, 155th Infantry. |
| Capt. James Hann, 17th Cavalry. | Maj. Edwin A. Glenn, 198th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Albert S. Ely, 20th Cavalry. | Maj. Charles I. Macanen, 198th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Henry Lebo, 20th Cavalry. | Capt. George W. Mulfrey, 198th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Levi R. Robb, 45th Infantry. | Capt. Isaac Schroeder, 198th Infantry. |
| Col. George W. Gowan, 48th Infantry. | Lieut. Andrew A. Pomeroy, 198th Infantry. |
| Lieut. George E. Hachenberg, 49th Infantry. | Capt. Patrick O'Murphy, 199th Infantry. |
| Maj. Nathan Davis, 54th Infantry. | Lieut. Robert McMillan, 199th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Cyrus Patton, 54th Infantry. | Lieut. Samuel L. Hughes, 205th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Samuel Moorhead, 55th Infantry. | Lieut. Henry A. Lower, 205th Infantry. |
| Capt. Lemuel Shaw, 56th Infantry. | Lieut. David B. Roberts, 205th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Col. John W. Crosby, 61st Infantry. | Capt. James A. Carothers, 207th Infantry. |
| Capt. John C. Gallagher, 68th Infantry. | Lieut. Alonzo R. Case, 207th Infantry. |
| Capt. John Bond, 81st Infantry. | Lieut. Allen G. Dodd, 207th Infantry. |
| Capt. Charles Wilson, 81st Infantry. | Capt. James P. McCullough, 209th Infantry. |
| Lieut. William H. Myers, 82d Infantry. | Col. William Sergeant, 210th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Samuel W. Keasey, 87th Infantry. | Capt. John N. Hughes, 210th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Peter Nickel, 87th Infantry. | Lieut. Morris Shlesinger, 210th Infantry. |
| Capt. Thomas J. Koch, 88th Infantry. | Capt. Elias B. Lee, 211th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Daniel J. Lehman, 88th Infantry. | Capt. Charles McLain, 211th Infantry. |
| Capt. James J. Carroll, 95th Infantry. | Lieut. Albert Alexander, 211th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Herman Solbrig, 98th Infantry. | Lieut. John M. Pelton, 211th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Harrison Y. Clifton, 99th Infantry. | Lieut. Andrew J. Sparks, 211th Infantry. |
| Capt. Andrew J. Cunningham, 114th Infantry. | Lieut. John P. Tarr, 211th Infantry. |
| Capt. Henry M. Eddy, 114th Infantry. | |

RHODE ISLAND.

| | |
|--|--|
| Capt. Charles W. Gleason, 2d Infantry. | Capt. Peleg E. Peckham, 7th Infantry. |
| Lieut. William H. Perry, 2d Infantry. | Lieut. Albert A. Bolles, 7th Infantry. |

U. S. ARMY.

Capt. Thomas Drummond, 5th Cavalry.

U. S. COLORED TROOPS.

Capt. John W. Falconer, 41st Infantry.

U. S. VOLUNTEERS.

| | |
|---|--|
| Brig. Gen. Thomas A. Smyth. | Lieut. Col. Theodore Read, assistant adjutant-general. |
| Capt. Charles J. Mills, assistant adjutant-general. | |

VERMONT.

| | |
|---|---------------------------------------|
| Lieut. George O. French, 1st Heavy Artillery. | Lieut. James M. Read, 10th Infantry. |
| Capt. Charles C. Morey, 2d Infantry. | Lieut. J. Edwin Henry, 17th Infantry. |

WEST VIRGINIA.

| | |
|----------------------------------|--|
| Maj. Shesh B. Howe, 1st Cavalry. | Lieut. Joseph Caldwell, 12th Infantry. |
|----------------------------------|--|

WISCONSIN.

| | |
|--|---|
| Capt. John B. Doughty, 5th Infantry. | Lieut. Augustus M. Hubbard, 7th Infantry. |
| Lieut. Charles H. Mayer, 5th Infantry. | Lieut. Meredith M. Whitt, 37th Infantry. |

No. 3.

General summary of casualties in the Union Forces operating against Richmond, Va., under Lieut. Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, January 1 to April 9, 1865.

[Compiled from nominal lists of casualties, returns, &c.]

JANUARY.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|---|-----------|------|-----------|------|----------------------|------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| ARMY OF THE POTOMAC. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. GEORGE G. MEADE. | | | | | | | |
| Artillery (Hunt) | | 1 | | 1 | | | 1 |
| Second Army Corps (Humphreys) | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| Fifth Army Corps (Warren) | 1 | 1 | 2 | 0 | | | 1 |
| Sixth Army Corps (Wright) | | 1 | 1 | 25 | | 54 | 69 |
| Ninth Army Corps (Parke) | | 1 | | 5 | | | 31 |
| Cavalry (Gregg) | | | | | | | 6 |
| Total Army of the Potomac | 1 | 8 | 3 | 37 | | 54 | 103 |
| ARMY OF THE JAMES.* | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. EDWARD O. C. ORD. | | | | | | | |
| Twenty-fourth Army Corps (Gibson) | | 2 | | 8 | | 20 | 30 |
| Twenty-fifth Army Corps (Weltzel) | | 1 | 1 | 0 | | 5 | 10 |
| Cavalry (Kautz) | | | | | | 0 | 0 |
| Defenses of Bermuda Hundred (Ferrero) | | 1 | | 4 | | | 5 |
| Total Army of the James | | 4 | 1 | 21 | | 31 | 57 |
| Grand total for January, 1865 | 1 | 12 | 4 | 58 | | 85 | 160 |

FEBRUARY.

| | | | | | | | |
|---|----|-----|----|-------|---|-----|-------|
| ARMY OF THE POTOMAC. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. GEORGE G. MEADE. | | | | | | | |
| Provost Guard (Macy) | | 2 | | 2 | | | 4 |
| Second Army Corps (Humphreys) | 3 | 29 | 9 | 00 | | 27 | 158 |
| Fifth Army Corps (Warren) | 13 | 121 | 60 | 042 | 7 | 329 | 1,402 |
| Sixth Army Corps (Wright) | | 1 | | 25 | | 8 | 34 |
| Ninth Army Corps (Parke) | 1 | 12 | 1 | 42 | | | 60 |
| Cavalry (Gregg) | 2 | 14 | 11 | 97 | | 15 | 129 |
| Total Army of the Potomac | 10 | 179 | 77 | 1,104 | 7 | 373 | 1,843 |
| ARMY OF THE JAMES.* | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. EDWARD O. C. ORD. | | | | | | | |
| Twenty-fourth Army Corps (Gibson) | | 3 | | 11 | | 7 | 21 |
| Twenty-fifth Army Corps (Weltzel) | 1 | 2 | | 0 | | 3 | 16 |
| Defenses of Bermuda Hundred (Ferrero) | | 1 | | 6 | | | 6 |
| Cavalry (Kautz) | | | | | | 5 | 6 |
| Total Army of the James | 1 | 6 | | 25 | | 15 | 47 |
| Grand total for February, 1865 | 20 | 179 | 77 | 1,210 | 7 | 388 | 1,890 |

* Records defective, and losses probably not fully reported.

† For the losses, in detail, at Hatcher's Run, see p. 63.

General summary of casualties in the Union Forces, &c.—Continued.

MARCH 1—APRIL 9.

| Command. | Killed. | | Wounded. | | Captured or missing. | | Aggregate. |
|--|-----------|-------|-----------|-------|----------------------|-------|------------|
| | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. | |
| ARMY OF THE POTOMAC. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. GEORGE G. MEADE. | | | | | | | |
| Provost Guard (Maey) | | 2 | | 1 | | | 3 |
| Artillery (Hunt) | 1 | 12 | 2 | 27 | | 48 | 90 |
| Signal Corps | | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| Second Army Corps (Humphreys) | 24 | 234 | 106 | 1,600 | 25 | 747 | 2,746 |
| Fifth Army Corps (Warren and Griffith) | 14 | 265 | 110 | 1,654 | 9 | 560 | 2,641 |
| Sixth Army Corps (Wright) | 22 | 241 | 120 | 1,582 | 1 | 122 | 2,088 |
| Ninth Army Corps (Pawke) | 21 | 341 | 148 | 1,660 | 24 | 678 | 2,872 |
| Cavalry (Gregg and Crook) | | 10 | 9 | 45 | 3 | 74 | 141 |
| Independent Brigade (Collis) | 3 | 8 | 6 | 68 | | | 85 |
| Total Army of the Potomac | 85 | 1,113 | 510 | 6,647 | 62 | 2,249 | 10,606 |
| Sheridan's Cavalry* | 20 | 152 | 101 | 831 | 15 | 212 | 1,331 |
| ARMY OF THE JAMES. | | | | | | | |
| Maj. Gen. EDWARD O. C. ORD. | | | | | | | |
| Staff | 1 | | | | | | 1 |
| Twenty-fourth Army Corps (Gibbon) | 13 | 101 | 47 | 1,000 | 5 | 75 | 1,301 |
| Twenty-fifth Army Corps (Weitzel) | | 10 | 1 | 41 | | 46 | 98 |
| Defenses of Bermuda Hundred (Hartsuff) | | 2 | 2 | 36 | 1 | 43 | 81 |
| Cavalry Division (Mackenzie) | 3 | 7 | 3 | 38 | 1 | 29 | 81 |
| Unattached Cavalry | 3 | 2 | 5 | 5 | 5 | 60 | 80 |
| Total Army of the James | 20 | 182 | 58 | 1,120 | 12 | 253 | 1,615 |
| Grand total March 1 to April 9† | 125 | 1,447 | 669 | 8,598 | 80 | 2,714 | 13,642 |
| Grand aggregate January 1 to April 9 | 146 | 1,638 | 750 | 9,785 | 90 | 3,187 | 15,692 |

No. 4.

Report of Maj. Gen. George G. Meade, U. S. Army, commanding Army of the Potomac.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
April 30, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit herewith a succinct report of the operations of this army in the recent campaign, resulting in the evacuation of Richmond and Petersburg and terminating in the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia.

On the 29th ultimo, in pursuance of orders received from the lieutenant-general commanding, the Second and Fifth Corps were moved across Hatcher's Run, the former by the Vaughan road, the latter by the old stage-road crossing at Perkins'. The Second Corps, holding the extreme left of the line before Petersburg prior to moving, was relieved by Major-General Gibbon, commanding two divisions of the Twenty-fourth Corps.

Major-General Humphreys, commanding Second Corps, was directed, after crossing Hatcher's Run, to take position, with his right resting

* Includes Crook's (formerly Gregg's) division for April only; the losses of that division in March are counted with the Army of the Potomac.

† For losses, in detail, at Fort Stedman, and in the Appomattox campaign, see pp. 70, 581.

on Hatcher's Run, and his left extending to the Quaker road. Major-General Warren, commanding Fifth Corps, was directed at first to take position at the intersection of the Vaughan and Quaker roads, and subsequently, about noon of the 29th, he was ordered to move up the Quaker road beyond Gravelly Run.

These orders were duly executed, and by evening Major-General Humphreys was in position, his right resting near Dabney's Mill and his left near Gravelly Meeting-House, on the Quaker road. In taking this position Major-General Humphreys encountered but little opposition, meeting only a small force in a line of rifle-pits, who were quickly driven out. Major-General Warren was delayed in his movement by having to rebuild the bridge over Gravelly Run. The advance of his column, Brigadier-General Griffin's division, was attacked about 4 p. m., when about a mile and a half beyond Gravelly Run, by Bushrod Johnson's division. A spirited engagement ensued, in which Griffin handsomely repulsed and drove the enemy, capturing over 100 prisoners.

On the 30th Major-General Humphreys again advanced, driving the enemy into his main line of works, and by night occupying a line from the Crow house, on Hatcher's Run, to the intersection of the Dabney's Mill and Boydton plank roads.

Major-General Warren during this day advanced on the Quaker road to its intersection with the Boydton plank, and pushed Ayres' division in a northwesterly direction over to the White Oak road. No fighting of any consequence occurred this day, except picket skirmishing and exchange of artillery shots from the respective lines, now close to each other.

During the night of the 30th Major-General Humphreys, who had intrenched his line, was directed to relieve Griffin's division, Fifth Corps, by Miles' division, and Major-General Warren was ordered to move both Crawford and Griffin within supporting distance of Ayres, whose position on the extreme left was considered likely to invite attack.

On the 31st, about 10 a. m., Ayres, under General Warren's orders, advanced to dislodge the enemy in position on the White Oak road. Ayres' attack was unsuccessful, and was followed by such a vigorous attack of the enemy that Ayres was compelled to fall back upon Crawford, who, in turn, was so strongly pressed by the enemy as to force both divisions back in considerable disorder to the position occupied by Griffin, when the pursuit of the enemy ceased. Immediately on ascertaining the condition of affairs Major-General Humphreys was ordered to move to Warren's support, and that officer promptly sent Miles' division to attack in flank the force operating against Warren.

This movement was handsomely executed by Miles, who, attacking the enemy vigorously, drove him back to his former position on the White Oak road, capturing several colors and many prisoners.

In the meantime Warren advanced with Griffin's division, supported by such portions of Ayres' and Crawford's divisions as could be rallied, and regaining the position held by Ayres in the morning, Griffin attacked with Chamberlain's brigade, driving the enemy and securing a lodgment on the White Oak road.

These operations over, hearing heavy firing to the left and rear, which was presumed to be the cavalry moving up from Dinwiddie Court-House, Warren was directed to send a brigade down the White Oak road to co-operate with the cavalry. This brigade by night reached the crossing of Gravelly Run, by the road leading through J. Boisseau's, where, not meeting any enemy, it bivouacked.

During the night, having been directed to send support to Major-General Sheridan at Dinwiddie Court-House, Major-General Warren was ordered to move with his whole corps, two divisions by the White Oak road and one by the Boydton plank road. Major-General Humphreys was ordered to extend his left as far as practicable consistent with its security.

During the foregoing operations the Sixth and Ninth Corps remained in the lines in front of Petersburg, with orders to watch the enemy closely, and, in the event of the lines in their front being weakened, to attack.

On April 1, after consultation with the lieutenant-general commanding, believing from the operations on his right that the enemy's lines on his left must be thinly held, orders were sent to Major-Generals Wright and Parke to attack the next morning at 4. About 7 p. m., intelligence having been received of the brilliant success of the cavalry and Fifth Corps at Five Forks, orders were sent to Generals Parke and Wright to open their batteries and press the enemy's picket-line. At the same time Miles' division, Second Corps, was detached to the support of Major-General Sheridan, and Major-General Humphreys advised of the intended attacks of the Twenty-fourth, Sixth, and Fifth Corps, and directed to hold his two remaining divisions ready to co-operate in the same, should they prove successful.

On the 2d of April Major-General Wright attacked at 4 a. m., carrying everything before him, taking possession of the enemy's strong line of works, and capturing many guns and prisoners. After carrying the enemy's line in his front, and reaching the Boydton plank road, Major-General Wright turned to his left and swept down the enemy's line of intrenchments till near Hatcher's Run, where, meeting the head of the Twenty-fourth Corps, General Wright retraced his steps and advanced on the Boydton plank road toward Petersburg, encountering the enemy in an inner line of works immediately around the city. Major-General Wright deployed his corps confronting their works, in conjunction with the Twenty-fourth and part of the Second Corps.

Major-General Parke's attack at 4 a. m. was also successful, carrying the enemy's lines, capturing guns and prisoners, but the position of the Ninth Corps confronting that portion of the enemy's line the longest held and most strongly fortified, it was found he held a second and inner line, which Major-General Parke was unable to carry. Receiving a dispatch during the morning from Major-General Parke, reporting his being pressed by the enemy, the troops left in City Point defenses, under Brigadier-General Benham and Brevet Brigadier-General Collis, were ordered up to General Parke's support, their prompt arrival enabling them to render material assistance to General Parke in holding his lines.

So soon as Major-General Wright's success was reported Major-General Humphreys was ordered to advance with the remaining divisions of his corps—Hays, on the right, advanced and captured a redoubt in front of the Crow house, taking a gun and over 100 prisoners; Mott, on the left, on advancing on the Boydton plank road, found the enemy's line evacuated. Hays and Mott pushed forward and joined the Sixth Corps, confronting the enemy. Early in the morning Miles, reporting his return to his position on the White Oak road, was ordered to advance on the Clairborne road simultaneously with Mott and Hays. Miles, perceiving the enemy were moving to his right, pursued and overtook him at Sutherland's Station, where a sharp engagement took place, Miles handling his single division with great skill and gallantry, capturing several guns and many prisoners. On receiving intelligence of Miles being engaged, Hays was sent to his support, but did not reach the field till the action was over.

At 3 a. m. of the 2d [3d] of April Major-Generals Parke and Wright reported no enemy in their front, when, on advancing, it was ascertained Petersburg was evacuated. Willeox's division, Ninth Corps, was ordered to occupy the town, and the Second, Sixth, and Ninth Corps immediately moved up the river, reaching that night the vicinity of Sutherland's Station.

The next three days—the 3d, 4th, and 5th—the pursuit was continued along the River and Namozine roads, the Fifth Corps following the cavalry, and the Second and Sixth following the Fifth, the Ninth having been detached to guard the South Side Railroad. The progress of the troops was greatly impeded by the bad character of the road, the presence of the supply trains of the Fifth Corps and cavalry, and by the frequent changes of position of the cavalry, to whom the right of way was given. On the night of the 4th, receiving a dispatch from Major-General Sheridan that his army was in position at Amelia Court-House, immediate orders were given for the resumption of the march by the troops of the Second and Sixth Corps, reaching Jettersville between 4 and 5 p. m. [5th], where the Fifth Corps was found intrenched expecting an attack. No attack being made, on the morning of the 6th of April the three corps were moved in the direction of Amelia Court-House, with the intention of attacking the enemy if found there; but soon after moving intelligence was received that Lee had moved from Amelia Court-House toward Farmville. The directions of the corps were changed, and the Sixth Corps moved from the right to the left; the Second Corps was ordered to move on Deatonsville, and the Fifth and Sixth Corps to move in parallel direction on the right and left, respectively.

The Second Corps soon came up with the enemy and commenced a rear-guard fight, which continued all day till evening, when the enemy was so crowded in attempting to cross Sailor's Creek, that he had to abandon a large train. Guns, colors, and prisoners were taken in these successful operations of the Second Corps.

The Sixth Corps, on the left of the Second, came up with the enemy posted on Sailor's Creek. Major-General Wright attacked with two divisions and completely routed the enemy. In this attack the cavalry, under Major-General Sheridan, was operating on the left of the Sixth Corps, while Humphreys was pressing on the right. The result of the combined operations was the capture of Lieutenant-General Ewell and four other general officers, with most of Ewell's corps.

The next day, the 7th of April, the Fifth Corps was moved to the left toward Prince Edward Court-House. The Second Corps resumed the direct pursuit of the enemy, coming up with him at High Bridge, over the Appomattox. Here the enemy made a feeble stand with his rear guard, attempting to burn the railroad and common bridge. Being driven off by Humphreys he succeeded in burning three spans of the railroad bridge, but the common bridge was saved, which Humphreys immediately crossed in pursuit, the enemy abandoning eighteen guns at this point. Humphreys came up with the enemy at the intersection of the High Bridge and Farmville roads, where he was found intrenched behind rail breast-works, evidently making a stand to cover the withdrawal of his trains. Before reaching this point h Humphreys had detached Barlow's division to the left toward Farmville. Near Farmville Barlow found the enemy, who was about evacuating the place, which operation was hastened by a successful attack of Barlow's.

When Humphreys ascertained the position of the enemy, Barlow was recalled, but did not reach Humphreys till evening, and after an unsuccessful assault had been made by part of Miles' division.

The Sixth Corps moved early in the morning toward Farmville, but finding the road occupied, first by the cavalry and subsequently by the Twenty-fourth Corps, it was too late in the afternoon before it reached that place, where it was found the enemy had destroyed the bridge. On learning the position of Humphreys, orders were sent to Wright to cross and attack in support. By great exertions a bridge for infantry was constructed, over which Wright crossed, but it was night-fall before this could be effected.

The next day, April 8, the pursuit was continued on the Lynchburg stage road. On the 9th, at 12 m., the head of the Second Corps, when within three miles of Appomattox Court-House, came up with the enemy. At the same time I received a letter from General Lee asking for a suspension of hostilities pending negotiations for surrender. Soon after receiving this letter Brigadier-General Forsyth, of General Sheridan's staff, came through the enemy's lines and notified me a truce had been made by Major-General Ord, commanding the troops on the other side of Appomattox Court-House. In consequence of this I replied to General Lee that I should suspend hostilities for two hours. At the expiration of that time I received the instructions of the lieutenant-general commanding to continue the armistice until further orders, and about 4 p. m. I received the welcome intelligence of the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia.

It has been impossible in the foregoing brief outline of operations to do full justice to the several corps engaged. For this purpose reference must be had to the reports of corps and division commanders, which will be forwarded as soon as received. At the same time I would call attention to the handsome repulse of the enemy by Griffin's division, Fifth Corps, on the 29th ultimo; to the important part taken by the Fifth Corps in the battle of Five Forks; to the gallant assault, on the 2d instant, by the Sixth Corps—in my judgment, the decisive movement of the campaign; to the successful attack of the Sixth Corps in the battle of Sailor's Creek; to the gallant assault, on the 2d instant, of the Ninth Corps, and the firmness and tenacity with which the advantages then gained were held against all assaults of the enemy; to the brilliant attack of Miles' division, Second Corps, at Sutherland's Station; to the energetic pursuit and attack of the enemy by the Second Corps on the 6th instant, terminating in the battle of Sailor's Creek, and to the prompt pursuit the next day, with Barlow's and Miles' attacks—as all evincing the fact that this army, officers and men, all nobly did their duty and deserve the thanks of the country. Nothing could exceed the cheerfulness with which all submitted to fatigue and privations to secure the coveted prize—the capture of the Army of Northern Virginia.

The absence of official reports precludes my forwarding any statement of casualties or lists of the captures of guns, colors, and prisoners. To my staff, general and personal, I am indebted, as I ever have been, for the most zealous and faithful discharge of their duties.

Respectfully, yours,

GEO. G. MEADE,

Major-General, U. S. Army, Commanding.

COL. T. S. BOWERS,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
June 29, 1865.

Col. T. S. BOWERS,

Asst. Adj. Gen., Hdqrs. Armies of the United States:

COLONEL: I have the honor to transmit herewith a map* of the operations of this army from the 29th of March, 1865, to the 9th of April, 1865, inclusive, prepared since the rendition of my report, and intended to be appended to it.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General, Commanding.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,
June 30, 1865.

Respectfully forwarded to the Secretary of War.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

A D D E N D A.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
April 16, 1865.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. E. D. TOWNSEND,

Asst. Adj. Gen., War Department, Washington, D. C.:

GENERAL: I send herewith fifteen flags, fourteen of which were captured from the enemy by the following named officers and men of the Second Corps:

At Sailor's Creek, April 6: One each by Lieut. G. W. Ford, Eighty-eighth New York Volunteers; Second Lieut. R. Riddell, Sixty-first New York Volunteers; Private John Simmons, Company D, Second New York Artillery; Private Thomas Davis, Company C, Second New York Artillery; Private Asel Haggerty, Company A, Sixty-first New York Volunteers; Private L. F. Brest, Company D, Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers; Private John Chapman, First Maine Heavy Artillery; Corpl. Walter L. Mundell, Fifth Michigan Volunteers; Private Henry Kline, Fortieth New York Volunteers; Private Orren Bennett, One hundred and forty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers; Sergt. J. W. Menter, Fifth Michigan Volunteers; Corpl. A. F. Haynes, Company H, Seventeenth Maine Volunteers. Near Amelia Springs, April 6: One by Lieutenant Newman, Eighty-sixth New York Volunteers. At Sutherland's Station, April 2: One by Private Josiah Phillips, Company E, One hundred and forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers.†

Leaves of absence and furloughs for thirty days have been granted to each of these officers and men, excepting Lieutenant Newman, Eighty-sixth New York Volunteers, who did not desire to avail himself of the indulgence. These officers and men, with the exception noted, accompany the flags. The party is under charge of Lieut. G. W. Ford, Eighty-eighth New York Volunteers. I respectfully request that medals of honor may be presented to each of them. The remaining flag, which completes the number of fifteen, will be presented by Lieut. A. H. Schoonover, Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers, acting aide-de-camp to Brevet Brigadier-General McAllister. He says that he was moving in advance of his brigade, as it charged, and that he found the flag on the ground, near the wagon train, where he thinks it was abandoned by the enemy. As it is a new artillery flag, and as there was no artillery at the point where it was found, it is General Humphreys' opinion that it had fallen or been pulled from some wagon of the train. A leave of absence has been given him, but a medal of honor is not, under the circumstances stated, recommended.

* See Plate LXXVI, Map 5 of the Atlas.

† The above-mentioned officers and men were each awarded a Medal of Honor.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General, Commanding.

No. 5.

Report of Lieut. Francis H. Parker, U. S. Army, Chief Ordnance Officer.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, HDQRS. ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
June 5, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following supplementary report of ordnance property received at the depot at City Point, Va., captured from and surrendered by the enemy in the late campaign. The few articles reported are accounted for by the fact that captured property and much of the surrendered ammunition was destroyed on the spot for want of transportation:

Field gun carriages, 108; siege gun carriages, 2; mortar beds (Coe-horn), 7; limbers, 36; caissons, 19. Field ammunition, 4,440 rounds.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
F. H. PARKER,
Lieutenant and Chief Ordnance Officer, Army of the Potomac.

Col. GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 6.

Report of Surg. Thomas A. McParlin, U. S. Army, Medical Director, of operations January 1-June 30.

NO. 209 G STREET,
Washington, D. C., August 21, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit tabular report of the sick and wounded of the Army of the Potomac from January 1, 1865, and other accompanying reports relative to the operations of the medical department since that period.

In January this army was composed of the Second, Fifth, Sixth, and Ninth Corps, the Second Cavalry Division, and independent commands, viz: Artillery Reserve, Provost-Marshal General's Brigade, Engineer Brigade and Battalion, and Signal Corps. The troops were comfortably quartered for the season, so far as compatible with their duties and position in the lines and works investing Petersburg and confronting the Army of Northern Virginia. In the month no important movement occurred.

In December, 1864, the supply of fresh vegetables had ceased. This deprivation continued so long that in March the subject was brought to the attention of the commanding general.

April 29, the medical inspector, Second Corps, specially reported on the supply as inadequate to preserve a proper standard of health in the command, citing the prevalence of diarrhoea of an obstinate and exhausting character as attributable thereto.

January 13, recommendation was made that cooking by companies be enforced and attention be reinvited to existing orders requiring it.

Vide, General Orders, No. 52, headquarters Army of the Potomac, May 15, 1863.* It should be remarked that the deficiencies of fresh vegetables was attributed by the subsistence department to want of transportation.

The rebel fleet came down from Richmond to the lower end of Dutch Gap Canal January 24, but after suffering the loss of one of its vessels, exploded by a shell from our batteries on the right bank of the James River, the fleet steamed back.

I had taken measures from the original occupancy of the depot to have the supplies of the medical purveyor kept afloat and ready for movement should any contingency require it.

Preparations for a military operation were made early in February, and the clearance of the field hospitals and commands of men unable to participate in it became necessary. Over 2,000 were sent down to the Depot Field Hospital at City Point, in thirty-six hours, chiefly at night, the railroad conducting its ordinary business in the meantime.

On the 5th of February the movement to Dabney's Mill and Hatcher's Run began. The Second Cavalry Division, moving by Reams' Station and Rowanty Creek, made a demonstration toward Dinwiddie Court-House, but returned back by Rowanty and the Boydton and Vaughan roads, and guarded the extreme left of our line, which had been advanced by the Second Corps and extended by the Fifth Corps, co-operating on the left of the Second. Two divisions of the Sixth Corps were in reserve and ready to support where required. A train of eighteen wagons were captured by the cavalry. I have no data by which to detail the operations, and will briefly state that the Second Corps and the Fifth were attacked by the enemy (troops of Hill, Gordon, Mahone and Pogram). The Fifth Corps lost some of the ground over which it had advanced, but a permanent lodgment and advance was maintained, and the line (extended by two or three miles) permanently added on the left of the army.

The roads were corduroyed and the surface railroad extended, corresponding to the left. The wounded were not very far from their established division hospitals and trains, and, after receiving necessary surgical attention, were sent from Patrick's Station, very promptly, by rail to City Point.

The following number of wounded were admitted to field hospitals, afterward sent to Depot Field Hospital, from this movement, from February 5 to 9:

| | Second Corps. | Fifth Corps. | Sixth Corps. | Second Division Cavalry. | Total. |
|--|---------------|--------------|--------------|--------------------------|--------|
| In field hospital of corps: | | | | | |
| February 5, 1865 | 13 | 4 | | 5 | 21 |
| February 6, 1865 | 63 | 513 | | 1 | 577 |
| February 7, 1865 | 5 | 161 | 10 | 71 | 250 |
| Total | | | | | 848 |
| In depot field hospital at City Point from field hospitals: | | | | | |
| February 7, 1865 | | | | | 241 |
| February 8, 1865 | | | | | 441 |
| February 9, 1865 | | | | | 140 |
| Total | | | | | 828 |

* See Vol. XXV, Part II, p. 491.

In March orders were given requiring the division hospitals to be kept clear of wounded and sick who would be in the way in case immediate movement was directed. In answer to my application hospital cars were procured by the chief quartermaster and superintendent of military railroad, to the great improvement of the mode of transportation of sick and wounded to City Point.

In view of the importance and magnitude of the approaching operations and possible co-operative movements by several armies, the attention of the commanding general was invited, in February, to the propriety of having a reserve train of ambulances kept by the quartermaster's department, from which deficiencies in the corps might be promptly filled, and to be subject to my order whenever emergency might demand. The application did not receive favorable action. A material reduction was unexpectedly announced at this time in the number of army wagons authorized for the medical and hospital department. Considerable property was turned in before the campaign commenced, but it became necessary afterward to throw out and abandon many articles, as the rains of March 29 and 30, for a time, made the roads impassable for heavily laden wagons.

The proper subsistence of officers in field hospitals, and of their servants, in a manner least likely to lead to abuse had attracted my attention, and some diversity of management was tolerated for a few months in order to ascertain a correct system. I became convinced, however, that no charges should be made against wounded officers, and that their admission and continuance in field hospitals should be encouraged; at the same time they should be required to furnish a ration which recent legislation and orders had authorized and facilitated. The circular of March 24 was therefore issued.*

In March I caused the regimental surgeons and assistants to be returned to their regiments in the field from duty in the depot hospitals at City Point, their duties devolving upon contract physicians, who were sent to me by the Surgeon-General.

Although the able-bodied men of the line had been superseded at the depot hospital by musicians, their commanders still made frequent application for relief of their detailed bandmen, drummers, buglers, &c. It became, therefore, desirable to have the services of hired nurses or members of the Veteran Reserve Corps for duty as a hospital corps. After consultation with the assistant adjutant-general the subject was brought to the attention of the Surgeon-General; but reliable contract nurses were difficult to obtain, and the great demand for nurses, cooks, &c., from the Reserve Corps for general hospitals precluded any detail for our field hospital at City Point. Had a hospital corps been properly organized during the war, I am persuaded that good material would have been attracted to it and the public service have been greatly benefited thereby. They would have been eligible for duties in the general hospitals, in field and depot hospitals, and the transport steamers of the medical department. The sick and wounded need seldom have passed out of the hands of the medical department until they reached the depot of the army again, and many thousands who entered the convalescent camps and rendezvous (to be detained, and, in many cases, lost to the fighting force) could have, to a great extent, been directly returned by the medical transports to their commands for duty.

At 4.30 a. m. of the 25th of March the enemy, under Gordon, assaulted the front of the Ninth Corps in force, moving in three columns—one sweeping to the left toward Battery 9, one to the right on Fort Haskell, while the third moved forward directly toward Fort Stedman. Asst. Surg. S. Adams, U. S. Army, in a report to me of March 31, describes the affair, and I invite attention to his paper for details and the operations of the medical department connected therewith.*

* See p. 616.

Malone's (rebel) division attacked at the same time the front of General Miles (Second Corps), but was repulsed. The casualties in Second Corps was 444 wounded. The wounded had been attended to and forwarded to depot hospital, City Point, by noon of the following day.

After the repulse and disaster inflicted upon the enemy in the Fort Stedman affair comparative quiet obtained, but for a very brief period. After three days of preparations, in which the troops from the Army of the James (three divisions) were brought over in co-operation and the Second Division of Cavalry had been detached from us to report to General Sheridan, the grand campaign of 1865 was inaugurated. The operations of the medical department of the cavalry, from January 1 to the 28th of March, are described in the accompanying report of the surgeon-in-chief, E. J. Marsh, assistant surgeon, U. S. Army.†

The position of the several corps March 29 was as follows: Extending westward from the Appomattox, the Ninth Corps, the Sixth Corps, the newly joined Second Division, Eighteenth Corps, and First Division, Twenty-fourth Corps, from the Army of the James, then the Second Corps, and Fifth Corps. The Cavalry Corps, under General Sheridan, were operating near Dinwiddie Court-House, on the extreme left. The Depot Hospital at City Point was accessible by surface railroad as far west as Humphreys' Station, near the Second and Fifth Corps camps and field hospitals, and convenient by intermediate stations with all the other corps. The medical purveying department maintained a constant battle-field supply, in thirty-six wagons, at the front, which parked and advanced with the headquarters train.

The subjoined memorandum of dates and occurrences, as an outline of the campaign, may be referred to in connection with the accompanying detailed descriptions and report:

March 29, Fifth Corps engaged on the Quaker road. March 30, Fifth Corps engaged on the White Oak road; Second Corps advancing shortens and straightens the lines. General Sheridan's cavalry engage the enemy near Dinwiddie Court-House. March 31, Fifth Corps and Miles' division, Second Corps, engaged the enemy in the afternoon. In the morning it rained very heavily.

April 1, cavalry of General Sheridan and Fifth Corps (detached from Army of the Potomac) defeat the enemy at Five Forks. April 2, general assault before daylight of the enemy's lines and works defending Petersburg; the Sixth and Ninth Corps break the lines, making Petersburg untenable; Petersburg and Richmond evacuated at night. April 3, pursuit of the Army of Northern Virginia, retreating toward Danville. April 4, pursuit continued by Army of Potomac corps, the divisions from the Army of the James, and the cavalry. April 5, pursuit continued; at Jetersville the cavalry had a slight affair, holding the enemy; the Second and Sixth Corps come up and take position for attack; the enemy withdraw in the night. April 6, battle of Sailor's Creek (cavalry and Sixth Corps), resulting in the surrender of Ewell and other Confederate generals and several thousand prisoners. April 7, pursuit and skirmishes with the enemy toward High Bridge, Farmville, and beyond. April 8, enemy retreating toward Lynchburg on the road from Farmville to Appomattox Court-House; is checked in front on the 9th of April by the Army of the James divisions (General Ord), the Fifth Corps (General Griffin), and cavalry, General Sheridan in chief command. General Meade, having the Second and Sixth Corps massed and pressing against the enemy's rear for attack, received a request for cessation of hostilities with a view to surrender. Terms of surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia to General Grant arranged and announced in the afternoon. The campaign ended.

* See p. 320.

† See p. 618.

The reports of the medical directors of the Second and Fifth Corps and of the medical inspectors Second, Fifth, and Ninth Corps, the ambulance officer Second Corps, and the inspector at army headquarters, Surg. J. A. Lidell, describes in so full and interesting a manner the character of the campaign relative to the medical department, that it is unnecessary for me to do more than to refer to the papers themselves. Reports from all the corps and commands have not been received as called for; should they be rendered hereafter I will request that they be appended to this report.

After the capture of Petersburg the chief medical officer of Depot Hospital was ordered to push forward, to the most advanced depot of the army to which railroad facilities were extended, a sub-depot field hospital, to receive and care for wounded until they could be transported to City Point. For this purpose a train, ordered on the 3d, was started on the 7th of April with 25 medical officers, 200 hospital tent flies, with dressings, food for four days for 2,500 wounded, 3 hospital stewards, and 100 detailed men accompanied it, taking also axes, spades, cooking utensils, necessary articles for organizing a movable depot hospital, designed more especially to afford temporary food, shelter, medical supplies, and attendance of wounded who were to be sent away while the army corps might be moving. It was my design to have this advance hospital move with the railroad and general depot at the front, but the brevity and decisive character of the campaign made it unnecessary to carry it beyond Burke's Station, where it was discontinued April 30, after an existence there of eighteen days. The chief medical officer at City Point had been instructed, March 28, to be prepared to expand his hospitals to their utmost capacity at short notice; to send off in hospital transports as many of the cases as were proper for general hospital, and upon the contingency of a great battle to telegraph to the Surgeon-General for additional facilities for transferring them.

The wounded of the Fifth and Second Corps from the extension of our lines to the left, March 29, 30, 31 (1,400), received attention on the field at Spain's house, Quaker Church, and the Chimneys, and at the division hospitals, near the Cummings house. The regular division hospitals of the Sixth and Ninth Corps were not moved until after the army had captured Petersburg and started west in pursuit of the Army of Northern Virginia.

In the action around Dinwiddie and Five Forks the wounded of the cavalry and Fifth Corps were sent to the Methodist Church field hospital (382) April 1, and thence by ambulances and wagons, in a great part, to Humphreys' Station, surface railroad; the remainder accompanied the Fifth Corps, and were sent to Sutherland's Station, on the South Side Railroad, ten miles from Petersburg.

At the personal request of the medical director of the cavalry I directed that the wounded of General Sheridan's command should be received in the Cavalry Corps hospital, under direction of the chief medical officer depot field hospital Army of the Potomac, at City Point, and subsequently also gave authority for the admission of wounded from the cavalry into any of the infantry corps field hospitals at the front. I believe that in this way the cavalry was disencumbered and its movements facilitated under the arrangements already made. While the system in use enabled me readily to accord the facilities desired, it could have been expanded beyond such requirements.

The wounded in the general assault (1,972), April 2, upon the forts and works before Petersburg were received in the regular division hospitals of Sixth and Ninth Corps, long established and connected by railroad with City Point. The 272 wounded of General Miles' division, Second Corps, on that day were received at Moody's house, near Five Forks. The rebel wounded found in Petersburg April 3 were continued in Confederate general hospital, under the charge of their surgeons, and generally throughout the campaign they were moved as little as possible until they were able to be sent paroled toward their homes. I desired, for many reasons, to have United States wounded kept out of Petersburg, and as ample accommodations and comforts were prepared at City Point they were ordered to be sent there without delay, whence also they could soon be transferred northward and near their friends.

Several days elapsed before the railroad was available from City Point beyond Petersburg, and it was necessary to repair the South Side Railroad and change its gauge from Petersburg toward Danville. When it was complete as far as Wilson's Station the sub-depot hospital was moved there from City Point, April 7, and received several hundred wounded from that vicinity (chiefly from the cavalry of General Sheridan). The wounded from the operations around Jetersville, Amelia Springs, Sailor's Creek, High Bridge, Farnville, and beyond, were sent from those places and from the Brooks and Vaughan houses and Appomattox to Burke's Station after April 6. The presence of the Ninth Corps at that place made it convenient and proper to receive the wounded at the division hospitals of that corps, established as a depot for wounded until the sub-depot hospital could be brought up. This was then at Wilson's Station, miles distant. The medical purveyor's train was at Burke's Station, and ready to supply whatever was required at the depot or at the front; for this last purpose it passed on to Farnville April 9.

About 2,000 wounded and 500 sick were received at Burke's depot from the different corps. The sub-depot hospital established by Surgeon Bendell received, from April 9 to 30, 660 sick and 192 wounded; of these 5 died and 838 were sent by railroad to the principal hospital, City Point.

The ambulance train of the Ninth Corps and the captured ambulances and empty wagons were used, in addition to the three ambulance trains, in the collection and transfer of wounded from battle-fields, of which Burke's Station was the depot.

After the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia several hundred Confederate wounded, and those of the United States whom it was improper to move at Farnville, were cared for in a most comfortable general hospital established there. Surgeon Blackwood, Surgeon Evans, and Surgeon Wolf, U. S. Volunteers, acted as chief medical officers. The latter remained after the Army of the Potomac had marched toward Alexandria.

The wounded of all corps and services were received and thoroughly cared for. The last of our wounded were sent down from Burke's Station to City Point April 13, although scattering cases continued to be received until April 20.

April 30, I ordered the assistant medical purveyor to discontinue his sub-depot at Burke's Station, and proceed with train and supplies to City Point and report to Medical Purveyor Brinton. The Sixth Corps was then at Danville, where it remained some time. Other corps of the army marched for Alexandria early in May.

The depot hospital Army of the Potomac, at City Point, was ordered to be reduced 2,500 beds April 30, and to be moved to Alexandria May 4, and again to be finally discontinued May 25. After the cases had been properly disposed of (by transfer to general hospital in Washington, and to Alexandria for discharge from service) the establishment ceased to exist. The purveying department, which was reduced in May, was terminated and the property turned in at Washington in June. The contracts of acting assistant and acting staff surgeons were canceled on the breaking up of the army. On the 30th of June, 1865, the Army of the Potomac ceased to exist as an organization.

The non-receipt of many sub-reports makes this necessarily incomplete. As I may be unable hereafter to give proper attention to the subject, I deem it advisable not to delay rendering what is now available.

Of the hospital fund in my hands, accruing from tax on the sales of newspapers in the Army of the Potomac, I have applied to the purchase of luxuries for the hospitals and necessary articles for the transactions of the business of the medical department since last report, $5,070.35. The amount received from such tax since June 1, 1865, has been $6,384. On hand December 31, 1864, last report, $9,025.04. The balance remaining in my hands upon breaking up of the Army of the Potomac, June 29, 1865, $10,339.04. This balance, pursuant to proceedings and recommendations of the Board appointed by Special Orders, No. 163, headquarters Army of the Potomac, approved by the commanding general, was turned over by me July 1, 1865, to the Surgeon-General, in trust, to be made a donation from the Army of the Potomac to the National Asylum, created by act of Congress approved March 3, 1865. (See appendix.)

The strength of medical department and ambulance corps for the period embraced in the report has been as follows:

| Date. | Medical Department. | | | Ambulance Corps. | | | |
|-------------------|---------------------|-----------------|--------------------|------------------|-------|-----------|------|
| | Medical officers. | Medical cadets. | Hospital stewards. | Present. | | Absent. | |
| | | | | Officers. | Men. | Officers. | Men. |
| 1865. | | | | | | | |
| January 31 | 504 | | 39 | 43 | 1,807 | 4 | 68 |
| February 28 | 522 | | 40 | 44 | 1,681 | 4 | 107 |
| March 31 | 510 | | 42 | 44 | 1,080 | 7 | 111 |
| April 30 | 421 | | 36 | 33 | 1,415 | 3 | 70 |
| May 31 | 400 | | 36 | 34 | 1,330 | | 73 |
| June 30 | | | | | | | |

The accompanying reports of ambulance officers afford additional information.*

*Omitted.

The following statement exhibits the extent of the charge exercised by the medical department and changes therein during the half year ending June 30, 1865:

| | | |
|--|-----|--------|
| Number of sick and wounded remaining in Army of the Potomac December 31, 1864, and to be accounted for, viz: | | |
| In the field..... | | 2,560 |
| In depot hospital..... | | 2,895 |
| In Northern U. S. general hospitals (approximative)..... | | 17,816 |
| Number taken sick and wounded from January 1 to June 30, 1865..... | | 75,418 |
| Returned from furlough and desertion: | | |
| To field hospitals..... | 77 | |
| To depot hospitals..... | 438 | |
| Total..... | | 215 |
| Aggregate..... | | 98,901 |

Of these the following disposition has been made so far as reported:

| | In the field. | In depot field hospital Army of the Potomac. | In Northern hospitals. |
|---|---------------|--|------------------------|
| Returned to duty..... | 57,037 | 42,192 | 4,949 |
| Transferred to Veteran Reserve Corps..... | 277 | 200 | 384 |
| Discharged from service..... | 683 | 93 | 6,122 |
| Deserted..... | 6 | 85 | 421 |
| Died..... | 655 | 572 | 1,518 |
| Furloughed..... | 72 | 520 | |
| Remaining on sick report June 30, 1865..... | 1,652 | (a) | 622,458 |

Aggregate, 98,901.

a None, establishment having been discontinued.

b Yet to be accounted for.

Under the operation of general orders those remaining in U. S. general hospitals whose physical condition will permit will be discharged from the service as soon as such action can be correctly and properly effected. The number (17,816) in U. S. general hospitals December 31, 1864, being approximative, the 22,458 yet to be accounted for is an approximate estimate also. Comparison of the numbers received in the Depot Field Hospital, Army of the Potomac, City Point, since January, 1865, 26,244, with the number reported as sent to general hospital from the field, 17,673, shows a difference of 8,571. This is attributable to the fact that the Depot Hospital, Army of the Potomac, at City Point, admitted the wounded and sick of the other co-operative armies, from which I received no report. The number is large also because many men, unable to accompany their commands upon the return march to the Potomac, who under other circumstances would not have been detached from their regiments, were sent to City Point to be transported by water. The number sent North from City Point was 15,606. The difference between number reported sent to general hospital and number received at City Point, in the several months, were—for January, 94; February, 903; March, 1,365; April, 5,611; May, 928—which indicate the principal discrepancies as occurring during the period of most active operations and from the cause above stated.

In this connection it will be observed that the number of gunshot wounds in the Army of the Potomac from January to June 30, 1865, according to the monthly reports received, was 6,833, whereas the number of gunshot wounds actually admitted at City Point was 9,137. The number of wounds and injuries (Class V) reported admitted in the field hospital Army of the Potomac during the same period was 9,959. The number of wounds and injuries (Class V) admitted at City Point from January 1 to May 31, according to inspectors' reports from this and other armies, is 11,395.

With an army in campaign, errors and omissions are to be expected in the reports. The present, however, are more complete and correct than I anticipated, inasmuch as many regiments and officers were mustered out of service and changes of organizations rapidly made, especially in that period between the return of the army to the Potomac and its dissolution.

The statistical reports appended furnish interesting details.*

A few obvious clerical errors have been made, viz, typhus fever, eleven cases, and yellow fever, two cases, are reported, figures which should have been entered in the column "typhoid or typho-malarial," next adjoining, but the errors are retained in the consolidations rather than have alterations made in otherwise accurate tables. From the discontinuance of very many general hospitals (since the date for which this report is rendered), and the rapid reductions made in the number of inmates of the few that remain, it is certain that of the "number (22,458) yet to be accounted for" (as stated in the preceding summary) thousands have been discharged, and but a small proportion remain.

The condition and operations of the Ambulance Corps have been such as to reflect credit upon the officers charged with its command, and to evidence how essential an element it is to the efficiency of the medical department and the line of the army as well. An army that has witnessed its beneficent provisions is prepared the more to appreciate the justice and wisdom of committing to the medical department trusts and powers in some degree commensurate with duties imposed, and which it can best perform.

I desire to invite special attention of the commanding general to the successful management of the affairs of the medical department in the discharge of their official duties by the following officers: Lieut. Col. Charles Page, medical director Second Corps, formerly the assistant and at times acting medical director of this army; Lieut. Col. S. A. Holman, medical director Sixth Corps; Lieut. Col. T. R. Spencer, medical director Fifth Corps; Lieut. Col. E. B. Dalton, medical director Ninth Corps; Surg. G. B. Parker, successor of Surgeon Dalton as chief medical officer of Depot Field Hospital, Army of the Potomac; Asst. Surg. J. B. Brinton, medical purveyor of the army.

To my immediate assistants, Surg. J. A. Lidell, inspector of the medical and hospital department of this army, and Asst. Surg. J. Sim Smith, attending surgeon at headquarters, to whom I am indebted for valuable assistance in discharge of special duties committed to them; Asst. Surg. E. J. Marsh, U. S. Army, surgeon-in-chief of the Second Cavalry Division, passed to the command of General Sheridan the day preceding the campaign. He has performed all duties while under my direction with signal ability.

In closing this report of the last campaign of the Army of the Potomac, I desire to acknowledge the cordial co-operation which has been extended to me by the chiefs of the staff departments of this army, and the agreeable relations which have continued throughout eighteen months of duty as its medical director. The medical officers, generally, animated by high personal, professional, and patriotic motives, have manifested a practiced skill and great devotion to duty. My anxieties and responsibilities, lightened by their labors, have now ceased in the success of military operations, and I experience the pride of past membership with them in the veteran army.

* Omitted.

I am, general, with much respect, your obedient servant,

THIS. A. McPARLIN,

Bvt. Col. and Surg. U. S. A., late Med. Dir. Army of the Potomac.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. GEORGE D. RUGGLES,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., Mil. Dir. of the Atlantic, Philadelphia, Pa.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

CIRCULAR, }
No. 9. }

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
MEDICAL DIRECTOR'S OFFICE,

March 21, 1865.

SIR: You are directed to instruct the surgeons in charge of hospitals to require officers treated therein to furnish their own subsistence and that of their servants, if present in hospital. No other charge will be exacted from these officers. General Orders, No. 26, Army of the Potomac, series of 1864, published in Special Orders, 44, of June 28, 1864, from the headquarters Army of the United States, authorized officers of this army to draw two rations in kind per day, subsistence for them to be drawn as for troops, but on separate returns. Attention is invited to the provisions of paragraph 2, War Department General Orders, No. 13, of February 6, 1865, which authorized officers actually in the field, who are without the means of paying for subsistence stores and have over one month's pay due, to draw from the commissary for themselves and servants one regular army ration per day, on ordinary ration returns.

It is believed that the authority above given provides all that is necessary to enable the surgeons to take care of sick and wounded officers.

THIS. A. McPARLIN,

Surg. U. S. Army, Col. and Medical Director Army of the Potomac.

(To medical directors of corps and chief medical officers of independent commands.)

[Inclosure No. 2.]

Consolidated statement of wounds in the Army of the Potomac.

FEBRUARY, 1865.

| Location of injury. | Second Corps. | Fifth Corps. | Sixth Corps. | Ninth Corps. | Second Division, Cavalry Corps. | Total. |
|-----------------------------|---------------|--------------|--------------|--------------|---------------------------------|--------|
| Head and face | 13 | 53 | 2 | | 0 | 74 |
| Neck | 3 | 12 | | | | 15 |
| Shoulder | 7 | 34 | | | 2 | 43 |
| Thorax | 8 | 42 | 2 | | 8 | 60 |
| Abdomen | 8 | 25 | 2 | | 4 | 39 |
| Back and hips | 7 | 39 | | | 3 | 49 |
| Perineum and genitals | 1 | 2 | | | 1 | 4 |
| Superior extremities | 19 | 320 | 10 | | 31 | 386 |
| Inferior extremities | 10 | 114 | 4 | | 8 | 142 |
| Total | 82 | 647 | 20 | | 63 | 812 |

Consolidated statement of wounds in the Army of the Potomac—Continued.

FEBRUARY, 1865—Continued.

| Location of injury. | Second Corps. | Fifth Corps. | Sixth Corps. | Ninth Corps. | Second Division, Cavalry Corps. | Total. |
|-------------------------------------|---------------|--------------|--------------|--------------|---------------------------------|--------|
| Deaths in field hospitals..... | 9 | 10 | | | 1 | 20 |
| Shell wounds..... | 5 | 11 | 2 | | 1 | 19 |
| Bullet wounds..... | 81 | 608 | 19 | | 64 | 832 |
| Amputations in field hospitals..... | 2 | 50 | 3 | | 4 | 59 |
| Excisions in field hospitals..... | 2 | 11 | | | | 13 |
| Aggregate strength present..... | 22,607 | 18,131 | 5,985 | | 9,287 | 56,010 |
| Medical officers present..... | 73 | 60 | 10 | | 20 | 167 |
| Killed a | 25 | 115 | 1 | | 13 | 154 |
| Wounded a | 117 | 870 | 24 | | 91 | 1,102 |
| Missing a | 3 | 174 | 6 | | 9 | 192 |
| Total killed, wounded, and missing. | 145 | 1,159 | 31 | | 113 | 1,418 |

a According to regimental reports.

REMARKS.—No report received from Ninth Corps for February.

MARCH, 1865.

| Location of injury. | Second Corps. | Fifth Corps. | Sixth Corps. | Ninth Corps. | Total. |
|---|---------------|--------------|--------------|--------------|--------|
| Head and face..... | 84 | 112 | 41 | 65 | 302 |
| Neck..... | 11 | 14 | 8 | 9 | 42 |
| Shoulder..... | 37 | 81 | 22 | 24 | 164 |
| Thorax..... | 66 | 61 | 10 | 30 | 176 |
| Abdomen..... | 35 | 61 | 10 | 37 | 143 |
| Back and hips..... | 54 | 98 | 30 | 20 | 211 |
| Perineum and genitals..... | 2 | 7 | | 16 | 25 |
| Superior extremities..... | 300 | 488 | 145 | 110 | 1,112 |
| Inferior extremities..... | 108 | 243 | 70 | 35 | 456 |
| Total..... | 717 | 1,105 | 345 | 354 | 2,031 |
| Deaths in field hospitals..... | 25 | 20 | 0 | 50 | 107 |
| Shell wounds..... | 45 | 10 | 72 | 18 | 143 |
| Cannon-shot wounds..... | 1 | 4 | 2 | 1 | 8 |
| Bullet wounds..... | 707 | 1,167 | 285 | 494 | 3,583 |
| Bayonet wounds..... | | | 1 | | 1 |
| Sword wounds..... | | | 1 | | 2 |
| Amputation in field hospitals..... | 47 | 98 | 87 | 43 | 225 |
| Excisions in field hospitals..... | 3 | 1 | 5 | 4 | 13 |
| Aggregate strength present..... | 23,425 | 22,459 | 17,297 | 21,578 | 84,719 |
| Medical officers present..... | 111 | 63 | 45 | 101 | 310 |
| Killed a | 63 | 201 | 45 | | 309 |
| Wounded a | 450 | 1,082 | 391 | | 1,932 |
| Missing a | 137 | 873 | 16 | | 1,026 |
| Total killed, wounded, and missing..... | 659 | 3,156 | 452 | | 4,267 |

a According to regimental reports.

REMARKS.—The Second Cavalry Division joined its corps on the 27th, and the surgeon-in-chief rendered his report to the medical director of the corps. The Ninth Corps failed to render any reports of aggregate strength, &c., for this month.

APRIL, 1865.

| Location of injury. | Second Corps. | Fifth Corps. | Sixth Corps. | Ninth Corps. | Total. |
|---------------------|---------------|--------------|--------------|--------------|--------|
| Head and face..... | 107 | 49 | 110 | 34 | 300 |
| Neck..... | 18 | 6 | 22 | 7 | 51 |
| Shoulder..... | 72 | 13 | 71 | 17 | 173 |
| Thorax..... | 56 | 30 | 63 | 17 | 166 |
| Abdomen..... | 38 | 21 | 48 | 20 | 127 |
| Back and hips..... | 54 | 23 | 83 | 34 | 194 |

Consolidated statement of wounds in the Army of the Potomac—Continued.

APRIL, 1865.—Continued.

| Location of injury. | Second Corps. | Fifth Corps. | Sixth Corps. | Ninth Corps. | Total. |
|--|---------------|--------------|--------------|--------------|--------|
| Perineum and genitals | 3 | 1 | 15 | 4 | 43 |
| Superior extremities | 307 | 100 | 532 | 109 | 1,223 |
| Inferior extremities | 177 | 58 | 222 | 87 | 544 |
| Total | 922 | 307 | 1,175 | 220 | 2,821 |
| Deaths in field hospitals | 22 | 10 | 27 | 9 | 68 |
| Shell wounds | 82 | 2 | 80 | 34 | 207 |
| Cannon wounds | 3 | | 5 | 1 | 9 |
| Bullet wounds | 813 | 387 | 962 | 282 | 2,444 |
| Bayonet wounds | | 1 | 1 | | 2 |
| Amputations in field hospitals | 56 | 20 | 88 | 16 | 186 |
| Excisions in field hospitals | 5 | 1 | 12 | 2 | 20 |
| Aggregate strength | 21,598 | 14,313 | 21,070 | | 56,980 |
| Medical officers | 105 | 62 | 84 | | 251 |
| Killed a | 189 | 79 | 230 | | 498 |
| Wounded a | 1,186 | 505 | 1,268 | | 2,959 |
| Missing a | 318 | 63 | 198 | | 579 |
| Total killed, wounded, and missing | 1,693 | 647 | 1,696 | | 4,036 |

a According to regimental reports.

REMARKS.—The Second and Fifth Corps have taken up the wounded of March 30 and 31 on this report. The Ninth Corps is represented only by the Third Division.

[Inclosure No. 3.]

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY CORPS,

Medical Director's Office, June 10, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor respectfully to render the following report of the operations of the medical and hospital department and ambulance service of the Second Cavalry Division from January 1, 1865, to March 28, 1865:

On January 1, 1865, the Second Cavalry Division, Army of the Potomac, under command of Bvt. Maj. Gen. D. McM. Gregg, was composed of the following troops:

First Brigade, Brig. Gen. H. E. Davies: First Pennsylvania, First New Jersey, First Massachusetts, Tenth New York, Twenty-fourth New York Cavalry, and Horse Battery A, Second U. S. Artillery; aggregate, 2,658. Second Brigade, Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. I. Gregg: Second, Fourth, Eighth, Thirteenth, and Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and Horse Battery I, Second U. S. Artillery; aggregate strength, 2,802. Third Brigade, Bvt. Brig. Gen. C. H. Smith: First Maine, Twenty-first Pennsylvania, Second New York Mounted Rifles, Sixth Ohio, and Thirteenth Ohio Cavalry; aggregate strength, 2,982.

There was also a cavalry depot and dismounted camp for all recruits and convalescents from Northern hospitals, and dismounted men from camps. They remained here until they could be mounted and equipped. There were several vacancies of regimental medical officers, but more than one present to each regiment. The surgeons-in-chief were as follows:

First Brigade, Surg. C. L. George, Twenty-fourth New York Cavalry; Second Brigade, Surg. F. Le Moyne, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry; Third Brigade, Surg. W. Howard King, Twenty-first Pennsylvania Cavalry; in charge of hospital, Act. Staff Surg. G. W. Lovejoy.

The division hospital was located near the division in a central and convenient position. It was formed of hospital tents, had beds for 120 patients, with a surgeon in charge, three assistant medical officers, two hospital stewards, and twenty-seven attendants. The total number of medical officers present for duty on January 1 was twenty-six. Absent with leave, two; absent sick, three. The ambulance corps was in charge of Lieut. John R. West, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, division ambulance officer. There were two brigade officers only, a vacancy existing in the Second Brigade. There was a full complement of men, wagons, and ambulances, three medicine wagons, fifteen army wagons, and twenty-six ambulances. The ambulances were not very good ones, being mostly old, but in good repair and serviceable. On January 24, by permission of the acting medical director of the army, I issued a circular directing the surgeons-in-chief to turn over the medical property in the ambulances to the surgeon in charge of hospital and placing upon him the responsibility of keeping the boxes filled. I did this because the ambulance property is used exclusively in the field hospitals over which the surgeons-in-chief of brigades have no control, and confusion of accounts often arises from the fact of several officers being responsible for property in the same hospital. The division was camped on the Jerusalem plank road beyond the rear line of earth-works and near the crossing of the Blackwater. The situation of all the camps was good. They were well laid out, with excellent huts for the troops, and all proper sanitary regulations generally observed. During the month the division remained in camp, having merely the ordinary picket duty to perform, and there was no general movement of any kind. The condition of the camps continued good, weekly inspections being made by a medical officer in each brigade. The issue of fresh vegetables during the month was very scant, but still no signs of a scorbutic condition were observed. The health of the command was remarkably good, as the troops were well sheltered, had abundant food, and were well clothed. There were some obstinate and serious cases of chronic diarrhea, a few severe cases of fever, but not as many cases of diseases of the respiratory organs as might have been anticipated from the frequent rain-storms and the extreme and rapid variations of the temperature.

The following table will indicate the general summary of the sick and wounded during the month of January, 1865:

| | | First Bri- gade. | Second Bri- gade. | Third Bri- gade. | Artil- lery. | Cavalry Depot. | Total. |
|--|---------------------------|------------------------|-------------------------|------------------------|-----------------|-------------------|--------|
| Remain- ing at last report. | Sick | 60 | 50 | 58 | 5 | 75 | 257 |
| | Wounded | 3 | 16 | 13 | 1 | 5 | 38 |
| | Total | 72 | 66 | 71 | 6 | 80 | 295 |
| Taken sick or wounded during month. | Sick | 136 | 163 | 157 | 24 | 36 | 516 |
| | Wounded | 0 | 26 | 14 | 9 | 8 | 66 |
| | Total | 145 | 189 | 171 | 33 | 44 | 582 |
| Aggregate | | 217 | 255 | 242 | 39 | 124 | 877 |
| Results | Returned to duty | 144 | 170 | 157 | 17 | 29 | 526 |
| | Sent to general hospital. | 6 | 12 | 4 | | 5 | 27 |
| | Furlonged | 1 | | 1 | | | 2 |
| | Discharged | 1 | | | | 1 | 2 |
| | Died | 3 | 3 | 4 | | | 10 |

| | | First Bri- gade. | Second Bri- gade. | Third Bri- gade. | Artill- ery. | Cavalry Depot. | Total. |
|---|-------------------|------------------------|-------------------------|------------------------|-----------------|-------------------|--------|
| Remaining..... | Sick | 55 | 50 | 65 | 13 | 81 | 264 |
| | Wounded..... | 7 | 11 | 11 | 9 | 8 | 46 |
| | Total | 62 | 61 | 76 | 22 | 89 | 310 |
| Main strength..... | | 2,334 | 2,428 | 2,550 | 269 | 944 | 8,525 |
| Average on sick report daily. | In hospital | 14 | 23 | 17½ | 5 | 10 | 69½ |
| | In quarters | 40 | 35 | 39½ | 8 | 75 | 197½ |
| | Total | 54 | 58 | 57 | 13 | 85 | 267 |
| Percentage on sick report daily | | 2.31 | 2.39 | 2.23 | 4.83 | 9.00 | 3.13 |
| Percentage of taken sick and wounded..... | | 0.21 | 7.78 | 6.70 | 12.20 | 4.66 | 6.82 |

The following table will give the number of cases of the most prevalent diseases:

| Diseases. | First Bri- gade. | Second Bri- gade. | Third Bri- gade. | Artill- ery. | Cavalry Depot. | Total. |
|--------------------------------|------------------------|-------------------------|------------------------|-----------------|-------------------|--------|
| Typho-malarial fever..... | 2 | | | | | 2 |
| Remittent fever..... | 6 | 15 | 5 | | 1 | 27 |
| Intermittent fever..... | 18 | 16 | 27 | | 2 | 63 |
| Diarrhea, acute..... | 30 | 30 | 32 | 0 | 4 | 188 |
| Diarrhea, chronic..... | 12 | 4 | 18 | 2 | 4 | 40 |
| Erysipelas..... | 3 | | | 1 | | 4 |
| Small-pox and varioloid..... | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| Syphilis and gonorrhea..... | 5 | 3 | 1 | 3 | 1 | 13 |
| Dysentery, acute..... | 3 | 2 | 2 | | | 7 |
| Dysentery, chronic..... | 1 | | 1 | 3 | | 5 |
| Rheumatism, acute..... | 6 | 7 | 2 | | | 15 |
| Rheumatism, chronic..... | 4 | 6 | 7 | 1 | 4 | 22 |
| Bronchitis, acute..... | 11 | 21 | 12 | 1 | 1 | 46 |
| Bronchitis, chronic..... | | | 5 | | | 5 |
| Inflammation of the lungs..... | 1 | | 1 | | 4 | 6 |
| Inflammation of pleura..... | 1 | 2 | 3 | | | 6 |
| Boll and whitlow..... | 1 | 14 | 9 | | | 24 |
| Gunshot wounds..... | 1 | 8 | 1 | | 6 | 14 |

By these tables the remarkably good health of the command will be seen, the daily percentage on sick report being a little above 3. Abdominal diseases were most numerous as usual, next malarial fevers, and next diseases of the respiratory organs.

On February 1 I received orders from the medical director to send off all the sick and wounded who would be unable to accompany the command in case of a move. At 3 p. m. I sent off 181 patients to City Point; a few, however, did not arrive from one of the regiments in time to be sent and were placed in hospital. We remained quiet until February 4, when we received orders to move at 3 a. m. the next morning. I was directed to take fourteen ambulances, but no wagons were allowed owing to the condition of the roads. Surgeon Lovejoy was to take charge of the field hospital with half the attendants of division hospital. He was directed to take such shelter, food, and dressings as could be carried in one of the ambulances. As the hospital was to remain standing I left Assistant Surgeon Durgin, First Massachusetts Cavalry, in charge with forty-seven patients who had been admitted since February 1.

On Monday, February 5, at 3 a. m. the division moved from camp and proceeded by the Jerusalem plank road and Gary's Church to Reams' Station. After a short halt we proceeded by the Halifax and Malone road to Malone's Bridge over the Rowanty. Here we found a small force of the enemy on the opposite side of the creek, and after a short skirmish they were driven from their line of breast-works and several prisoners captured. We lost one man, killed, and two wounded. We then proceeded by some country by-roads to Dinwiddie Court-House. We met no force of the enemy at this place. We then sent parties up and down the Boydton plank road; these captured a number of wagons and prisoners. We remained here some time and attempted to communicate with General Warren on the Vaughan road, but unsuccessfully, as a force of the enemy was found between the two forces. We then returned by the same road by which we had advanced to Malone's Bridge. In the afternoon, however, we communicated with General Warren by a cross-road, and here General Davies, just returning from leave of absence, joined us and took command of his brigade.

During the day the weather was mild and pleasant; the roads were very muddy, especially the wood and field roads by which we had advanced. In returning they were almost impassable, and several of our captured wagons had to be burned and abandoned. The traveling was extremely hard on the horses, and it was impossible to keep the command in closed line of march. We reached the Rowanty about dark; one brigade only crossed, and the others camped on the south side. At 12.30 a. m. we again started on the road to join General Warren at the crossing of the Vaughan and Quaker roads. After dark the weather became cold, and by this hour the roads were completely frozen and we suffered greatly from the cold. On joining General Warren we found his command marching to Hatcher's Run, and we followed in his rear. We were ordered to mass in some open fields before crossing the run, and then put out skirmishers, expecting the enemy to follow. The Fifth Corps was posted on both sides of the run awaiting the enemy's approach. As we were expecting an engagement, I sent Surgeon Abbott, First Massachusetts Cavalry, back to the Cummings house, on the Vaughan road, to select a place for the hospital in case it should become necessary to establish one. After some time the enemy appeared in our rear, and some skirmishing ensued. There was not much fighting, however, until afternoon, when they attacked in some force. They were easily repulsed, however, though we had several officers and men killed and wounded, among others Colonel Janeway, First New Jersey Cavalry. From prisoners captured it was ascertained that the forces in front of us consisted of Pegram's division, of Gordon's corps. The wounded were temporarily dressed on the field and sent back in ambulances to the hospital at the Cummings house. A brigade of the Second Division, Fifth Corps, was sent up in the morning as a support to the cavalry in case the enemy should attack in force. They formed line in rear of our division. The First and Third Brigades were dismounted and had their horses sent across Hatcher's Run. About 2 o'clock the Fifth Corps was ordered to advance, one column proceeding by the Dabney Mill road; at the same time the Second Brigade of this cavalry division was ordered to drive the enemy down the Vaughan road and across Gravelly Run, if possible.

On the extreme left the Thirteenth and Sixteenth Pennsylvania charged, the former regiment capturing about thirty prisoners and a stand of colors. The Fourth Pennsylvania charged down and to the right of the Vaughan road, but the enemy advanced from the woods and drove them back. This brought on a general engagement along our line. The brigade of infantry, and a second one which had been ordered up, formed line and charged, and together we drove the enemy from their rifle-pits back into the woods for some distance. The firing was quite heavy and we lost a number killed and wounded; among the latter were Generals Davies and J. I. Gregg, slightly, Lieutenant-Colonels Beaumont and Tremain, severely. At the same time the Fifth Corps became engaged on the Dabney Mill road on our right. The wounded were dressed temporarily as far as possible and removed rapidly to the hospital. The ambulance corps did remarkably well, all the officers were active and energetic, and the men worked hard in bringing the wounded off the field. The ambulances were brought as far to the front as possible, and two ambulance horses were wounded by bullets. After driving the enemy from the field we held our position until dark. As soon as the fighting was over and all the wounded removed from the field I went back to the hospital. Here I found about fifty-five wounded. Surgeon Lovejoy had taken some out-houses, and also put up tent flies, procured straw for bedding, and had fed all the patients. The wounds were mostly dressed, and some operations were performed. The latter were continued until midnight. In the evening I received orders from Surgeon Page, U. S. Army, acting medical director of the army, to send off as many as were dressed and could be carried in the ambulances. They were to be taken to Patrick's Station where cars would be ready to receive them at 12 m. About thirty were sent off and the rest made comfortable for the night. The next morning some more operations were performed, and all the remainder of the wounded except four or five were then sent to the railroad.

On Tuesday, February 7, the First and Third Brigades were ordered to the junction of the Halifax and Wyatt roads. They reached there in the afternoon and went into camp. The brigade remained at Hatcher's Run, and, as there was some little skirmishing, some ambulances and dressings were left with them. The weather had been cloudy and chilly on Monday, and during the night some snow fell. On Tuesday morning it rained hard and continued to do so nearly all day. On Wednesday it was clear, and the First and Third Brigades were ordered back to their old camps at the Jerusalem plank road. The Second Brigade was ordered to the Halifax and Wyatt roads, and on Wednesday also returned to camp. I broke up the hospitals at the Cummings house and took the few remaining wounded to the division hospital. During the expedition from February 5 to 7 inclusive the number admitted into division hospital was sixty-four. The total number of casualties, according to regimental reports, was 13 killed, 91 wounded, 9 missing; total, 113. The total number of medical officers present for duty was twenty-two. On February 10 Brevet Brigadier-General Gregg left the division, his resignation from the army having been accepted by the President.

The whole division regretted his loss, as they had confidence in and esteem and affection for him. He was in all cases regardful of the wants of the sick and wounded and liberal toward the medical department, taking every possible precaution to insure the safety and comfort of the wounded in battle. On February 13 Actg. Staff Surg. G. W. Colby, late surgeon First Maine Cavalry, was ordered to report to me by the medical director of the army, and I assigned him to the charge of the hospital, relieving Acting Staff Surgeon Lovejoy. I assigned Surgeon Colby to this position because he had been for many years associated with the division and had organized the hospital during the previous summer. During the remainder of the month the division remained in camp, the picket duty was increased by the recent lengthening of the line toward the left. The health of the command was very good and the admissions into hospitals very few. Unfortunately but very few vegetables could be issued, and in the latter part of the month the patients admitted showed spongy gums and a few cases of scurvy appeared. The condition of the camps was good and attention was generally paid to policing. On February 24 the Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry was detached from the division and ordered to Wilmington, N. C. The Twenty-first Pennsylvania was transferred from Third to Second Brigade. This necessitated a change of surgeons-in-chief of Third Brigade, Surg. R. T. Paine, Second New York Mounted Rifles, succeeding Surgeon King, Twenty-first Pennsylvania, in the Third Brigade, the latter going with his regiment to the Second Brigade. The following table will indicate the general summary of the sick and wounded during the month of February:

| | | First Bri- gade. | Second Bri- gade. | Third Bri- gade. | Artil- lery. | Cavalry Depot. | Total. |
|--|--------------------------------|------------------------|-------------------------|------------------------|-----------------|-------------------|--------|
| Remaining at last report | Sick | 55 | 38 | 65 | 13 | 81 | 252 |
| | Wounded | 7 | 11 | 11 | 9 | 8 | 46 |
| | Total | 62 | 49 | 76 | 22 | 89 | 298 |
| Taken sick or wounded. | Sick | 153 | 149 | 144 | 14 | 36 | 496 |
| | Wounded | 44 | 68 | 39 | 4 | 5 | 160 |
| | Total | 197 | 217 | 183 | 18 | 41 | 656 |
| Aggregate | | 259 | 266 | 259 | 40 | 130 | 954 |
| Results | Returned to duty | 122 | 156 | 118 | 13 | 19 | 428 |
| | Sent to general hospital | 81 | 59 | 88 | 23 | 22 | 273 |
| | Purloined | | | 3 | 1 | | 4 |
| | Discharged | | 1 | 3 | | 3 | 7 |
| Remaining | Sick | 41 | 42 | 39 | 3 | 76 | 201 |
| | Wounded | 15 | 8 | 8 | | 10 | 41 |
| | Total | 56 | 50 | 47 | 3 | 86 | 242 |
| Mean strength | | 2,480 | 1,935 | 2,580 | 237 | 1,380 | 8,560 |
| Average on sick report, daily. | In hospital | 14 | 14 | 10 | 1 | 10 | 56 |
| | In quarters | 25 | 34 | 23 | 3 | 85 | 170 |
| | Total | 37 | 48 | 42 | 4 | 95 | 226 |
| Percentage on sick report daily | | 1.48 | 2.48 | 1.62 | 1.68 | 7.15 | 2.62 |
| Percentage of taken sick and wounded | | 7.94 | 11.21 | 7.09 | 7.60 | 3.08 | 7.00 |

The following table will give the number of cases of the most prevalent and important diseases:

| Diseases. | First Bri- gade. | Second Bri- gade. | Third Bri- gade. | Artil- lery. | Cavalry Depot. | Total. |
|-------------------------------|------------------------|-------------------------|------------------------|-----------------|-------------------|--------|
| Typhoid fever | 1 | | | | | 1 |
| Typho-malarial fever | | | | | | |
| Remittent fever | 18 | 21 | 4 | | 1 | 44 |
| Intermittent fever | 10 | 13 | 10 | | | 48 |
| Diarrhea, acute | 39 | 33 | 33 | | | 97 |
| Diarrhea, chronic | 5 | 5 | 9 | | | 21 |
| Dysentery, acute | 8 | 4 | 1 | | 1 | 14 |
| Dysentery, chronic | | | | 2 | | 2 |
| Erysipelas | 3 | | | | | 3 |
| Small-pox and varioloid | 1 | 1 | | | 3 | 6 |

| Diseases | First Bri- gade. | Second Bri- gade. | Third Bri- gade. | Arti- lery. | Cavalry Depot. | Total. |
|---------------------------|------------------------|-------------------------|------------------------|----------------|-------------------|--------|
| Measles | | | 1 | | | 1 |
| Syphilis and gonorrhea | 7 | | 3 | | 7 | 17 |
| Rheumatism, acute | 11 | 9 | 5 | | | 25 |
| Rheumatism, chronic | 1 | 1 | 10 | 2 | | 14 |
| Bronchitis, acute | 11 | 22 | 3 | | 3 | 39 |
| Bronchitis, chronic | | 1 | 1 | | | 2 |
| Inflammation of the lungs | 2 | | 1 | | 3 | 6 |
| Inflammation of pleura | 1 | 4 | | | | 5 |
| Boils and whitlow | | 11 | 2 | 1 | 1 | 15 |
| Gunshot wounds | 10 | 41 | 13 | | 1 | 74 |

By comparing these tables with those for January it will be seen that the health of the command was about the same as for that month. The total number of cases treated during February was larger owing to the wounded at the battle of Hatcher's Run. The number taken sick was nearly the same. The percentage on sick report daily was smaller owing to the fact that all our sick were sent to hospital on the 1st of the month. From February 7 to 28 the number of cases admitted into division hospital was only 57. The character of the diseases were the same as in the last month, zymotic diseases furnishing the greatest number; acute rheumatism showing an increase, while the diseases of the respiratory organs remained about the same.

About the middle of January a case of varioloid occurred in the Thirteenth Ohio in the case of a soldier who had just returned from furlough. He was isolated at once from the rest of the command, and vaccination throughout the regiment at once effected. It was also ordered throughout the whole division, but was not entirely completed until the end of February. In the first week of February two other cases occurred, one in the Eighth Pennsylvania and one in the First New Jersey, both in men recently returned from furlough. By this time a small-pox hospital had been established, to which the men were at once removed, and no new cases occurred. In the latter part of February one case of measles occurred in a soldier of the Sixth Ohio. He was taken to the hospital and placed in a tent by himself. During the greater part of the month of March the division remained encamped in winter quarters. The health of the troops continued good. The rations were good and abundant, except in fresh vegetables, of which there was a great deficiency, so that many cases admitted to hospital exhibited a scorbutic tendency, and a few marked cases of scurvy appeared. On March 14 orders were received to send all sick to City Point depot hospital. This was accordingly done, and nearly all the hospital tents, &c., were taken down and packed preparatory to a move. Two wards were left standing to admit cases until the command actually moved. On March 17 the First Massachusetts Cavalry was detached from the division and ordered to the defenses of City Point.

On March 28 the remainder of the sick were sent off, and everything completely packed for a movement of the army. On this day the division was detached from the Army of the Potomac, and ordered to report to Major-General Sheridan.

Very respectfully,

E. J. MARSH,

Bvt. Maj. and Asst. Surg., U. S. Army, Med. Dir. Cav. Corps, late Surgeon-in-Chief Second Cav. Div., Army of the Potomac.

Col. T. A. McPARLIN,
Medical Director, Army of the Potomac.

No. 7.

Report of Surg. John A. Lidell, U. S. Army, Inspector of Medical and Hospital Department.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
April 24, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to present the following report upon the operations of the medical department of this army during the recent brilliant campaign, which commenced March 29 and accomplished the capture of Petersburg, the evacuation of Richmond, and the surrender of General Lee with the remnant of the Army of Northern Virginia, at Appomattox Court House, April 9:

Your wise foresight and rigid enforcement of existing orders have caused this army to be amply provided, as far as your department was concerned, with everything that the exigencies of the campaign might demand.

On the 26th of March the Depot Field Hospital at City Point, which already had a capacity of 5,935 beds, was ordered to be enlarged 1,000 beds, making it capable of accommodating, in round numbers, 7,000 members. On the 28th a medical purveyor's train of thirty-six wagons, loaded with extra battle supplies, such as stimulants, nutrients, dressings for wounded, anodynes, &c., in charge of Asst. Surg. D. R. Beaver, One hundred and ninety-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, was brought up from City Point to the headquarters Army of the Potomac, for the purpose of accompanying the reserve train of this army, and then be at hand to supply any unexpected drain upon the resources of the division and brigade supplies during the progress of the campaign about to commence. Besides this and the Depot Field Hospital above mentioned the medical purveyor at City Point, Asst. Surg. J. B. Brinton, U. S. Army, was directed to keep constantly on hand at that place all the medical and hospital supplies which would be needed by 10,000 or 12,000 wounded thrown unexpectedly on our hands. Due attention had also been paid to the subject of transportation, as the following extract from the consolidated return of the Ambulance Corps will help to show:

| | |
|--------------------------------------|-------|
| Ambulances..... | 525 |
| Army wagons..... | 154 |
| Medicine..... | 55 |
| Forage..... | 16 |
| Horses..... | 1,006 |
| Mules..... | 991 |
| Stretchers..... | 979 |
| Officers of Ambulance Corps..... | 44 |
| Enlisted men of Ambulance Corps..... | 1,808 |
| Regiments..... | 217 |
| Batteries..... | 40 |

It may be added here that the condition and discipline of the ambulance service was efficient and satisfactory in every respect.

On March 28 all the sick and wounded in the division hospitals and all the men present with their commands who were unable to march were sent to the Depot Field Hospital at City Point. In the evening the evacuation of all the field hospitals was completed, the camps of those belonging to the Second and Fifth Corps, together with their medical and hospital supplies, were loaded up and ready for the march. The hospitals of the Sixth and Ninth Corps were not struck at that time, as no material change in the position of those corps had been directed.

On Wednesday, the 29th, the campaign began. At an early hour the Fifth Corps moved down to the Rowanty Creek (formed by the junction of Hatcher's and Gravelly Runs), near by the Perkins house; laid a pontoon bridge, also built a log bridge; crossed over said Rowanty Creek, the head of column moving over at 8 a. m.; passed up the old stage road to its junction with the Vaughan road; thence along the Vaughan road to the point of its intersection with the Quaker road. Griffin's division (First) followed the Vaughan road one mile and a half farther, while Ayres' division (Second), which had been the leading division all the morning, proceeded up the Quaker road a short distance to the neighborhood of the Vaughan road. The Second Corps moved at a later hour than the Fifth Corps, for their projected line of march was much shorter; crossed Hatcher's Run by the Vaughan road bridge; passed down the Vaughan road, and established connection with the Fifth Corps a little before noon. Both of these corps were in light marching order; they were accompanied by only one-half of their ambulances, one medicine wagon, and one army wagon for each division, the remainder of them being parked with the reserve train Army of the Potomac, by General Meade's order, each division of the Fifth Corps to be closely followed by ten ambulances. The remainder of the ambulances allowed to move with each of these corps accompanied the artillery and ammunition trains in the rear of each corps. Shortly after noon Griffin's division moved up the Quaker road, passed the old Quaker burying-ground, and continuing on that road met the enemy near the Spain house, when a sharp combat ensued. The firing began at 4.35 p. m. and lasted about twenty minutes. The action was maintained principally by infantry, at close quarters; the enemy used no artillery. Griffin drove the enemy. The ambulances were brought quickly to the front; the division hospital was established at the Spain house, near the Quaker road, and about half a mile in rear of the place of combat; 287 wounded, including 14 rebels, were promptly brought to it.

I noticed that many of the wounds were severe, involving bones or some of the articulations, and that a larger proportion than usual required capital operations. After the combat Griffin's division, supported by Ayres' and Crawford's, pushed forward to the Boydton plank road. At night the position of our troops was, viz: the Fifth Corps on the left, holding Boydton road, then going to the right; the Second Corps connecting with it, and stretching across the intervening space to Hatcher's Run, then extending from the opposite bank of Hatcher's Run; a part of the Army of the James—two divisions of the Twenty-fourth Corps and one division of the Twenty-fifth Corps (colored)—under General Ord, held the old line of the Second Corps, having been brought up for that purpose the day before; proceeding still farther to the right, the Sixth Corps remained in its old position, having on its right the Ninth Corps, also in its old position, and stretching round to the Appomattox River below Petersburg. It was understood that the cavalry, under General Sheridan, were operating in the direction of Dinwiddie Court-House. The wounded were promptly cared for that night, food and restoratives were administered, their wounds dressed and the necessary operations performed, and all of them were on the way in ambulances for Humphreys' Station before 7.30 o'clock the next morning, to be transferred from that place in railroad cars to the Depot Field Hospital at City Point without delay, as the chief quartermaster had, on advising with the medical director, made ample arrangements for that purpose. The ambulance transportation from the division field hospitals to Humphreys' Station was a distance of about six miles, over roads which were practicable, but by no means good ones. The Second Corps did not become engaged with the enemy that day. The reserve train of the Army of the Potomac, including the medical purveyor's train already mentioned, was moved to the neighborhood of the Perkins house, near Rowanty Creek. General Meade's headquarters were established that night on the Vaughan road, near Gravelly Run. The weather had been pleasant all day, but about midnight it began to rain.

Thursday, March 30, proved dark and rainy; the roads became muddy, and almost impassable for wagons in many places. The dead of yesterday's combat were here buried, 50 of our men and 150 of the rebels, reported. During the day the Fifth Corps advanced some distance beyond the Boydton plank road; no serious opposition was offered by the enemy, but forty-six wounded, including one rebel, were brought into the field hospital. All the hospitals of the Fifth Corps were established together at the Spain house to-day. The Second Corps also advanced in line, maintaining its connection with the Fifth Corps on the left, with its right resting on Hatcher's Run. This movement was effected without bringing on an engagement. Our line now extended out from Hatcher's Run to the left in front of Dabney's Mill, obliquely across the Boydton road to a considerable distance beyond it. The position of the troops on the other bank of Hatcher's Run, i. e., the Army of the James, the Sixth and the Ninth Corps, was understood to be not materially changed; it was also reported that General Sheridan, with the Cavalry Corps, was operating in the vicinity of Dinwiddie Court-House in such a way as to cover effectually the left flank of the combined army. In the evening the weather became clear.

Friday, March 31. It began to rain at daylight this morning; the roads were now in a terrible condition from the mud; toward noon the rain ceased, and the weather became fair. About this time the Fifth Corps became warmly engaged with the enemy. The First Division of the Second Corps (Miles) also participated actively in the affair before it was over. The loss was considerable; 778 wounded, including 9 rebels, were brought to the division hospital of the Fifth Corps at the Spain house. I had on this occasion an excellent opportunity to see the practical working of the ambulance system, including the stretcher-bearers on the field, the ambulances at the most advanced posts, and the ambulances in motion between these and the division hospital, about two miles in the rear. The removal of the wounded from the field to these hospitals was accomplished with great expedition, so much so, indeed, that they were all brought in and refreshed with food and other restoratives, had their wounds dressed and the necessary operations performed, at an early hour in the evening, without the appearance of hurry or confusion, although most of the loss had occurred in the afternoon. This fact speaks well for the efficiency of the officers of the ambulance corps and for the conduct of the medical officers both on the field and at the division hospitals; and I must be permitted here to record my unqualified admiration of the manner in which the ambulance and hospital service of the Fifth Corps was managed that day by all concerned. In this affair the Second Corps lost 387 wounded, of whom 294 belonged to the First Division (General Miles), 17 to the Second Division (General Hays), 74 to the Third Division (General Mott), and 2 to the Artillery Brigade. The Second Division hospital remained near the Chinnays, on the Vaughan road, where it had been previously established; but the First and Third Division hospitals were moved up and located on the Gravelly Run road in a position convenient to those divisions. The wounded of this corps were brought in promptly and cared for in every respect. Our line was advanced to-day to the White Oak road; General Grant moved his headquarters up to Dabney's Mill. General Sheridan was heavily engaged with the enemy late in the afternoon near Dinwiddie Court-House; in the evening it was reported that he had several hundred wounded for whom he had no transportation. General Meade ordered the Sixth Corps ambulance train to proceed to Dinwiddie Court-House and bring them in to Humphreys' Station. At this time the ambulances were very much needed to remove the wounded of the Fifth Corps from the Spain house to Humphreys' Station, since nearly all of the corps had been ordered to proceed at once to the assistance of Sheridan's cavalry, and we were thus made to feel sadly the want of the reserve train for which the medical director had applied in vain before the opening of the campaign. Another lamentable consequence of this want of a reserve ambulance train was that a considerable number of the Fifth Corps wounded had to be transported in army wagons, over very rough roads, about six miles, to Humphreys' Station, whereby their sufferings were much increased and the chances of recovery for many of them seriously diminished as compared with the result which transportation in ambulances would have afforded them.

Saturday, April 1, the weather was clear and pleasant. All of the Fifth Corps, except one brigade, was detached from the Army of the Potomac and sent to report to General Sheridan last night and this morning; this left the constitution of our line west of Hatcher's Run as follows, viz: one brigade of Crawford's (Third) division, Fifth Corps; next Miles' (First) division, Second Corps; next to that Mott's (Third) division, Second Corps; and last Hays' (Second), of the same corps, its right resting on Hatcher's Run. Throughout the day nothing transpired on this line beyond a small amount of picket-firing; at the field hospitals of the Second and Fifth Corps, however, they were busy getting off our wounded to Humphreys' Station, en route for the Depot Field Hospital at City Point. In the morning the roads were still so muddy, and cut up into holes and ruts, that transportation of the wounded over them was much retarded, slow, and difficult; but during the day the roads dried rapidly, and before evening a great improvement had taken place. During the day thirty cars, loaded with wounded (there were also a few sick), left Humphreys' Station for City Point. At 4 p. m. a train of fifteen cars, loaded in the same way, was sent to the same destination. About 6 p. m. the Sixth Corps ambulance train, which had been sent out to Dinwiddie Court-House to bring in Sheridan's wounded of yesterday's fight, got back to Humphreys' Station. In the meantime, at the instance of the medical director, the chief quartermaster Army of the Potomac had ordered forty additional cars to come up to Humphreys' Station for hospital uses. Before night all the wounded had been conveyed from our division hospitals to Humphreys' Station in ambulances or in army wagons. The distances from these hospitals to that place were estimated as follows: From Second Division hospital, Second Corps, two miles and a half; from First and Third Divisions hospital, four miles and a half; from division hospitals of Fifth Corps, all loaded at the Spain house, on the Quaker road, six miles. The crossing of Hatcher's Run was by the Vaughan road bridge in the ambulance transportation from all of these hospitals. The headquarters Army of the Potomac were moved up to the neighborhood of General Grant's, at Dabney's Mill. In the evening it was reported that Sheridan's operations this day had been eminently successful; that, aided by the Fifth Corps, he had smashed the enemy, capturing two brigade trains, several pieces of artillery, and 3,000 or 4,000 prisoners.

But twenty-five wounded were reported as admitted to the Fifth Corps hospital this day. During that night the sullen roar of artillery was heard at intervals along the whole of our line, which extended from the Appomattox River below Petersburg, across the Boydton plank road and well out toward the South Side Railroad, a distance of about twenty-five miles; but the fire was much the heaviest and most continuous in front of the Ninth Corps, which as already stated held the right of the line.

Sunday, April 2, at 4 a. m. the Sixth and Ninth Corps fiercely assaulted the enemy's works in front of their respective positions. The Sixth Corps (General Wright) quickly carried the strongly fortified line of the enemy's works near Fort Fisher in gallant style, and then rapidly pushed its way across the intervening space to the Appomattox River, a short distance above Petersburg, in doing which it had to cross the Boydton plank road, the Cox road, and the South Side Railroad. By this movement the center of the enemy's lines of defenses of Petersburg was pierced, and the town itself completely cut off on the west side from the rest. That day 858 wounded, including 54 rebels, were brought to the Sixth Corps hospitals, which still occupied their old position; nearly all of them had fallen in the assault of the works. The medical director of the corps (Holman) reported that his observations convinced him that the ratio of killed, in comparison to the number wounded, was decidedly below the average, so that the loss was very small, considering the magnitude and character of the results achieved. The wounded were sent to the Depot Field Hospital by railroad the next day. At 4 a. m. the Ninth Corps (General Parke) also assaulted the enemy's works in front of Fort Hell, or Sedgwick, captured the main line, although it was very strongly fortified, and successfully maintained their lodgment therein against several desperate attempts of the enemy to drive them back. The loss of this corps was materially increased by the difficult character of the enterprise assigned to it. There were brought to the division hospitals of the Ninth Corps from the scene of this assault 1,114 wounded, including 21 rebels. They were promptly conveyed to the Depot Field Hospital at City Point by railroad. During the day General Sheridan's command, to which the Fifth was now temporarily added, was operating far out on the left. The Fifth Corps sustained considerable loss, and 382 wounded, including 72 rebels, were admitted to its division hospitals. Soon after the successful assaults of the defenses of Petersburg by the Sixth and Ninth Corps the enemy abandoned all their works west of the Sixth Corps. Two divisions of the Twenty-fourth Corps, Army of the James, were also sent forward to a position on the right of that occupied by the Sixth Corps. The First Division of the Second Corps (General Miles) was sent to co-operate with Sheridan. He came across two divisions of the enemy trying to escape across the Appomattox River, and had a sharp fight with them. Two hundred and seventy-two wounded were cared for at the division hospitals of the Second Corps; of these, 212 belonged to the First Division alone. Its hospitals were established at the Moody house, near the Five Forks. General Meade's headquarters were established at the Robinson house, just in the rear of the Sixth Corps, that night.

Monday, April 3, weather warm and pleasant. During last night the enemy evacuated the town of Petersburg, and it was occupied by our troops at dawn this morning. The enemy left 149 of his badly wounded in a well-appointed hospital located in the suburbs, and known as the "O. S. Hospital," with two medical officers. The surgeon in charge was directed to report to the provost-marshal of Petersburg, in order to obtain rations and any other supplies that might be needed. The medical director ordered that no houses in Petersburg should be used for hospital purposes or even for the temporary accommodation of the wounded belonging to the Army of the Potomac, and that in all cases they must be sent to the Depot Field Hospital at City Point without delay. The same order was reiterated in the evening by General Meade. Thus all the hospital accommodation at Petersburg was available for the sick and wounded rebels. A large number of men were put to work on the old line of railroad from Petersburg to City Point in order to reopen it as soon as possible. During the day the wounded of the Second Corps in the combats of yesterday were brought to Petersburg in ambulances for transportation to City Point by railroad. A portion of the wounded belonging to the Fifth Corps also were brought into Petersburg for the same purpose, and the balance of them, numbering about 150 men, were sent to Sutherland's Station in the evening, supplied with shelter, three days' rations, and with medical attendance, there to await the reopening of railroad communication with Petersburg, a distance of ten miles. The headquarters of General Meade were established near Sutherland's Station that night, and but a short distance from General Grant's. It was reported in the evening that the cars had commenced running into Petersburg from City Point. The reported evacuation of Richmond was also confirmed.

Tuesday, April 4, the weather continued pleasant. We moved at dawn, continuing our line of march up the River road, in a westerly direction, with the Second and Sixth Corps. The Ninth Corps was left behind at Petersburg, and the Fifth was still with General Sheridan. The medical director of the Sixth Corps (Holman) reported that the ambulance horses of that corps were very much jaded from overwork, that ten of them had been completely used up recently, and shot on that account. It will be remembered that this ambulance train had been sent on the previous Saturday out to Dinwiddie Court-House to bring in the wounded of Sheridan's command; and it will thus be perceived that this train was overworked, not in the service of the Army of the Potomac, but in that commanded by General Sheridan. We made a long march to-day over horrible and almost impassable roads. At night General Meade's headquarters were established at the house of W. W. Jones, near Deep Creek, about twenty-five miles from the place of departure in the morning; the Second Corps headquarters were at the same place. The country had now become rolling, well watered, well timbered, exhibiting many fine farms and beautiful locations. For two days the enemy had not opposed our progress.

Wednesday, April 5, the weather still continued pleasant. We moved at an early hour in the direction of Jetersville, on the Richmond and Danville Railroad, then distant about fifteen miles. We struck the railroad at that place in the afternoon, and found General Sheridan there with the cavalry and the Fifth Corps. Late in the day the enemy demonstrated in force on our front. He appeared to be on his way from Richmond to Burke's Station, and we had unexpectedly intercepted him with three infantry corps supporting our cavalry. During the night he maneuvered to gain an opportunity to pass around our left in the direction of Farmville. The Army of the Potomac did not become engaged to-day. At night General Meade's headquarters were established at a house used by the cavalry for hospital purposes, about half a mile from General Sheridan's headquarters. The country here was fruitful, high, rolling, and well watered with living streams.

Thursday, April 6, the day opened dark, with a misty rain, which, however, ceased about noon. The pursuit of General Lee's army was resumed with great activity. The Second Corps moved on the road to Amelia Springs, as the leading column; the Fifth Corps advanced on the right flank, and the Sixth Corps on the left, in supporting distance. The Second Corps struck the enemy near Amelia Springs, and pushed him forward along the Deatonsville road. The pursuit was not relaxed, and as the enemy offered resistance at every fitting opportunity this corps was more or less engaged the remainder of the day, mostly, however, in the way of heavy skirmishing. The loss, however, was not large, viz: First Division, 41 wounded; Third Division, 150; total, 191 wounded. Early in the day the First Division hospital was established at the Vaughan house, two miles and a half west of the Springs, in the direction of Deatonsville. The wounded of the Third Division were subsequently conveyed to Burke's Station by the Ninth Corps ambulances from the Vaughan house; those of the First Division were carried to Burke's Station, on the 7th, by way of Rice's Station, in ambulances. The Sixth Corps, advancing on the left of the Second Corps, became heavily engaged with the enemy toward evening at Sailor's Creek, in conjunction with the cavalry of Sheridan. The enemy were routed and many prisoners captured, including General Ewell and several other general officers. Four hundred and eighty-one wounded, including 161 rebels, were admitted to the division hospitals of that corps. It is understood that they were established at Harper's farm. These wounded were sent to Burke's Station the next day in the Sixth Corps ambulances. The Fifth Corps did not become engaged to-day. The headquarters of the Army of the Potomac were established on the road from Deatonsville to Farnville, about two miles from the former place.

Friday, April 7, the Second Corps, continuing the pursuit of the fleeing enemy, crossed the Appomattox at High Bridge, where a slight skirmish ensued, and advanced to the heights northeast of Farnville, where the enemy were found established. All the division hospitals of this corps were established at the Brooks house late in the afternoon, and received during the day and night, viz: First Division, 147; Second Division, 24; Third Division, 41; total, 212 wounded. They were sent to Burke's Station the next morning, 8th, and the hospitals ordered forward to join the corps, which had advanced in pursuit of the enemy, who had fallen back during the night. After the combat of the Second Corps above mentioned, the Army of the Potomac did not engage the enemy during the campaign. General Lee surrendered his army at Appomattox Court-House on Sunday, the 9th. On the morning of April 7 I proceeded to Burke's Station, under orders, for the purpose of assisting to perfect the arrangements for the reception and care of the wounded and sick at that place until such time as the railroad to Petersburg could be put in running order. The general commanding having designated Burke's Station, on the night of the 6th, as the prospective depot for the Army of the Potomac, the medical director ordered arrangements to be made immediately for the suitable reception of 2,500 wounded at that place. It was expected that we would be compelled to provide for all the wounded in the operations west of the Richmond and Danville Railroad, including those of Sheridan's cavalry command, of the Twenty-fourth Corps, Army of the James, of the prisoners of war to considerable extent, as well as those of the Army of the Potomac. The estimates were based upon this expectation, and the sequel showed it to be well founded. Having reached Burke's Station, I soon found Lieutenant-Colonel Dalton, medical director Ninth Army Corps, who had come up from Nottoway Court-House that morning on the same business. He stated that the hospitals of the Second and Third Divisions of the Ninth Corps were on their way up to Burke's Station, and would arrive in the afternoon, together with the ambulance trains of those divisions. I also learned that the railroad was opened only as far up as Wilson's Station, twenty-seven miles distant, and that several days must elapse before the cars could get up to Burke's Station. In the meantime shelter, food, and medical attendance must be provided for a large number of wounded at that place. It was also known that several hundred were then on their way there in the ambulance trains of the Second and Sixth Corps, and that they would arrive by evening. The hotel buildings at Burke's Station had been in use for a considerable time as a rebel hospital, and they were already filled to overflowing with rebels who were unable to be moved when their forces retreated, and with sick and wounded belonging to the Twenty-fourth Corps, Army of the James, and to the Cavalry Corps, under General Sheridan's command, who had been recently brought there. In the afternoon the hospitals of the Second and Third Divisions were pitched on good ground, convenient to the railroad, and made ready for the reception of the wounded. All the vacant warehouse room at the railroad depot was also taken possession of, and made ready for the same purpose without delay. In the evening about 750 wounded from the Second and Sixth Corps arrived, and were promptly cared for; indeed, we had the satisfaction of knowing that the suppers of a large part of them had been prepared for them previous to their arrival. The ambulance train of the Second and Third Divisions of the Ninth Corps came up in the afternoon, and was at once sent forward to the front with orders to report for duty to the medical director Army of the Potomac, in bringing in the wounded.

Saturday, April 8, the warehouses at the depot and the hospitals of the Ninth Corps, including that of the First Division, now on the way up to Burke's Station, were capable of sheltering 1,600 wounded, and this entirely independent of the rebel hospital above mentioned and of the dwelling-houses in the neighborhood used by the cavalry for the reception of the wounded. Capt. J. H. Alley, hospital commissary Ninth Corps, sent up a foraging train to-day, under suitable escort, to obtain subsistence for the wounded and sick; it gathered up and brought in three wagon-loads of provisions, consisting of flour, meal, potatoes, ham, and bacon. Captain Alley also sent to City Point for enough sugar, coffee, and candles to last 4,000 men eight days (32,000 rations of each), in order to be ready for possible contingencies. He also began to repair the large oven of the hotel, with a view to issue soft bread without delay, and placing a safeguard upon a neighboring grist mill, he set it to grinding flour and meal. The medical purveyor's train being also at Burke's Station, medical and hospital supplies were drawn from it sufficient to last 2,000 wounded eight days; they were drawn by the surgeons in charge of the Second and Third Division hospitals of the Ninth Corps, in addition to the supplies they already had on hand. Afterward the medical purveyor's train started for Farmville, seventeen miles distant, toward Lynchburg. Foraging wagons were sent out for straw. During the day and evening about 550 wounded and sick arrived.

Sunday, April 9, Captain Alley foraged successfully again to-day for provisions and straw. About 260 wounded and sick were brought in to-day.

Monday, April 10, the bakery began to turn out soft bread of first-rate quality last night, and to-day was worked at the rate of 2,000 rations per diem. Provisions and straw were again obtained by foraging. If subsistence could not have been obtained by foraging, the sick and wounded must have suffered very much with hunger for a few days. This evening the Ninth Corps ambulances returned from the front, bringing about 200 wounded and sick; 150 hospital tent flies had arrived in wagons from Wilson's Station, so that we now felt easy on the subject of shelter.

Tuesday, April 11. There were now about 2,200 wounded and sick at Burke's Station, of whom about 1,600 belonged to the Army of the Potomac, about 220 to the Army of the James, about 180 to the Cavalry Corps, and about 200 were prisoners of war; all of them were well taken care of. The Confederate surgeons told me that their wounded were well cared for, and all of whom I inquired (and the number was considerable) uniformly told me, even in the warehouses, that they had experienced good care and satisfactory attention to their wants. The railroad cars came up to Burke's Station this morning for the first time, and preparations were immediately made to load them with wounded on their return to City Point. In this way about 1,450 wounded and sick were sent to the Depot Field Hospital at City Point to-day. The last train started at 5 p. m. The cars for the wounded were well bedded with straw, two days' rations were provided for the wounded, with attendants at the ratio of two per car, and an ample supply of medical officers to accompany them through to City Point. The Ninth Corps ambulance train was sent out to Harper's farm for some wounded cavalymen who were reported to be there suffering for the want of the necessaries of life; it was accompanied by a wagon loaded with provisions.

Wednesday, April 12, sent away by railroad, at noon, about 600 sick and wounded to the Depot Field Hospital at City Point, provided for the same as those sent yesterday. This evacuated Burke's Station of all the wounded and the sick except about 150 rebels. They also would have been sent if the transportation by rail had been sufficient to do it. During the latter part of the day the Cavalry Corps ambulances arrived, and the Ninth Corps ambulances returned. They brought, altogether, about 250 wounded and sick; most of them were rebels. A number of sick and wounded were also received from other sources. The headquarters of the Army of the Potomac came down to Burke's Station about 3 p. m., and were established in its vicinity.

Thursday, April 13, sent to City Point to-day 450 wounded and sick, a majority of whom were rebels. This relieved us of all the sick and wounded then on hand who could be safely transported. Surg. H. Bendell, Eighty-sixth New York Volunteers, in charge of sub-depot field hospital, organized pursuant to the orders of the medical director dated April 3, 1865, arrived at Burke's Station this morning, accompanied by twenty-four assistant surgeons, with attendants, shelter, and ample supplies. In the course of the day he established his hospital, and put it in operation as an advanced post of the Depot Field Hospital at City Point, and communicating with it daily by railroad. Since the cars began to run to Burke's Station up to this time, about 2,500 wounded and sick, belonging to the armies of the Potomac and James, to the Cavalry Corps, and to the enemy, were sent to City Point by railroad; of this number it was estimated that 500 were sick and 2,000 wounded. These men had been promptly received and provided for at Burke's Station by the medical department alone, without bustle or confusion and without officious interference on the part of any individuals or irresponsible associations. Lieut. Col. E. B. Dalton, surgeon U. S. Volunteers, chief medical officer, and Capt. J. H. Alley, hospital commissary Ninth Corps, deserve special mention.

During this brief campaign, commencing March 20, the total losses of wounded in the various engagements were distributed as follows: Second Corps, 1,100; Fifth Corps, 1,436; Sixth Corps, 1,127; Ninth Corps, 1,160; total, 4,823 wounded in action. This estimate does not embrace those wounded by accident or by picket-firing, and is founded on the admissions to the division hospitals reported in connection with engagements. It also appears that 335 wounded rebels were brought to our division hospitals on such occasions.

Before concluding this report one remark is called for in regard to the operations of the ambulance department of the Army of the Potomac. I watched it attentively throughout the campaign, and now take pleasure in recording that on all occasions, whether in removing the wounded from the field of battle or in conveying them to the hospitals at the rear, the duty was discharged with a promptitude and zeal which reflects much credit upon the system itself and those concerned in its administration.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

